

HANDBOUND
AT THE

UNIVERSITY OF
TORONTO PRESS

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

P
LE
A

THE ACADEMY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

JANUARY — JUNE,
1881.

VOLUME XIX.

PUBLISHING OFFICE: 52, CAREY STREET, LONDON, W.C.
1881.

LONDON :

PRINTED BY YATES AND ALEXANDER,
LONSDALE BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

4979
2079 (20)
vols 19-23
5 vols

CONTENTS OF VOLUME XIX.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Anderson's (E. L.) How to Ride and School a Horse	408
Appleton, Dr., Life and Literary Relics of	127
Bayne's (P.) Two Great Englishwomen	148
Benjames's La Verdad sobre el Quijote	76
Bent's (J. T.) Genoa	200
Berners' (Dame J.) Boke of St. Albans	274
Bigelow's (M. M.) History of Procedure in England from the Norman Conquest	219
Bikélas' (D.) Loukis Laras	237
Bird's (I. L.) Unbeaten Tracks in Japan	145, 165
Black's (C. I.) The Proselytes of Ishmael	128
Boulger's (D. C.) History of China	349
Braudram's (S.) Shakespeare	293
Britten's (J.) edition of Aubrey's Remains of Gentilisme and Judaisme	409
Burrows' (M.) Register of the Visitors of Oxford University	403
Barton's (Capt.) translation of Camden's Lusitani	465
Butler's (A. J.) Amaranth and Asphodel	255
Cairns's (Dr. J.) Unbelief in the Eighteenth Century	350
Carnota's (Count) Memoirs of the Duke de Saldanha	271
Chamberlain's (B. H.) Classical Poetry of the Japanese	145, 165
Chiro's (V.) 'Twist Greek and Turk	467
Colchester's (Lord) Political Diary of Lord Ellenborough	199
Cooper's (C. H.) Memoirs of Cambridge	91
Croft's edition of Knights of Gouernour	3
Cundall's (J.) On Bookbindings	130
Cunningham's (W.) Churches of Asia	146
Cutler's (T. W.) Grammar of Japanese Ornament and Design	145, 165
David's (T. W. Rhys) Buddhist Birth Stories	53
De Azcarate's (G.) Historia del Derecho de Propiedad	130
De Soyres' edition of The Provincial Letters of Pascal	1
Dixon's (R. W.) History of the Church of England	183
Dostoyeffsky's (F.) Buried Alive	273
Douglas's (Mrs. S.) Life and Correspondence of Dr. Whewell	407
Duffield's (A. J.) Don Quixote	76
Duffy's (Sir C. G.) Young Ireland	75
Eastlake's (Lady) Mrs. Grote	54
Ebsworth's (J. W.) Amanda Group of Bayford Poems	331
Fitch's (J. G.) Lectures on Teaching	368
Fitzgerald's (J. F. V.) Australia	409
Fo'sle Yarns	315
Formander's (A.) Account of the Polynesian Race	147
Freeman's (E. A.) Historical Geography of Europe	329
Froude's (J. A.) Reminiscences of Thomas Carlyle	181
Fyffe's (C. A.) History of Modern Europe	163
Gairdner's (J.) Letters and Papers of the Reign of Henry VIII.	37
Three Fifteenth-Century Chronicles	110
Gill's (Rev. W. W.) Sketches of Savage Life in Polynesia	55
Goldsmid's (Gen.) James Outram: a Biography	113
Gordon Cumming's (Miss) At Home in Fiji	313
Gordon, Colonel, in Central Africa	386
Gosse's (E. W.) English Odes	312
Gotch's (Dr.) Fragments of the Cotton Genesis	398
Hall's (W. E.) International Law	41
Hamilton's (W. D.) Calendar of State Papers	74
Hartley's (J. E.) British Animals Extinct	200

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Hatch's (Rev. E.) Bampton Lectures for 1880	237
Heath's (R.) Edgar Quinet	447
Hellenic Studies, The Journal of	39
Henderson's (W.) Notes on the Folk-Lore of the Northern Counties, &c.	21
Hill's Life of Sir Rowland Hill	39
Hodgson's (S. H.) Outcast Essays and Verse Translations	217
Holub's (Dr. E.) Seven Years in South Africa	291
Hope's (R. C.) edition of Googe's Popish Kingdoms	218
Hulme's (F. E.) The Trianon, College, and Neighbourhood of Marlborough	256
Hunter's (Dr.) England's Work in India	4
Jaubert, Mme. C., Souvenirs de	295
Jefferies's (R.) Wood Magic: a Fable	446
Joyce's (Dr.) Keating's History of Ireland	128
Keane's (T. F.) Six Months in Mecca	409
Lane-Poole's (Stanley) Egypt	448
Lang's (A.) The Library	408
Lieber, Francis, The Miscellaneous Writings of	93
Lumsden's (Lieut.-Col.) Beowulf: an Old-English Poem	273
Magnus's (Mrs.) About the Jews	295
Manchester's (Earl of) Manchester at Mondo	238
Markham's (Capt.) Polar Reconnaissance	236
Marvin's (C.) Merv, the Queen of the World	202
McConchy's (J.) Poetical Works of William Motherwell	332
Metternich, Prince, Memoirs of	253, 311
Myers' (P. W. H.) Wordsworth	1
New Testament, Revised Version of the	405
Nichol's (J.) Death of Themistocles, and other Poems	314
Nicoll's (H. J.) Thomas Carlyle	292
(R.) Poems and Lyrics	332
Nicolson's (Dr. A.) Gaelic Proverbs and Familiar Phrases	388
Noel's (Hon. R.) Little Child's Monument	220
O'Donoghue's (Mrs. P.) Ladies on Horseback	468
Olliphant's (L.) The Land of Gilead, &c.	22
(Mrs.) Cergantes	76
Overton's (J. H.) William Law, Non-juror and Mystic	293
Patmore's translation of St. Bernard on the Love of God	330
Pelayo's Historia de los Heterodoxos españoles	388
Pinto's (Major S.) How I Crossed Africa	365, 425
Pipin and Spasovich's Istoria Slavianskikh Literatur	184
Reed's (Sir E. J.) Japan	145, 165
Rimmer's (A.) Our Old Country Towns	333
Ritchie's (Anne T.) Anne Evans	389
Robertson's (J. C.) Materials for the History of Thomas Becket	166
Robinson's (Mis") The Crowned Hippolytus	49
(Phil) Under the Punkah	387
Rocher's (E.) La Province chinoise du Yunnan	217
Rogers' (Prof.) edition of "Gascoigne's Theological Dictionary"	427
Ruskin's (J.) Arrows of the Chace	109
Russell and Prendergast's Calendar of State Papers relating to Ireland	347
Saintsbury's (G.) Dryden	251
Sample's (D.) Poems, &c., of Robert Tannahill	332
Shadwell's (Lieut.-Gen.) Life of Lord Clyde	235
Simpson's (Dr. W. S.) Chapters in the History of Old St. Paul's	315

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Skinner's (J.) Coelestia: the Manual of St. Augustine	330
Smith's (G.) Chaldean Account of Genesis	161
Stanley's (Dean) Christian Institutions	467
Statham's (F. R.) Blacks, Boers, and British	274
St. Giles's Lectures	445
Stubbs's (Rev. C. W.) The Myths of Life	428
Sturtevant's (Dr. J. M.) Economics; or, the Science of Wealth	55
Summer's (Mrs. G.) Our Holiday in the East	348
Swinburne's (A. C.) Studies in Song	20
Talleyrand's Correspondence with Louis XVIII.	385
Thomson's (J.) Van's Story, and other Poems	92
Thom's (W.) Rhymes and Recollections of a Handloom Weaver	332
Thoreau's (H.) Early Spring in Massachusetts	347
Thornton's (P. M.) Foreign Secretaries of the Nineteenth Century	428
Tozer's (Rev. H. F.) Turkish Armenia and Eastern Asia Minor	182
Trotter's (Capt. P. D.) Our Mission to the Court of Morocco	416
Twiss's (Sir T.) edition of Bracton	249
Vanderkindere's (Léon) Le Siècle des Artevelde	93
Vosmaer's (C.) Amazon	255
Waddington's (S.) English Sonnets by Living Writers	40
Ward's (T. H.) English Poets	73, 111
Warren's (C.) The Temple or the Tomb	138
Warwick's (Arthur) Spare Minutes	238
Wylie's (W. H.) Thomas Carlyle	292

NOVELS.

Abou's (E.) The Story of an Honest Man	131
Aiken-Kortright's (Fanny) On Latmos	334
Atcherley's (Charlotte) Cords and Discords	5
Auerbach's (B.) Brigitte	239
Barrett's (J.) Folly Morrison	77
Beale's (Anne) Idonea	185
Beeston's (C.) In Fair Bruges	239
Black's (W.) Sunrise	203
Buchanan's (R.) A Child of Nature	203
Carey's (Rosa N.) Queenie's Whim	185
Carr's (Mrs. Comyns) Story of Autumn	275
Cherbuliez' (Victor) Noirs et Rouges	275
Childers' (Catherine) The Future Marquis	429
Clarke's (Cecil) Elsie Grey	449
C Minor. By E. D. N.	221
Coleridge's (C. R.) An English Squire	131
Craik's (G. M.) Illyria's Love Story	221
Sydney	369
De Fonblanque's (A.) Pious Frauds	131
Dering's (E. H.) Freddie Chase	5
Deided. By the Author of "Shakespeare's Stories Simply Told"	256
Doudney's (Sarah) Stepping Stones	5
Drew's (C.) The Lutawiste of St. Jacobi's	149
Drewry's (E. S.) A Death Ring	203
Duff's (H. A.) My Imperialist Neighbour, and other Stories	77
Duffus-Hardy's (Lady) Beryl Fortescue	167
Ebers' (G.) Der Kaiser	254
Edon's (C. H.) Found though Lost	275
Ellis's (A. M.) Under Sun and Moon	221
Flower o' the Broom. By the Author of "Rare Pale Margaret"	203
Forrester's (Mrs.) Roy and Viola	5
Francillon's (R. E.) Queen Cophetua	77

NOVELS—continued.

	PAGE
Gibbon's (C.) In Pastures Green, and other Tales	131
Grant's (R.) Confessions of a Frivolous Girl	149
(J.) The Cameronians	449
Greg's (Percy) Errant	23
Hawthorne's (J.) Elice Quantin, and other Stories	239
Henslowe's (J. R.) Dorothy Compton	94
Hirst's (J. C.) Hiram Greg	167
Houston's (Mrs.) Fired as Fate	256
Hunt's (Mrs. A.) The Leadon Casket	23
(Mrs. J.) The Wards of Plotinus	221
Ireland's True Daughter. By Marcel-lina	203
James's (H., jun.) Washington Square	185
Lauder's (L.) Legends and Tales of the Harz Mountains	449
Legouvé's (E.) Our Sons and Daughters	203
Lewis's (Mary A.) Two Pretty Girls	369
Linton's (E. L.) The Rebel of the Family	131
Love Knots. By the Author of "Ursula's Love Story"	256
Macdonald's (G.) Mary Marston	167
Mackay's (C.) Luck, and What Came of It	334
Macquoid's (Kath. S.) Beside the River	275
Mark Rutherford, Autobiography of	369
Mead's (L. T.) A Dweller in Tents	239
Montgomery's (F.) Herbert Manners, and other Stories	77
Muir's (Alan) Harold Saxton	167
Mysteries of Heron Dyke, The. By the Author of "In the Dead of Night"	56
Norris's (W. E.) Matrimony	56
Olliphant's (Mrs.) Harry Joscelyn	334
O'Reilly's (Mrs.) David Broome, Artist	369
Outlying Hamlet, An. By the Author of "An Elder Sister"	149
Palatino's (Tom) A Long Love, and other Stories	203
Poynter's (E. Frances) Among the Hills	449
Randolph's (Mrs.) Little Pansy	94
Reid's (Capt. Mayne) The Free Lances	429
Riddell's (Mrs. J. H.) The Mystery in Palace Gardens	94
Rose's (Gina) Modesta	94
Roswell's (Mary C.) Jeannette	56
Russell's (W. C.) An Ocean Free Lance	334
Sartoris' (Adelaide) Past Hours	59
Seguin's (L. G.) Mr. Carols: an Auto-biography	256
Seton's (M.) The Net with the Golden Meshes	429
Simpson's (M. C. M.) Geraldine and her Suitors	23
Smith's (Agnes) The Brides of Ardmore	149
(Shirley) St. Martin's Summer	239
Thackeray's (Miss) Miss Williamson's Divagations	256
Vicar of Ristock. By E. D. N.	221
Von Saldern's (F.) The Margaret Book	275
Wackerbarth's (M. A.) 'Twist Friend and Foe	131
Wallace's (Low) Ben-Hur: a Tale of the Christ	275
Wood's (Mrs. H.) Johnny Ludlow	5
Worboise's (Emma J.) The Heirs of Errington	429
Wordsworth's (Barbara) Jacob's Ladder	149

CURRENT AND MISCELLANEOUS LITERATURE.

Abbott's (E.) translation of Max Duncker's History of Antiquity	390
Adams's (W. H. D.) Wrecked Lives	391
Anderson's (J. W.) Notes of Travel in Fiji and New Caledonia	258

CURRENT LITERATURE—continued.

Angus's (J. K.) Amateur Acting ...	7
Ashe and Wyatt-Edgell's Story of the Zulu Campaign ...	42
Bardsley's (E. W.) Romance of the London Directory ...	471
Bashford's (J. L.) Elementary Education in Saxony ...	204
Becker's (B. H.) Disturbed Ireland ...	96
Bellows (Capt.) Memoirs of a Griffin ...	316
Betham-Edwards's (M.) The Starry Blossom , &c.	151
Blythe's (E. K.) National Duty with Respect to the Administration of Justice ...	42
Brooks's (C. T.) William Ellery Channing ...	431
Brown's (P.) What Girls can do ...	114
Bryant and Gay's History of the United States ...	276
Cair's (Dr. C. N.) Le Origini della Lingua poetica italiana ...	335
Canallo's (U. A.) Letteratura italiana nel Secolo XVI. ...	335
Capasso's (B.) Monumenta ad Neapolitani ducatus Historiam pertinentia ...	335
Children's Journey, The, and other Stories ...	7
Congrès provincial des Orientalistes français, 1875	297
Conway's (W. M.) The Zermatt Pocket-book ...	259
Coote's (H. C.) London Notes: a Lost Charter ...	296
Cox's (T.) History of the Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth at Heath ...	115
—(Rev. Sir G.) British Rule in India ...	241
Crosland's (Mrs. N.) Stories of the City of London ...	390
Dahn's (F.) Wietersheim's Geschichte der Völkerwanderung ...	240
D'Ancona's (Prof. A.) Studi di Critica e Storia letteraria ...	61
De Amicis, Edmondo, Poesia di ...	335
De Leins's (A.) Lilian Adelaide Neilson ...	297
Dentists' Register for 1881 ...	430
Dickson's (Rev. W. E.) Practical Organ-Building ...	471
Dixie's (Lady F.) Across Patagonia ...	42
Dobell's (Mrs. H.) Poems ...	115
Douglas's (Mrs. M.) Two Rose Trees ...	7
D'Ovidio's (Prof.) Lingua dei Promessi Sposi ...	335
Duffield's (A. J.) Prospects of Peru ...	258
Duray's Histoire des Romains ...	241
Eastwick's translation of Sadi's Gulistan ...	114
Eden's (Col.) Tales of the Castle Guard ...	304
Educational Year Book for 1881 ...	204
Education Review, The ...	204
Ellis's (Annis R.) Sylvestra ...	276
Farina's (S.) Il Marito di Laurina ...	335
Firth's (Mrs. J. B.) Kind Hearts ...	391
Forster and Daniell's Life of Ogier Ghiselin de Busbecq ...	470
Foster's (J.) Collectanea Genealogica ...	470
Fryer's (A. C.) Cuthbert of Lindisfarne ...	276
Galloway's (W. B.) The Chain of Ages ...	391
Gibberne's (Agnes) Duties and Duties ...	391
Godefroy's (F.) Dictionnaire de l'ancienne Langue française ...	6
Grandpapa's Pictures and Verses . By T. P. M.	391
Green's (J. R.) Essays of Joseph Addison ...	151
Growse's (F. S.) Mathurá ...	316
Guizot's History of France ...	240
Hart's (J. J.) Sunshine of Home ...	43
Heine's (M. E.) Ricordi della Vita intima di Enrico Heine ...	61
Hitchman's (F.) Eighteenth-Century Studies ...	277
Hood's (Rev. E. P.) Robert Hall ...	471
Hope's (A.) Stories of Long Ago ...	7
Hughes's (T.) The Maritimes of Christ ...	431
—(Lilian B.) Off the Reel ...	471
Hulme and Hibberd's Familiar Garden Flowers ...	6
Irving's (J.) Book of Eminent Scotsmen ...	151
Irwin's (H. C.) The Garden of India ...	316
Japp's (A. H.) Labour and Victory ...	151
Jenkinson's (H. I.) Guide to the Isle of Wight ...	133
Jenning's (G. H.) History of the British Parliament ...	241
Jones's (Major) Emigrant's Friend ...	42
Jones-Parry's (Capt. S. H.) My Journey Round the World ...	42
Kalthrummer's (D.) Aide-Mémoire du Voyageur ...	259
Kapp's (F.) Justus Erich Bollman ...	277
Katscher's (L.) Bilder aus dem englischen Leben ...	42
Keom's (J. H.) Practical Fisherman ...	471
Kindergarten, Essays on the ...	204
Lamier's (S.) Boy's King Arthur ...	7
Leopardi's (G.) Appressamento della Morte ...	60
Lethbridge's (R.) Short Manual of the History of India ...	150
Lodge's (H. C.) History of the English Colonies in America ...	470
Loftie's (W. J.) Tourist's Guide through London ...	390
Long's (Rev. J.) Eastern Proverbs and Emblems ...	431

CURRENT LITERATURE—continued.

Longman's (F. W.) Frederick the Great and the Seven Years' War ...	240
Macpherson's Hamlet, Macbeth, Romeo y Juliet ...	96
Mariotti's (F.) Dante e la Statistica della Lingua ...	335
Marshall's (W. G.) Through America ...	296
Martin's (Mrs. A. H.) Roses from Thorns ...	7
Martine's Ode on the Death of Kanaras ...	410
Mussey's (G.) Book of the Beginnings ...	431
Moon's (G. W.) The King's English ...	390
Morfall's (W. R.) Russia ...	114
Morpurgo's (E.) Marco Foscarini e Venezia nel Secolo XVIII. ...	61
My Start in Life . By a Young "Middy"...	390
Nerucci's (G.) Sessanta Novelle popolari Montalesi ...	61
Neyrat's (Abbé) L'Athos ...	151
Nicoll's (H. J.) Great Orators ...	276
Nixon's (J.) Among the Boers ...	132
O'Byrne's (R. W.) The Victoria Cross ...	96
Official Papers, Précis of, 1880 ...	115
Ord's (W. M.) Works of Dr. Francis Sibson ...	430
Osman's (J.) Old Ali; or, Travels Long Ago ...	132
Ottolenghi's (L.) Luigi Provana da Sabbione ...	335
Our Public Schools ...	150
Owen's (S. J.) Selection from the Wellington Despatches ...	316
Page's (H. A.) Leaders of Men ...	96
Palmer's (E. H.) Haroun Alraschid, Caliph of Bagdad ...	95
Pansie's Flour Bin ...	7
Pearl's (Frances M.) Mother Mally ...	391
Pervanogin's (Dr. T.) Culturbilder aus Griechenland ...	133
Pineott's (F.) Index to Kaye's "Sepoy War" and Malleson's "Indian Mutiny" ...	96
Polites' (N. G.) Popular Meteorological Fables ...	410
Polyas' (J.) version of the Odyssey in modern Greek ...	410
Ridley's (A. E.) Better than Good ...	7
Rogers's (Dr. C.) Memoirs of the Families of Colt and Coult ...	133
Russell's (C.) New Views of Ireland ...	96
Rye's (W.) Norfolk Antiquarian Miscellany ...	114
Samuel's (S. M.) Jewish Life in the East ...	25
Shepherd's (H.) Bibliography of Thackeray ...	96
Shore's (Hon. H. N.) The Flight of the "Lapwing" ...	258
Smith's (Rev. J. G.) Thoughts on Education ...	204
—(J.) Sketches in Indian Ink ...	316
—(W.) Old Wiltshire ...	390
Soetheer's (Ad.) Das Goldland Offr ...	431
Stanford's (C.) Philip Doddridge ...	277
Taylor's (T. S.) First Principles of Roman History ...	241
—(J. P.) Elementary Chess Problems ...	390
Temple's (Sir R.) India in 1880 ...	150
Umlin's (R. D.) Churchman's Life of Wesley ...	6
Verne's (J.) The Steam-House ...	317
—The Great Explorers of the Nineteenth Century ...	390
Villari's (Prof. P.) Niccolò Macchiavelli e i suoi Tempi ...	335
Walker's (T.) Aristology; or, the Art of Dining ...	431
Weld's (A. G.) Sacred Palm Lands ...	258
Wellington Despatches, Correspondence, &c. ...	296
Wheeler's (J. T.) History of India ...	316
Women of Christendom . By the Author of "The Schönberg-Cotta Family"...	391
Yonge's (Miss) English History Reading Book ...	241

CURRENT THEOLOGY.

Bakhuizen's (Dr.) essay on conjectural emendation of the text of the New Testament	57
Baring-Gould's (Rev. S.) The Preacher's Pocket ...	222
Budge's (E. A.) History of Esarhaddon, King of Assyria ...	57
Caldwell's (Dr. H.) Parables of Our Lord ...	78
Cambridge Bible for Schools ...	223
Clerical Reminiscences . By "Senex"...	58
Cox's (Rev. S.) The Expositor ...	78
Delitzsch's (F.) Messianic Prophecies ...	57
Dickson's (Prof. W. P.) edition of Meyer's Commentary on the New Testament ...	222
Ellicott's (Dr. C. J.) Addresses on the Being of God ...	78
Faussett's (R. G.) The Symmetry of Time ...	223
Fischer's (A.) Von Bunsen's Gesang- und Gebetbuch ...	222

CURRENT THEOLOGY—continued.

Floigl's (Dr. V.) Chronologie der Bibel, des Manetho und Beras ...	58
Godet's (Dr. F.) St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans ...	78
Hosson's (Dean) Evidential Value of the Acts of the Apostles ...	58
Jelf's (Canon) Consolations of the Christian Seasons ...	58
Johnson's translation of Ewald's Commentary on the Psalms ...	58
Karslake's (Rev. W. H.) State of Man after Death ...	79
Leathes' (Prof. S.) Studies in Genesis ...	59
Lipsius' (R. A.) Die edessenische Abgar-Sage ...	78
Maclaren's (Dr. A.) Life of David ...	78
Mason's (Rev. P. H.) Shemets Davar ...	58
Matheson's (Rev. G.) Natural Elements of Revealed Theology ...	223
Mitchell's (Dr. E. C.) Critical Handbook to the Greek New Testament ...	58
New Truths, The, and the Old Faith ...	58
Orme's (B.) Treasure-Book of Consolation ...	58
Percival's (Rev. J.) Helps for School Life ...	222
Robertson's (Rev. F. W.) The Human Race, and other Sermons ...	222
Steinmeyer's (Dr. F. L.) History of the Passion and Resurrection of our Lord ...	78
Studer's (Dr. G. L.) Das Buch Hiob ...	223
Thornely's (T.) Habitual Confession to a Priest ...	78
Triune Life, Divine and Human ...	58
Ullathorne's (Bp.) Endowments of Man ...	58
Van Ewald's Commentary on the Psalms ...	58
Williams' (Jane L.) The Waldensian Church in Piedmont ...	79
Woods's (Rev. F. H.) Guide to the Study of Theology ...	223

MISCELLANEOUS POETRY.

Advocate, The ...	353
Agnosticism...	250
Aldrich's (T. B.) XXXVI. Lyrics and XII. Sonnets ...	196
Bell's (Rev. C. D.) Songs in the Twilight ...	196
Bendall's (G.) Scenes and Songs ...	196
Birthday Book of German Literature ...	187
Chadwick's (Rev. G. A.) As One that Suffereth ...	352
Dantzieck, and other Tales ...	25
Davis's (W. H.) The Bride of Albion, and other Poems ...	352
Dolores: a Theme with Variations ...	187
Dutt's (Toru) Sheaf gleaned in French Fields ...	186
Fane's (Violet) Collected Verses ...	25
Greenough's (Mrs. R.) Mary Magdalene ...	353
Harris's (E. M.) Verses ...	187
Hawkey's (C.) Shakespeare Tapestry ...	352
Heptalogia, The ...	352
Hume's (J.) Home they brought her Warrior Dead ...	21
Ingoldsby Lyrics, The ...	187
In Memoriam G. P. C. ...	241
Justine, and other Poems ...	352
Kindon's (J.) Poems and Dramatic Sketches ...	25
Lancaster's (G. E.) Pygmalion in Cyprus ...	187
Langbridge's (F.) Gaslight and Stars ...	25
Leighton's (W.) Shakespeare's Dream, and other Poems ...	187
Leonard's (H. C.) John the Baptist ...	187
Marie Antoinette ...	353
McCaull's (Rev. J. B.) The Last Plague of Egypt, &c. ...	25
Metaphysic " Cul de Sac " A...	7
Milne's (W.) Thoughts in Rhyme and Prose ...	25
Moore's (Mrs. B.) Gondaline's Lesson, &c. ...	353
Mortier's (F.) The Legend of Allan-dale ...	25
Munro's (D.) Poetry for Boys ...	187
Orred's (Meta) Ave ...	24
Panton's (J. E.) One Year in his Life ...	352
Penderick's (M.) Sonnets and other Poems ...	187
Pindar's Seventh Olympian Ode ...	279
Phalae: a Drama of Ancient Egypt ...	24
Poems. By the Author of "The Growth of Love"...	352
Proetus, The Love Sonnets of ...	351
Rankine's (B. M.), Fulgencius, and other Poems ...	352
Richardson's (W.) Alma Mater, and other Poems ...	187
Robertson's (J.) translation of Béranger's Le Cinq Mai ...	453
Russell's (P.) King Alfred, and other Poems ...	25
—(Rev. M.) Erin: Verses Irish and Catholic ...	352
Sappho: a Dream . By the Author of "Ginevra"...	353
Sibree's (J.) Fancy, and other Rhymes ...	187
Slipper's (R. B.) Alice Vertun ...	25
Sloane's (E. A.) The Golden Queen ...	186

MISCELLANEOUS POETRY—continued.

Sonnet (Elisha restoring the Widow's Son)	335
Starkey's (Rev. A.) Love's Weakness is Love's Tragedy ...	352
Stokes's (H. M.) The Chantry Owl, &c. Theban Hymn ...	412
Thirty Years' Poems Old and New ...	180
Thoreau, Unpublished Verses of ...	301
To Jenny ...	133
To a Great and Good Physician ...	300
Wanderer, The ...	355
Where lies the Land ...	371

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Armitage's (E. S.) English History Reading Books ...	450
Becker's (A. L.) First German Book ...	109
Bue's First Steps in French Idioms ...	109
Colbee's Caesar ...	371
—edition of Bonnehose's Life of Lazare Hoche ...	451
D'Aubigné's Histoire de Bayart ...	109
Desru's (L.) French Pronunciation and Reading ...	109
Eugène-Fasnach's (G.) Progressive French Reader, &c. ...	108
Gardner's (S. R.) Outline of English History ...	109, 450
Gibson's (J.) Specimen Essays ...	450
Goodwin and White's Xenophon's Anabasis ...	371
Hallam's (G. H.) Ovid's Fasti ...	371
Hestley's (H. R.) Gradation ...	371
Jeyes' (S. H.) Guide to Studying for Classical Entrance Scholarships ...	451
Kynaston's Greek Elegiac Poets ...	371
Lang's (L. B.) Geography: The British Empire ...	450
Lupton's (W. M.) Geography ...	450
Macanlay's Hannabalian War ...	371
Maguire's (Dr.) Test Questions ...	451
Martineau's (C. A.) Earth, Air, and Water ...	450
Mason's (C. M.) Geographical Readers ...	450
—(C. P.) Subjunctive and so-called Potential Mood ...	451
Masson's (G.) Choice Readings from French History ...	109
Mayor's (Prof.) Book III. of Pliny's Letters ...	370
Meiklejohn's (J. M. D.) Geographical Reader ...	450
Merry's Acharnians ...	371
Moir's Continuous Latin Prose ...	371
Poetic Readers ...	451
Pratt and Leaf's Story of Achilles ...	371
Ritchie's (F.) First Steps in Latin ...	371
Roulier's Second Book of French Composition ...	108
Sachs' (H.) German Conversational Grammar ...	451
Saintine's Piccola ...	108
Schmitz's (Dr.) Introductory Latin Grammar ...	371
Stronville's French Genders ...	108
Sykes's (G. F.) First Readings in Latin ...	371
Taylor's Stories from Ovid ...	371
Tyrell's (Prof.) Miles Gloriosus of Plautus ...	370
Wolstenholme's edition of Gutzkow's Zopf und Schwert ...	451
Yonge's (Miss) English History Reading Books ...	449

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Archaeological Jottings ...	373
Baconfield, Earl, as a Journalist ...	338
British Museum, Additions to the MSS. at the ...	189
the ... Printed Catalogue of ...	280
Byron, A Little-known Letter by ...	300
Caldron Celebration, The ...	434
Clive's Despatch announcing his Victory at Plassey ...	474
Codex Zaenithus ...	136
Cyrillie and Glagolitic Alphabets ...	226
Do la Bellandiere ...	244
Devonshire Dialect Poem, A ...	392
Durham Cathedral ...	414
Finland, The Literary Society of ...	338
First Printed Book known, The ...	413
Grey Literary Society at the Cape ...	81
Hungarian Literature, Notes on ...	171
Italian Books, New ...	60
Malta, Letter from ...	318
Norse Mythology, The Origin of ...	393
Oedipus Tyrannus at Harvard College ...	435
Ottoman Khalifate, The Conspiracy against the ...	207, 226
Oxford Letter ...	433
Polyarp, Curious Blunders in Several Editions of ...	394
Rhodes, Letter from ...	45
Saint-Simon, The Works of ...	15
Shakspeare's Will ...	196

ORIGINAL ARTICLES—continued.		CORRESPONDENCE—continued.		NOTES—continued.		OBITUARY—continued.
	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
Smyrna, Letter from	261	Pontefract near Southwark	156	Roberts's (Prof. A.) Companion to the Revised Version of the English New Testament	453	MacGregor, Sir Duncan	473
Strakosch's (Prof.) Recitals	374	Pope, Statu of a, after Election	301	Rolle's (W. J.) Shakspeare's Plays for Colleges and Schools	7, 298	Mackay, Mr. Aberigh	99
University College, London, Extension of	154	Quadrifoglio del Decorso della Vita Humana	450	Sayce, Prof., accident to	43	Margolionth, Rev. Moses	171
Victoria University, Tho	300	Roman Wall, Tho	62	Schwyz, Historico Verein of the Canton of	432	Marshall, Dr.	8
"Visible Speech"	8	Remains in the Isle of Wight	237	Shakspeare's goods at New Place, the inventory of	298	Matile, Dr. George August	189
Walt Whitman on Carlyle	172	Shakspeare's "Viliora"	173	Spelling Reform	242	Metivier, Mons. Georges	261
Welsh Printed Books, Early, Bibliography of	226	Shaksperian Illustrations and the Philological Society's Dictionary	9	"Squadron" in Othello , I. 1. 22	116	Meyer, Madame Paul	171
CORRESPONDENCE.		Shakspeare, A Possible Autograph of	474	Stark's (Dr.) linguistic experiences in England	59	Miller, Rev. Josiah	8
		Sonnet, The Origin of the	63	Variorum Edition of the New Testament	337	— Theodor Bogdanovich	136
		Spelling Reform	9, 30, 99	Wyss, Johann Rudolf, centenary of the birth of	225	Nicol, Mr. Henry	118, 225
		Swedenborgian Literature	356	Zwingli and the Swiss Civil War	97	O'Shaughnessy, Arthur	98
		Swift's Giddy Fits	475	OBITUARY.		Paris, Mons. Paulin	153
		Swinburne's New Volume	46			Parker, Mr. John	8
		— Studies in Song	62			Pearson, Rev. C. B.	44
		Temple, The, at Jerusalem	190			Pisemsky, A. T.	119
		Trochaic Pentameter	436			Postgate, Mr. J. L.	412
		University College, London, Extension of	172			Punshon, Rev. W. Morley	299
		Warburton's Epigram against Dean Tucker	320			Rolliston, Professor	473
		Wetzstein, Dr. J. G.	46			Ruge, Dr. Arnold	26
		Wordsworth, the Birthplace of	456			Scheibe, Herr Theodor	260
		Wyss's Swiss Family Robinson	245			Seton, Sir William Cootie, Bart.	23
		NOTES.				Seyd, Mr. Ernest	337
						Spedding, Mr. James	206
						Stenhouse, Dr. John, F.R.S.	26
						Talbot, Mr. B. J.	119
						Tancera, Mons.	279
						Tóth, Coloman	136
						Towson, Mr. J. T.	26
						Uhlund, widow of the poet	454
						Walcott, Rev. MacKenzie E. O.	8
						Wallace, Mr. William Ross	454
						Wilson, Mr. Andrew	453
						Wyprecht, Lieut. Karl	243
						CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES, ETC.

SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE—continued.

	PAGE
Edgar and Prithard's Note-book on Practical Solid or Descriptive Geometry	102
Famthorpe's (Rev. J. P.) Household Science	192
Fothergill's (J. M.) Food for the Invalid	192
Gummere's (F. B.) The Anglo-Saxon Metaphor	358
Harpur's (T.) The Metaphysics of the School	140
Haughton's (Rev. S.) Lectures on Physical Geography	192
Horsmann's (Dr. C.) Altenglische Legenden	357
Hull's (Dr. E.) Coal Fields of Great Britain	102
Index to Royal Geographical Society's Journal	437
Issel's (Prof. A.) Istruzioni scientifiche per Viaggiatori	438
Jevons' (S.) Studies in Deductive Logic	228
Kingzett's (C. T.) Nature's Hygiene	102
Körner, Karl: Einführung in das Studium des Angelsächsischen	357
Kreitzer's (Lieut. G.) Im fernen Osten	438
Leigh's (Aston) Story of Philosophy	228
Leroux's Revue Egyptologique	282
Lowndes' (R.) René Descartes	140
Macaulay, Grant, and Wall's Vivisection	359
Meekker's (C. E.) The Gneiss of Flowers	102
Plant-Life	102
Ribot's (Th.) Les Maladies de la Mémoire	322
Rosenthal's (Dr. J.) Physiology of Muscles and Nerves	192
Russell's (Hon. R.) London Pops	192
Turner's (G. L.) Wish and Will	228
Uhlworm's (Dr. O.) Botanisches Centralblatt	101
United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries	246
Urquhart's (J. W.) Electrotyping	350
Veitch's (Prof.) translation of Descartes' Works	140
Watt's (Alex.) Scientific Industries explained	359
Wells's (Dr. C.) Grammar of the Turkish Language	283
Wilson's (A.) Introduction to the Study of Flowers	246
Wurtz's (A.) Atomo Scientifico Theory	46

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Hilbert Lectures, Tho...	321,
340, 353, 377, 397, 416
Pall Text Society ...	378

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

Alaska, expedition into the interior of ...	192
Algerian missionary expedition in Africa	247, 398, 438

NOTES OF TRAVEL—continued.

	PAGE
American Arctic expedition	478
Asah Bay	65
Baptist Missionary Society's expedition in Africa	321
Belgian expedition to Africa	175
Bevan's (G. P.) Statistical Atlas of England, Scotland, and Ireland	417
Cedrat, an ancient African town	158
Comber, Mr., the attack upon, in the Congo region	47
Crevaux, Dr., in South America	102, 306
Darcs-Salaam, road from, towards Lake Nyassa	229
De Brazza, Mons., in West Africa	102, 175
Depelchin, Père, in Africa	321
French Geographical Society's medals	341
Gallieni, Capt., in Africa	140, 158, 417
Geneva and the Venice Exhibition	359
Geographical Society's gold medals	283
German expeditions in Africa	102, 284
Giuletti's expedition in the Danakil country	478
Gouldsbury's (Dr.) expedition in West Africa	305, 341, 398
Junker, Dr., in Africa	66
Last, Mrs., in Equatorial Africa	284
Leichardt, discovery of the journal of	193
Lenz's (Dr. Oscar) journey across North-western Africa	211, 260
Livingstone (Congo) Inland Mission	321, 457
Major, Mr. R. H.	340
McCall, Mr., on the Congo	84
Moak, Dr. F., drowned in the Jordan	13
Oxus, ancient bed of the	13
Palestine, the exploration of	13
Panama interoceanic canal	321
Patagonia, explorations in	211, 478
Pennefather, Capt., explorations of	102
Seloms, Mr. F. C., the African traveller	368
Shamans, the, of N.W. Mongolia	66
Siberia, projected expeditions to	477
Soleillet, M., in Africa	66
Stanley, Mr. H. M., in Africa	438
Stevenson, Mr. J., and the London Missionary Society	438
Trans-Sahara Railway proposed	66, 266
Uganda, news from	84, 193
Universities mission to Central Africa	13, 141
Wagaha tribe in Central Africa	13, 141
Whympor's (Mr. E.) ascents of Chimborazo	122
Wieser, Dr. F., on Schöner's globes	358
Zambesi missionary expedition	175

SCIENCE NOTES.

Académie des Sciences: prizes to Englishmen	220
African pygmies in Italy	212
Anthropological Society of Washington	398
Agremont, the Gaulish tumult of	47
Broca, Dr., memoir of	458
Bronze implements, the chronology of	158
Clermont-Ganneau's Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes-Études	267
Comet discovered by Swift at Rochester (U.S.A.)	377
Crania of the Fiji Islanders	84
Crocé-Spinelli and Sivel, monument to the memory of	266

SCIENCE NOTES—continued.

	PAGE
Ethnological classification	122
Ethnology, British	247
Excavations at Bernissart, in Hainault	207
"Feather-ore" in the Isle of Man	341
Fossil sponge spicules	103
— man of Nice, the	377
French scientific diagrams	193
Geological survey of Canada	175
Geology in Japan	66
— of the principal European capitals	266
— of Utah	284
— in Yorkshire	305
— in the graveyard	359
Glycerino barometer, the	211
Mawley's summary of the weather of London	211
Meteorological observatory on the Pic du Midi	341
— station on Ben Nevis	478
Meteorite stone at Ensisheim	438
Mid-Silurian flora in North Wales	438
Moon, liberation of the	122
— determination of the diameter of	398
Pennsylvania, relics of the primitive inhabitants of	141
Sandstones, the history of	14
Silurian fossils of Girvan	31
Slates, engraved, from Towyn	478
Smithsonian Institution, the	417
Smyth's (Admiral W. H.) Cycle of Celestial Objects	175
Solar eclipses (1878 and 1880), reports on the	322
Sulphur, native, the formation of	229
Turquoise, the, in prehistoric times	322

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Asher's (Dr.) translation of Geiger's Contributions to the History of the Development of the Human Race	48
De Alwis's (Rev. C.) Sinhalese Handbook	212
Driver's (S. R.) Treatise on the Use of the Tenses in Hebrew	247
Galles's (Dr. J. H.) Gutiska	193
Gropp's (E.) Language of the Proverbs of Alfred	193
Havet's edition of the Querebus	66
— De Saturnia Latinorum Vereu	67
Kingsley's (N. W.) Mechanism of Speech	193
Landauer's edition of the Kitab al-Amānāt wa'l-I'tigādāt	247
Leach's (L.) The Letter H, Past, Present, and Future	67
Lespy's (V.) Grammaire bérnaise	14
Ludwig's Commentary on the Rig-Veda	306
Mandlik's work on Hindu Law	103
Müller (Prof. Max) Selected Essays	212
Nāṭi-Nighandhuca; or, the Vocabulary of Law	212
Philological Society's Dictionary	48
Root's (E. D.) Sakya Buddha	212
Senehus Mör, the	458
Thessen's (J. H.) Die Legende von Kisaotem	123
Uhle's (Dr. M.) Beiträge zur Grammatik des vorklassischen Chinesisch	123

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

Antiquaries, the Society of, 103, 123, 141, 176, 230, 248, 284, 341, 360, 378, 398; Anthropological Institute, 193, 212, 208, 341, 418; Archaeological Institute, 285, 360, 438; Biblical Archaeology, Society of, 193, 342, 459; Cambridge Antiquarian Society, 248; Chemical Society, 390; Folk-Lore Society, 141, 212, 323, 378; Hellenic Studies, Society for the Promotion of, 176, 323, 478; New Shakespeare Society, 84; Philological Society, 158, 194, 439; Royal Asiatic Society, 103, 170, 243, 341, 418; Royal Geographical Society, 397; Royal Society of Literature, 14, 194, 248, 323, 418.
--

OBITUARY.

	PAGE
Alston, Edward R.	223
Bigely, Dr. John, F.R.S.	140
Charles, Michel	13
Cotterill, Mr. Thomas	157
Davis, Dr. Joseph Barnard	397
Delesse, Mons. Achille	283
De Leu, Lieut.	193
Dembowsky, Baron Ercole	132
Gould, Mr. John, F.R.S.	122
Gray-Egerton, Sir Philip De Malpas	260
Jones, Mr. T. Rymer, F.R.S.	13
Lloyd, Rev. Humphrey, D.D.	66
Longuemar, Gen. de	175
Phipson-Wybrants, Capt. T. L.	193
Stahl, Mons.	417
Tennant, Prof. James	175

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

Alpine Journal, 31; Amer. Journ. of Philology, 230; Amer. Journ. of Mathematics, 246; Bibliotheca Orientalis, 207; Bollettino of the Ital. Geog. Soc., 65; Brain, 323; Burian's Jahresbericht, 230, 458; Cymmodor, 377; Geographische Mittheilungen, 65; Good Words, 175, 247; Hermathena, 458; Hermes, 284; Indian Antiquary, 48, 287; Journal of the Roy. Asiatic Soc., 103, 267, 306; Journal of Philology, 141; Leisure Hour, 122; Mind, 47; Monthly Record of Geography, 31, 122, 307, 341, 438; Petermann's Mittheilungen, 158, 283; Revue de Philologie, 141; Revue critique internationale, 207; Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, 267; Revue de Linguistique, 418; Revue Egyptologique, 458.
--

FINE ART.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Architecture, The Twenty Styles of	478
Colvin's edition of Woltmann and Woermann's History of Painting	15, 68
Conze, Hanser, and Bonndorf's Archäologische Untersuchungen auf Samothrake	158
Crane's (W.) The First of May	378
De Rougé's Inscriptions et Notices recueillies à Edfo	104
Gilchrist's (A.) Life of William Blake	212
Maricotte's (A.) Catalogue général des Monuments d'Abydos	48
Mitt's (J.) Excavations at Carnac (Brittany)	479
Münz's (E.) Raphael	85
Nicholson's (C.) Account of the Roman Villa near Brading	176
Reiss and Stübel's Peruvian Antiquities	31

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Robertson's (Canon) The Crypt of Canterbury Cathedral	97
Weber's (E.) Le Sipylos et ses Monuments	323
Yriarte's (C.) Florence	123

ART BOOKS.

Arnold's (G. B.) Gainsborough and Constable	105
Audley and Bowes' Keramic Art of Japan	231
Brown's (Rev. C. G.) School of Art Series of Drawing Copy Books	230

ART BOOKS—continued.

	PAGE
Edis's (R. W.) Decoration and Furniture of Town Houses	230
Great Historic Galleries of England, The	105
Hamerton's Etching and Etchers	32
Janvier's (C. A.) Practical Keramics for Students	105
Kemp's (R.) Pencil and Palette	105
Koehler's translation of Lalanne's Treatise on Etching	32
Manchester Literary Club, Papers of the	15
Phillimore's (Catherine M.) Fra Angelico, &c.	230
Poynter's (E. J.) South Kensington Drawing Book	230
Scott's (Lender) Fra Bartolomeo, &c.	230
Worham's (Rev. B. H.) Basingbourne Churchwardens' Book	15

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
Aquarellistes, La Société des	420
Archaeological Notes from the Mediterranean	285
Art Sales 160, 214, 232, 250, 287, 402, 420, 481	401
China, Paintings on	306
Dürer's Portrait of Himself	177
Early Art History of England	248
Excavations in Egypt	248
EXHIBITIONS:—
Of the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts	105
Messrs. Agnew's	142
Of the Royal Scottish Academy	159
At the French Gallery, Pall Mall	231
At Tooth's Gallery	231
Of the Society of Lady Artists	231
Of Swiss Art, New Bond Street	231
Of the Society of Painter-Etchers	298

ORIGINAL ARTICLES—continued.
EXHIBITIONS.—	PAGE
Of the Society of British Artists	268
Of the Society of Painters in Water- Colours	286, 325, 441
Of Dutch Paintings at Goupil's	286
Of Rosa Bonheur's Pictures	325
Of Decorative Art, New Bond Street	440
Of Pictures in the Magazines of Uffizi	441
Of Spanish and Portuguese Ornament- al Art	459
Black and White	469
Florence, Art Jottings from	287, 306
Grosvenor Gallery Winter Exhibition	30
—, The	343, 361
Guardi Gallery, The	440
Herbert Exhibition, The	362
International Exhibition, The	381
Leonardo da Vinci in the East	194
Madox Brown's Panel at Manchester	250
Menzel, Prof., Drawings of	441
Mezzotints at the Burlington Fine Arts Club	195
Michelangelo, An Alleged Picture of	381
Millaud at the Fine Art Society	159
New Year's Gift Books in France	16
Old Masters at the Royal Academy	33, 49, 69, 86
Roman Studio, A	249
Royal Academy, The	342, 379, 398
Salon of 1881, The	360, 399, 418, 439
— à Londres, The	480
Statues of Lorenzo and Giuliano in the Medici Chapel	481
Statuette of Athenè Parthenos	124
Tapestry Paintings	214
Turner, Girtin, and Cozens in the Bale Collection	380
Uffizi, Pictures in the Magazines of the Water-colour Drawings at the Dudley Gallery	196
Whistler, Mr., Exhibition of the Pastels of	142

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.
	PAGE
Altar-piece by Giovanni Sanzio	412
Blake's "Canterbury Pilgrims" (origi- nal engraving)	196
Burne-Jones piano, the	287
Cabinet, old, containing a collection of coins	307
Charney's voyage to Yucatan	482
Château de Loches, works of restoration at	34
Chester's (G. J.) Notes on the Archaeo- logical Collections of Oxford Uni- versity	482
Cluny Museum, new catalogue of	232
Cyprus Antiquities	462
Dagobert's chair	307
Da Vinci MSS., the	251
Dickinson's picture of "A Meet of the Four-in-Hand Club"	363
Elagabalus, the Sun-god of Emesa	442
Egyptology, new college of, at Cairo	106
Ephrussi's "Les Bains de Femmes d'Albert Dürer"	326
Excavations at Olympia	143
— at ancient stone cists in Galicia	233
— by the German Government	270
EXHIBITIONS.—
Liverpool autumn exhibition of modern works	34
Félix Régamey's sketches, &c.	143
Leeds Fine Art Society	197
Baron A. de Rothschild's works of art, in Paris	232
Pictures, &c., at Whitechapel	307
Pictures recently acquired by the French nation	307
Drawing illustrative of La Fontaine's Fables	326
Donatello Society—works of art	382
Art workmanship, at the Albert Hall	402
Japanese National, at Tokyo	420
St. Stephen's Art Society	461
Berlin National Gallery	482

NOTES—continued.
	PAGE
Fresco by Gozzoli at San Gimignano	232
Goethe, recently discovered portrait of	251
Hamerton, Mr. P. G., autotypes from works by	160
Hunt's (M. A.) paper on "Turner in Yorkshire"	51
Image, ancient wooden, found at Balla- chulish	232
Limbouze Abbey, the treasure chest of	307
Linton's series of large oil pictures	88
Lowenstam's etching of Lefevre's "Past Mother's Grave"	232
Mannfeld's etching of Cologne Cathedral	383
Medals of honour at the Paris Salon	421
Milton, the Lamb portrait of	196
Napoleon III., equestrian statue of	442
New York Metropolitan Museum of Art Palestine Exploration Fund	421
Paton, Sir Noel, bronze alto-relievo by	461
—'s picture of "Faith arm- ing the Christian Warrior"	461
Pilon, Germain, bas-relief in alabaster by	17
Royal Academy, associateships of the	461
Sales of works of art	50
Salon, battle of the	34
— Commission, the	106
Statue of Athenè Nikephoros	88
— of Savonarola	88
Valaisian Bishops, portraits of	161
Vela, Vincent, the Swiss sculptor	288
Velasquez, a rare picture by	106
White's (Tahmaseb) drawing, "Ghosts of the Past—Dawn at Ghizeh"	269

OBITUARY.

Bewick, Miss Jane	287
Bouvier, Mr. Augustus	85
Brigstocke, Mr. Thomas	269
Burges, Mr. William	325

OBITUARY—continued.
	PAGE
Consen, Mr. John	17
Davidson, Mons.	287
Deuble, Mons. Léopold	125
Fillon, Mons. Benjamin	442
Flatz, Gérard	420
Humbert, Charles	269
Johnson, Mr. Eli	88
Knight, Mr. John Prescott	251
Lacoste-Brunner, Mons. Henry	269
Mariette-Pasha	87
Merle, Mons. Hughes	233
Monilleron, Mons. Adolphe	178
Müller, Frederik	106
Nesfield, Lieut. William Andrews	196
Noël, Mons. Jules	269
O'Neill, Mr. Henry	34
Palmer, Samuel	420
Rouillard, Mons.	420
Schlander, F.	420
Soleman, Mons. Adam	363
Von Deschwarden, Paul	197

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

American Art Review, 107; Art Journal, 51, 125, 269, 363; Decoration, 462; Etcher, 51, 215; Gazette des Beaux-Arts, 18, 70, 143, 251, 462; Harper's Magazine, 442; Historie Galleries of England, 326, 421; Jahrbücher, 382; L'Art, 34, 107, 125, 161, 402; Magazine of Art, 344; Nineteenth Century, 269; Pompeii, 421; Portfolio, 143, 215, 269, 402, 442; Repertorium für Kunstwissenschaft, 270; Revue des Arts décoratifs, 107, 178, 421; South Kensington Museum, 326; Zeit- schrift für bildende Kunst, 51, 178, 311, 421.

THE STAGE AND MUSIC.

THE STAGE.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
Bateman, Mrs.	70
Bernhardt, Mdlle., in La Dame aux Camélias	462
Booth, Mr., in Lea	143
Burnand's new comedy, The Colonel	125
Country Girl , The, at the Gaiety	51
Divorce at the Vaudeville	107
Gilbert's (Mr.) Satire	326
Gymnase Company at the Gaiety	442
Martin Chuzzlewit , at the Vaudeville	233
Mellingen, The Actors from	421
Othello , at the Lyceum	344
French , at the Vaudeville	422
Romeo and Juliet , at the Court	251
Shakspeare at Mellingen	36
Sothern, Mr.	88
Tennyson's new play, The Cup	31

NOTES.

Arkwright's Wife , at the Imperial	308
Belle's Stratagem , at the Lyceum	308
Booth, Mr. Edwin, as Othello	71
— as Iago	107, 364
Branded , at the Princess's	270
Busybody , at the Gaiety	161

NOTES—continued.

	PAGE
Butterfly Fever , at the Criterion	383
Fool's Revenge , The, at the Princess's	18
Forty Thieves , The, at the Gaiety	18
Good-Natured Man , The, at the Gaiety	126
Hamlet , Quarto of 1603	308, 345
— at the Lyceum	483
Iphigenie auf Tauris , by the Mellingen Players	483
Janot , Lecocq's new comic opera	144
Jo , at the Olympic	197
Juana , at the Court	364
La Boulangerie , at the Globe	383
Lola , at the Olympic	71
Macbeth , at the Sadler's Wells	144
Mary Warner , at the Sadler's Wells	234
Masks and Faces , at the Gaiety	126
Mellingen theatrical company	178, 289, 403
Member for Stocum , at the Royalty	403
Michael Strogoff , at the Adelphi	233
Modjeska, Mdlle., as Frou-Frou	443
Money Spinner , The, at the St. James's	89
Morte civile , La, at the Prince of Wales's	18
Mother Goose , at Drury Lane	18
Murdoch's (J.) The Stage	289
Nana , at the Ambigu	108
Othello , at the Princess's	71
— at Sadler's Wells	107
Ravel, the Parisian actor	364
School for Scandal , at Sadler's Wells	18
Tom Pinch , at the Vaudeville	233
Valentine and Orson , at Covent Garden	18

MUSIC.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Edwards's (C. A.) Organs and Organ- Building	71
Foskett's (E.) Harold Glynda	309
Gonvy's (Th.) Requiem	308
Grove's (Dr. G.) Dictionary of Music and Musicians	71, 309
Haeffer's (F.) The Great Musicians	102
Organist's Quarterly Journal	309
Pinatti's (C.) Kings and Queens , &c.	309
Reinecke's (C.) Second Set of Ten Trios for Female Voices	309
Stainer's (Dr.) Music Primers	71
Stephens' (C. E.) 1er Quatuor en Sol; 2e Quatuor	308
Tours' (B.) Choral Symphony	309

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Berlioz' "Childhood of Christ"	198
— "Symphonie Fantastique"	327
Ganz's Orchestral Concert , &c.	345
Hoffmann's Melusine , &c.	108
Il Demonto , by Herr Anton Rubinstein	483

ORIGINAL ARTICLES—continued.

	PAGE
Liszt Festivals at Antwerp and Brussels	422
Menter, Mdlle. Sophie, and Herr Anton Rubinstein	403
Musical Union Matinée	323
Philharmonic and Mr. Ganz's Concerts	423
Richter Concerts	383, 403
Rubinstein's (Herr Anton) Piano-forte Recital	443

NOTES.

CONCERTS:—
Saturday Popular	52, 234, 289
Monday Popular	52
— 108, 126, 144, 179, 216, 234, 252, 289	108, 364
Hackney Choral Association	364
Crystal Palace 126, 144, 179, 216, 252, 364, 403	126, 144, 216, 289
St. James's Hall	179, 216, 252, 289
Philharmonic	216
Bach Choir	216
Lamoureux's orchestra	244
Sacred Harmonic Society	252
Steinway Hall	289
Menter, Mdlle. Sophie, at the Crystal Palace	364
Rubinstein, Nicholas, Death of	252

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 452.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
DE SGYRES' EDITION OF PASCAL'S PROVINCIAL LETTERS, by the Rev. MARK PATTISON	1
MYERS' MONOGRAPH ON WORDSWORTH, by Prof. W. KNIGHT	1
CROFT'S EDITION OF ELYOT'S "GOVERNOUR," by E. W. GOSSE	3
DR. HUNTER ON ENGLAND'S WORK IN INDIA, by JAS. S. COTTON	4
NEW NOVELS, by GEO. SAINTSBURY	5
CURRENT LITERATURE	6
ORIGINAL VERSE: A METAPHYSIC "CUL DE SAC," by S. WADDINGTON	7
NOTES AND NEWS	7
"VISIBLE SPEECH"	8
OBITUARY	8
SELECTED BOOKS	9
CORRESPONDENCE:— Shaksperian Illustrations and the Philological Society's Dictionary, by Dr. J. A. H. MURRAY; Spelling Reform, by F. J. FURNIVALL and H. SWEET; Mr. Gurney's "Power of Sound," by Edmund Gurney; Irish Missals, by the Rev. F. E. WARREN	9-10
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	11
GÜNTHER'S INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF FISHES, by W. S. DALLAS	11
MICHEL CHASLES, by R. TUCKER	13
NOTES OF TRAVEL	13
SCIENCE NOTES	14
PHILOLOGY NOTES	14
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	14
COLVIN'S EDITION OF WOLTMANN AND WOERMANN'S HISTORY OF PAINTING, I., by A. S. MURRAY	15
RECENT ARCHAEOLOGICAL PUBLICATIONS	15
PICTURES IN THE MAGAZINES OF THE UFFIZI, by C. HEATH WILSON	16
NEW YEAR'S GIFT BOOKS IN FRANCE, by PH. BURY	16
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	17
STAGE NOTES	18

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

The LENT TERM begins on TUESDAY, JANUARY 11TH. New Students will be admitted on Monday, the 10th, from 11 A.M. to 4 P.M. Candidates must not be under fourteen years of age, and those under sixteen will be required to present themselves on Tuesday, the 11th, at 10.30 A.M., for Examination in English, Arithmetic, and the Elements of Latin. The Courses of Study are adapted to the requirements of Candidates for Arts and Science Degrees of the University of London. The Junior Classical Classes will commence after Christmas to read the Books set for Matriculation in June, 1881.
J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

ABINGDON SCHOOL, Berks.—The new buildings give further accommodation. BOYS are prepared in modern subjects as well as for the Universities, where the School has valuable Scholarships. TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS are now open to Boys entering in January. A Scholar's total expenses average £35 per annum.—Apply to Rev. E. SUMMERS, Head Master.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 25TH JANUARY, 1881.
F. W. MADDER, M.A.S., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WARBERRY HOUSE.

Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC "SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEBBINS, M.A., Master of the College and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Classes, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 200.

RS. W. DINZEY BURTON receives as BOARDERS YOUNG GENTLEMEN, Students from India, the Colonies, or the Provinces, who require a Home in Town while preparing professional or public life. High-class references. Terms on application. 39, Amphil-square, N.W.

A LADY offers a pleasant HOME to one or two YOUNG LADIES, to share great educational advantages with two others. Highest references exchanged.—Address Miss MOSLEY, Combe Down, Bath.

EPPING FOREST.—In the centre of the land lately thrown open to the public, a well-established SCHOOL offers a comfortable HOME and sound TRAINING. Good Playground and Cricket-field. Cows kept. Pupils pass the College of Preceptors, Cambridge Local, and London Matriculation.—G. F. H. BYRES, B.A., Forest House, Woodford.

BOYS PREPARED for the ENTRANCE and SCHOLARSHIP EXAMINATIONS at RUGBY and the other Public Schools.—For Terms, &c., apply to R. F. E. BUSH, Esq., Hillmorton-road, Rugby.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE,

22, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON, W.
The REPORT for 1880 (SWANSEA MEETING) is now ready, and will be supplied as follows:—
To Members, gratis and carriage paid.
To Associates at the Swansea Meeting, 16s.; if sent by post, 1s. additional.
To the Public, through Mr. John Murray or any Bookseller, 24s.
J. E. H. GORDON, Assistant Secretary.

THE SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION, including a Loan Collection of Works by the late George Hodgson, is NOW OPEN, 3, TALL MALL EAST, from 10 till 5.
ALFRED D. FRITT, Secretary.

HANOVER GALLERY, 47, New Bond-street; entrance from Maddox-street.—NOW OPEN, the WINTER EXHIBITION of OIL PAINTINGS by English Artists, and of Original Drawings and Sketches published in Punch. Lighted at dusk.

SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.

WINTER EXHIBITION, NOW OPEN, from 10 to 5 daily, at the SUFFOLK STREET GALLERIES, TALL MALL EAST. Admission 1s.
THOS. ROBERTS, Secretary.

SOCIETY of BIBLICAL ARCHAEOLOGY.

No Meeting of the Society will be held on January 4th, 1881, the ANNI-VERSARY MEETING having been POSTPONED until JANUARY 11TH, when the usual business will be transacted, and a Communication from Mr. THOS. G. VINCE will be read on a "NEWLY DISCOVERED LIST OF EARLY BABYLONIAN KINGS."
W. HARRY RYLANDS, Sec.

TRAINING COLLEGE for TEACHERS in MIDDLE and HIGHER SCHOOLS for GIRLS, SKINNER STREET, BISHOPSGATE, E.C.

The NEXT TERM will begin JANUARY 19TH. New Students will be admitted to the Lower Division only. Names of candidates for admission should be sent before JANUARY 8TH to the Secretary, Miss BROUGH, 1, Queen-street, Brompton.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Rev. C. B.

DRAKE, M.A., is able to OFFER to CANDIDATES for WOOLWICH the special advantages of Residence at Cambridge. Home life. Numbers strictly limited.—Address, 12, Queen Anne-terrace.

PARIS.—To Art Students.—A STUDIO

for LADIES having recently been opened by the eminent and well-known Artist M. LEON GLAIZE, of 95, Rue de Valenciennes, near the Luxembourg, Madame LEVASSEUR, Directrice of an excellent and commodious Establishment for Young Ladies, within easy walking distance of the Atelier, begs to inform Lady Students that she can offer them a COMFORTABLE HOME and GOOD BOARD on moderate terms, close to omnibus and tram.—For terms apply, Madame LEVASSEUR, 333, Rue de Valenciennes.

FOR SALE.—A Collection of Peruvian

POTTERY from Ancient Tombs, duplicates from Charterhouse Museum. About Thirty-four Specimens, many very fine. The locality can be given in most cases. Price 1s Guinea.—Apply to the CURATOR, Charterhouse, Godalming.

ETCHINGS.—AMATEURS who would like to CONTRIBUTE occasionally to a MONTHLY PUBLICATION of AMATEUR ETCHINGS are invited to communicate with Mr. W. H. MAY, Dorset-road, Merton, S.W.

SAINT PAUL'S SCHOOL.—About

TWELVE SCHOLARSHIPS will be awarded next Term.—For information, address CLERK to GOVERNORS, Mercers' Hall, E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Colotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Reliquaries, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where a mounting is not an objection, and is a cheap method of illustration where quantities are required.

* For Terms and Specimens apply to the Manager.
AUTOTYPE is especially adapted for REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART, possessing a wide range of monochromatic expression, and reproducing with fidelity the Artist's touch.

JUST PUBLISHED on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s. "Come unto these Yellow Sands," after the painting by Walter Field, Esq., exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1878, and the Paris Universal Exhibition, 1879. This fine Autotype combines the merits of an engraving with complete fidelity to the artist's touch, Mr. Field having produced a monochrome expressly for Autotype.

Will be ready in January, Autotype Reproductions of Twelve Drawings and Paintings by P. G. Hamerton, Esq.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY

Displays a noble Collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and many interesting examples of MODERN ART. To adorn a Home with permanent Photographic Masterpieces, examples of the greatest Masters, old and new, may be seen, by a visit to the AUTOTYPE GALLERY, to be a matter of trifling cost. Admission free.

Catalogue of the Company's Publications, 138 pages, sixpence, free by post. Gratis to Purchasers.

General Manager, W. & B. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY PRESS SERIES.

Now ready, in 8vo, price 12s. 6d., cloth.

FAUST. From the German of GOETHE.

By THOS. E. WEBB, LL.D., one of Her Majesty's Counsel; sometime Fellow of Trinity College, now Regius Professor of Laws and Public Orator in the University of Dublin.

London: LONDMANS, GREEN, & CO.
Dublin: HODGES, FOSTER, & FIDGIS.

A COMPANION TO TENNYSON'S POEMS.

Just published, crown 8vo, with Steel Engravings of the Earliest Portrait of Tennyson (and Somerset Cross), price 6s.

ALFRED TENNYSON: his LIFE and

WORKS. By WALTER E. WACE. Contains the fullest life of the Poet yet published, an Account of his Works and their Reception, Explanation of Obscure Passages, Parallel Passages, Alterations, Bibliography, &c., &c.

Edinburgh: MACNIVEN & WALLACE.

Will shortly be published, demy 8vo, price 4s. 6d.

VIVISECTION, Scientifically and Ethically considered. In Prize Essays. By JAMES MACAULAY, A.M., M.D., F.R.S.E.; Rev. HERWYN GRANT, B.A., Vicar of St. Paul's, Bethnal-green, London, E.; and ABRAHAM WALL, LL.B., Member of the Royal College, England, &c.

London: MARSHALL, JAPP, & CO., 17, Holborn-viaduct, E.C.

TENTH THOUSAND—will be ready at CHRISTMAS.

Now ready, in demy 4to, cloth, 8s., post-free.

HEBREW and GREEK LEXICONS,

containing every Word in the Scriptures, with their Varied Renderings; also a Treatise on the True Use of the TENSES, being a Companion or REFINED INDEX to the "ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE" (12s.). By ROBERT YOUNG, LL.D.

Edinburgh: G. A. YOUNG & CO., 81, Nicolson-street; and all Booksellers.

A NEW WORK BY DR. BAYNE.

TWO GREAT ENGLISHWOMEN:

MRS. BROWNING AND CHARLOTTE BRONTË.

WITH AN ESSAY ON MODERN POETRY.

By PETER BAYNE, M.A., LL.D.

Crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

London: JAMES CLARKE & CO., 13 & 14, Fleet-street, E.C.

Post 8vo, pp. 216, price 6s.

THE SPIRIT OF NATURE.

By H. BELLIE BAILLON, B.A. Cantab.

"He [Mr. Baillon] writes with so much verve, with such an exquisite appreciation of the beauty of nature, with such evident earnestness, and often with such genuine eloquence of a high order . . . —Academy."

"This is one of the most refreshing books we have for a long time met with. It is by a scientific student, but can be recommended for its charming style and healthy tone."—Dublin University Review.

"Mr. Baillon's essays form a pretty and an interesting volume. It is rich in the fruit of a loving study of nature, a study which the author has evidently prosecuted, not only in the laboratory and with the microscope, but by first-hand observation of her quiet spots and secret ways."

London: J. & A. CHURCHILL, 11, New Burlington-street.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR. Price 5s.

MORNING CLOUDS: being divers Poems.

"Mr. Baillon possesses originality—a rare gift in these days."—Athenaeum.

"The 'Child of Shame' and 'Two Friends' are worthy of Browning at his best."—Graphic.

"The author of 'Rosamond' is a true poet. The wealth of thought, freshness of feeling, and beauty of diction which marked his earlier efforts appear in 'Morning Clouds' in a richer form and with a more mellowed splendour."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

Edinburgh: DAVID DOUGLAS.

London: HAMILTON, ADAMS, & CO.

Also, Price 5s.

ROSAMOND: a Tragic Drama.

"'Rosamond' is a drama of really considerable merit. This is not the Gothic Rosamond we know from Gibbon, who is a woman more like Frodo's 'Mary Stuart' or the 'Lucretia Borgia' of tradition. Mr. Baillon's Rosamond belongs to much purer, more crystalline, type of her sex."—British Quarterly Review.

London: LONDMANS & CO.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JANUARY

contains—Mr. Pops the Musician, by Dr. Hueffer—The Father of the Symphony—The Great Composers: Schubert—Musical Changes, by H. C. Lunn—The Leeds Festival Surplus—Crystal Palace, Moody Popular, and Brighton Aquarium Concerts—Reviews—Occasional Notes—Foreign and Country News—Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JANUARY

contains—"The Watchword": a New Part-Song, by CRO PINSITT.

Price, separately, 1d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 90 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

SOME GENTLEMEN of Culture and Position are DESIROUS of a New Edition of the "ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA" more in accordance with the old Editions, especially on English History and Language.—Those willing to Contribute, address M. N. Mey, 159, Piccadilly.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

For JANUARY, 1881. Price 2s. 6d.

THE DAWN of a REVOLUTIONARY EPOCH. By H. M. HYNDMAN.
THE CRISIS in IRELAND.

(1) THE HISTORICAL CLAIMS of TENANT RIGHT. By F. SERBOIM.

(2) THE PRESENT ANARCHY. By E. D. J. WILSON.

(3) THE THREE "F's." By the Right Hon. LORD DE VESCI.

THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE. By the Hon. Mr. Justice STEPHEN.
A GLIMPSE at NEWFOUNDLAND. By the Right Hon. the EARL of DUNRAVEN.

A DAY with a WAR BALLOON. By Captain ELSDALE, R.E.

THE EXHIBITION of PICTURES. By T. VILLIERS LISTER.

A CENSUS of RELIGIONS. By the Right Hon. J. G. HOBARD, M.P.

PENNY FICTION. By JAMES PATY.

THE RELIGION of ZOROASTER. By Professor MONIER WILLIAMS, C.I.E.

THE BASUTOS and the CONSTITUTION of the CAPE of GOOD HOPE.

By Sir BARTLE FRERE, Bart.

London: C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.

Just published, 3s., post-free, 12s. per Annum.

MIND:

A Quarterly Review of PSYCHOLOGY and PHILOSOPHY.

JANUARY, 1881.

CONTENTS.

ILLUSIONS of INTROSPECTION. SULLY.

OUR CONTROL of SPACE and TIME. VENK.

RENOUVIERS PHILOSOPHY. SHADWORTH HODGSON.

THE SUMMUM BONUM. D. G. THOMPSON.

REPLIES to CRITICISMS on "THE DATA of ETHICS." HERBERT

SPENCER.

NOTES, NOTICES, &c.

WILLIAMS & NORRIS, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 23, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Price Half-a-Crown.

THE MODERN REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR No. V., JANUARY, 1881.

1. THE PROPHECIES of ISAIAH.—I. By Prof. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.

2. GRAECIA REDIVIVA. By E. M. GELDAUT, M.A.

3. FINAL CAUSES. By GEORGE HENSLAW, M.A., F.G.S.

4. THE ORIGINATIONS of DOCTRINAL SUBSCRIPTION: a Discussion. By H. W. CROSKY, F.G.S., CHARLES VOYSEY, M.A., GEORGE SARSON, M.A., &c.

5. JOHN MILTON. By HERBERT NEW.

6. What would the ATHEIST have? By J. PAGE HOPPS.

7. FACTS and FANCIES about FAUST.—II. By H. SCHÜTZ WILSON.

8. THE ECCLESIASTIC USE of the GOSPEL NARRATIVES. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A.

9. AN EPILOGUE. By A. MATHESON.

10. NOTES and NOTICES. By JOSEPH WOOD, R. CROMPTON JONES, B.A., GEORGE ST. CLAIR, &c.

London: Published for the Proprietors by JAMES CLARKE & CO.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

For JANUARY, 1881. No. DCCCLXXXIII. Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

AUTOBIOGRAPHIES. No. I.—BENVENUTO CELLINI.

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.—PART III.

BEFORE and AFTER the BALLOT.

THE BISHOP ASTRAY.

ON SOME of SHAKESPEARE'S FEMALE CHARACTERS.

BY ONE WHO HAS PERSONATED THEM.—OPHELIA.

THE BEER.

OUTDOOR SONNETS.

THE LAND of OILEAD.

THE MINISTRY of MISERY.

Edinburgh and London: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

NEW STORIES.

NOTICE.—THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE for JANUARY, 1881, contains the First Parts of Two New Stories.

One entitled—

A GRAPE from a THORN. By JAMES PAYN, Author of "Lost Sir Masingberd," "By Proxy," &c.

The other—

LOVE the DEBT. By a New Author.

* The Stories will be illustrated by Mr. du Maurier and Mr. W. Small.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

Now ready (One Shilling), No. 233.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For JANUARY.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS:

A GRAPE from a THORN. By JAMES PAYN. (With an Illustration.) Chap. I.—On the Road. II.—The Arrival. III.—The Ladies' Drawing-room. IV.—A Visitor. V.—A Map of the Country.

TO AN OLD COAT. (From Béranger.) By F. DOYLE.

THE MORAL ELEMENT in LITERATURE.

VAGABONDAGE and PEDESTRIANISM.

FINA'S AUNT. Some Passages from Miss Williamson's Diary. Chapters VIII.—XIII.

IN THE HEART of the HIGHLANDS.

LOVE the DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. I.—In a Temper. II.—Revenge. III.—Rev. George Kneeshaw.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

403rd Edition, with Portrait, 1s. 6d.

BUTTER'S SPELLING.

BUTTER'S READING and SPELLING, in Easy Gradations. Seventy-second Edition, 1s. 6d.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & Co.; and all Booksellers.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

MY JOURNEY ROUND the WORLD: vii CEYLON, NEW ZEALAND, AUSTRALIA, TORRES STRAITS, CHINA, JAPAN, and the UNITED STATES. By Capt. S. H. JONES PARRY, late Royal Madras Engineers. 2 vols., 2s.

"It is pleasant to follow Captain Jones Parry on his Journey Round the World. He is full of life, sparkle, sunlight, and anecdote."—Graphic.

AN ACTOR ABROAD; or, Gossip,

Dramatic, Narrative, and Descriptive from the RECOLLECTIONS of an ACTOR in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, the SANDWICH ISLANDS, CALIFORNIA, NEVADA, CENTRAL AMERICA, and NEW YORK. By EDMUND LEATHES. 8vo, 18s.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE. (1787—1874.) By his daughter, Madame DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol., 8vo, 18s.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and

BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifteenth Edition. Royal 8vo, with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST.

By Mrs. GEORGE SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. G. H. SUMNER, Hon. Canon of Winchester, Rector of Old Alresford, Hants. 8vo, with Illustrations, 18s. [Next week.]

THE NEW NOVELS.

FIXED as FATE. By Mrs. Hous-

TOWN, Author of "Recommended to Mercy," "Twenty Years in the Wild West," &c. 3 vols.

JEANNETTE. By Mary C. Row-

SELL, Author of "Love Loyal," &c. 3 vols.

"This story is cleverly told, and the situations are neither strained nor improbable. The author deserves praise for the faithfulness with which she portrays life and its ordinary incidents."—Daily Telegraph.

GERALDINE and her SUITORS.

By Mrs. SIMPSON, Author of "Winnie's History," &c. 3 vols.

"We have great pleasure in recommending this delightful novel. It is cheerful and wholesome in tone, it contains several types of character which are well drawn, and the interest is well preserved to the end."—John Bull.

LITTLE PANSY. By Mrs.

RANDOLPH, Author of "Gentianella," &c. 3 vols.

"This novel is sure to be popular. It is a most amusing story. Little Pansy is a charming creature."—Sunday Times."Little Pansy" will assuredly take precedence of all Mrs. Randolph's works, brilliant as they were. Her characters are thoroughly true to nature."—Court Journal.

DIMPLETHORPE. By the Author of "St. Olave's," &c. 3 vols.

"The study of character which the author proposed to herself is exhibited with considerable skill. He describes the better sort of village people with pleasant humor."—Athenaeum."Dimplethorpe" is a well-written, ingenious, agreeable, and interesting story. The characters are naturally drawn. —St. James's Gazette.

STRICTLY TIED UP. 3 vols.

"Strictly Tied Up" is entertaining. It is in every sense a novel conceived in a light and happy vein. —Athenaeum."Strictly Tied Up" is a very cleverly constructed novel, as amusing as it is ingenious. —St. James's Gazette.

THIRD EDITION of ROY and VIOLE. By Mrs. FORRESTER, Author of "Viva," &c. 3 vols.

"An admirable tale, told by one who can vividly describe, and incisively comment on, the manners and 'personnel' of modern society."—World.

BERYL FORTESCUE. By Lady

DEFFUS HARDY. 3 vols. [Just ready.]

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GILBERT, MILLAIS, HUNT, LEECH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS of POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. By Mrs. Oliphant.

John Halifax, Gentleman. By Elliot Warburton.

The Crescent and the Cross. By Miss Kavanagh.

A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Adam Graceme. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Sam Slick's Wise saws. Cardinal Wiseman's Popes.

A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb. Margaret and her Bridesmaids.

Sam Slick's Old Judge. Darien. By Elliot Warburton.

Sir B. Burke's Family Romance. The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs. Oliphant.

The Englishwoman in Italy. Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Freer's Life of Jeanne d'Albret. The Valley of a Hundred Fires. Burke's Romance of the Forum.

Adèle. By Miss Kavanagh. Studies from Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Grandmother's Money. Jefferson's Book about Doctors.

Mistress and Maid. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Les Miroirs. By Victor Hugo. St. Olave's. Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

Sam Slick's American Humour. Barbara's History. By Anella B. Edwards.

Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.

No Church. Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Alec Forbes. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.

A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Dixon's New America. Robert Falconer. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Dasent, D.C.L.

David Elginbrod. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Hannah. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Sam Slick's Americans at Home.

The Uskling Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.

My Little Lady. By E. Frances Poynter.

Phoebe Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Life of Murio Antiochus. By Professor C. D. Yonge.

Sir Gibbie. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

Young Mrs. Jardine. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

TRÜBNER & CO'S

LIST OF PUBLICATIONS.

NEARLY READY.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT within

HISTORIC TIMES: with Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. MARTINO, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Demy 8vo, with illustrations by Wolf and others, cloth, 14s. A few Copies printed on Large Paper, 31s. 6d.

DR. APPLETON: his Life and Literary

Relics. By JOHN H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, Sussex; and A. H. FAYCE, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, and Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE RELIGIOUS REVOLUTION of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. From the French of EDOAR QUINET. Forming an Explanation and a Defence of the Principle of the Policy of the French Government with reference to the Roman Church in France. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

NOW READY.

THE ENEMIES of BOOKS. By William

BLADES, Typograph, Author of "The Life and Typography of William Caxton," &c., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, with illustrations, parchment, 5s.

KING'S COLLEGE LECTURES on ELO-

CUTION; or, the Physiology and Culture of Voice and Speech, and the Expression of the Emotions by Language, Countenance, and Gesture. Being the Substance of the Introductory Course of Lectures annually delivered by CHARLES JOHN FLEISHER, Lecturer on Public Reading and Speaking at King's College, London, in the Evening Classes Department. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. New and greatly enlarged Illustrated Edition, to which is added a Special Lecture on the Causes and Cure of Impediments of Speech. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

LETTERS from my MILL. From the French of ALPHONSE DAUDET. By MART CORET. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s.; boards, 2s.

CHEAP EDITION of MR. ARNOLD'S POPULAR POEM ON BUDDHA AND BUDDHISM.

THE LIGHT of ASIA; or, the Great

Renunciation. Being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Told in Verse by an Indian BUDDHIST. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Author of "The Indian Song of Songs." Crown 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.

THE ENGLISHMAN and the SCANDI-

NAVIAN; or, a Comparison of Anglo-Saxon and Old Norse Literature. By F. M. TALFALL, M.A., Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, Translator of "Hyllas" and "Charles," Author of "The Oxonian in Iceland," &c. 8vo, cloth, 18s.

NEW VOLUMES OF

"TRÜBNER'S ORIENTAL SERIES."

THE HISTORY of ESARHADDON (Son of Sennacherib), King of Assyria B.C. 681—668. Translated from the Cuneiform Inscriptions in the British Museum Collection. Together with a Grammatical Analysis of each Word, List of Eponyms, &c. By E. A. HUGGE, M.I.A.S., Assyrian Exhibitioner, Christ's College, Cambridge. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY of the JAPANESE. By BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yeigo Henkaku Ichiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

A TALMUDIC MISCELLANY; or, a

Thousand and One Extracts from the Talmud, the Midrashim, and the Kabbalah. Compiled and Translated by P. L. HERSHMAN. With Preface by the Rev. F. W. FARRAR, D.D., Canon of Westminster. Post 8vo, cloth, 14s.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES; or, Jataka

Tales. From the Original Pali of the Jatakavannana, now for the first time Edited by Prof. V. FAUSBOELL. Translated by T. W. RHYDS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 18s.

THE GULISTAN; or, Rose Garden of

Shah Shams'ud-din Sadi of Shiraz. Translated for the first time into Prose and Verse, with a Preface and a Life of the Author, from the Aish Kaidah. By EDWARD R. RANTWICK, F.R.S., M.I.A.S., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

LINGUISTIC and ORIENTAL ESSAYS.

Written from the year 1848 to 1878. By R. N. CUST, late Indian Civil Service; Hon. Sec. R. Asiatic Society. Post 8vo, cloth, 18s.

NEW VOLUMES OF

"THE ENGLISH and FOREIGN PHILOSOPHICAL LIBRARY."

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of the HUMAN RACE. Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEORGE, Author of "Origin and Evolution of Human Speech and Reason." Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER Ph.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

AN ACCOUNT of the POLYNESIAN

RACE: its Origin and Migrations. By A. FERNANDEZ. Vol. II. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1881.

No. 452, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Provincial Letters of Pascal. Edited by John de Soyres. (Cambridge: Deighton, Bell & Co.)

MORE than one English translation of Pascal's celebrated work has been published—the first of them in 1657, only six months after the appearance of the last of the series of Letters—but the present volume, edited by Mr. John de Soyres, is, I believe, the first edition of the original French text which has been printed in this country. The Lettres provinciales first came out as separate pamphlets at unequal intervals from January 23, 1656, to March 24, 1657. The great circulation of the Letters made it necessary to reprint the earlier numbers in haste and in secrecy. Hence many variations in the text, even in these early reprints, which, when collected in a volume, passed as the first edition, having a general title-page, and the imprint, "A Cologne chés Pierre de la Vallée, 1657." But the alterations in the fourth edition are more numerous and more important. This edition, also dated Cologne, 1659, was the last published in Pascal's lifetime, and it has been matter of dispute among the critics whether the corrections it contains were made by Pascal himself or not. The present editor decides in favour of their authenticity, and has accordingly reprinted the text of the edition of 1659, giving at the foot of the page all the variations of the three earlier editions. The corrections in the fourth edition are almost always improvements of word or phrase, and are well worth the attention of the philological student of the French language. Sometimes Pascal sacrifices to propriety a bold and piquant phrase, as when in Letter 16 he has suppressed the words, "Voicy une insigne extrauagance et un gros péché mortal contre la raison." Mr. de Soyres has emancipated himself from the superstition of our editors of reprints, and has abandoned the spelling of the original. The reason he gives for so doing, "for the sake of more general usefulness," is a less valid reason than that of the philological worthlessness of printers' orthography.

The notes, which are conveniently inserted at the end of each separate Letter, instead of being massed at the end of a volume, are short and to the point. They are mostly, though not entirely, confined to supplying the passages referred to in the Letters, or explaining the historical allusions. The few that go beyond this, and engage either in refutation of the author or of his ultra-montane commentator, Maynard, are blemishes in a book which aims, and may justly claim, to be a scholar's edition. Mr. de Soyres is not able to explain the souffler de compègne; and Brewster's Life and Libri's article in the Revue des Deux-Mondes are obsolete authorities for the history of Galileo.

In an introduction of seventy pages—not too many for their purpose—the editor supplies such information as is requisite for the understanding of the letters. This introduction is somewhat loosely composed in the style of a review article; yet the editor deserves credit for self-restraint in handling a subject where the materials were so abundant and so interesting. Economy of space and words might be effected by the omission of the dozen pages occupied with the analysis of the eighteen Letters. Mr. de Soyres refers his reader to Principal Tulloch's volume for the facts of Pascal's life. He might have done the same for an abstract of the contents of the Letters. If such analyses are of use at all, about which there may be some doubt, they should be placed as "Contents" at the head of each Letter.

The extraordinary reputation which Pascal enjoyed in his own century was created for him by his Lettres provinciales, and not by his Pensées. In the nineteenth century the estimation of the two books is reversed; everyone reads the Pensées, and is content to have heard of the Lettres provinciales. The Pensées are for all time; the Lettres provinciales were an ephemeral pamphlet. Contemporary celebrity is—not always, but mostly—in inverse proportion to enduring fame. The Letters of Junius have this in common with the Lettres provinciales, that they founded a vast reputation upon a party quarrel of the day. The Letters of Junius have passed out of sight; at most the echo of their fame survives; the interest of the Lettres provinciales filled a far wider area than that of the Letters of Junius, being read with avidity in every language and country where the Jesuits were known or feared. It was to this fear and hatred of an invisible and omnipresent power, whose ambition aimed at nothing less than the total subjugation of society, that the first celebrity of the Lettres provinciales was due. When the Jansenist controversy had passed away, when Port Royal had ceased to be, and when the Society of Jesus was no longer a terror to Europe, the Letters had lost their point and their intelligibility. They have become a classic—that is to say, they require to be edited with explanatory notes—and are read by students of language; or they have become a document, and are referred to by students of the history of the seventeenth century. What delighted Pascal's contemporaries was his satire, his hard hitting of the Jesuits. It is observable that the eulogies bestowed upon the Letters in the next century—the eighteenth—turn upon their style and rhetoric rather than their contents. Voltaire pronounced them to be "the first work of genius in French prose." D'Aguesseau says of the fourteenth letter that "the Philippics of Demosthenes and Cicero are not more forcible or more perfect." D'Alembert calls the work "a chef-d'œuvre of eloquence, which will be eternally esteemed a model of good taste and style," adding that "there is not a single word in it which has become obsolete." Gibbon ascribes to his frequent study of the Letters his own proficiency in the art of sarcastic innuendo.

There is no need to prove by authority, what any reader can test for himself, the light and delicate wit, the fine irony, and the elegant play of humour which the style of these Letters exhibits. But mere style cannot confer immortality on any book apart from its contents. The greater part of the Provincial Letters is occupied with an obsolete controversy, and with refuting books which have long since lost all their authority. In the Pensées, Pascal is treating themes and speculations which touch the interest and excite the feelings of mankind as fully at the present day as they did when he wrote them down. But in the Letters there is, I think, but one subject of permanent human interest brought under discussion. This is the value, not of this or that Jesuitical book, but of the system of moral casuistry regarded in itself. And this point Pascal, witty and clever advocate of a cause as he is, is unable to treat with true philosophical breadth. The fundamental error lies, not in the attempt to assign a moral value to each particular transgression, but in the attempt of one human being to direct the conscience of another being from the outside. But this Pascal's position as an orthodox religionist would not allow him to say. He is nervously anxious to assert his own orthodoxy, and the orthodoxy of the religious of Port Royal. No profound moral view could be arrived at by a thinker who was obliged to say, "en ces discours on ne pense qu'à comparer quelques vertus intérieures les unes aux autres, et non pas au sacrifice de la messe, qui est d'un ordre tout différent et infiniment plus relevé." He insists often on base motives for the lax morality of the Jesuits, such as that they wished to draw people to their churches. The imputation is possibly true, but controversy which has to employ such insinuations does not move in the sphere of philosophy. Even in the petty quibbles with which Pascal is more free to deal, he is not always fair. In Letter 18 he plays with the ambiguity of the word "power"—pouvoir—in a way which makes him seem guilty of a transparent fallacy, as Prof. Mozley shows in his Augustinian Doctrine of Predestination. In short, this famous classic is, after all, a truly French production, having more of style than of philosophy, and more of wit than of learning. MARK PATTISON.

"ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS."

Wordsworth. By F. W. H. Myers. (Macmillan & Co.)

GREATER praise could scarcely be given to Mr. Myers' book on Wordsworth than is implied in the fact that he has managed to say something original on the subject of the poet's genius, without traversing the ground covered by recent criticism, and, indeed, while scarcely alluding to previous discussions of the subject. The attention which has been given to Wordsworth of late is significant in many ways. Mr. Arnold, Mr. Leslie Stephen, Mr. Caird, Mr. Symonds, and Mr. Aubrey de Vere—to allude only to one or two—have all struck a distinctive note in their treatment of a poet who appeals to each of them in a different fashion; and now Mr. Myers gives us a picture of the man and an estimate of his work which is certainly not inferior to anything that has preceded it.

The facts of Wordsworth's life have been mostly drawn from the "Memoirs" written by his nephew, the Bishop of Lincoln, in 1850; but it has been Mr. Myers' good fortune, "through hereditary friendship, to have access to many MS. letters, and much oral tradition bearing upon the poet's private life;" so that "some details and some passages of letters hitherto unpublished appear in his pages." He has, however, exercised a wise discretion in omitting "such minor personal incidents" as the poet "would himself have thought it needless to dwell upon." It is, perhaps, inexpedient for anyone—however competent—to attempt to write the Life of a great man "as if the subject of the biography were himself the auditor." Were such a rule carried out, biography would be inevitably maimed, and the truth of things distorted. No original genius can possibly judge of what posterity will desire to know, and be the better for knowing, regarding the circumstances of his life; and many have altogether failed in estimating the most distinctive features of their own literary work. But if any exception may be made to this rule, it may, for obvious reasons, be made in the case of Wordsworth. There is no doubt as to his own wish that only a brief memorial of his life should be written; and the modern tendency is to overload biography with details. In this century there is more risk than ever before that the reputation of a great man may be impeded rather than advanced by a chronicle of the minuter incidents of his life, and his very path to posterity blocked by means of it. It is unhappily true that many distinguished lives have been buried in their biographies. Mr. Myers understands this; and in his references to the poems on Lucy, for example, he has carried it out. Wordsworth has told us nothing of the history of the emotion of which these exquisite fragments are the chronicle, except what the poems themselves contain; and his biographer wisely says:—"Who ever learned such secrets rightly? or who should wish to learn? It is best to respect the reserve, not only of the living, but of the dead." Nevertheless, the story of the poet's life is sketched with admirable clearness, and all the more important events which modified it are successively noted and happily characterised.

I shall briefly indicate what seem to me the chief merits of this book. In his account of The Prelude—that unique autobiographic epic—Mr. Myers says truly that "there is scarcely any autobiography which we can read with such implicit confidence. Our dissatisfaction with its form yields to our recognition of its fitness to express precisely what was intended by the poet who was also a moralist. Few could have combined a candour so absolute with so much dignity; or, while chronicling such small things, could remain so great. . . . A lengthy insistence on his own feelings and ideas is the worst charge that can be brought against him."

Mr. Myers is not blind to Wordsworth's limitations. Cut off, by virtue of the very circumstances that made him what he was—the high-priest of Nature—from much of the passion and the tumult of life, from those mingled experiences which have given birth to the drama, and which have been the source of lyric fire to so many minds, the orbit of Wordsworth's genius is not so wide as that of many inferior men; but, in his case, it is both more important and more difficult to appraise his merits than to signalise his defects. His failure in certain directions was the inevitable accompaniment of his greatness in others.

The "Sonnets to Liberty" are characterised as the "most permanent record in our literature of the Napoleonic war." Wordsworth "had not swayed senates, nor directed policies, nor gathered into one ardent bosom all the spirit of an heroic age; but he had deeply felt what it is that makes the greatness of nations." The poem entitled The Happy Warrior is described as "a manual of greatness; there is a Roman majesty in its simple and weighty speech;" and, in an interesting analysis, Mr. Myers points out how much there was common in the character of the great Admiral, who is the hero of that poem, and the poet's own—"a moral likeness so profound that the ideal of the recluse was realised in the public life of the hero." "These two natures, taken together," he adds, "form the perfect Englishman; nor is there any portrait fitter than that of The Happy Warrior to go forth to all lands as representing the English character at its height."

"If a poet, by strong concentration of thought, by striving in all things along the upward way, can leave us, in a few pages as it were, a summary of patriotism, a manual of national honour, he surely has his place among his country's benefactors; not only by that kind of courtesy which the nation extends to men of letters, of whom her masses take little heed, but with a title as assured as any warrior or statesman, and with no less direct a claim."

The defects of The Excursion as a didactic poem are very easily recognised; but it is important to note the effect of the one-sided criticism which it called forth upon the poet himself. It neither modified his theory of poetry nor his practice of the art. Wordsworth was grandly superior to criticism, much more so than Keats was; but he was much less open than Keats to what was just in the contemporary verdicts passed upon his poetry. And the effect of this was that, living in a world of his own, while his individuality deepened, his faults of temperament and idiosyncrasy increased.

"Naturally introspective, he was driven by abuse and ridicule into taking stock of himself more frequently and more laboriously than ever." "The only moral injury which he derived from these assaults lay in that sense of the absence of trustworthy external criticism which led him to treat everything which he had once written down as if it were a special revelation, and to insist with equal earnestness on his most trifling as on his most important pieces, on Goody Blake and The Irish Boy as on The Cuckoo and The Daffodils. The sense of humour is apt to be the first grace that is lost under persecution; and much of Wordsworth's heaviness and stiff exposition of commonplaces is to be traced to a feeling which he could not avoid, that 'all day long he had lifted up his voice to a perverse and gainsaying generation.'"

This is probably a true explanation of Wordsworth's want of humour.

An interesting fact, mentioned in a hitherto unpublished letter of the poet's sister, may explain the tenacity with which he clung to his poetic theory, and refused to gain the immediate popularity which he could easily have obtained had he abandoned it, and accommodated himself, like other men, to the demands of the hour. "He has no pleasure in publishing—he even detests it; and, if it were not that he is not over-wealthy, he would leave all his works to be published after his death." His tenacity of purpose is further illustrated by his refusal to abandon the artificial arrangement of his poems, first adopted in 1815, and to adopt instead of it a strictly chronological order. He thought such a plan too egotistical, as "emphasising the succession of moods in the poet's mind, rather than the lessons which these moods could teach." On this his critic truly observes that, after a great writer's death, "the historical spirit" demands the arrangement which the poet refused to adopt in his lifetime.

I pass over Mr. Myers' discussion of Wordsworth's theory of poetic diction; his remarks on that "inventive music," "the most arbitrarily distributed and the most evanescent of all qualifications for writing poetry;" his apt comparison of Laodamia to a well-known passage in Sophocles; his criticism of those reproductions of the antique, in which Wordsworth's language remains "majestic, but no longer magical;" his explanation of the poet's failure as a translator of Virgil, and of the "Indian summer of his genius" which is seen in the Evening Ode. There is truth, but also some error, in what is said about Wordsworth's failing power and "stiffening brain," and in what seems to be implied with reference to other poets who have lived to old age and passed their prime. Literature abounds with instances of great poets, philosophers, and artists whose best work has been done long after middle life, and who have shown no signs of stiffening brain even at threescore years and ten. The two "prevailing poets" of our era—Wordsworth's successors in the poetical hierarchy of England—are illustrations of this. Perhaps the isolation in which the recluse of Rydal Mount lived for so many years, his limited experience of life and indifference to contemporary events, may explain the comparatively early close of the productive period of his genius.

Possibly the best chapter in a book—every chapter of which is excellent—is that on "Natural Religion." Wordsworth's achievement in enabling us to "see into the life of things" is thus described:—"For a system of beliefs about Nature which paganism had allowed to become grotesque—of rites which had become unmeaning—he substituted an admiration for nature so constant, an understanding of her so subtle, a sympathy so profound, that they became a veritable worship." His influence over a mind constitutionally so different as that of John Stuart Mill, at a time of crisis and dejection, is referred to as "perhaps as satisfactory a testimony to the value of his work as any writer can obtain."

"Whether these be theories," says Mr. Myers in a noteworthy passage, "they shall pass; whether these be systems, they shall fail; the true epoch-maker in the history of the human soul is the man who educes from this bewildering universe a new and an elevating joy. . . . There was, indeed, no aspect of Nature, however often depicted, in which his seeing eye could not discern some unnoted quality; there was no mood to which Nature gave birth in the mind of man from which his meditation could not disengage some element which threw light on our inner being. How often has the approach of evening been described! and how mysterious is its solemnising power! Yet it was reserved for Wordsworth, in his sonnet, 'Hail, Twilight! sovereign of one peaceful hour!' to draw out a characteristic of that gray waning light, which half explains to us its sombre and pervading charm. 'Day's mutable distinctions' pass away; all in the landscape that suggests our own age or our own handiwork is gone; we look on the sight seen by our remote ancestors, and the visible present is generalised into an immeasurable past."

After quoting the typical stanzas from Peter Bell about "the witching of the soft blue sky," Mr. Myers says truly that "the emotion is educed from Nature rather than added to her. She is treated as a mystic text to be deciphered rather than as a stimulus to a roving imagination;" and he adds—

"From this temper of Wordsworth's mind it follows that there will be many moods in which we shall not retain him as our companion. Moods which are rebellious, which beat at the bars of fate; moods of passion reckless in its vehemence, and assuming the primacy of all other emotions through the intensity of its delight or pain; moods of mere imaginative phantasy, when we would fain shape from the well-worn materials of our thought some fabric at once beautiful and new; from all such phases of our inward being Wordsworth stands aloof."

This is doubtless true; and yet it is rather to the elevation of his ideal than to its contraction within narrow bounds that it is to be traced, and to his finding a sufficiency of interest in what he called "the common growth of mother-earth, her humblest mirth and tears;" and I do not know that it has hitherto been pointed out that, "in dealing with faults of mere weakness, Wordsworth is far less strait-laced than many less virtuous men."

Of the Ecclesiastical Sketches which so many students of Wordsworth find it difficult to appreciate, Mr. Myers says that, "next to the Anglican liturgy—the thought next to an immense interval—the sonnets may take rank as the authentic exposition of the historic being of the Church." This may be excessive praise; but a remark which follows it will be conceded by all who understand the subject—viz., that Wordsworth "showed, as plainly in his way as Socrates had shown it long ago, with what readiness a profoundly original conception of the scheme of things will shape itself into the mould of an established and venerable faith." The isolation, to which reference has already been made, doubtless led to the extreme conservatism of Wordsworth's old age; and the meditative brooding over questions which were far removed from the stir of modern political forces prevented him from appreciating the latter; but the aged poet's anticipation of evil from the Reform Bill and other changes in the old order of things—expressed as it was "with nothing of the angry polemic, nothing of the calumnious partisan"—is to us now only an interesting phase of character.

Mr. Myers is surely wrong in his remark as to Wordsworth's total ignorance of Keats. Was it not at Fox Howe that he expressed a decided, and very unappreciative, judgment on the first line of the Ode on a Grecian Urn?

A concluding chapter deals with the poet's letter on the projected railways in the Lake District of England, and with the general question of the utilisation of that region. It is easy to represent the opposition of Wordsworth and others to its invasion by machinery as unpatriotic, as opposed to the interests of the labouring classes, who require excursions among the mountains more than others, &c. But it is well known that what is most characteristic in that district has scarcely any attraction for the crowds that congregate there, emptied out of cheap trains on annual or weekly holidays. There is abundant opportunity for our factory operatives enjoying all that they can enjoy of nature without imperilling the integrity of this "irreplaceable national possession." Mr. Myers consoles us by the remark that "if that natural sanctuary of England, the nurse of simple and noble natures," is sacrificed to the greed of gain, some new district will be found for the generations of the future. "Yet," he adds, "it will be long ere round some other lakes, upon some other hill, shall cluster memories as pure and high as those which hover still around Rydal and Grasmere, and on Helvellyn's windy summit, and 'by Glenridding Scree and low Glencoin.'"

Another sentence, referring to the poet's stanzas on Memory, shows Mr. Myers' criticism at its best:—

"What touch has given to these lines their impress of an unfathomable peace? For there speaks from them a tranquillity which seems to overcome our souls; which makes us feel, in the midst of toil and passion, that we are disquieting ourselves in vain; that we are travelling to a region where these things shall not be; that 'so shall immoderate fear leave us, and inordinate love shall die.'"

WILLIAM KNIGHT.

The Boke named The Gouvernour. Devised by Sir Thomas Elyot, Knight. Edited from the First Edition of 1531 by H. Herbert S. Croft. In 2 vols. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

Most of us have read the Gouvernour in a tiny black-letter edition that could be slipped into a pocket, if such familiarity toward a rare book were not profane. Our first impression of these bulky quartos is not favourable to the modern transfiguration of the prettiest little tome that the sixteenth century in England has left us. Yet it is quite plain that there are only two things which can be done to such a work as Elyot's—it can be reproduced, just as it is, without notes, in the original size; or it can be made to flow in a rivulet of text through a rich meadow-land of notes and commentaries. There is no middle course with such a store-house of diffused learning as the Gouvernour, and to choose the more arduous task was an act of real courage. Mr. Croft has performed this task with a zeal that is positively amazing; his laborious erudition has left no stone unturned, and there is hardly an allusion in the most allusive of all writers which he has not patiently unearthed and illustrated. In old days, when we read that some held Lucifer, Prince of Devils, to be the author of dice-playing, but that others attributed the game to a certain Attalus, we were content to pass on without more enquiry; but Mr. Croft has had the enthusiasm to trace this remarkable statement to John of Salisbury. And if the reader wishes to judge how much thought and labour, how much obsolete and eccentric learning, and how much patient research the editor has expended, we advise him to turn to the chapter on Dancing. We give the book no more praise than is its due when we say that no English classic has been edited in the present generation with such a profusion of affectionate care.

The only way to do anything like justice to a work of this description is to follow the editor, and to mention the chief points on which he has broken new ground. It is not too much to say that Mr. Croft's investigations revolutionise the biography of Sir Thomas Elyot. In the first place he proves that there is not the least reason to suppose that he was born in Suffolk, as all his biographers have repeated; Mr. Croft rather believes that he was a Wiltshire man. The date of that event remains uncertain, but the editor proves that, instead of occurring in or after 1495, it must have been earlier than 1490. For the first time the descent of the Elyots is given with precision, and the will of the father, Sir Richard Elyot, which Mr. Croft has come upon in the course of his researches, is printed in an Appendix. In 1511 Thomas Elyot is found accompanying his father on the Western Circuit as Clerk of Assize; but we have a glimpse of him earlier than this, since in 1507 or thereabouts he was present when the giant's skeleton was dug up in the monastery of Ivy Church. Mr. Croft disproves the myth that the lad enjoyed a university education, but shows that he early joined the little band of humanist reformers whom Sir Thomas More gathered round him at Chelsea. Most of those with whose names we usually combine his, such as Linaere, Colet, and Latimer, were by many years his seniors, but his gravity and precocity may have made him easily their equal. Mr. Croft justly remarks that the wonderful extent of his acquirements is rendered still more marvellous by the fact that there were no dictionaries or lexicons in those days. Bearing this in mind, we may hear Sir Thomas Elyot's own account of his boyish studies. He had already mastered the whole curriculum of the poets and philosophers, and then Linaere stepped in with suggestions of a new field of work.

"Before that I was twenty years old, a worshipful physician and one of the most renowned at that time in England, perceiving me by nature inclined to knowledge, road unto me the works of Galen of temperaments, natural faculties, the introduction of Johanniicius, with some of the Aphorisms of Hippocrates. And afterward, by my own study, I read over in order the more part of the works of Hippocrates, Galenus, Oribasius, Paulus, Olius, Alexander Trallianus, Celsus, Plinius, the one and the other, with Dioscorides. Nor I did omit to read the long Canons of Avicenna, the Commentaries of Averroes, the practices of Isaac Ilyabbas, Rasis, Mesue, and also of the more part of them which were their aggregators and followers."

We cannot accompany Mr. Croft any farther through the life of his hero, which he chronicles with great minuteness, but we must draw attention to a very ingenious Appendix in which he seeks to prove that the anonymous Art of English Poesy, published in 1589, and commonly attributed to a George Puttenham, was really written by Richard Puttenham, the nephew and heir of Sir Thomas Elyot. This person seems to have spent a miserable old age in prison, and to have been obliged to bring out his book in the strictest secrecy. We cannot say that Mr. Croft absolutely succeeds in proving a point that is of distinct interest to students of the Elizabethan period, but his reasoning is highly plausible.

When we reach the text of Sir Thomas Elyot's earliest and most celebrated book, the only fault with which we can reproach Mr. Croft is the omission of a facsimile of the title-page of the first edition of 1531. That edition is so extremely rare that it would have been interesting to possess this. The Gouernour was so popular that it was issued eight times during the sixteenth century, and then passed completely out of sight until a taste for our old literature revived. But, even since then, with the exception of a disgracefully incomplete and unintelligent reprint of 1834, no attempt has been made to republish a book which is not rare in black letter, and which demands more pains than the ordinary rapid restorer is willing or able to expend. The object of the book, as we all know, is the instruction in virtue of those who are destined to hold authority in the State. Social philosophy had very early begun to arrest the attention of the humanists of Italy, and a whole literature may be said to have been inaugurated by Pandolfini's dissertation, Del Governo della Famiglia. The very year after Elyot's book appeared there was posthumously published a work which reversed the medal and showed the seamy side of princely education—the Principe of Machiavelli; nor can anything show more distinctly the ethical tendency of the age than the success of these two productions. But between Pandolfini and Elyot there had flourished a whole century of moral philosophers deeply enthralled by the bearing of education upon the family and the State. Mr. Croft has resuscitated the names of several writers whose books specially resembled that of Sir Thomas Elyot, and he proves that one treatise in particular, the De Regno et Regis Institutione of Francesco Patrizi, was very largely used by the author of the Gouernour in compiling his book. While acknowledging, however, his inconsiderable debts to Pontano and to Erasmus, the English philosopher omits all mention of Patrizi. Mr. Croft goes on to suggest that such later books as those of Budaeus, Sturm, Ludovick Bryskett, and Henry Peacham owed more or less to the form and matter of the Gouernour. In attempting to criticise the researches of an editor so learned as Mr. Croft, some little pedantry may be permitted to a reviewer, and I may therefore, perhaps, bring from so remote a source as early Dutch literature a parallel which has very naturally escaped his notice. The position of Sir Thomas Elyot in English is held with singular exactness, in Dutch letters, by the humanist Dirck Coornhert (1522–90), whose labours in an ethical philosophy which sought to combine Seneca and Cicero with St. Paul were summed up in his masterpiece, the Zedekunst—a work which has not a little similarity, in style and matter, to the Gouernour. The Zedekunst was a treatise on the education of a gentleman in courtesy and virtue—an essay in stoic philosophy which called the ancients from Plutarch to Marcus Aurelius, and the moderns in a no less numerous but more obscure array, to the support of its sententious maxims. In one other place, the tone and argument of the Gouernour might well have modified the work of a great Dutch author, for its passages on dancing bear a singular, and in some points almost verbal, resemblance to the poem of Spieghel, Het Lof van Danssen, or "Praise of Dancing," written about 1580, though not printed until after Sir John Davies' Orchestra—namely, in 1614.

On one point we cannot but regard Mr. Croft as inclined to do scant justice to the object of his admiration. He does not attempt to defend the style of Sir Thomas Elyot, which he characterises as "peculiar," and which he probably considers crabbed. In judging this point, we must take the relative position of the English prose-writers of the beginning of the sixteenth century. The historians made no pretension to style of any kind. To read Edward Hall, for instance, is to plod through a ploughed field; the heavy, undigested manner of writing balks the attention at every third sentence; and the reader proceeds with great difficulty for information, not at all for pleasure. Hallam, one of the worst of judges in the matter of literary taste, gives More the palm as the best of our early prose-writers; but More's serious addresses were made to the public in Latin, and all we can say of his English pamphlets is that they lack the uncouth and rugged monotony of his predecessors. The first really bright and vivid English prose was that of Latimer, not really given to the world till fifteen years after his death. It is difficult, therefore, to suggest any serious rival, in his own day, to Sir Thomas Elyot, whose best passages, in our estimation, far surpass all but the most intimate phrases of Sir Thomas More. If we were so much in the confidence of Elyot as we are in that of More, we should probably find him just as lively a correspondent; while both are sometimes excelled in colloquial vivacity by the obscure writers of the Paston Letters. It is hardly fair in criticising the progress of style to take private letters into consideration. The best parts of the Gouernour are just those passages in which the author speaks most directly, and with least appeal to Quintilian and Tertullian. If he could have been induced to omit all his learning, and give us merely the results of his shrewd observation of life, his book would have been a treasure indeed; though of course, to himself, such a mode of composition would have seemed like leaving out all the plums in making a plum pudding. As it is, his book had an extraordinary effect on English style; it hastened on the great age of such writers as Jeremy Taylor, it enriched the stock of English words and thoughts, and it gave a dignified and popular masterpiece to a literature still in its infancy. Nor, when we read such a piece of writing as the fifteenth chapter of the Gouernour, and compare it with a passage of lumbering vacuity by Gabriel Harvey, or with one of Nash's rattling, sputtering fire-works, is it easy to admit that English prose progressed far ahead of its founder in half-a-century. Mr. Croft would deserve well of his generation if he would allow us to compare the Castel of Health with its author's better-known treatise.

The volumes before us are enriched by two beautiful facsimiles of Holbein's portraits of Sir Thomas and Lady Elyot, preserved at Windsor Castle. It is impossible to praise too highly the manner in which all persons connected with these volumes have carried out their labours. The result is creditable alike to English scholarship and to English typography. EDMUND W. GOSSE.

England's Work in India. By W. W. Hunter, C.I.E., LL.D. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

A WORK upon India by Dr. Hunter needs no introduction. But yet we may, without presumption, attempt to remove a prejudice which might possibly tend to limit the wide circulation it deserves. The substance was originally delivered in the form of lectures to an Edinburgh audience, and some portion has already been published as magazine articles. The public are justifiably shy of buying a book which has apparently lost the gloss of freshness. But, in the present case, to draw such an inference would be nothing less than a mischievous error. The cutting up of the subject into parts, separated in their appearance by an interval of twelve months, perhaps gave rise to misinterpretation. Now that we have the whole before us, we can see a unity of design and a balance of arguments which before escaped notice. It is not difficult, as Sir Richard Temple showed the other day before the Colonial Institute, to draw a rose-coloured picture of the Indian empire, which shall contain no statement that is absolutely false, and yet leave a general impression that is by no means true. It is scarcely less difficult, and perhaps more important at the present time, to examine the condition of the country from the standpoint of radical criticism. Dr. Hunter's merit is that he has succeeded in combining both these points of view without forfeiting his own consistency. Speaking with the authority of an official experience that has no parallel, he is able to bring within his survey the entire area of the Indian peninsula. In knowledge of Indian history, and in sympathy with the native races, others may equal though not surpass him. But the point in which he leaves all competitors far behind is the exceptional degree in which he possesses the literary faculty of exposition. He can so marshal the various departments of his subject, introduce statistics for purposes of illustration, and light up his pages with felicitous language, that he carries the reader with him from the first sentence to the last. It will be a fortunate thing for the English public if they allow themselves to fall under his power of fascination, and realise England's work in India as he here describes it for them.

Having said so much by way of recommending Dr. Hunter's last book, we propose to take up the less pleasant task of criticism, and indicate, first, the points where we venture to differ from Dr. Hunter's general presentation of his case, and, secondly, those suggestions of his which appear to us particularly new and valuable. The earlier part of the book consists of an historical retrospect of the past century; the later part, of a consideration of the difficulties which the English administration still has to overcome. It is with regard to the first two chapters, headed "Work Done," that we do not feel ourselves able to adopt entirely Dr. Hunter's conclusions. Our ground of difference is not about facts, or about the positive achievements of British rule. We have conferred on India peace, without and within; we have brought with us the machinery of good government, and some of the luxuries of modern civilisation. Taking the people as a whole, it is probable that we have even raised their average standard of domestic comfort. To have accomplished thus much in the stationary East in the course of less than a hundred years may justly be cause of pride and self-gratulation. But, when recapitulating the benefits we have bestowed upon India, Dr. Hunter seems indirectly to depreciate the standard of civilisation which the natives had already attained. The period of comparison ought not to be the middle of the eighteenth century, when the Moghul empire had fallen to pieces, and Mahrattas and Afghans were fighting over the spoil. It would be more fair to take the latter half of the sixteenth century, when Akbar was reigning at Delhi, and many Mahomedan dynasties flourished in the Deccan, and many Hindu dynasties in the South. Comparing India at that date with contemporary Europe, her stage of civilisation was at least as high. Western travellers brought home stories of her wealth, her arts, and her commerce which the existing remains of temples, tombs, and palaces show not to have been exaggerated. The ruins of Vijayanagar, the Hindu capital of the South, sacked by the confederate Sultans of the Deccan in 1565, cover at the present day an area of nine square miles. So late as the end of the eighteenth century, the port of Surat on the Western coast is credibly reported to have had a population of half-a-million souls. When Clive entered Murshidabad, the capital of Bengal, in 1757, he wrote home that "this city is as extensive, populous, and rich as London, with this difference, that there are individuals in the first possessing infinitely greater property than in the last city." Since that time, England, in common with most of Europe, has advanced with prodigious strides along the path of material progress, and has imported some elements of that progress, as an exotic, into India. But the natives of the country possess indigenous arts and institutions as well as a history of their own of which they may, in their turn, well feel proud. In our opinion, the problem yet remains to be solved, whether an alien civilisation is capable of being transplanted, like the coffee or cinchona shrub.

The last two chapters of Dr. Hunter's book, entitled "Work to be Done," are not obnoxious to any such criticism as is implied in the previous remarks. They assume as a fact the existing administration, with all its efficiency and all its possibilities of improvement. India, at least, does not want a revolution, or even any fundamental reforms. What she does want is to be let alone, that she may slowly develop her own resources, undisturbed by cries of "Wolf!" from the North-west frontier. If only the attention of all her administrators, from the highest to the lowest, be concentrated upon internal affairs, we do not entertain the slightest doubt that she will quickly emerge from the cloud which now darkens her prosperity. With a nation, as with an individual, the cold fit of pessimistic despondency will never last long. India is not bankrupt; her heart's blood is not being drained by the excess of her exports to England. None of Dr. Hunter's arguments strikes us as more convincing than where he analyses this apparent excess of exports, amounting in the aggregate to twenty-one millions sterling, into seven millions, or one-third, accounted for by net imports of treasure, another third being interest paid on capital invested in India, and the remaining third the home expenditure required for the machinery of government. In a somewhat similar case, Dr. Hunter's gift of statistical exposition is again exercised in a very effective manner. Treating of the food-supply, he estimates that two-fifths of the people enjoy a prosperity unknown under native rule; that an equal number, or another two-fifths, earn a fair but diminishing subsistence; while the remaining one-fifth, or forty million persons, go through life on insufficient food. When facts are honestly formulated in this precise fashion, it is possible to grapple with them and suggest appropriate remedies. Of Dr. Hunter's proposals, we have not space to speak at the length they deserve. Suffice it to say that they are worked out in detail, that they are adapted to the several aspects of the problem, that none of them is heroic, and that, as Government is not directly responsible for the existing state of affairs, so Government by itself cannot change it.

But, after all, it is not because it suggests certain remedies and reforms that we would urge all those Englishmen who take an interest in India, and feel a responsibility for the manner in which they are executing their trust, to read this little book carefully. Its permanent value lies in its thoughtful mode of treating Indian questions. With a little information, it is easy to write glibly about India at large, as about anything else. With the amount of knowledge, detailed, but at the same time narrow, that is acquired by most Indian civilians, it is not so very difficult to compile a report upon a particular district. Dr. Hunter has been given the whole of the empire for his field of official study; and he here imparts to us, as it were, in a practical form the ripe fruit of ten years of labour bestowed upon the Imperial Gazetteer of India, which is announced for publication in the coming spring. JAS. S. COTTON.

NEW NOVELS.

Johnny Ludlow. By Mrs. Henry Wood Second Series. (Bentley.)

Roy and Viola. By Mrs. Forrester. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Freville Chase. By E. H. Dering. (Burns & Oates.)

Cords and Discords. By Charlotte Atcherley. (Remington.)

Stepping Stones. By Sarah Doudney. (Isbister.)

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S acknowledgment of her authorship of Johnny Ludlow puts an end to a doubt the only reason for which was not the absence of resemblances between these capital stories and their author's other work, but the very great superiority which they exhibited over that work. It would take much more space than we have at our command to give a full explanation of this superiority; it is sufficient to say that the explanation is to be sought in the fact that Mrs. Wood's defects are chiefly literary, while her power of narration is very considerable. She is, we believe, among the most popular of English novelists abroad, where literary shortcomings and small errors of a social kind are, of course, not perceived. We were able to speak very highly of the first series of Johnny Ludlow, and we can speak nearly as well of the second. There is, of course, to the hypercritical eye, a distinct error of atmosphere pervading the book. For instance, men who occupy the rank of country gentlemen, and who have been educated at Oxford, use the language and display the manners rather of the lower middle classes than of their own. But the fertility of invention which distinguishes the stories, the art with which the personality of the stock characters is preserved under widely varying circumstances, and the completeness with which each historiette is worked out deserve high commendation. It is only a pity that the author should not join to these good gifts a greater stock of purely literary accomplishments and a wider range of social study. One of the pieces in this book, "A Tale of Sin," is out of keeping with the rest, and very inferior to them, being also (it is worth noticing) much longer. But "Mrs. Todhetley's Earrings," "A Day of Pleasure," "Hester Reed's Pills," and at least half-a-dozen others are excellent.

It is rather curious to contemplate the different standards of the becoming which exist in different human minds. Mrs. Forrester has in Roy and Viola invented what seems to us quite a new one. We have the usual trio, but l'autre is nearly as moral a man as Werther, and the proprieties are strictly observed. However, by way of being near the beloved object, he makes himself the constant ally and associate of the husband, who is represented as a coarse and violent brute, receives his confidences about the coldness and ill-temper of his wife, is privy to his irregular liaisons, and even sits calmly by when scenes of domestic dissension occur between the unlucky couple. Apparently this is represented to us as the conduct of an exceptionally chivalrous person. We must say that it strikes us in a very different light. However, there is no accounting for tastes. The reader's pity for the injured Viola is considerably modified by the fact that she has (it is true not without some compunction) deliberately married for money, and that, though her husband is certainly a great brute, he seems to have received considerable provocation from his statuesque spouse. If the book has a moral, it seems to be that when you marry for money you should always take care to marry an old man, which, indeed, is an obvious suggestion of ordinary prudence. Viola's friend Netta does this, and enjoys a calm and pleasant existence with her first husband, who considerably retires to the majority as soon as anybody could reasonably demand it of him, and leaves his wife and his money to the expectant Lord Charles Somebody. Viola's release is naturally by no means so speedy or so happy. Although Mrs. Forrester's book is thus sometimes disagreeable and sometimes preposterous, there are traces of narrative ability in it, as, indeed, there have been in most of her books; and there is nothing to say against her enforcement of such morality as comes within her lights. We only wish she would set sounder models and more normal states of things before her.

Freville Chase is one of those books which we decline to criticise seriously. When an author of no particular mark refers us at the beginning of his work to a former book for the antecedent history of his personages that is of itself a sufficient disqualification. But when we open his pages and find his characters requesting each other to compare the words of St. Polycarp with the words of the Song of Solomon with a view to determine the proper status to be accorded to Our Lady the matter becomes settled beyond all doubt. At proper times and seasons we are very glad to discuss St. Polycarp and the Canticles, but not in a review of novels, nor, we may add, in the course of reading them.

Cords and Discords is a very odd book. It opens in a Welsh inn, where a gentleman of sporting turn is called at six o'clock that he may go out shooting. We are then introduced to a certain dialogue between this sportsman and his wife, who entreats him (not, like the wife in the rude old song, not to go out and hunt at all) but merely not to make quite so much noise and disturb the other guests. He apologises handsomely. "I only reminded you, dear, fearing the gentleman who is ill above might be disturbed," said the lady. "You are rejoicing in the idea of a day's perfect freedom. Am I not right?" This is the perfection of language as between man and wife, and it cannot be too earnestly recommended to all wives in these revolutionary days. It is sad to say that in the succeeding pages the sportsman evinces want of consideration for many other people besides the gentleman who is ill above, and that he at last destroys his wife's affection for him by smashing her harp. Such conduct as this is not excused by his frank avowal earlier in the book that his "nature is a fiery one." Oddities of this kind give Cords and Discords a certain interest for a short time; but its incoherence of story and the unreality of its personages get the better in the long run of the reader's patience and his appetite for curiosities of diction.

We have read better books of Mrs. Doudney's than Stepping Stones. There is less individuality in it than in some other of her books, and it is much more like the average work of the followers of Miss Yonge and Miss Sewell in the task of domestic and semi-religious novel-writing. Perhaps this is due to the fact that the vein of goodness is more distinctly prominent in it and is worked less sparingly than is usual. The central incident, too, or one of the central incidents—the discovery of an important paper, lost at its owner's death, in the pocket of an old garment—is, we think, a little too stale for print. It does capitally for the stories which good-natured elder sisters tell by fire-light, but has, we think, almost passed out of the list of machines allowable in literature. Still the book deserves only relative condemnation. It is not so good as its author can do when she chooses; that is all, and for a girl's book it is capital. We have no sort of objection to the introduction into novels of the religious spirit, if it be done in the right way; on the contrary, we are very well disposed towards it. But it is important that it should be done in the right way and to the right extent. In Stepping Stones we think that these limits are not quite sufficiently observed. However, it is fair to say that the author in some sort gives us warning by putting on her title-page, "A Story of our Inner Life," and does not hurl St. Polycarp and the Canticles at us without with your leave or by your leave. Only we shall suggest to Mrs. Doudney that, as in nature so in art, plenty of outer life should be combined with the inner, and that the latter should be worn inside. She has managed the right mixture before, and can, we are sure, if she chooses, manage it again.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

The Churchman's Life of Wesley. By R. Denny Umlin. (S. P. C. K.) There have been very few characters in religious history whose life has more divided the suffrages of the world than John Wesley. The directors of a society belonging to the Church of England are naturally desirous of bringing out his affection for the Church in which he was ordained, and for which he never failed to show the warmest affection. Mr. Denny Umlin is well fitted both by descent and training for the labour which has been entrusted to him. He has already published one work of a similar character showing an intimate knowledge of the life of Wesley, and a laudable appreciation of the motives of persons whose acts must sometimes be distasteful to him. If a Life of the unwearied evangelist of the eighteenth century must be written from a Churchman's point of view, it could not have been better accomplished than in this work. The author has succeeded in compiling a volume which puts forward clearly and succinctly the chief incidents in Wesley's career, and which preserves within a small compass a great deal of information, not easily obtained elsewhere, on the growth of his society in the United Kingdom and in America. The Appendices contain critical analyses of the numerous Lives or biographical essays which relate to Wesley, as well as of the Eucharistic manuals and other works which he found time to publish, though at the cost of the hours of converse which Dr. Johnson and many others of his friends desired. We should have been pleased if Mr. Umlin had found space in his account of the City Road Chapel for a few words in praise of Mr. Stevenson's full and accurate history of that edifice. Such a sign of appreciation from a sympathetic worker in the same cause is too often the chief reward of many months of patient labour. The society which is responsible for the publication of this volume may be congratulated on the excellence of the work which Mr. Umlin has accomplished.

Familiar Garden Flowers. Figured by F. Edward Hulme, F.L.S., F.S.A., and Described by Shirley Hibberd. First Series. With Forty Coloured Plates. (Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.) Mr. Hulme's exquisite and delicately coloured plates of flowers are now becoming quite familiar to the public, and those of the present work, if anything, surpass his wild flowers in excellence. One almost fancies they carry their perfume as well! The work illustrates forty of what the title justly calls "familiar garden plants," such as Indian cress, white lily, wallflower, aster, fuchsia, tulip, &c. The letterpress is contributed by Mr. Hibberd, the well-known writer on garden plants, such as the ivy, &c. The descriptions are pleasant reading, and are written chiefly from a horticultural point of view. A few details about the treatment, growth, &c., of the different races or species under cultivation, and now and then a little of their early history and uses, with a few occasional verses, altogether fill a very pleasant page or two accompanying each flower. At the commencement of the book there is a synopsis, or scientific description, of each genus, for the use of "readers who desire more information of a scientific and technical nature than is embodied in the sketches that accompany the plates." The latter are designedly only adapted to awaken and sustain an interest in familiar garden flowers. The author, therefore, wisely does not attempt to introduce science surreptitiously or apologetically, as is sometimes done in popular works on flowers. The book is very tastily bound in a highly ornamental cover, with two satin "composites" on the outside, but one cannot undertake to name them. Altogether the book is elegant, and, from the authors' standpoint, excellent.

Dictionnaire de l'ancienne Langue française et de tous ses Dialectes du IX^e au XV^e Siècle. Par Frédéric Godefroy. Fascicules I.—IV. (Paris: Vieweg.) It is not without a feeling of envy that we turn over the pages of the first parts of this new dictionary of mediæval French. When may we hope to have for the English language anything that can be compared with it? The French Governments—Monarchical, Imperial, and Republican—have shown a regard for the higher culture which Englishmen are slow to appreciate. This book is "publié sous les auspices du Ministère de l'Instruction publique;" it will be long, we imagine, ere our statesmen become sufficiently aware of the claims of those branches of knowledge which are not regarded as directly useful to give their official patronage to a dictionary of the tongue which Chaucer spoke, and in which many of our old statutes are written. All things have a reason, though in many cases we may not be able to discover what it is. We imagine that the official interest taken in France in things mediæval, and especially in mediæval literature, arises from a consciousness that France is not one nation but a make-up of three or more nationalities, which once had, and to some extent have now, languages of their own. We English speakers have from the birth of our literature had but one tongue, with dialectal variations. As our nationality has been from the first so much more complete we have not found it so needful for State purposes to chronicle the earlier forms of our one language. Whatever may be the reason, it is an unmixed good that means are being found to bring out a costly book of this nature. Judging from the part before us it will be nearly all that could be wished for. Derivations are not given, but this is by no means an unmixed evil. We question, indeed, whether, in a work intended for scholars only, it is an evil at all. The origin of those words which have come from the colloquial Latin hardly requires giving; and, as to the remainder, there is so much difficulty in stating the exact truth, and such an extreme liability to error, that the work would, in a few years, in all probability be open to the serious charge of having perpetuated mistakes. The amount of reading which the parts before us indicate is simply enormous; not only printed books, but MSS. also have been laid under contribution, and an unrivalled series of examples has thus been got together. In going through the 304 pages, which is all that we at present have to judge from, we have been struck by the very great number of words which are English as well as French. To the student of our early literature, M. Godefroy's work will be almost as necessary a handbook as Strattmann's Dictionary of the Old English Language has proved itself to be. The Rhenish scholar has dealt mainly with the Teutonic part of our language, and we have hitherto not been favoured with any similar work on its Latin-French portion. There cannot be much doubt that M. Godefroy's Dictionnaire, when complete, will contain almost every French word which had crept into English before the period of the Reformation. There is a graceful dedication to M. E. Littré, whom the compiler calls "mon cher et vénéré maître."

The Children's Journey, and other Stories. (Strahan and Co.) Save possibly on the score of novelty, no objection can be raised against "The Children's Journey" and the pieces that follow it. The stories are fairly told, and well suited to the capacities of little folk somewhere between seven and twelve.

Two Rose Trees. By Mrs. Minnie Douglas. (Griffith and Farran.) This is a simple little story dealing with the adventures at school and at home of twin sisters. In order to give substance to her tale, the authoress has interwoven a thread of intrigue in the shape of a quest on the part of the mother of the two heroines after a certain document which would enable her to make good her claim to property in Australia of which she has been wrongfully deprived by her dead husband's partner. After a convenient number of pages have been filled up, the long-sought paper is recovered, thanks to a faithful old servant, and the widow and her children are put in possession of their own. Perhaps the conception of Two Rose Trees is better than its execution, but the book is written with a freshness and grace not over-common. The illustrations strike us as inconsistent with the text.

Boys and girls who are acquainted with Mr. Ascott Hope's stories know that he is always a favourite, and they will not be disappointed with Stories of Long Ago (Walker and Co.). This time he has gone to the Gesta Romanorum and other mediæval collections. As might be expected, he has had a good deal of pruning work to do to make these tales presentable to the children of the present day, but the result is eminently satisfactory, and may be commended to those who are tired of the ordinary run of modern stories.

Pansie's Flour Bin. (Macmillan.) Like

Alice in Wonderland, this book deals with wonderful adventures that befel a little girl in Dreamland. Here, however, the resemblance ceases, for, whereas Mr. Carroll's book is not destitute of fancy and wit, the most vivid imagination will find it a hard task to discover either of these qualities in Pansie's Flour Bin.

THOSE who appreciated Mr. Sidney Lanier's Boy's Froissart will warmly welcome his Boy's King Arthur (Sampson Low and Co.), the plan of which is similar in all respects to that of his former work. It should be welcome in schools, or wherever there are boys capable of estimating at its due value what is noble and of good report in life or literature.

Better than Good. By Annie E. Ridley. (Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.) The authoress's pages appeal to girls from fourteen to eighteen, and contain, in narrative and dialogue form, a homily on the happiness and content that spring from a purely unselfish life. The literary execution of the book is very creditable, and the general tone is thoroughly wholesome and practical.

MRS. A. H. MARTIN'S Roses from Thorns (Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.) is really a pretty story. Its theme is a misanthropical old man, hardened by ill-treatment, and restored to gentleness by the love of a child. If the idea is not very original, it is conveyed in an interesting way, and few young readers will get through the book without being attracted to the weakly boy who is launched into the rough world of school with so little preparation.

Amateur Acting, by J. Keith Angus (Routledge), is a book which it would be good for all amateur actors to read thoughtfully. If they were to take to heart the advice given, much disappointment, both to themselves and to their audiences, might be avoided.

The Half-Sisters and In Duty Bound, by the author of "Deepdale Vicarage" (Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.), are constructed on the same principle—namely, that of introducing new characters, and frequently new scenes, in almost every chapter. As may be imagined, the result is somewhat confusing.

A METAPHYSIC 'CUL DE SAC.'

WE know,—indeed, we know we do not know :
We think,—but what, my masters, what is Thought?

The mystery with which the Mind is fraught Mind cannot solve : We see,—yet who can show
We see things as they are? Ideas grow,—
Who knows from what, or how? As leaflets caught

Up by the passing wind, thoughts come unsought,
Then flee away, and whither do they go?

Our senses may a web of fancies weave :

Our brain we fain would use to test our brain :

Yea, what Perception is we would perceive ;

And out of nothing we would something gain :

We cannot prove, and yet we would believe,

Since Unbelief itself is worse than vain.

SAMUEL WADDINGTON.

NOTES AND NEWS.

PROF. C. T. NEWTON will begin his lectures on Greek Art in the Age of Pericles, at University College, London, on Friday, the 7th inst., at four p.m. The first lecture, on "The Sculptors who immediately preceded the Age of Pheidias," will be open to the public without payment or tickets. Further information may be obtained from the secretary.

CANON LIDDON will shortly publish with Messrs. Rivington four sermons preached in St. Paul's Cathedral during December, entitled Thoughts on Present Church Troubles.

MR. G. J. SHAW LEFEVRE, M.P., First Commissioner of Works and Public Buildings, has placed in the hands of Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co., for publication in a collected form, his various writings on the Land System, which have already attracted considerable attention. These will now be published complete in one volume about the middle of January.

MESSRS. HURST AND BLACKETT will publish in a few days a new novel, in three volumes, by Lady Duffus Hardy, called Beryl Fortescue.

MISS BETHAM-EDWARDS' Holidays in Eastern France is appearing in a French translation en feuilleton, and will afterwards be republished in a volume.

WE are glad to hear that Messrs. Bikélas and Sathas are editing for Messrs. Calvary, of Berlin, a selection from the remains of the late Prof. Wilhelm Wagner, of Hamburg.

A DESIRE is often expressed for a trustworthy sketch of Israelitish history, with due recognition of the ascertained results of cuneiform discovery. This desire is, we believe, satisfied by the Abriss lately published in the form of tables by the rising young Assyriologist, Dr. Hommel.

THE first translation of Milton's Paradise Lost into Tamil is being brought out by a native clergyman of Madras, and the first two books have just been issued by the S. P. C. K. Press.

M. MASPERO has been commissioned by the Minister of Public Instruction to found a college of Egyptian Archaeology at Cairo, similar to those already established by the French Government at Athens and Rome. He sailed for Egypt on the 28th ult., taking with him three pupils and an architect.

Reminiscences of a Journalist is the title of a volume which will shortly be published, consisting of papers contributed by Mr. Charles T. Congdon to the New York Tribune.

At the meeting of the Clifton Shakspeare Society held on December 18 reports in connexion with John were presented from the following departments:—Rare Words and Phrases, by Mr. L. M. Griffiths; Metre and Authorship, by Miss Constance O'Brien; Personal Histories, by Miss Florence W. Herapath. Mrs. J. H. Tucker and Dr. J. E. Shaw read papers on "Constance."

MR. WM. J. ROLFE, of the United States, has now added Lear to his excellently edited and prettily got-up Series of Shakspeare's Plays for Colleges and Schools. His critical extracts in the Introduction are taken from Coleridge, Hazlitt, Schlegel, Mrs. Jameson, Dowden, and Furnivall; while many happy shorter comments from Grant White (see his reason for the disappearance of the Fool, p. 229), the Cowden Clarkes, Bucknill, Furness, &c., are found in the Notes. On whether "And my poor fool is hang'd" can include the Fool as well as Cordelia, Mr. Rolfe well says—"The context settles the question beyond a doubt. There is no room for a divided sorrow here; Lear's thoughts can never wander more from his dead daughter." The only mistakes we notice in Mr. Rolfe's text are his following Singer and Furness in adopting the forged emendation, "It is no vicious blot, nor other foulness," for the Quarto and Folio "murder or," in I. i. 220, which is good sense as it stands; and his altering hardocks to burdocks because our botanists do not know the former word. The half-line which Furness and he call "the most puzzling phrase in the play"—"All cruels else subscribe," III. vii. 64—to us gives the reason for Regan's supposed order to let the supposed wolves in on the Lear storm-night: "Good porter, turn the key"—"all cruel creatures save this hellish night yield to its savagery, and should be protected from it."

In the note on Mr. Gairdner's Three Fifteenth-Century Chronicles (ACADEMY, December 18, 1880) for "False Notes" read "Jake Napes."

Mr. R. D. BLACKMORE writes:—

"As my name appears in a list of authors about to contribute to The Day of Rest, may I say that I am surprised to find it there?"

HERE is a quaint recipe from George Bellin's commonplace book 1595-96, Harl. MS. 1937, leaf 107 back.

"A medesyne for the soule.

"Take a handfull and more of hartie repentance, with one pounce of suer saluacion in Jesus christe, and as moch livelle faith as one graine of mustard seed, with one drame of greate dread. Put all these into a vessell of Charittie, full of coales of burninge Love, And so put them in-to a viall of Cleane conscience, and Take Euerie daie as moch as will satisfie the desire of the spiritt, And it will heale thee, &c."

WE are indebted to Mr. Joseph Knight, of the New Shakspeare Society's committee, for pointing out what may possibly be a hitherto overlooked allusion to Shakspeare's Macbeth in 1606. In that year William Warner published A Continuance of Albions England, the poem that he first issued in 1589 in six books, and then gradually enlarged to thirteen books in successive editions up to 1602. In Chap. 94, Booke 15, of the 1606 edition, he deals with Macbeth, Banquo, and Fleance, following the chronicler's account; but he introduces his subject with some reflections that are not drawn from any chronicler, but may have reference to Shakspeare's play, and especially his lines—

"I am in blood

Stepp'd in so far that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er."

(Macbeth, III. iv. 136-38.)

Warner says of Macbeth, pp. 375, 376, ed. 1612:—

"Whose guiltie Conscience did it selfe so feelingly accuse,
As nothing not applide by him, against himselfe
he wewes,
No whispring but of him; gainst him, all weapons
feares he borne,
All Beings iointly to renege his Murthres, thinks he sworne.
Wherefore (for such are ever such in selfe-tormenting mind)
But to proceed in blood, he thought no safetie to find."

As Warner's poem was produced so soon after Shakspeare's play, he may well have alluded to his contemporary's drama.

"VISIBLE SPEECH."

WE wish that the teachers of deaf-mutes in England could have been present at the last meeting of the Philological Society, and heard the most "human" and interesting address ever delivered to that body, by Prof. Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone and photophone, on how his father's system of "Visible Speech" has been developed by him, and applied with triumphant results to the teaching of deaf-mutes in the United States. This system has driven every other one out of the field, is now adopted in every institution for deaf-mutes in the United States, and has an enthusiastic body of teachers who are constantly employed in perfecting its details. One deaf-mute is an editor of a newspaper, and, unless his visitors have heavy moustaches, he reads their words from the motion of their lips, and answers them so that they leave him in ignorance that he is quite deaf. Another deaf-mute, in gratitude for what the system has done for him, has learnt printing, and turned printer and publisher at Salem, Mass., solely to popularise Visible-Speech books. This "Visible Speech" is founded on the principle of making the shape of every letter show by what organs of the voice the sound of the letter is produced. A deaf-mute incapable of making any articulate sound is brought to a Visible-Speech teacher, and encouraged to make a sound with his voice. The teacher's training enables him to analyse this sound, and he draws on a blackboard a section of a man's throat and mouth—all the voice-producing organs—with the Visible-Speech signs for each. Such of these signs as represent the deaf-mute's inarticulate sound the teacher then combines, and writes down. He then sees which of the organs employed has to be stopped or altered in position in order that the sound of k—from which all the vowels and other consonants can be rapidly developed—may be made; and, by holding down the deaf-mute's tongue (say) with an ivory pencil, pressing his throat with a finger, drawing him a plan on the board, k is gradually got from him; then all is safe. The intelligence of most of the deaf-mutes, and their delight in their gradual acquirement of their absent senses, are a pleasure to witness. In this case science has fulfilled her truest function, in Bacon's eyes, of ministering to the wants of suffering men. The minute study of phonetics, so often ridiculed as worthless, is not only justified, but glorified, by the end attained; for that study alone has enabled Prof. Graham Bell and his father, the inventor of the system, to accomplish the results they have gained. Though the invention was made years ago in England, the old country was too unenterprising to take it up; but the new gladly hailed it, and its success and development have been triumphant. Yet still in England one lady only, who went to America to learn it, teaches the system to three deaf-mutes whom she is charitably educating. A possible further development is in store for "Visible Speech." The number of adult emigrants in the States who cannot read is perilously large. In several places trials are now being made as to how quickly certain adults can be taught to read by Visible Speech, and then transferred to our present unphonetic spelling. The results already attained lead to the belief that Prof. Bell's system will some day be recognised by the Legislature, and form a permanent part of the educational system of the United States.

OBITUARY.

THE Rev. Mackenzie E. C. Walcott died at 58 Belgrave Road, S.W., on December 22, a few days after he had completed the fifty-ninth year of his age. He was the only son of Admiral John Edward Walcott, and was born at Bath on December 15, 1821. After having been educated at Winchester, he matriculated at Exeter College, Oxford, and took a third class in 1844. At a very early period in life he entered upon authorship, and for more than thirty years has issued a constant succession of works on topographical and ecclesiastical history the bare titles of which would fill more than one of our columns. As a curate of the churches of St. Margaret and St. James, Westminster, he was naturally drawn to the story of the historical associations connected with those parishes. His three volumes on the narrative of Westminster and the two most famous parish churches which bear its name were published before 1851. The traditions and annals of the English cathedrals were the subjects in which he chiefly delighted, and there is scarcely a city or cathedral church in the country on which he has not published a volume of memorials. His general guide to those sacred edifices was printed in 1858, and reached a second edition two years later. An entertaining little work on the Traditions and Customs of Cathedrals, which passed through two editions in 1872, contained many antiquarian notes on the forms and ceremonies which are still retained for use in the cathedral foundations of England. Perhaps the most valuable of all his labours on ecclesiology were the elaborate volumes on Church Work and Life in English Minsters which he issued last year. A kindred work of considerable reputation, which is not likely to be superseded for many years, is his Popular Dictionary of Ecclesiastical Art and Institutions. In 1863 he was appointed to the precentorship and prebendal stall of Oving at Chichester, and illustrated the history of the cathedral to which he was attached by numerous volumes on its bishops and episcopal registers. For many years past he has been in the habit of editing the ancient inventories of the church goods for many of the English counties, and for most of the monastic foundations which formerly existed in this country. He compiled for Mr. Stanford a series of small topographical works on the English coast, which enjoyed considerable popularity in their day, though they have now been banished from the field by more elaborate handbooks from local archaeologists. Mr. Walcott was a frequent contributor to the Transactions of the British Archaeological Association and the Royal Society of Literature; and many of his papers from their pages, as well as from the Reliquary, have been published in a separate form. Few men have laboured with more zeal and steadfastness of purpose than Mr. Walcott, and his writings will continue for many years to be consulted by the student of ecclesiastical history in England and Wales.

DURING the last few days many well-known public men have been taken from us. The Rev. Josiah Miller, long the secretary to the London City Mission, died at 77 Portess Road, N.W., on December 22. He published several small works on controversial points of divinity, but his name will be best remembered for his writings on hymnology. His first volume in this branch of religious literature (Our Hymns) appeared in 1866; three years later a second edition was published, under the altered title of Singers and Songs of the Church.—Mr. George Frederick Ansell, who died at 6 Hartham Road, N., on the previous day, aged fifty-four, was the author of a popular book on the working of the Royal Mint and the scientific appliances in use there. He was appointed to a place in that office in 1855, but retired a few years ago, when his connexion with it formed a subject of public investigation.—A local antiquary, Mr. John Parker, died at High Wycombe on December 22, aged seventy-nine. A little work from his pen on the church at Crendon Lane, in Chipping Wycombe, was published in 1848. His laborious compilation on the Early History and Antiquities of Wycombe came out two years ago. Wycombe is now chiefly known for its parliamentary history; two of Lord Beaconsfield's struggles to enter into public life at Westminster were for the honour of representing that Buckinghamshire borough.—An old antagonist of Mr. Gladstone for the representation of the University of Oxford has passed away in the person of Dr. Marsham. Since 1826 he has held the lucrative post of Warden of Merton, and during those years many eminent persons in Church and State have been educated within its walls. The late Warden was neither a great scholar nor a diligent student, but he possessed a true affection for his university, and his memory will long be held in honour within his college.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BIBLIOGRAPHIA ROMANA. Notizie della Vita e delle Opere degli Scrittori romani del Secolo XI. fino ai nostri Giorni. Vol. I. Romo. 8 fr.
- CAMEROUS' Lusiads. Englished by Capt. Burton. Quaritch. 12s.
- GUINET, E. Promenades japonaises. Tokio-Nikko. Paris: Charpentier. 25 fr.
- KNOOFT, P. Anton Günther. Eine Biographie. Wien: Braumüller. 12 M.
- LIPPK, Ch. D. Bibliographisches Lexicon der gesammten jüdischen Literatur der Gegenwart. Wien: Löwy. 12 M.
- MILANI, L. A. Monete romane della seconda Metà del terzo Secolo ordinate e descritte. Verona. 15 fr.
- BAOUI, O. Della Vita e delle Opere di Pietro Tenerani, del suo Tempo et della sua Scuola nella Scultura. Verona. 7 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY.

- LAURAS, M. Bourdaloue: sa Vie et ses Œuvres. Paris: Palmé. 15 fr.
- SAULCY, F. de. Histoires des Machabées ou Princes de la Dynastie asmonéenne. Paris: Leroux.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE, ETC.

- DIEPENBACH, L. Völkerrunde Osteuropas, insbesondere der Haemeshalbinsel u. der unteren Donaubegiete. Darmstadt: Brill. 15 M.
- HANDBUCH der Botanik. Hrsg. v. A. Schenk. 1. Bd. Breslau: Trewendt. 20 M.
- HAYEK, G. v. Handbuch der Zoologie. 12. Lfg. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 3 M. 60 Pf.
- HEER, O. Flora fossilis arctica. Die fossile Flora der Polarländer. 6. Bd. 1. Abth. Zürich: Wurster. 20 M.
- MARTENS, E. v. Die Mollusken der Maskarenen u. Seychellen. Berlin: Gutmann. 20 M.
- MORBIUS, K., F. RICHTERS, u. E. v. MARTENS. Beiträge zur Meeresfauna der Insel Mauritius u. der Seychellen. Berlin: Gutmann. 65 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ASU Bekr (Sno-l-Anburi, Kitabo-l-Adhadad, sive liber de vocalibus arabicis quae plures habent significationes inter se oppositas. Ed. M. Th. Houtsma. Leiden: Brill. 7 M.
- AD-DHAHABI, al-Moschabih. E cod. ms. ed. P. de Jong. Leiden: Brill. 15 M.
- ALBRECHT, K. Die Leipziger Mundart. Leipzig: Arnold. 4 M.
- BENJACOB, J. A. Ozar Ha-Sepharim (Bücherschatz). Bibliographie der gesammten hebr. Literatur m. Einschluss der Handschriften (bis 1863). Wilna. 20s.
- BREYER, B. Analecta Pandicaria. Breslau: Barschak. 1 M. 60 Pf.
- FAERUD, W. Cicero historicus. Leipzig: Violet. 2 M.
- JARBAU, A. Les Mystères de la Passion d', p. p. G. Paris et G. Raynaud. Paris: Vieweg.
- MUELLER-STRAUSS, H. Thukydideische Forschungen. Wien: Koenig. 7 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SHAKSPERIAN ILLUSTRATIONS AND THE

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S DICTIONARY.

Sunnyside, Mill Hill, N.W.: Dec. 24, 1880.

I am much obliged to Prof. Mayor for calling our attention to Hammer's Ancient Ecclesiastical Histories, which, I hope, will be read for the Philological Society's Dictionary. We have many examples of stare said of the hair, both before and after Shakspeare. Here is a good one from L. Tomson's Calvin's Sermons on Timothy, p. 139, col. 1 (1579): "And mark a threatening by the way, which may make their haire stare on their heads." And said of the hair of horses, cows, dogs, &c., we have wealth of quotations from 1534 to 1866, the earliest date belonging to one from Sir A. Fitzherbert's Boke of Husbandrye, fol. F. 2, b, "And if thou bye kye or oxen to feede, the yonger they be, the rather they wyll fede; but loke well, that the heare stare not, and that he lycke hym selfe." So Butler, in his Feminine Monarchie (1623), directs us to take away all the "staring straws" out of bee hives.

The origin of this sense in the earlier one of thrust, stick, is well shown by

"He stayd about hym with his spere,

Many thurgh gan he here,"

Syr Perceval (c. 1400), l. 1169, and several instances in Gawain Douglas's Eneid (1513), as book iii., p. 75—

"Full prevely thare swerdis in thay stare."

I am sure that if literary men and students of English in any department had the faintest conception of the amazing and enormous light which the dictionary is going to throw upon the history of words and idioms, they would work with enthusiasm to hasten its appearance. To myself, I may say, the handling of the materials—the two and a-half million quotations which the labours of more than a thousand readers and nearly a quarter-of-a-century have amassed—affords an endless succession of surprises; every day I learn therefrom things which I had never dreamed of, and of which I know nobody else has dreamed. I never turn over the pages of Notes and Queries without finding men laboriously elucidating, or partially elucidating, points of which the full explanation lies ready in our pigeon-holes waiting to be edited and published. Will not more scholars help us to hasten this coming illumination by each thinking of the dictionary in his daily reading and research, and sending us notes of every point likely to conduce to its completeness, of every isolated fact which will combine with other facts already in our hands into perfect wholes of word history? No single student can hope, even in the case of a single word, to glean all the facts which a thousand readers and a quarter-of-a-century's work have brought together; but every student may swell the store which we are eager to lay open to all. And will not twenty more workers take in hand portions of this hoard to arrange, dispose, and sub-edit its contents in order to hasten the date at which its bounties shall be open to all? We are doing for England and the English tongue a work which will be built upon and extended and completed, but will itself never grow old; generations of Englishmen will rejoice in our light, and bless the workers who gave the light in which men shall see to do better work; will not more deserve the blessing?

JAMES A. H. MURRAY.

SPELLING REFORM.

3 St. George's Square, N.W.: Dec. 24, 1880.

As Dr. Littledale has alluded to me in connexion with one of Shakspeare's three quibbles on gilt and guilt, I ask leave to say that I hold: (1) that all modernising of Shakspeare's lines spoils them; but (2) that, if they are to be modernised, I think the identical spelling of the two "gilt" would be far better than the distinctive spelling; and I therefore prefer the Folio printing of the Macbeth quibble—

"If he doe bleed,

He gild the Faces of the Groomes withall,

For it must seeme their Guilt" (II. ii. 57, 58)— to those of the Henry IV. and Henry V. instances. Gylt is Anglo-Saxon, gilt Early English (one form), Chaucer's form,

"O litel child | alas, what is thy gilt?"

(Man of Law's Tale, B. § 2, l. 855.);

as ryme vb., rym sb., in which the y so shocks Dr. Littledale, are also Chaucer's forms. I am well content with Chaucer's spellings of these words. Dr. Littledale has doubtless noted the spelling "the Receit of Reason" in Macbeth I. vii. 66 in the Folio.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

Hampstead: Dec. 27, 1880.

My main object in writing again on this subject is to correct some errors I fell into in my last letter through my imperfect knowledge of Old French. Mr. Nicol writes to me thus:—"The form recepte never existed in Old French, except as a pedantic spelling, with silent p; the stages are Latin recepta, recetta, recette, recete (in Late Old French spelt recette, in Early Modern French recepte, then recette again), which last form is the most archaic Old-French one extant, and that from which Middle-English recepte was borrowed. Receite is not an orthographical form, but an assimilation to receive."

It is almost superfluous to add that Mr. Nicol considers that Dr. Littledale's letter "shows that he is perfectly ignorant of the history of Old-French pronunciation and orthography."

The slight improvement in Dr. Littledale's etymological condition chronicled by me in my last letter has been followed by a serious relapse. He asks, "What about leopard, cinder, subtle, school, cebt, doubt, thyme, anchor?" Simply this, that the Middle-English spellings of these words are lebard, lipard, sinder, sotil, scole, dette, doute, time, anker. I am beginning to tire of reminding Dr. Littledale of the principle involved in the retention of such pairs as bishop, episcopul, det, debit, dout, indubitable, and must ask him again, is he prepared to insert a t (or rather two t's) and a e into age, because it comes from the Latin actaticum?

The information about dout = "do out" is interesting, but irrelevant.

Dr. Littledale has just stumbled on the difficulty of the levelling of distinctive spellings, such as guilt, gilt. He must either be incredibly naïve, or else be perpetrating his third joke, when he calls on the Philological Society not to ignore a question which has been under its consideration ever since last July.

The etymologist who cannot trace the connexion between the substantive use and the verb use is much to be pitied.

"If phonetics are to rule our changes." When they do so, we shall write center with an s. At present, we propose to be ruled by phonetics and etymology together, which latter opposes any change of the c.

Dr. Littledale prefers sithe and rime to sythe and ryme; so do I, so do we all.

In objecting to sinder, Dr. Littledale has fallen into a trap which has caught many. He evidently imagines that cinder comes from the French cendre. A change of cendre into cinder is, to say the least, somewhat anomalous. But cendre and cinder have absolutely nothing to do with one another; cinder is the Old-English sinder, which can be traced back to the eighth century.

HENRY SWEET.

MR. GURNEY'S "POWER OF SOUND."

London: Dec. 24, 1880.

The review of The Power of Sound which appeared in the ACADEMY for December 18 needs contradiction on three points.

1. Of the part of my enquiry contained in the first five chapters, Mr. Bosanquet says, "It terminates in the admission that it all leads to nothing and must be wholly given up, with which I quite agree." A critic should not invent admissions, even for the sake of agreeing with them. After dwelling on some of the most general characteristics of architectural and of melodic combinations, I point out that the former present certain obvious grounds for an explanation of their emotional effect (size, mass, rich intricacy, &c.) which are lacking to the latter. Such is the extent of my admission that it all (i.e., the closely packed exposition of five chapters, four of which are totally unconnected with even this brief piece of negative conclusion) must be wholly given up!

2. Experience has so far shown, what a very little consideration of the nature and formation of a scale-system would have led us to expect, that a single pair of ears cannot appreciate melodies founded on radically different elements, any more than a pair of eyes, accustomed to a certain norm in the proportions of human features, could find beauty in faces which set that norm at defiance. Helmholtz quotes an amusing instance of this fact in chap. xiv. of the Tonempfindungen; and similar cases abound in records of Eastern travel. Now our scale-system is built on tones and semi-tones in a certain order; quarter-tones would, therefore, involve a radically new scale-system. And to those who in moments of chromatic enthusiasm express a longing for such elements, I point out that their ears could get into a position to appreciate music built on that system only by ceasing to be in a position to appreciate music built on the present system. These remarks on multiplicity of scale-system Mr. Bosanquet has mistakely for an attack on the idea of modified temperament—i.e., slight modifications in a single scale-system; as to which I expressly say that "every step towards facilitating it" (in the interests of just intonation), "compatible with preserving the music we have got, is worth making."

3. The third mistake has its source in Mr. Bosanquet's failure to notice a very prominent pair of inverted commas. He makes me describe as absurd the idea of distinguishing several parts heard simultaneously—a feat, I need hardly say, of the most ordinary musician. What I have really indicated as absurd is the habit of dignifying with the name of "melodies" such parts as would present no musical coherence or significance if isolated from their fellows and presented as successions of single notes.

EDMUND GURNEY.

IRISH MISSALS.

St. John's College, Oxford; December 1880.

The numerous letters of enquiry about the Stowe Missal which reach me from readers of the ACADEMY in various parts of Europe and America induce me to ask permission to circulate further information about this MS. through your columns. I will avoid going over any of the ground covered by my former communications in the ACADEMY of February 8 and in that of November 20, 1879; but it is necessary to state that the tendency of further acquaintance with the character and contents of the MS. is to modify the a priori notions of extreme antiquity derived from Dr. Todd's monograph in vol. xxiii. of the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy.

It remains under any circumstances by far the earliest of the four surviving MS. missals of the Irish Church, and, as such, is of great interest to all persons interested in liturgical study, beside possessing many other and various points of attraction. Its vernacular rubrics, treatise, and charms especially claim the attention of philologists.

Little is known about its past history. The inscriptions on its cumhdach, a metal work cover of eleventh-century workmanship, indicate that it originally belonged to some church in Munster, that church being possibly identified with the monastery founded by St. Ruadhan at Lothra, in the Barony of Lower Ormond and county of Tipperary, where he died as its first abbot and patron in 584. Not much is known about St. Ruadhan. His name occurs in one of the long lists of saints in the Stowe Missal, but without any change in the size of the letters or any exceptional ornamentation. His life is published in the Bollandists' Acta SS. Ap. 15. It is such a long tissue of ludicrous and improbable miracles that the compilers confess in their Preface to having suppressed part of it for fear of exciting ridicule. The abbey at Lothra was destroyed by the Danes in 843, when this volume, if written before that date, must have been saved. The monastic character of the service book is evidenced by the petition which it contains, "pro abbate nostro. N. episcopo," and by its long lists of monastic saints. Possibly the presence of two collects, the first headed "In sollemnitatibus Petri et Christi" (probably a clerical error for Pauli) and the second headed "Oratio prima Petri," may point to the monastery having been dedicated to St. Peter.

At an early date, probably in the twelfth century, it left Ireland, perhaps transferred to the Continent by some of those Irishmen who carried donations from Tordelbach O'Brian, King of Munster, to the monastery of Ratisbon in 1130. It was discovered abroad in the eighteenth century by John Grace, Esq., of Nenagh, in Ireland, an officer in the German service, who died without leaving any memorandum respecting the place in which, or the circumstances under which, it was found. From his hands it passed into those of the Duke of Buckingham, where it remained until the sale of the Stowe Library in 1849, when it was bought by the Earl of Ashburnham, in whose library at Ashburnham Place it is now preserved.

The sacramental portion of the volume, including the "Ordo Missae" and the "Ordo Baptismi," is in various handwritings, the oldest, and by far the most extensive in amount, of which cannot, I think, on liturgical grounds, be assigned to an earlier date than the ninth century, though some of its features, taken singly, seem to point to a still later, and others to a somewhat earlier, date.

Palaeographical evidence does not appear to be inconsistent with such a conclusion, so far as it has been possible to compare the text of the Stowe Missal with such Irish or Hiberno-Latin MSS. as have been found accessible either in the original or in the facsimiles presented in the pages of the National MSS. of Ireland, and in the publications of the Palaeographical Society.

In some pages this older and larger handwriting assumes an unusually cursive and flourishing shape, which seems to denote a change of scribe without any material change of date. A similar change of style is noticeable in other Celtic MSS., as in the Book of Kells (Palaeographical Society's publications, pl. 88, last line), the Codex S. Dunstani (Bodl. Lib., F. iv. 32, fol. 42 b), and the Book of Armagh (Trin. Coll., Dublin, ff. 103 a, 107 b).

In a few pages, and portions of pages, the older handwriting has been erased to make way for a smaller and minuscule handwriting, which we know from the colophon to be that of Moel Caich, a writer whom it has been found impossible hitherto to identify. This portion of the text exhibits letters depending from the ruled line above them instead of resting on the line beneath, a peculiarity of Greek writing sometimes adopted by Celtic scribes, as in the Scottish Book of Deer, now at Cambridge, and the Welsh ninth-century Ovid preserved in the Bodleian Library.

The headings of the missal and of single collects, with all the Irish and Latin rubrics, are in various and later handwritings, except the rubrics in the Ordo Baptismi, which are coeval with the text.

The following facts make it impossible to accept Dr. Todd's hasty assignment of the earlier portion of the missal to the sixth century, and in part suggest a date not earlier than the ninth century:—

1. The use and position of the Nicene Creed. It occurs here in its usual place after the gospel, as an integral portion of the Ordinarium Missae in what is substantially the Roman rite, a position which it did not assume till the era of Charlemagne early in the ninth century, and, according to some authorities, not till the reign of Henry II. early in the eleventh century.

2. The use of the Agnus Dei, which is said to have been introduced into the mass by Sergius I., 687-701.

3. The structural completeness of the Ordinarium Missae.

4. The presence of the words "dieaque nostros in tua pace disponas, atque ab aeterna damnatione nos eripias, et in electorum jubeas grege numerari," which are known to have been added to the canon by Gregory the Great (590-604), and which prove that even here we have not got a pure Gelasian text, although the Prayer of Consecration is headed "Canon Dominicus Papae Gelasii."

5. The date of several of the saints whose names are among the "nomina pausantium," including Lawrence, Mellitus, and Justus, second, third, and fourth Archbishops of Canterbury, the latter of whom died in 627.

Among the many liturgical peculiarities and indications of an early date, the following seem to deserve especial mention:—

1. A Litany at the commencement of the Ordo Missae.

2. The unique position of another ancient missal Litany, entitled "Deprecatio Sancti Martini," between the epistle and gospel.

3. The presence of vernacular rubrics.

4. The long lists of early saints, chiefly Irish, inserted in the text of the canon.

5. The absence of any special "Proprium Sanctorum," and the simple provision of a single "Missae Communis Sanctorum" for all commemorations of saints, which, together with a single Mass for Penitents and another for the Dead, make up the smallest volume which ever passed under the title of a missal.

6. The absence of the "Filioque" from the Nicene Creed.

7. The fixed use of an unchanging epistle (1 Cor. xi. 26-32) and gospel (St. John vi. 51-57).

8. The interpolation of various forms of private devotion for the priest, in the shape of an Apologia or Confessio Sacerdotis.

9. The enumeration of only three orders of bishops, priests, and deacons, all notice of the minor orders being omitted.

10. The general paucity of rubrics, together with the absence of any allusion to the mixed chalice or to the use of incense.

11. The absence from the canon of the tenth-century additional clause, "pro quibus tibi offerimus vel."

12. The paucity of crosses, only five being marked for use, as against thirty-one in the present Roman canon, and none at the words of institution.

13. The presence of early and rare liturgical terms—e.g., senior, argumentum, stella (= Epiphany), kalendae (= Circumcision), natalis calicis, quinquagesima (= Whitsun Day), anathleticus gradus, liber vitae, &c.

14. Singular usages—e.g., the fraction of the Host before the Pater noster, the crossing of the child's hand, and the ceremonial washing of the feet in baptism.

15. A petition that the founder of the church, who was evidently still living when the words were written, and all the people may be delivered from idolatry. "... in hac aeclesiae quam famulus tuus ad honorem nominis gloriae tuae aedificavit ... eumque, adque omnem populum ad idolorum cultura eripias, et ad te deum verum omnipotentem convertas."

There is a general resemblance in this Irish Liturgy to the ninth- or tenth-century "Ordo Missae," which was first published by M. Flacius Illyricus in 1557 under the misleading title of "Missae Latina quae olim ante Romanam in usu fuit," and which was afterwards printed by Martene (De Ant. Eccles. Rit., lib. i., c. 4, art. 12, ordo 4). Certain collects and phrases are common to both, but there the resemblance ends. The text especially in the "Gloria in Excelsis" and in the Nicene Creed is very dissimilar, and there is no ground for supposing that there can be any original connexion or anything more than an accidental resemblance between the two.

The conclusion towards which we are gravitating is this:—There seems to be ground for believing that the Stowe Missal, in its present shape, with all its variations of handwriting, was in use in some church in Ireland in the tenth, and the older portion of it perhaps in the ninth century. It affords no certain proof, but it throws some light upon the question as to what was the earliest form of liturgy in use in the Irish Church. It proves that the Roman canon was introduced into at least partial use in Ireland as early as the ninth century, while it retains portions of an earlier and a different liturgy interwoven with it. The admixture of passages from the Ambrosian, Gallican, and Mozarabic rites with the Roman canon is suggestive of a period when the diversity had not ceased to exist, which is alluded to in Tirechan's eighth-century sketch of the Church in Ireland, when Irish saints "diuersas regulas et missas habebant et diuersas tonsuras" (Haddan and Stubbs, Councils, &c., vol. ii., part ii., p. 292). F. E. WARREN.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, Jan. 3, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Past and Present of the Cuttlefishes," by Dr. Andrew Wilson.
7 p.m. Actuaries: "On the Simultaneous Construction of Compound Interest and Annuity Tables," by Mr. F. N. Newcome.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: Anatomy (Demonstration, I.), by Mr. J. Marshall.
8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "On the Early Destinies of Man," by Mr. J. E. Howard.
TUESDAY, Jan. 4, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Atoms," IV., by Prof. Dewar.
8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Account of the Zoological Collection made during the Survey of H.M.S. Alert in the Straits of Magellan and on the Coast of Patagonia," by Dr. A. Günther; "On the Sea Elephant," by Prof. Flower.
WEDNESDAY, Jan. 5, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Animal Intelligence," II., by Mr. G. J. Romanes.
8 p.m. Geological: "The Archæan Geology of Anglesey," and "The Limestone of Durness and Assynt," by Mr. O. Callaway; "On a Boulder of Hornblende-Pikrite near Pen-y-Carnisio, Anglesey," by Prof. T. G. Bonney.
8 p.m. British Archaeological Association: "Notes on Roman Remains from Nursling, Hants," by Dr. Wake Smart; "The Harshships of the Present Law of Treasure-Trove," by Mr. G. R. Wright.
THURSDAY, Jan. 6, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Atoms," V., by Prof. Dewar.
SATURDAY, Jan. 8, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Atoms," VI., by Prof. Dewar.

SCIENCE.

An Introduction to the Study of Fishes. By Albert C. L. G. Günther. (Adam & Charles Black.)

THE study of fishes has never been a very popular one among naturalists. For many years the birds have engaged the attention of a whole army of ornithologists, and the students of mammals and even of reptiles have generally made a respectable show; but the professed ichthyologists at any time might nearly have been counted on the fingers of one hand, and their number even now is not much greater. The causes of this apparent neglect are not far to seek. We have in the first place the great difficulty of obtaining specimens of any but the commonest species, and the inconvenience of having to preserve them, even when obtained, in spirits or some other fluid—the latter, paltry as it may seem, placing a formidable obstacle in the way of those inclined to commence the study of fishes. Further, the very medium inhabited by fishes renders the study of their natural history exceedingly difficult, and thus one, at any rate, of the attractions which commonly direct the beginner in his choice of a zoological study was shut off.

We may add to all these considerations the fact that certain intrinsic difficulties beset the study of fishes, and that these were, for a long time, heightened and made the most of by the imperfections of the classifications adopted, arising in part from circumstances already alluded to. The older naturalists regarded as fishes all the animal inhabitants of the waters, and we fancy that even now, in spite of the multitude of popular zoological treatises that we possess, people are not wanting who would be rather surprised to hear it stated that whales, lobsters, and oysters are not fishes. The prevalence of such mistaken notions as these, which even Linnaeus and Artdi only partially succeeded in casting off, stood in the way of the progress of systematic ichthyology; and it was not until Cuvier specially devoted his attention to the class of fishes that something remotely approaching a satisfactory classification of these animals was arrived at. Great as was the step in advance made by Cuvier, he still worked very much upon the old lines; and Dr. Günther, in the historical portion of the book of which the title stands at the head of this article, seems to regard as the greatest service done to ichthyology by the great French naturalist the more or less successful attempt made by him to establish natural families of fishes. Broad systems founded entirely or chiefly upon one set of characters, especially when those characters are to a great extent superficial, can never be satisfactory; and hence the comparative failure of Agassiz's attempted classification, founded upon peculiarities of the dermal appendages of fishes, and specially designed for the arrangement of the fossil forms. The distinction of the true bony fishes into Ctenoids and Cycloids was evidently unnatural; the entire new group of the Ganoids was made up of most heterogeneous elements; and even the Placoids, forming the most natural of the orders proposed by Agassiz, were by no means homogeneous. Nevertheless this grouping had certain advantages, especially in assisting to bring into intelligible order the chaos of fossil fishes; and for us it had undoubtedly the merit of leading to the researches of Johannes Müller, the results of which are embodied in his celebrated memoir, Ueber den Bau und die Grenzen der Ganoiden, perhaps the greatest and most original contribution to systematic ichthyology that we possess, and upon which, in all probability, all future classifications of fishes will be founded. In this memoir, which was almost startling to the zoologists of thirty years ago by the light which it seemed suddenly to throw upon one of the most perplexing groups of Vertebrata, Johannes Müller not only indicated the structural peculiarities which served to distinguish a true order Ganoidei from the other fishes, but also discussed the whole ichthyological system, into which he introduced many important modifications; and, as Dr. Günther says (p. 22):—

"Although all cannot be maintained as the most natural arrangements, yet his researches have given us a much more complete knowledge of the organisation of the Teleosteous fishes, and later enquiries have shown that, on the whole, the combinations proposed by him require only some further modification and another definition to render them perfectly natural."

This testimony to the value of Müller's work is certainly not too high, as will be evident to anyone who compares his system with that adopted by Dr. Günther himself in his present book. Of Müller's six primary groups (or sub-classes) only one, that of the Dipnoi, including the Sirenoid forms, whose place seems to be on the boundary line between fishes and Amphibians, has been suppressed, and this in consequence of the discovery in Australia of certain fishes referred to the ancient genus Ceralodus, which showed so close a relationship to Lepidosiren on the one hand, and to the true Ganoids on the other, as to lead Dr. Günther to unite all the Dipnoi with the last-named group. Among the Teleostean fishes the only important change consists in the suppression of Müller's order Pharyngognathi, the spiny-finned forms of which make a sub-order of Acanthopterygii, while the Garfish and other soft-finned types find a resting-place among the Physostomi, their affinity to which was suspected by Müller himself.

Dr. Günther has, however, adopted one other important modification of the system, namely, the grouping together of the Ganoid and Chondropterygian fishes into a single sub-class, that of the Palaeichthyes, so called on account of the great geological antiquity of those two types. The principal characters uniting these groups were already recognised by Müller, and utilised by him in distinguishing the two orders above mentioned from the best of the class of fishes. They consist in the presence of a contractile and valvular cone at the base of the aorta, and of a spiral valve in the intestine, to which Dr. Günther adds that the optic nerves are not, or only partially, decussating. It appears to us, and has always done so, that this group of Palaeichthyes has no valid claim to recognition. The two orders of which it is composed are sharply marked off from each other, and when we consider the mass of their characters each of them is clearly equivalent to the whole group of Teleostei; and, finally, in the discussion of any general zoological or palaeontological question, it is difficult to see how the group Palaeichthyes can ever figure as a classificational unit. But, as regards the usefulness of Dr. Günther's book, this is perhaps of little consequence. Those who have to deal with general questions will probably soon find themselves practically disregarding the unnecessary sub-class, and treating Chondropterygians and Ganoids as groups equivalent to the Teleostei, as they were in Müller's system. Of the close relationship of the Dipnoi to the Ganoids there seems to be no doubt, and their admission as an order of that sub-class of fishes is perhaps the most judicious course that can be adopted.

The development of his views of systematic ichthyology occupies the second part of Dr. Günther's book, and of this we need say but little. The work is done with the care and judgment that might be expected from the distinguished author; the orders, sub-orders, and families of fishes are characterised in sufficient detail for the purposes of the student; the characters of the principal genera in each family are given, and the names of others cited; and the natural history of the species is briefly indicated. The fossil forms are also noticed, but with less detail than the recent ones. In short, the student of systematic ichthyology will find in this section a most admirable guide through the intricacies of the subject, as indeed, from the author's long-continued studies in connexion with the magnificent collections of the British Museum, could hardly fail to be the case. This part of the book is also illustrated with numerous excellent wood-cuts of the fishes and their characteristic parts, which will be of no small assistance to the student.

What must be regarded as the introductory section of Dr. Günther's work may be divided into two parts—one truly introductory, as furnishing the information necessary to enable the reader to pursue his studies in the systematic and descriptive portion, although containing in addition many details not absolutely required by the systematist; the other embracing those generalisations which really constitute the highest development of zoological study, and which require for their comprehension a greater or less acquaintance with the various groups of fishes. Thus, in his first chapter, he gives an historical sketch of the progress of ichthyology from the days of that astonishing genius Aristotle, whose results in so many instances anticipated those of the most advanced of modern zoologists, down to our own time, not referring in detail to the obscure old writers whose names will be found embalmed in the pages of Artedi, but indicating all the authors whose labours have contributed materially to the advancement of the science, and giving a short account of the doings of each. Of Ray and Willoughby, and of Peter Artedi, Dr. Günther naturally speaks very highly. The latter, whose Ichthyologia, edited by Linnaeus after its author was unfortunately drowned at the early age of twenty-nine, is perhaps the most perfect piece of zoological work of the last century, struck out the classification of fishes which virtually constituted the foundation of all ichthyological systems down almost to our own day, and which Linnaeus modified, but certainly did not improve. The classifications of Linnæus, Cuvier, and Johannes Müller are tabulated by Dr. Günther, so that the student is here afforded a clear insight into the principal steps by which the science of ichthyology has advanced to its present standpoint, no small advantage with respect to the proper appreciation of that standpoint itself. This chapter concludes with a list of modern voyages, faunas, and anatomical works containing important contributions to the science of ichthyology.

In several succeeding chapters Dr. Günther enters at considerable length into the consideration of the external and internal structure of fishes, describing successively and most carefully the parts of which the body of a fish is made up and the modifications which these parts undergo in the various members of the class. The general form, the structure of the skin and scales, the structure and position of the fins, and the general construction of the skeleton, with other details of special importance for the comprehension of the systematic part of ichthyology, occupy the second and third chapters; and the latter concludes with a most valuable synonymic table of the bones composing the fish-skeleton, showing in parallel columns the names applied to the same bones by the chief authorities on the osteology of fishes—namely, Cuvier, Owen, Stannius, and, chiefly as regards the head and shoulder-girdle, Huxley and Parker. In treating of a subject so complex, and upon which opinions differ so widely, as the interpretation of the bones of fishes, our author is rather embarrassed in his choice of terms; and, considering the general practice of the present day, one has every reason to be grateful to Dr. Günther for having taken the trouble of working out these synonyms and selecting from among them those which seemed to him most suitable, instead of cutting the knot by inventing new terms of his own. In this whole table, in which the author has indicated the names used by him by printing them in italics, we find only a single one which has not an authority appended to it, and even that carries its own explanation with it.

The other systems of organs receive equally careful treatment at Dr. Günther's hands, and this portion of the book may be regarded as constituting a true Principia Ichthyologica. In connexion with the organs and processes of reproduction a most interesting summary of the curious affiliated phenomena presented by certain species of fish is given, such as contrivances for the protection of the eggs, the remarkable egg-cases of the sharks and rays, the singular adaptation of the males for incubatory purposes in the Pipe fishes and their allies, and the nest-building instincts of the sticklebacks and others; and in the succeeding chapter we find an excellent account of the changes undergone by many fishes, especially of the open sea, during their growth and development—a somewhat novel subject, for our knowledge of which we are indeed principally indebted to the researches of Dr. Günther himself. It is chiefly in the pelagic fishes, our knowledge of which is still founded to a great extent upon a very scanty supply of specimens, that the most remarkable of these changes occur; and one is not surprised, after studying Dr. Günther's results, to find that a multitude of species and many genera have been founded solely upon these curious stages of development. One of the most important tasks that the ichthyologists of the future have before them is the investigation of the field of research thus opened up, and it is a task of great difficulty; for when it is considered that pelagic fishes are generally of very wide geographical range and the successive growth-modifications of one and the same species may be captured singly at stations far distant from each other, it is easy to see that the chances of identification are greatly diminished, and those of the foundation of false genera and species correspondingly increased.

One of the most remarkable results of recent researches upon the growth and development of fish is that at which modern ichthyologists have arrived with regard to the curious little bandlike fishes known as the Leptocephalidae, one of which, the Anglesey Morris (Leptocephalus Morrisi), is a rare British species. These feeble creatures, which are frequently taken floating in the open sea, and appear to be most abundant in the Mediterranean, are now regarded as

“the offspring of various kinds of marine fishes, representing, not a normal stage of development (larvae), but an arrest of development at a very early period of their life: they continue to grow to a certain size without corresponding development of their internal organs, and perish without having attained the characters of the perfect animal.”

Of the causes producing such a singular abnormal condition nothing is known; but Dr. Günther suggests that “it is quite within the limits of probability that fishes, usually spawning in the vicinity of land, sometimes spawn in the open ocean, or that floating spawn is carried by currents to a great distance from land; and that such embryos which, for their normal growth, require the conditions afforded by the vicinity of the shore, if hatched in mid-ocean, grow into undeveloped hydropic creatures, such as the Leptocephales seem to be.”

Passing over certain minor matters we may refer in the next place to a chapter on the distribution of fishes in time, which, although perhaps too brief, gives a fairly good sketch of the geological history of the class. On the claim of the curious little palaeozoic fossils described by Pander as Conodonts to rank as the remains of fishes, or indeed of vertebrate animals at all, Dr. Günther, like most palaeontologists, is rather doubtful, but at the same time he refers to them as possibly representing the teeth of Myxinoïd or other Cyclostome fishes, such as, from all analogy, we may presume the earliest fishes capable of leaving any traces behind them to have been. They have been detected by Mr. Hinde low down in the Silurian—in fact just where we want them to satisfy any theory of the progressive sequence of organic forms; they are known to extend up into the Carboniferous, and probably into the Permian, side by side with Selachian and Ganoid fishes; and certainly it is difficult, after an examination of them, or of Mr. Hinde's beautiful series of figures in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society (1879), to doubt that they once belonged to some form of fishes. The Upper Silurian fishes from the Ludlow bone-bed are, as is well known, very obscure; but in the Devonian series all doubt ceases, and the remains of these animals occur in such abundance and perfection as to enable the palaeontologist to form a tolerably good idea of the fish-fauna of that remote period. The distinction of the Chondropterygian and Ganoid groups is now clearly apparent, although certain genera present characters which render their precise position doubtful, and one group (Acanthodes and its allies) “combined numerous branchiostegals with Chondropterygian spines and a shagreen-like dermal covering,” thus lending some support to the idea underlying the sub-class Palaeichthyes. It is remarkable that so early as the Devonian we should find two of the main types of Ganoids, which are still extant, already indicated—namely, the types of Polypterus and that of the Dipnoi. These forms continue on through the series of formations, gradually approaching more and more to existing types, until in the Jurassic period we find fishes allied to the living genus Amia, and leading so distinctly towards the so-called osseous fishes, which constitute the bulk of the present fish-fauna, that we are quite prepared for the appearance of the latter in the succeeding cretaceous epoch, and their predominance over all other types in tertiary times, as at the present day.

From the consideration of the distribution of fishes in time Dr. Günther passes by a natural transition to that of their geographical distribution on the surface of the earth—a difficult and intricate subject, to which he devotes several long chapters. He treats successively of the distribution of the fishes of fresh and brackish water, and of marine fishes, the latter divided into three categories, namely, Shore, Pelagic, and Deep-sea Fishes. It would be impossible in the space at our command to give even the slightest sketch of the contents of these important chapters, or even of the results arrived at; but they are full of interest, and we would especially refer to the short but exceedingly philosophical chapter which serves as a prelude to this section of the book, and deals generally with the conditions governing the distribution of fishes. The chapter on deep-sea fishes is also one of general interest.

We have thus attempted to give some idea of the contents and general nature of this most important contribution to zoological literature, and we trust that, imperfectly as we feel we have succeeded in our endeavours, we have said enough to convince the reader of its great value. All who are acquainted with Dr. Günther and his work will feel confident that the material of any book he offers to his brother naturalists will be of the best possible quality; and in preparing this Introduction to the Study of Fishes (which is founded upon the notes got together for the article "Ichthyology" in the Encyclopædia Britannica) he has superadded to a careful selection of material a straightforward determination to place what he has to say in the best and most intelligible form, which renders it a model of a zoological text-book.

W. S. DALLAS.

OBITUARY.

MICHEL CHASLES.

"THE mathematician lives long and lives young" * was eminently true of the distinguished French geometer whose death we recorded in our last issue. Born at Eprenon (Eure-et-Loir) on November 15, 1793, he entered the Polytechnic School in 1812, on leaving which establishment, in 1814, he went to reside at Chartres, acting as "agent de change" and in other official capacities for some ten years. He found time, however, for scientific studies, contributing his earliest papers on curves and surfaces of the second degree to the Correspondant de l'Ecole Polytechnique, 1814-16, and his earliest on conics to Gergonne's Annal. Math., 1828 and 1829, these last memoirs being founded on Poncelet's theories of reciprocal polars and of centres of homology. Having been elected a corresponding member of the Academy in 1839, he was appointed Professor of Geodesy and Machines at the Polytechnic School (1841), in succession to Savary. In 1846, a special chair having been founded by the Faculty of Sciences, he became Professor of the Higher or Modern Geometry at Paris—a post he retained, we believe, till his death.

From the Catalogue of Scientific Papers we learn that (down to 1873) he had contributed no less than 177 memoirs or papers to different journals. These may be arranged under the following heads:—Curves and surfaces of the second degree, forty-one papers; curves and surfaces in general, forty-nine; conic sections, twenty-five; geometry, fourteen; mechanics, six; attractions, seven; arithmetic, algebra, analysis, and historical articles, twenty-four; astronomical, eight. Many of the papers, however, run into two or more of the above divisions. The best-known of his works is the Aperçu historique sur l'Origine et le Développement des Méthodes en Géométrie, particulièrement de celles qui se rapportent à la Géométrie moderne, suivi d'un Mémoire... sur deux Principes généraux de la Science, la Dualité et l'Homographie. This treatise was published in 1837, and, having become exceedingly scarce, was reprinted (we believe unaltered), with a new Preface giving a short account of its history, in May 1875. It is hardly necessary to say that it indicates a great amount of research, and that the copious notes contain much valuable original matter. This work was followed six years later by a History of Arithmetic, and in 1852 appeared the Traité de Géométrie supérieure; a second edition of this last work has just issued from the press. It closes with an interesting inaugural lecture (December 22, 1846) on the modern geometry.

In 1863, Chasles contributed yet another valuable addition to the history of geometry in his Les trois Livres de Porismes d'Euclide, rétablis pour la première fois, d'après la Notice et les Lemmes de Pappus, et conformément au Sentiment de R. Simson, sur la Forme des Énoncés de ces Propositions. This was succeeded in 1865 by the first volume of the Traité des Sections coniques, faisant suite au Traité de Géométrie supérieure. Here, and in subsequent papers in the Comptes-rendus, we have the answer furnished to the question, "How many conics are there capable of satisfying five conditions?" The method employed he styles geometrical substitution, and the result is obtained when we have established a relation between the characteristics—i.e., the number of the conics of the system which (1) pass through an arbitrary point, (2) touch any arbitrary line. We hope to hear that the long-expected second volume will appear at no distant date.

To Chasles we are indebted for the first complete synthetical solution of the problem of the attraction of ellipsoids.* The only works, so far as we know, that have been put into an English garb, are the memoirs on the General Properties of Cones of the Second Degree and on the Spherical Conics, translated by Dr. Graves (1841).

M. Chasles was chosen member of the Academy of Brussels in 1830; was elected, as stated above, corresponding member of the Academy of Sciences in 1839, and was "decorated" the same year; became foreign member of the Royal Society in 1854, Copley Medallist in 1865, and foreign member of the London Mathematical Society in April 1867. We need only mention the Pascal-Newton controversy (cf. Athenæum, Nov. 2077-98, and Dr. Hirst's letter to the Times, October 1, 1867), as we should wish it to be forgotten altogether.

We have left ourselves no space for extended remarks on the works whose titles we have given, or on the numerous papers which we hope may be collected and arranged in a memorial volume. There can be but one opinion as to the great merit of all these contributions to mathematics; even the earliest, though in part they may be echoes of the great Poncelet, contain much that would stamp the author as an independent geometer of the highest order. "Sa gloire est d'avoir découvert des méthodes nouvelles qui servent à résoudre, sans le secours de l'algèbre, les questions les plus difficiles de la géométrie. Il fit faire des progrès importants à la géométrie analytique." It only remains to add that M. Chasles died December 18, 1880.

R. TUCKER.

THE death is likewise announced of Mr. T.

* Gen. Sabine's address on presenting the Copley Medal.

Rymer Jones, F.R.S., late Professor of Comparative Anatomy at King's College, London, and author of A General Outline of the Animal Kingdom, The Aquarian Naturalist, &c.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

WE hear that Lieut. Bove, of the Italian Navy, who accompanied Prof. Nordenskiöld in the Vega, is shortly to be sent to the Antarctic Seas in connexion with the projected national expedition, which cannot be properly organised before 1882.

MR. JOSEPH THOMSON contributes to the January number of Good Words a well-written account of the preparatory journey which he made to the Usambara country in company with the late Mr. Keith Johnston before the East African expedition started for the interior from Dar-es-Salaam.

LIEUT. DUMBLETON, R.E., and Surgeon Browning, R.N., have left for the Gambia, to organise an expedition from Bathurst to Timbaktu, the object of which is to open commercial relations between our West African settlements and the Western Sudan. Preliminary arrangements having been already made on the spot by the colonial authorities, it is hoped that the expedition will be able to start at once, and, as they will have some four months of dry weather before them, it is expected that they will be able to push on very rapidly. The leaders take out with them numerous presents for the various chiefs through whose territories they will pass.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH AND HUTLEY, the founders of the first missionary station on the western shore of Lake Tanganyika, which is situated at Mtowa, a little north of the Lukuga Creek, have lately sent home some of the results of their investigations among the Waguha. It is worthy of note that this tribe has some idea of a Supreme Being, and, as they have a word in their language (calumba) to express this idea, it is thought that it is original among them, and not borrowed from the Arabs. The Waguha also appear to have some notions respecting stars, and by one of those in Orion, which they call Sala, they direct their movements. Wherever they may be they look towards it, and say, Ta-bagala kwa Sala—i.e., Let us go towards Sala, meaning "Let us go home."

ACCORDING to a telegram from St. Petersburg, news has been received from Petroalexandrovsk announcing that Col. Glukofsky, who has surveyed the ancient bed of the Oxus, has now returned. He is of opinion that the diversion of the river to the Caspian Sea from its present course is quite practicable; and a sum of 600,000 roubles has been set apart for the work. Ten Russian engineers, five companies of infantry, and three sovnias of Cossacks are engaged in the operations.

It has been announced that an International Congress of Commercial Geography would be held at Lisbon during 1881, and that active preparations for it had already commenced; but we now learn that the meeting has been postponed to 1882 and perhaps 1883. The change is no doubt largely due to the inconvenience that would result from attempting to hold two congresses, at Venice and Lisbon, at about the same time.

THE January Statement of the Palestine Exploration Fund is chiefly occupied with a report of the influential meeting held at the Jerusalem Chamber to set on foot a survey of Eastern Palestine. There seems to be a consensus among archaeologists that results of a high order may be expected—some important inscriptions, equal in value to the Moabite stone, numerous additions to architectural history, and at least some identifications of remarkable Biblical sites. The speech of Lieut. Conder is especially important as counteracting the decay of general interest in the subject which seems to be apprehended, owing to the greater acquaintance of most subscribers with the Biblical than with the archaeological aspect of Palestinian survey. The value of the survey map of Western Palestine is strikingly shown in the same number by two parallel sections of the survey map of the western shores of Lake Tiberias and of some earlier map of the same; by the side of which is given a map of the eastern shores as at present known—a speaking testimony to the scantiness of the knowledge we now possess of that side of the lake. A conspectus of the "Biblical Gains" of the survey, and a note on the site of Kadesh Barnea, are also included in this interesting number.

* Only five mathematicians have obtained the Copley Medal; M. Chasles (1865) was the fourth; and Dr. Sylvester, from whose address at the Exeter meeting of the British Association in 1869 we make the above extract, the fifth (1880).

SCIENCE NOTES.

The History of Sandstones.—Although the modern method of studying petrology by means of a combination of chemical and microscopical research has been applied chiefly to the examination of eruptive rocks, the same method is obviously applicable to rocks of a clastic origin. Dr. Serby has indeed thrown great light upon the nature of many limestones and other sedimentary rocks by his microscopical studies. Aided by the powerful instrument of chemical analysis, Mr. J. A. Phillips has lately turned his attention in the same direction, especially with the object of unravelling the history of sandstones and similar rocks. A large number of sandstones and grits, quartzites and sands, of various geological ages, have passed under his examination. The siliceous grains show considerable diversity of form, and in some cases exhibit a distinct crystalline shape. Upon these crystalline grains there has occasionally been deposited a coating of secondary quartz, following with fidelity the outline of the original crystal. Enclosures of various kinds, comprising cavities and minute crystals of either schorl or rutile, are by no means rare in the siliceous grains. Along with the silica, there are often to be seen fragments of felspar, scales of mica, and grains of chlorite and epidote. In the harder varieties of sandstone and grit, the cementing medium is, in large measure, of a siliceous nature. From some investigations conducted by Mr. Phillips, it appears that fragments of quartz having a diameter of less than one-fiftieth of an inch retain their angularity with considerable persistence when subjected to the eroding action of flowing water, but yield with comparative ease to the friction consequent upon the action of wind. Hence the conclusion that the rounded grains of silica in certain Triassic and other sandstones may have been blown sand rather than sand deposited by water—that, in short, the fragments in such rocks are of Aeolian instead of Neptunian origin.

THE Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching will hold a meeting on Friday, January 7, in the Botanical Theatre of University College, Gower Street, at eleven a.m. The sub-committees (for Solid Geometry, Higher Plane Geometry, and Geometrical Conics) appointed January 11, 1878, will present their Reports. Draft syllabuses have been circulated among the members. All persons interested in the elementary teaching of geometry are invited to attend.

THE museum of fossils, &c., collected by Mr. Edward Wood, F.G.S., of Richmond, has just been sold to the Directors of the York Museum for the sum of £720.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Grammaire béarnaise, suivie d'un Vocabulaire béarnais-français. Par V. Lespy. Deuxième Edition. (Paris: Maisonneuve.) Among the dialects of the South of France, the language of Béarn is one of those which have been longest committed to writing. It was not so early superseded, as a literary and administrative idiom, by French, as were other dialects of the langue d'oc. It presents an uninterrupted series of records from the twelfth century to our own day. The most ancient of these documents, indeed, have not reached us in the form of contemporary copies, and they should, therefore, only be used with precaution by philologists: still, we have Béarnais MSS. from the thirteenth century, and thenceforward we possess the most trustworthy elements for an historical study of the idiom. There results from this circumstance at once an advantage and a danger. The advantage is, that it is possible to follow for a long space of time phonetic changes and morphological developments. The danger is, that one is tempted to apply to the Béarnais of the present time a traditional orthography which, in many cases, could only lead to error as to the actual condition of the language. M. Lespy's Grammar, which is the work of a man equally versed in the past and the present of the Béarnais idiom, has not escaped this danger. The book, which was first published in 1858, rendered great services to Romance studies, and was classed at its appearance among the best works which France possessed on her local idioms. But this favourable judgment was no very high praise at a time when no good work on the provincial idioms of France was in existence, either in the form of a dictionary or, still less, in the form of a grammar. At the present day, since the study of the Romance dialects has taken an altogether scientific direction; since the works of Ascoli, Nigra, and Ovidio in Italy, of Cornu in Switzerland, &c., criticism is entitled to be more exacting. Thus the second edition of M. Lespy's Grammar, improved as it is, will give less satisfaction to the philologists of 1880 than the first edition gave to those of 1858. Let us observe, however, that these improvements are in themselves very considerable. The work, which contained 524 paragraphs in the first edition, contains 752 in the present. The texts given as specimens of the language have been augmented, and now form a genuine Béarnais chrestomathy. Many rules have been added; many others have been more fully stated. The order of classification of the phonetic facts has been, and rightly, completely changed. The glossary which closes the volume from French-Béarnais has become Béarnais-French, and in this new form it will certainly be much more useful than in the preceding. But it is still too clear that the author has not sufficiently precise notions of the method according to which the state of a living idiom should be set forth. His Grammar too much resembles these practical manuals by whose aid we learn to read, write, or speak the ancient or modern languages. He explains to us the rules of Béarnais as a schoolmaster explains the rules of Latin or Greek to children. He is too much concerned with the endeavour to give the traditional orthography of the words, and does not make us sufficiently acquainted with their pronunciation. He does not thoroughly take into consideration the reason of the facts stated, and, accordingly, his statement of them is unsatisfactory. Finally, he encumbers his Grammar with a multitude of comparisons, the least fault of which is that they are out of place, and which, unfortunately, are too often incorrect. All these criticisms might be justified from almost any page of the Grammar, so that we need not undertake a detailed examination of the work. We will confine ourselves to some remarks which might be suggested by paragraphs 23 to 27, where the atonic e final is studied. We will observe at once that the author never distinguishes the vowels as "tonic" and "atonic," elementary as this notion is. He speaks, indeed, of the accent, but quite at the end of the volume, in the "Additions et Corrections," and he expresses himself as follows, without perceiving that he is only enunciating a truism, and is teaching us nothing as to the origin or effects of the accent in Béarnais:—"L'accent tonique en béarnais affecte la dernière syllabe, lorsqu'elle est pleinement prononcée, et la pénultième, quand la dernière a un son faible" (!!) Speaking of the "e final, doucement fermé" (§ 23), M. Lespy tells us that "it bears no accent," and he gives as examples abesque (episcopus), bene (vendre), &c. Then, in § 24, he speaks of the "e final sounding like a soft o," and informs us that "it is never accented." The examples given are ale (ala), cadiere (cathedra), &c. M. Lespy does not perceive that the employment or non-employment of an accent on the two final e's dealt with in these two paragraphs is a perfectly conventional matter of mere orthography, and, consequently, possesses no interest. What we wish to know is why, in the one case, the "e final" is "doucement fermé," while in the other it has a sound resembling that of o. This is examined by M. Lespy in paragraphs 25-27. His explanations are complicated and confused to the last degree, and he does not see the true reason, which is that in the second case the e final corresponds to the Latin atonic a, while in the first it has a different origin. This remark, simple as it is, would have enabled him to dispense with the rules and exceptions given in §§ 26 and 27. We must observe that, with regard to many of the examples cited, M. Lespy thinks it necessary to give a number of explanations which, as we have previously remarked, are always misplaced and often wrong. Thus, having cited the Béarnais tele (Lat. tela), he thinks it worth while to say that this word "was written telle in the French of Joinville," which is altogether incorrect. Joinville wrote toile or toille (see M. de Wailly's edition). From these obvious remarks it may be seen how far M. Lespy's work falls short of the level of the linguistic science of our time. Must it be said, then, that it will render no service to the students of the Romance languages? By no means. Students of Romance would be reduced to a very limited number of authorities could they derive no benefit except from grammars fulfilling all the requirements of science, and they will be able to turn M. Lespy's book to good account. But it is still justifiable to say of this second edition what M. Paul Meyer said of the first (Revue Critique, June 2, 1866), that the book before us supplies materials for the establishment of the laws of Béarnais phonetics, but that it does not establish them.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

[ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—(Wednesday, Dec. 22.)

J. W. BONE, Esq., in the Chair.—Mr. Walter de Gray Birch read a paper "On the Roll of the Twelfth Century in the Harleian Collection, British Museum, known as the Guthlac Roll," and exhibited a set of autotype photographs of the subjects therein contained. In the course of the paper, he showed how the Life of St. Guthlac by Felix, in the ninth century, had been taken as affording material for the vignettes in the Roll, with the exception of the concluding picture, which points to Ingulph of Crowland as the authority for its details. Mr. Birch also demonstrated the great probability of the Roll having supplied subjects for painted glass in Crowland Abbey Church.

FINE ART.

History of Painting, Ancient, Early Christian, and Mediaeval. From the German of Woltmann and Woermann. Edited by Prof. Sidney Colvin. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

(First Notice.)

To turn into idiomatic, attractive English the German of a profoundly learned writer is a task requiring accomplishments such as have rarely, if ever, been brought to bear on it in so high a degree as in the present translation. I speak only of that part of the work which refers to classical antiquity, because it is to with it I have now to deal. With no trace of the original German, there is a steady flow of English, gliding agreeably to the thought it conveys unfailingly and without effort. And this perpetual charm is the more to be valued since it is thrown round a subject which hitherto has not received in our language the treatment it deserves.

The plan of the book is to give, first, a history of ancient painting as it is to be made out from the records; and, secondly, a critical examination of its remains. As to the records, it may be said that they have not been put to any new tests; but perhaps little, if anything, would have been gained by such a proceeding. The best-established results have been secured and embodied in a narrative which, at the same time, gains in attractiveness by not ignoring those incidents in the lives of the Greek painters which seldom prove anything beyond the popular favour accorded to this class of artists as compared with contemporary sculptors. In dealing with the remains of ancient painting, there was clearly more scope for originality; and, in regard to the Greek vases, something more might have been done considering the material which German specialists have of late years worked up with the view of determining peculiarities of style in the works of the best-known vase painters, such as Douris, Brygos, Epiktetos. To enter into particulars of this kind might seem, at first sight, to be going too far for a work on the history of painting generally. But, in the end, it would be more profitable to do this than to go through all the usual divisions into periods, the vases of which speak for themselves in a way, and only require detailed descriptions for students who are beginning to study them as a speciality of Greek workmanship.

The book seems to be at its best when it arrives at the mural paintings of Rome and Pompeii; and here attention may be called to the editorial care with which, on p. 119, an account is inserted of the recently found pictures of the Farnesina. What would not Raphael have done—true archaeologist as he was—had he dreamt that these pictures lay buried almost under his feet? The paintings of Pompei are first classed, and then examined on their merits with a judgment which cannot but be approved. To a great extent they are the work of men who perpetuated the debasement of Greek art, and, though everyone is glad to have even that, it is still often enough painful to see their easy-going carelessness. For all that, they were men bred of the old Greek race, and could not help showing it whenever a brush came to their hand. Apart, also, from style, the subjects are full of interest, partly as survivals of old conceptions and partly as illustrations of the search after novelty of design.

Altogether, the early part of this book may be recommended as valuable in substance, and as perfect as could well be in its English form.

A. S. MURRAY.

RECENT ARCHAEOLOGICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Bassingbourne Churchwardens' Book. Part I. Edited by the Rev. B. Hale Wortham. (Cambridge: Rivingtons.) The number of old churchwardens' account-books that have been preserved is much greater than anyone not acquainted with the particular branch of historical study which they illustrate would have imagined. A few have found their way, by a special good fortune, into one or other of our great MS. libraries, but most of them still remain in parish chests at the mercy of the first ignorant churchwarden who shall think fit to have them put aside for the purpose of lighting the vestry fire. One or two only have been printed in full; extracts from several others may be seen in the Archæologia and elsewhere. We gather from the part before us that it is Mr. Wortham's intention to print the whole volume without abridgment. If he does so he will have performed a work for which all real students of Church history will give him thanks. The portion before us consists of an inventory of the church goods made in 1498. When we say that it is not more curious than many others of the same sort we have seen we must not be understood to depreciate its value. The evidence on such matters must be cumulative, or we shall never be in a position to realise the vast riches in precious things of our churches before the Reformation, or the intense interest the people took in their parish churches and the services carried on therein.

Papers of the Manchester Literary Club. Vol. VI. (Manchester: Heywood and Son.) The papers in the present volume are of unequal merit, but as a whole it is not inferior to its predecessors. Those which deal with Lancashire and Cheshire are especially good. Mr. Axon's article, for instance, on the libraries of those shires is in itself an important contribution to knowledge, and is also extremely useful as helping to refute the offensive calumny which one has often heard of late, and which would make us believe that the English working-classes do not care for serious literature. Mr. Nodal's paper on the "Special Collections of Books in Lancashire and Cheshire" is also helpful in the same direction, but it serves a higher purpose, as it furnishes a clue by which students who are anxious to consult one of the way-books may often find their reasonable desires gratified. If we cannot have before us the book we want, the next best thing is to know where we are likely to find it. Mr. Abel Heywood, jun., contributes an article on the almanacs of "The Second Stuart Period," in continuation of a former one which appeared in the third volume. It shows much patient research and no little knowledge of the history of the time, but might have been made much more complete if the writer had found leisure for the examination of the stores of such things which are garnered in the British Museum and Bodleian Libraries. We imagine that Mr. Heywood will continue his account of almanacs down to the modern period. When he has done so we hope he will gather the articles together and give them to the public in the form of a book. Is it too much to ask that he should compile a bibliographical catalogue of printed English almanacs? His account of Poor Robin is the best we have seen—in fact, it is the only one not full of manifest errors. He does not mention, however, that some of the yearly issues contain what the compiler is pleased to call "The Roundheads, 'Fanaticks,' or new account, with their several saints' days." The issue of 1688 is before us, and we have been at some pains in trying to discover what was the reason why certain Puritan names were attached to certain days. The whole thing seems to have been put together in mere wantonness, as not one of the names given has any relation, so far as we can see, to the day against which it stands. The catalogue is, however, of some use, as it shows who among the Puritan leaders remained longest in the popular memory. A student of folk-lore will not be wise if he neglects old almanacs, as popular tales are to be found in them in a condensed form. Early versions of anecdotes which have been confidently attributed to modern notabilities may frequently be come upon therein; for example, the directions for dressing cucumbers, which concludes with the order to "throw them on the dung-hill," has been constantly attributed to Abernethy, but it occurs in "Poor Robin Almanac" in the reign of James the Second. "Charles Dickens and Rochester" is a paper we should scarcely have expected to find here. We think most highly of it. It is written by one who knows Rochester well and who has an accurate acquaintance with the works of the great novelist. Future biographers of Dickens—the present standard Life is by no means final—will find it most useful. Until we had read it we had no idea that Dickens was so much under the influence of local attachment. The articles on "Wit and Humour" and "The Primary Data of Knowledge" are poor—the latter, although it shows great reading, especially so. On the other hand, the "Annals of the English Gipsies under the Tudors," by Mr. Crofton, is a work of sterling merit. He mentions the fact that in 1562 certain of these poor people called themselves Jews. This fact suggests several enquiries. Did these unfortunates profess to be Jews that they might escape the cruel statutes then in force against them, or are we to believe that they really thought themselves to be children of Abraham? One of the theories that have been broached to explain the existence of this singular race is that they are the offspring of German Jews who took to a wandering life for the sake of avoiding persecution. This hypothesis is undoubtedly a mistaken one, but it receives some apparent countenance from the above passage. The writer was probably not aware that the churchwardens' account book of Stratton, in Cornwall, contains an entry which proves that the instance quoted by him was not a solitary example. The churchwardens of Stratton had a house which they let at fair times, and for the rent of which they regularly accounted to the parish. In 1559 the following entry occurs: "Received of Jewes for the church house, ij^s vjd." The word Jewes is not erased, but "Jeptyons" is written above it in a hand of the time. Mr. Rowley's paper on "Fancies and Fashions in Art" gives well-merited castigation to certain recent forms of vulgarity, but he sometimes uses the lash where demerit is not so obvious. Certain Dutch pictures of which he speaks are perhaps not very precious, but they have undoubted merits, of which he seems at present entirely unconscious.

PICTURES IN THE MAGAZINES OF THE UFFIZI.

AMONG the pictures which for so many years have been lost sight of in the magazines of the galleries of the Uffizi at Florence, the best-preserved are four portraits by Sir Peter Lely of beauties of the English Court which were purchased by the Prince Cosmo of Tuscany when he visited London in 1669.

The Prince, before reaching England, corresponded with the Chevalier Bernard Gascoigne as to the purchase of specimens of English works of art, and the Chevalier applied in the first place to Cooper, the miniature painter, whom he describes as "an admirable artist," but he adds,

"his prices are so extravagant that I do not like to commit myself without further instructions. He asks twenty pounds sterling each, and this price provided a dozen are ordered; if one only, then his price is twenty-five pounds. I have also visited Gibson, a somewhat inferior miniature painter; his works, executed with water-colours on parchment, cost eight pounds each for ten or twelve, or ten pounds for one."

The Prince finally ordered one miniature by Cooper and twelve by Gibson, and when in London he sat to Cooper. Where these miniatures now are is quite uncertain. Gascoigne goes on to say,

"With regard to painters in oil, Lely certainly is a remarkable artist, but his portraits are on a large scale. They would be magnificent with gilt frames in a handsome room, but his price is twenty pounds sterling each. His pictures are held to be not inferior to those of Vandyke."

The portraits by Lely which were chosen were duplicates of others—one of Lady Castlemaine and one of Mrs. Middleton, concerning whose beauty the Prince expresses himself rapturously, and writes, "for Mrs. Middleton's portrait pay the price asked; I should not like to pay less than Lord Ashley." Both these pictures are among those in Florence. The Prince wrote: "I have received Mrs. Middleton's portrait, which, in the absence of the adorable original, is a great comfort to me." Writing from France, the Prince says:—"Nor do I see anything in this Court to be compared to English beauty. As I have talked so much about the beauty of Englishwomen these Frenchmen call me 'un Anglais fiéffé.'" I am unable to find in the correspondence any reference to the other two portraits by Lely, but the following passage referring to miniatures occurs in a letter of Gascoigne's:—"The other two cost four pounds each; one is a little picture of the Duchess of Richmond when fourteen years old, a copy from the original by Cooper; and the other is the wife of Sir Robert Southwell, who visited Florence. She is a beautiful lady in the Italian style." The following letter of a much earlier date, referring to the gift of a picture painted by Holbein to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, may be read with interest:—

"I have received the letter which your Serene Highness addressed to me on the 12th of September, by which I learn that you have a great wish to possess a work of the famous painter of King Henry the Eighth, Hans Holbein. I thank your Serene Highness for having deigned to make this request to me, thus giving me an opportunity of serving you and of showing my affection and respect for you.

"I therefore send you, through Amerigo Salviotti, a painting in the best preservation by the said Holbein, who for the most part only did portraits of life size, but not large pictures. It will be very dear to me if it pleases you to consider it worthy to be placed among your other celebrated pictures. Accept, Serene Highness, this small proof of my regard and respect towards you till I have further and greater occasion of serving you. Praying God to bestow on you every happiness, I am, your Serene Highness's affectionate Servant,

"T. ARUNDELL.

"London, February 1621."

I have copied these letters partly from the collection of the Commendatore Cattani Cavalcante and partly from the national archives. It is difficult to understand the combination of ignorance and carelessness which consigned pictures of historic interest to such complete obscurity. The first letters refer entirely to the purchases of the Prince Cosmo in 1669; the last is without any address, but must have been written to Cosmo II., who died on the 28th of February, 1621. The letter and picture must therefore have reached his successor, Ferdinand II. The writer was Thomas Lord Arundell of Wardour, and Amerigo Salviotti was at that time Tuscan envoy to the English Court.

CHARLES HEATH WILSON.

NEW YEAR'S GIFT BOOKS IN FRANCE.

Paris: December 1880.

Every year at this date I send you a notice of the principal illustrated books brought out by our publishers for New Year's Day. I endeavour to sum up in a few words my impressions of these publications in general. The publishers faithfully indicate the direction in which public opinion is moving; and if I could here compare my reflections on previous New Year's Days, the progress made by France since the fall of the Imperial régime in the taste for serious reading and practical instruction would be clearly apparent.

On this occasion, setting aside history, and more particularly geography, which are always in favour, and which are the special province of the important firm of Hachette, I must point out the part assigned to the fine arts by M. A. Quantin, of whom I spoke very recently, à propos of L'Œuvre complet de Rembrandt, described and catalogued by M. Charles Blanc and reproduced complete in facsimile. This publisher issues La Vie et l'Œuvre de J. F. Millet. One of Millet's intimate friends was an amateur of great taste, Alfred Sensier, who was also the friend of Théodore Rousseau, the landscape painter, of whom he has given us an interesting though rhetorical biography. This M. Sensier left at his death a MS. which M. Paul Mantz undertook to correct and complete, and which has become the basis of the present volume. A large number of drawings have been inserted in the text, and some plates have been printed separately. Millet is, I believe, sufficiently known and esteemed in England to induce you to permit me, on some not distant day, to relate in detail the dramatic and laborious life of one of the most powerful masters of the new school.

The rehabilitation of these masters, which the academic school oppressed even to starvation by depriving them of all official commissions and of all publicity in the Reviews and journals read by the higher middle class, is at present gathering fresh strength by all possible means. Thus we meet with works of Feuchère, Corot, and Eugène Delacroix among the forty plates reproduced under the superintendence of M. E. Guichard, entitled Dessins de Décoration des principaux Maîtres (A. Quantin). M. Guichard, a decorative architect, is the late president and virtual founder of the Union Centrale des Beaux-Arts appliqués à l'Industrie, which has fallen into more able but not more devoted hands than his own. The text which accompanies these examples, selected from original and not hitherto reproduced designs by masters of the sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, is edited by M. E. Cheneau, a meritorious critic—who is simultaneously publishing (with Charavay Frères) a little volume of aesthetics and criticism on the last Salon, entitled L'Éducation de l'Artiste.

La Hollande à Vol d'Oiseau (Quantin) is the narrative of a journey accomplished last year by MM. Henry Havard and Maxime Lalanne. The first kept the note-book, and visited the museums, archives, and libraries; while the second held the pen or pencil, and sketched the landscapes, towns, monuments, canals, &c. The book is illustrated with twenty-five separate héliogravures, executed by M. Dujardin, which bear a striking resemblance to etchings au vernis mol. More than one hundred and fifty sketches are scattered through the text in perfect order, M. Havard having made it a rule to write chapters of precisely equal length. It is amusing to look at these illustrations through a magnifying glass. Many details then appear which previously escaped the eye, on account of the reduction to which the originals have necessarily been subjected. M. Maxime Lalanne, whose etchings are well known in England, is a very conscientious and clever designer. In 1867, having been commissioned to superintend the illustration of the Paris-Guide, I entrusted the panoramic views of Paris to Maxime Lalanne; and everyone admired the excellent manner in which he turned to account the small space allotted to his pencil. M. H. Havard's text, though very summary, is very instructive. At the time of our disasters, this author took up his abode in Holland, learned the language, worked among the Dutch archives; and, among numerous other works on the country which have had a great success, he published two years since an Histoire de la Faïence de Delft, which was entirely disposed of in advance of publication. He is a man of culture and refinement. He loves art, and he loves nature. In turning over the leaves of his book, we make the journey with an illustrated guide, and are enabled to take notes on history, geography, manners, monuments, public or private galleries, which will be of great service when we wish to make an actual tour in this singular country, so rich in memories of the past.

By another tour, De Paris à Samarkand, we come to the firm of Hachette. This is a record of the impressions of a Parisian lady, M^{me}. de Ujfalvy-Bourdon, in a journey through Fergahanah, Kuldja, and Western Siberia. Her husband, M. de Ujfalvy, had been charged with a mission by our Ministry of Public Instruction. He met with so gracious a reception, and was furnished with such facilities for his work from the Russian authorities, that the book is dedicated to Gen. Kaufmann, Governor of Turkestan. While his wife noted down with quick wit and intelligence the incidents of the journey, he devoted himself to his studies, and he has brought back photographs, taken from the most picturesque sites and from the types of peoples that have remained without foreign admixture, by the aid of which have been executed the magnificent wood-engravings with which the publishers of the Tour-du-Monde have rendered us familiar. The maps of the provinces traversed by our pair of travellers are most useful.

I understand that M. Eugène Müntz's new book, Raphael: sa Vie, son Œuvre et son Temps (Hachette), will be reviewed at length in the ACADEMY. It only remains for me, therefore, to mention its appearance, and to commend the numerous facsimiles of original drawings which are interspersed in the text. Ingres, and his feeble pupils, by their exclusive and unreasonable worship, finally tired out the public with reference to this master, who more frequently gave indications for his works than executed them with his own hand. This book is an intelligent rehabilitation. It multiplies the reasons for admiring and loving this master, whose soul was so tender, and whose brush so masterly. M. Müntz shows us that he was but a man, like any other mortal. The two chapters on the extremely corrupt Courts of Julius II. and Leo X. are genuine contributions to history.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.
 To-night, ADRIENNE LECOUREUR,
 Comedy in five acts, by Messrs. SCRIBE and LECOUREUR.
 Characters by Messrs. Forbes-Robertson, J. D. Beveridge, Liu Bayne, Brian Dancy, Neville Doane, J. W. Lawrence, J. W. Pinna, &c., and
 G. W. Anson; Mesdames Helen Medford, Winifred Emery, Kate Vane, Blanche Gardner, K. Leeson, Julia Roselle, &c., and Amy Roselle (her first appearance since her recent severe illness).
 To conclude with J. MORTIMER's successful Comedy,
TWO OLD BOYS.
 Doors open at 7.30. Carriages at 11.

DRURY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
 Grand Comic Pantomime, written by E. L. BLANCHARD,
MOTHER GOOSE.
 Music by F. Wallerstein.
 Miss Kate Santley (her first appearance after her severe illness), Misses Ada Blanche, Little Addie Blanche, Emma D'Auban, Agnes Howitt, Carrie Coote, Marien D'Auban, Ibrahim, Le Vero, Prager, Ridgway, Hagarth, Howard, Farquhar, and Louisa Payau; Messrs. Arthur Roberts, John D'Auban, James Fawn, Mark Kinghorn, Charles Ross, Frank Wyatt, John Hildy, W. Waite, Storey, Culen, Abrahams, Bradford, and the celebrated Julian Girard.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
 To-night, at 7.30, THE LIGHTS OF LONDON.
 At 8.15, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CRUST.
 Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D.
 Ward; Misses Lillian Cavalier, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
 At 10.15, a new and original Comedy, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE LIGHT FANTASY.
 Mr. SAMUEL SLITHERY, of the Hall of Terpsichore, Old Kent-road—
 Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
 Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. ALEX. HENDERSON.
 Every evening, at 8.30, a new and original Opera Comique, entitled
THE HOUSE OF THE THREE MOONS.
 Composed by LOUIS VAREY, produced under the direction of Mr. H. D.
 FARRIE, with the following company:—Messrs. H. Bracy, Harry Foulton,
 C. Ashford, E. Stepan, Lewins, and F. H. Celli; Mesdames Alice May, Elsie Moore, Davis, and M. Taylor. Conductor, Mr. Miller.
 Preceded, at 7.15, by THE DUTCH METAL.
 NOTICE.—This theatre will be closed THIS EVENING (Christmas Eve).
 Box-office open daily from 11 till 5. Doors open at 8.45. Carriages at 11.
 Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HENRY IRVING.
THE CUP.
THE CORSCAN BROTHERS.
 ALFRED TENNENTSON'S Tragedy, in two acts,
THE CUP.
 Every evening, at 7.45.
 Miss ELLEN TERRY—Mr. IRVING—Mr. TERRISS.
 At 9.30, THE CORSCAN BROTHERS.
 Mr. IRVING as LOUIS and FABIAN DEI FRANCHI.
 Doors open at 7.15. Box-office (Mr. HORST) open from 10 to 5 daily.
 Seats booked by letter or telegram.
 MORNING PERFORMANCES OF THE CORSCAN BROTHERS, TO-DAY
 (SATURDAY), and SATURDAYS, JANUARY 8TH and 15TH, at 2.30.
 Doors open at 2.
 Stage Manager, Mr. H. J. LOVEDAY. Acting Manager, Mr. BRIAN STOKER.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(300 yards from the Angel).
 Proprietor and Manager, Mrs. S. F. BATEMAN.
 Engagement, for a limited term, of Mr. CHARLES WARNER and Mr.
 HERMANN VEZIN.
 To-night, at 8, will be presented SHERIDAN'S Comedy,
THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL.
 With the following cast—
 SIR PETER TEAZLE—Mr. HERMANN VEZIN.
 CHARLES SURFACE—Mr. CHARLES WARNER.
 JOSEPH SURFACE—Mr. E. H. BROOKE.
 LADY TEAZLE—Miss VERA F. BATEMAN.
 Crabtree—Mr. William Farrer; Sir Oliver—Mr. Edmund Lyons; Sir Benjamin—Mr. H. Duckstone; Moses—Mr. A. Wood; Trip—Mr. Walter Brooks; Careless—Mr. Wheatcroft.
 Lady Sneerwell—Miss M. Bell; Mrs. Candour—Mrs. W. Sidney; Maria
 —Miss Hilda Hilton.
 The original Prologue written by GARRICK will be spoken.
 Prices from 1d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. No fees.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. DOTY CARTE.
THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.
 A new and original Melodramatic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SELLWYN, every evening.
 Preceded, at 8, by IN THE SULKS.
 By Messrs. FRANK DESPREZ and ALFRED CCELLIER.
 Messrs. G. Grossmith, Richard Temple, William Darrington, F. Thornton, Durward Lely, Geo. Temple; Mesdames Marion Hood, Ellen Shirley, Jessie Bond, Gwynne, Barlow, and Alice Barnett. Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier. The piece produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.
 To-night, an English version of P. GIACOMETTI's great Italian Play, "La Morte Civile," called A NEW TRIAL.
 Mr. COGHAN as CORRAO.
 Preceded by IN HONOUR BOUND.
 Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.
 To-night, at 8, TOM TAYLOR's great romantic Drama,
THE FOUNTAIN OF BLOOD.
 Mr. EDWIN BOOTH as BERTUCCIO, and specially selected company.
 New scenery by Mr. Charles Brooke. New costumes by Mrs. S. May.
 Preceded, at 7, by AN OLD MASTER.
 To conclude with the laughable Farce,
THAT BLISSFUL BABY.
 Stage Manager, Mr. HARRY JACKSON.
 Box-office open daily. Doors open at 6.30, commence at 7.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.
 This evening, at 6.45,
THE SECRET.
 At 7.30,
BOW BELLS.
 To conclude, at 9.30, with DON JUAN JUNIOR.
 Mesdames Kate Lawler, Broun, Rita, Dora Vivian, Crawford, Lavender, Carlin, Ward, and Annie Lawler; Messrs. Righton, Cooper, Kelcey, S. Dallas, and T. P. Haynes. Powerful chorus.

Second Edition, with Maps, price 10s. 6d., pp. 447.
EPIDEMIOLOGY; or, the Cause of Epidemic Disease, of Murrains, of Blight, of Hurricanes, and of Abnormal Atmospheric Vicissitudes. With a History of Epidemic Diseases, and of the Phenomena that accompanied them. By JOHN PARKIN, M.D.
 London: DAVID ROOPE, St. Martin's-place, W.C.

Now ready.
A CATALOGUE of SECOND-HAND
 BOOKS will be sent free to any address.—JAMES FAWN & SON, Booksellers, Bristol.

LITHOGRAPHY.—GOW, BUTTER-
 FIELD, & CO. (late Butterfield & Mason) are prepared to execute
 First-class WORK in FACSIMILES of Oil Paintings and Water-Colours, Book Illustrations, Show-Cards, and Trade Emblems.—Specimens may be seen at their Works, Bowling Green-lane Buildings, Farringdon-road, E.C.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.
 CHIEF OFFICE, 13, THREADNEEDLE STREET;
 BRANCH OFFICE, 59, CHANCERY LANE;
 And at Oxford-street, corner of Vero-street.

Life Assurances of all descriptions.
 Specially low rates for young lives, and for non-participating Policies.
 Prompt settlement of Claims.
 A new and greatly simplified form of Proposal, also the Society's newly revised Prospectus, will be forwarded on application.
 J. G. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.
 Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
 Insurances effected in all parts of the world.
 JOHN J. BROOMEFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.
 Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, an Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.
 The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.
 The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.
 Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
 A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
 1st March, 1880. FRANCIS HAVESCROFT, Manager.

STEPHENS DRAWING INK.

For Architectural Drawing and Artists' use.
Does not require stirring while in use.
 Dries quickly, flows evenly from the pen, and becomes an insoluble colour when dry. Drawings executed with it can be washed without fear of injury. The most delicate Drawing Pens used with this Ink are not impaired by corrosion. On the contrary, instruments left with the ink to dry on them are preserved as with a lacquer.
 Sold in Bottles 6d. and 2s. each.
Can be procured through any Stationer.
 H. C. STEPHENS, 191, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
 The original, best, and most liberal.
 Cash prices.
 No extra charge for time given.
 Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
 F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21,
 Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.
 Bed-room Suites, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas.
 Drawing-room Suites, from £9 10s. to 45 guineas.
 Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.
 And all other goods in great variety.
 F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21,
 Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

"THREE CASTLES."

"THREE CASTLES" TOBACCO.
 "There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better Brand than the 'THREE CASTLES.'"—See "The Virginians." Only in Packets and Cigarettes, protected by the Name and Trade Mark.
 W. D. & H. O. WILLS.

FRY'S Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.
COCOA "If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."
Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.
 "It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."
 W. W. STODART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.
 "Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."
 CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.
EXTRACT Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
 A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.
J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

YATES & ALEXANDER,

PRINTERS OF
Books, Pamphlets, Magazines, Newspapers, and Periodicals.
Catalogues, Posters, Price Currents, Circulars,
Notices, and all General Commercial Work.
Parliamentary, Law, and General Printing.

Contracts entered into with Public Companies,
Bankers, Insurance Offices, Auctioneers,
Manufacturers, Merchants and Traders, &c.

PRINTING WORKS:
 LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE (OPPOSITE THE CHANCERY LANE POST-OFFICE).

BRAND & CO'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache,
Gout, and Indigestion.
 And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
 Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
 Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
 Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
 Thoroughly reverts the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A fluid combination for Drenagement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion, by gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, crowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones.
 Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S

SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,

186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their books. There are 500 Bookstalls available for this purpose. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or 186, Strand, London.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS, OR 186, STRAND—

		6 Months.	12 Months.
		£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time	(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 12 0	1 1 0
For Two Volumes	(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 17 6	1 11 6
For Four	"	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight	"	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen	"	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

For One Volume at a time	(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 12 0	1 1 0
For Two Volumes	(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)	0 17 6	1 11 6
For Three	"	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four	"	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six	"	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve	"	3 0 0	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c.

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time	5 5 0	9 9 0
For Thirty-six	8 0 0	14 2 6
For Forty-eight	10 10 0	18 16 0
For Sixty	13 0 0	23 9 0
For Seventy-two	15 10 0	28 2 0
For Eighty-four	18 0 0	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

TERMS FOR SPECIAL TRAVELLING SUBSCRIPTIONS, Lists of Books in circulation, or any other information can be obtained at any of the Railway Bookstalls, or at 186, Strand, London.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 453.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 8, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

PUBLISHED MONTHLY, PRICE HALF-A-CROWN.

THE PORTFOLIO:

AN ARTISTIC PERIODICAL.

Edited by P. G. HAMERTON, Esq.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE YEAR 1881.

LARGE PAPER EDITION.—In accordance with the wish of some of our Subscribers, it has been determined to issue in future a Large Paper Edition of THE PORTFOLIO, with Proofs of the Etchings printed on Japanese paper. The Edition will be limited to Fifty copies, and the Subscription will be £10 per annum. The Monthly Numbers of this Edition will not be sold separately.

MORE LETTERPRESS.—An important improvement for the year 1881 will be the increase in the quantity of text, which will be augmented by one-third without any change of price.

LANCASHIRE.—We have made arrangements for the publication of a Series of Papers on Lancashire by Mr. LEO GRINDON, of Manchester, to be illustrated by Mr. JACOB HOOD, Mr. WYLLIE, Mr. KENT THOMAS, and other Artists. The county of Lancaster offers material of very various kinds and of great interest, and the Illustrations will comprise both Landscape and Figure Etchings. Mr. Grindon is most intimately acquainted with his subject.

The Illustrations of Lancashire will include:

SHIPPING on the MERSEY.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS in MANCHESTER, LIVERPOOL, and other important Towns.

FIGURE SUBJECTS from the DOCKS, FACTORIES, MINES, CANALS, &c.

ANCIENT BUILDINGS.

HALLS, CHURCHES.

SCENERY, LAKES, RIVERS, and MOUNTAINS.

ORIGINAL ETCHINGS.—One of the purposes of THE PORTFOLIO, at its foundation, was to encourage original Etching; and yet it has so happened that we have been led, by the force of circumstances, more in the direction of Etching from Pictures than we at first intended. We have been making efforts of late to arrange with many of the best living Artists for original work, and we hope that THE PORTFOLIO will represent original English Etching at its best, without entirely neglecting the continued production of the Continent.

DECORATION.—The increased attention given to Decorative Art of various kinds during the last few years leads us to suppose that, if THE PORTFOLIO illustrated it, the change might be agreeable to many Subscribers. Professor CHURCH, of the Royal Academy, who possesses a valuable and very carefully chosen Collection of Asiatic and European Embroidery, has promised to write for us on the subject, and to permit the reproduction of a selection from his specimens. The same learned Professor will also allow us to publish the substance of his Lectures at the Royal Academy on "The Material Constitution of Pictures, and their Preservation."

AMAZONS.—Professor COLVIN has promised some "Studies on the Amazons," which will be illustrated.

HOLBEIN.—Mr. F. G. STEPHENS has also promised to contribute Articles on HOLBEIN, and on other subjects. Our Literary force, this year, will be strengthened by the accession of Mr. FREDERICK WEDMORE.

Mr. WATTS, R.A., and Mrs. ALLINGHAM have kindly promised to contribute to our Illustrations; and Mr. ERNEST GEORGE has promised original Etchings of Architectural subjects.

Mr. HERKOMER, A.R.A., has promised to contribute an important Etching.

Mr. ROBERT MACBETH, Mr. LUMSDEN PROPERT, Mr. CHATTOCK, and Mr. C. F. SLOCOMBE have promised Etchings. We are making arrangements with other distinguished original Etchers.

It is also our intention to increase the number of Illustrations in the text.

ETCHINGS BY THE GREAT MASTERS.—The wonderful reproductions of Etchings and Engravings by the Great Masters, executed in heliogravure, by M. AMAND DURAND, having been very favourably received by our Subscribers, they will appear more frequently than of late.

SHIPPING.—The Editor will contribute a few Papers on "The Picturesque Aspects of Shipping," with Illustrations of two classes—one, in outline, showing construction; the other, in light and shade, showing pictorial effect.

PROOFS OF THE PORTFOLIO ETCHINGS.

BESIDES THE LARGE PAPER EDITION OF "THE PORTFOLIO,"

ONE HUNDRED ARTISTS' PROOFS

OF EACH PLATE ARE PRINTED ON JAPANESE PAPER, AND SOLD SEPARATELY.

A Price List of nearly Two Hundred Etchings may be had on application. Some of the Proofs have become scarce, and have risen considerably in value.

THE PORTFOLIO VOLUMES.

THE PORTFOLIO was commenced in 1870. All the Volumes from 1870 to 1880 are in print, and may be had in cloth, 35s.; half-morocco, 42s.

LONDON: SEELEY, JACKSON, & HALLIDAY, 54, FLEET STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

WARREN'S THE TEMPLE OF THE TOMB, by Dr. A. B. McGRIOUR	19
SWINDURNE'S STUDIES IN SONG, by Prof. E. DOWDEN	20
HENDERSON'S NOTES ON THE FOLK-LORE OF THE NORTHERN COUNTIES, by E. PEACOCK	21
OLIPHANT'S LAND OF GILEAD, by W. SIMPSON	22
NEW NOVELS, by Mrs. LANG	23
RECENT VERSE	24
NOTES AND NEWS	25
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	26
GEORGE ELIOT	27
SELECTED BOOKS	29

CORRESPONDENCE:—

The Roman Inscription discovered at Broughby-Stanemore, by W. Thompson Watkin; Mr. Gurney's "Power of Sound," by R. H. M. Bosanquet; Spelling Reform, by H. Nicol 29-30

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	30
ALLEN'S HISTORY OF NORTH AMERICAN PINNIPEDS, by Prof. P. M. DUNCAN	30
NOTES OF TRAVEL	31
SCIENCE NOTES	31
REISS AND STÜBEL'S PERUVIAN ANTIQUITIES, by CLEMENTS R. MARKHAM	31
ART BOOKS	32
THE OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY, I., by COSMO MONCKHOUSE	33
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	34
MR. TENNISON'S NEW PLAY, by FREDK. WEDMORE	34
SHAKSPEARE AT MEININGEN	36
STAGE NOTES	36

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

THE LENT TERM begins on TUESDAY, JANUARY 11TH. New Students will be admitted on Monday, the 10th, from 11 A.M. to 4 P.M. Candidates must not be under fourteen years of age, and those under sixteen will be required to present themselves on Tuesday, the 11th, at 10.30 A.M., for Examination in English, Arithmetic, and the Elements of Latin. The Courses of Study are adapted to the requirements of Candidates for the Arts and Science Degrees of the University of London. The Junior Classical Classes will commence after Christmas to read the Books set for Matriculation in June, 1881. J. HOLME NICHOLSON, Registrar.

A BINGDON SCHOOL, Berks.—The new buildings give further accommodation. BOYS are prepared in modern subjects as well as for the Universities, where the School has valuable Scholarships. TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS are now open to Boys entering in January. A Scholar's total expenses average £35 per annum. Apply to Rev. E. SUMMERS, Head Master.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

THE NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 25TH JANUARY, 1881. F. W. MADDEN, M.R.A.S., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS. — WARBERRY HOUSE, Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from £50 to £100 Guineas.

MRS. W. DINZEY BURTON receives as BOARDERS YOUNG GENTLEMEN, Students from India, the Colonies, or the Provinces, who require a Home in Town while preparing for professional or public life. High-class references. Terms on application. —39, Amphill-square, N.W.

A LADY offers a pleasant HOME to one or two YOUNG LADIES, to share most educational advantages with two others. Highest references exchanged.—Address Miss MOLEY, Combe Down, Bath.

ROYAL ARTILLERY. — Rev. C. B. DRAKE, M.A., is able to OFFER to CANDIDATES for WOOLWICH the special advantages of Residence at Cambridge. Home life. Numbers strictly limited.—Address, 12, Queen Anne-terrace.

SAINT PAUL'S SCHOOL. — About TWELVE SCHOLARSHIPS will be awarded next Term.—For information, address CLERK TO GOVERNORS, Mercers' Hall, E.C.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

WINTER EXHIBITION.
THE GROSVENOR GALLERY
EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AND
DECORATIVE DESIGNS, BY LIVING ARTISTS,
NOW OPEN DAILY, 10 to 6.
Admission, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

THE SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION, including a Loan Collection of Works by the late George Dodgson, is NOW OPEN, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 5. ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.

WINTER EXHIBITION, NOW OPEN, from 10 to 5 daily, at the SUFFOLK STREET GALLERIES, PALL MALL EAST. Admission 1s. THOS. ROBERTS, Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—The

Exhibition of Works by the Old Masters, and by Deceased Masters of the British School, including a Collection of Drawings by John Flaxman, R.A., is now open. Open from 9 till 6. One Shilling. Catalogues sixpence or Bound in Cloth, with pencil, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings and other learned Societies.

MR. MORGAN gives LESSONS in SHORTHAND, FRENCH, ENGLISH, &c., at Pupil's Residence, or at 293, Victoria Park-road, South Hackney. Reasonable terms.

BIRKET FOSTER'S NEW ETCHING.—

MESSRS. DOWDESWELL have pleasure in announcing the publication of "THE WANERING MINSTREL." A Proof may be seen at their GALLERIES, 133, NEW BOND STREET, and 35, CHANCERY LANE.—Particulars on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies. Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

The Woodbury Process is utilized for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection, and is a cheap method of illustration where quantities are required.

For Terms and Specimens apply to the Manager. AUTOTYPE is especially adapted for REPRODUCTION OF WORKS of ART, possessing a wide range of monochrome expression, and reproducing with fidelity the Artist's touch.

JUST PUBLISHED on India, two sizes, 42s. and 51s., "Come unto these Yellow Sands," after the painting by Walter Field, Esq., exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1878, and the Paris Universal Exhibition, 1879. This fine Autotype combines the merits of an engraving with complete fidelity to the artist's touch, Mr. Field having produced a monochrome expressly for Autotype.

Will be ready in January. Autotype Reproductions of Twelve Drawings and Paintings by P. G. Hamerton, Esq.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY Displays a noble Collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and many interesting examples of MODERN ART. To adorn a Home with permanent Photographic Masterpieces, examples of the greatest Masters, old and new, may be seen, by a visit to the AUTOTYPE GALLERY, to be a matter of trifling cost. Admission free.

Catalogue of the Company's Publications, 138 pages, sixpence, free by post. Gratis to Purchasers.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

ETCHINGS.—AMATEURS who would like to CONTRIBUTE occasionally to a MONTHLY PUBLICATION of AMATEUR ETCHINGS are invited to communicate with Mr. W. H. MAY, Dorset-road, Merton, S.W.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JANUARY

contains:—Mr. Pepys the Musician, by Dr. Hueffer—The Father of the Symphony—The Great Composers: Schubert—Musical Changes, by H. C. Lunn—The Leeds Festival Surplus—Crystal Palace, Monday Popular, and Brighton Aquarium Concerts—Reviews—Occasional Notes—Foreign and Country News—Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JANUARY

contains:—"The Watchword"—A New Part-Song, by CHAS. FINSTON. Price, separately, 1½d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq. This Library contains 90,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £6; Life Membership, £20.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application. ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

TO PROPRIETORS of NEWSPAPERS

AND PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, Brief the Week's News, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities now offered for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PERFECT PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether Illustrated or Plain. Estimates furnished to Projectors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

LITHOGRAPHY.—GOW, BUTTER-

FIELD, & CO. (late Butterfield & Mason) are prepared to execute First-class WORK in FACSIMILES of Paintings and Water-Colours, Book Illustrations, Show-Cards, and Trade Emblems.—Specimens may be seen at their Works, Bowling Green-lane Buildings, Farringdon-road, E.C.

THE SOUTH KENSINGTON

DRAWING-BOOKS.

SANCTIONED by the COMMITTEE of COUNCIL OR EDUCATION.

PRODUCED under the SUPERINTEND-ENCE
of
E. J. POYNTER,
R.A.

The examples have been for the most part selected from the Collection in the SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM. They have been drawn from originals, or casts of originals, and in no case from books or previously published illustrations of any kind. Care has been taken to select objects interesting in themselves and the best specimens of their class, so as to cultivate taste, while they at the same time afford useful and instructive DRAWING LESSONS.

The original Drawings have been made by pupils of the NATIONAL ART TRAINING SCHOOL under Mr. Poynter's superintendence, and he has carefully examined and corrected each Drawing when in progress. Mr. Poynter has also, as far as possible, in the same way revised the Drawings on Wood, both before and after engraving.

NOW READY.

ELEMENTARY Freehand Drawing

(Two Books).

With fine Cartridge Paper to Draw on, price Sixpence each

Book I.—Simple Geometrical Forms

Book II.—Conventionalised Floral and other Forms.

Freehand Drawing,

FIRST GRADE (Six Books).

With fine Cartridge Paper to Draw on, price Sixpence each

Book I.—Simple Objects and Ornament. Flat.

Book II.—Various Objects. Flat.

Book III.—Objects and Architectural Ornament. Flat and Perspective.

Book IV.—Architectural Ornament. Flat.

Book V.—Objects of Glass and Earthen ware. Perspective.

Book VI.—Common Objects Perspective.

Freehand Drawing,

SECOND GRADE (Four Books).

With fine Cartridge Paper to Draw on, price One Shilling each.

Book I.—Various Forms of Anthemion Ornament, &c. Flat.

Book II.—Greek, Roman, and Venetian. Flat and Perspective.

Book III.—Italian Renaissance. Flat.

Book IV.—Roman, Italian, Japanese, &c. Flat and Perspective.

. PROSPECTUS, giving full details of the Contents of each book, will be sent post-free on application, and Specimen Numbers on receipt of Published Price.

London: BLACKIE & SON, 49 and 50, Old Bailey.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.

One of the most acceptable New Year's Gifts to all Readers of good Books is A SUBSCRIPTION TO MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM

Secures a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

TWO GUINEAS PER ANNUM

Secures a Free Weekly Exchange of Books in every part of London.

BOXES AND PARCELS OF THE NEWEST BOOKS

Are forwarded Daily to Subscribers in every part of the Country.

Prospectuses postage free on application.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), New Oxford Street.

CITY OFFICE: 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

BOXES of BOOKS, containing the NEWEST WORKS in all departments of ENGLISH and FOREIGN LITERATURE, together with VOLUMES of MUSIC, are regularly despatched to Subscribers in the Country.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS visiting London will find in the GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY the advantage of a First-rate CLUB. The READING and WRITING ROOMS, the REFERENCE LIBRARY, the LUNCHEON and DINING ROOMS, the LADIES' DRAWING-ROOM, and the GENTLEMAN'S SMOKING-ROOM, are open daily, from 9 A.M. till 10 P.M.

Prospectuses, with Terms of Subscription, forwarded post-free on application to

MR. CHARLES ALLEN, Grosvenor Gallery Library, Limited, New Bond-street.

GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY.

HANDSOME BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT of RICHLY ILLUSTRATED ARTISTIC PUBLICATIONS, both ENGLISH and FOREIGN, is now on SALE at the LIBRARY. Also a COMPLETE COLLECTION of the WORKS of STANDARD AUTHORS, handsomely bound in calf and morocco.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY (Limited),
NEW BOND STREET.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

WINTER EXHIBITION.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY
EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AND
DECORATIVE DESIGNS, BY LIVING ARTISTS,
WILL OPEN THIS DAY (SATURDAY), JANUARY 1ST, 1881.

Admission, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

In royal 8vo, 1,600 pp., cloth gilt, price 42s.
The Peerage or Baronetage separate, gilt edges, each 25s.
THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and KNIGHTAGE of the BRITISH EMPIRE for 1881. By JOSEPH POSTER.
The SECOND EDITION, for 1881, containing all new Creations, has been considerably enlarged and carefully corrected throughout. It is illustrated by upwards of 1,400 woodcuts of Arms, &c., engraved in best style of Heraldic Art. In the pedigrees the collateral branches are more fully given than in any other work.

Westminster: NICHOLS & SONS, 25, Parliament-street.

FREE CHURCH SERVICES.

FOR MARRIAGES, BURIALS, BAPTISMS, AND THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Adapted, from the Book of Common Prayer, for Nonconforming Congregations.

Crown 8vo, price 2s.

London: S. BAOSTEE & SONS, 16, Paternoster-row.

NEW YEAR'S GIFT BOOKS.

At all the Principal Booksellers'.

W. SWAN SONNENSCHN & ALLEN.

ASGARD and the GODS. Tales and Traditions of our Northern Ancestors, told for Boys and Girls. Edited by W. S. W. ARSON. Numerous new Illustrations. Rich cloth gilt, gilt edges, extra demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"Of all the books of the season, this is that which combines in the most satisfactory manner amusement and instruction. . . . The perusal of these Norse legends will give real pleasure."—Standard. "Possesses all the charm of freshness and originality. . . . Is sure to become a great favourite."—Court Journal. "A delightful book for young and old, written in a bright and picturesque manner."—Churchman. "An excellent book, and deserves to be thankfully received, forming a handsome volume for presentation. . . . All being skillfully arranged and described in language poetic but clear."—Notes and Queries. "We can thoroughly commend this handsome volume. . . . The illustrations are simply perfect."—Globe.

GLIMPSSES of BIRD LIFE, Portrayed with Pen and Pencil. By J. E. HARTING and L. P. ROBERT. Double fcap. folio, with Twenty Full-Page Chromo-lithographic Plates, in the highest style of Parisian Art, and numerous Woodcuts, rich cloth, extra gilt, gilt edges, 42s.

"Mr. Robert has been very happy, and has managed to infuse a good deal of character into his portraits. . . . His chaffinch warbling its sprightly song from the budding spray is a particularly vigorous and life-like drawing."—Times. "We hail with satisfaction the advent of an artist who can produce such good work. . . . Far in advance upon anything of the kind hitherto produced in England."—Zoologist.

DRIFTING. By T. Buchanan Read. Illustrated from Designs by L. B. Humphrey. Square, rich cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

"Remarkable for its beautiful cover in black, gold, and silver. The illustrative designs are distinguished by good taste, genuine feeling for the pathos of the text and of nature, and skill in drawing."—Athenaeum. "A gem for this season. . . . The sketches thoroughly harmonise with the spirit of this beautiful poem."—Publishers' Weekly.

FOR CHILDREN'S ACTING.

ALICE, and other FAIRY PLAYS for CHILDREN. By KATE FRILLIGRATH-KROEGER. Second Edition. Including a Dramatised Version (under sanction) of Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland" and "Thro' the Looking-glass." With Original Plates and Picture Initials, by Mary Sibree. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 4s. 6d.

"Have stood a practical ordeal, and stood it triumphantly."—Times. "A perfect success."—Illustrated London News. "A charming volume for Christmas parties."—Schoolmaster.

A NEW HANS ANDERSEN.

RICHARD GUSTAFSSON'S POPULAR STORIES.

"It is well that so charming a raconteur should at least have found welcome in England. Indeed, we could ill have spared these tales. Those children with whom Andersen finds favour will assuredly like Gustafsson too; for in manner as in matter he strongly resembles that author. . . . It is their freshness, their poetry, their delicacy that gives them value. . . . In addition to being tastefully bound, the volumes contain many excellent illustrations. Evidently the publishers have spared no effort to make the books attractive."—Academy. "Very admirable stories."—Times.

1. CHIT-CHAT by PUCK: Tea-Time Tales for Young Little Folks and Young Old Folks. By R. GUSTAFSSON. Second Edition. With Twenty-nine charming illustrations. 2s. 6d.

2. ROSELEAVES: being a Second Series of Tea-Time Tales for Young Little Folks and Young Old Folks. Second Edition. With Twenty-three illustrations. 2s. 6d.

"The same fertile fancy, the same gentle humour, the same delicacy and originality."—Teacher.

3. WOODLAND NOTES: being a Third Series of Tea-Time Tales for Young Little Folks and Young Old Folks. With Nineteen illustrations. 3s. 6d.

GRANDMAMA'S RECOLLECTIONS. By GRANDMAMA PARKER. Numerous original Woodcuts. Cloth extra gilt, gilt edges, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"A wide popularity may be predicted."—Post. "Are well adapted to youthful capacities; the moral is never unduly forced."—Times.

A WINTER NOSEGAY: being Stories for Children all the Year Round. With numerous beautifully executed Coloured Plates and Woodcuts. 4to, cloth extra, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

FAMOUS GIRLS who have become ILLUSTRIOUS WOMEN of OUR TIME. By J. M. DARTON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

BRAVE BOYS who have become ILLUSTRIOUS MEN of OUR TIME. By J. M. DARTON. New Edition, with Illustrations by Harrison Weir. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

THE HEROISM of CHRISTIAN WOMEN of OUR TIME. By J. M. DARTON. With Portraits, Illustrations, and Illuminated Title. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

LONDON: W. SWAN SONNENSCHN & ALLEN,
PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S

NEW WORKS.

KITH AND KIN:

A NEW NOVEL,

By the popular Author of "The First Violin" and "Probation," is commenced in the JANUARY NUMBER of

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE,

In which Number is also commenced

THE FRERES:

A NEW NOVEL,

By Mrs. ALEXANDER, Author of "The Wooing o't."

Now ready at all Booksellers', price 1s.

"One can never help enjoying Temple Bar,"—Guardian.

THE INGOLDSBY LYRICS. By the Rev. RICHARD HARRIS BARRAM, Author of "The Ingoldsby Legends." Edited by his Son, the Rev. R. DALTON BARRAM. In crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

UNKNOWN HUNGARY. By

VICTOR TISSOT. Translated by Mrs. OSWALD BRODIE. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

ACROSS PATAGONIA. By

LADY FLORENCE DIXIE. With Illustrations by Julius Boerboom, engraved by Whymper and Pearson. In demy 8vo, 15s.

"A very delightful book."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"Lady Florence Dixie has given the public a book which is not only amusing, but really valuable as a contribution to geographical knowledge, and ought to be read by everybody."—Morning Post.

ROUND ABOUT NORWAY. By

CHARLES W. WOOD, Author of "Through Holland," &c. In demy 8vo, with numerous illustrations, 12s.

THE CORAL LANDS of the PACIFIC:

being an Account of nearly all the Inhabited Islands of the Pacific, their Peoples, and their Products. By H. STONEWELL COOPER. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with illustrations, 28s.

"For completeness as a tableau of the scenery and resources, the life, manners, and customs of these islands, Mr. Cooper's work is perhaps without a rival. . . . His chapters are written in a lively style."—Daily News.

A LADY'S TOUR in CORSICA.

By GERTRUDE FORDE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

PAST HOURS. By the late Mrs.

SARTORIS (Adelaide Kemble). Edited, and with a Preface, by her Daughter, Mrs. GORDON. In 2 vols., post 8vo, price 12s.

THE LIFE of the REV. RICHARD

HARRIS BARRAM, Author of "The Ingoldsby Legends." A new Edition, revised and rewritten by his Son, the Rev. R. DALTON BARRAM. In crown 8vo, 6s.

DEAN HOOK: his Life and Letters.

The New and Popular Edition, in crown 8vo, with Index and a New Portrait, price 6s. Edited by the Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.

THE TEMPLE or the TOMB. By

CHARLES WARREN, Author of "Underground Jerusalem." In demy 8vo, with illustrations, 10s. 6d.

TENT WORK in PALESTINE.

By Lieut. CLAUDE R. CONDER, R.E. Popular Edition, Crown 8vo, with illustrations, price 7s. 6d.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,

NEW BURLINGTON STREET,

Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co.'s List.

NEW BOOKS ON IRELAND.

NEW VIEWS on IRELAND; or, Irish

Land Grievances and Remedies. By CHARLES RUSSELL, Q.C., M.P. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"It is impossible not to recognise in his volume the candid and moderate tone of a writer who, in giving expression to his opinions and convictions, desires to view the subject from a calm and judicial standpoint."—Morning Post.

THE LIFE'S WORK in IRELAND of a

LANDLORD who TRIED to DO his DUTY. By W. BENGE JONES, of Lisselan. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE IRISH LAND LAWS. By Alexander

G. RICHEY, Q.C., LL.D., Deputy Registrar Professor of Fendal and English Law in the University of Dublin. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"We can recommend this little book to all who speak, write, or seriously think upon this question, in or out of Parliament."—Times.
"This book cannot fail to do good."—St. James's Gazette.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROMOTION OF HELLENIC STUDIES.

Now ready, price 30s. to those who are not Members of the Society, Parts I. and II., constituting Vol. I. of the JOURNAL of HELLENIC STUDIES.

8vo, with 4to Atlas of Illustrations.

CONTENTS:—Hellenic Studies: an Introductory Address. C. T. Newton—Delos. R. C. Jebb—Newly Discovered Sites near Smyrna. W. M. Ramsay—Notes from Journeys in the Troad and Lydia. A. H. Sayce—Stephani on the Tombs at Mycenae. Percy Gardner—On Representations of Centaurs in Greek Vase-Painting. Sidney Colvin—Pythagoras of Ithaca and the Early Athlete Statues. Charles Waldstein—An Archæological Vase, with Representation of a Marriage Procession. Cecil Smith—The Pentathlon of the Greeks. Percy Gardner—The Erechtheum. A. S. Murray—The Oracle Inscriptions discovered at Dodona. E. S. Roberts—On Some Pamphylian Inscriptions. W. M. Ramsay, with a Note by A. H. Sayce—On Some Ionic Elements in Attic Tragedy. A. W. Verrill—A Runic Ballad. W. M. Ramsay—Bernay's Lucian and the Cynics. I. Bywater—A Bio-Bibliographical Note on Coray. I. Bywater—Medieval Rhodian Love Poems. H. F. Tozer—Rules of the Society—List of Officers and Members.

The Journal will be sold at a reduced price to Libraries wishing to subscribe, but official application must in each case be made to the Council. Information on this point, and upon the conditions of Membership, may be obtained on application to the Hon. Secretary, Mr. GEORGE MACMILLAN, 29, Bedford-street, Covent-garden.

LIFE of WILLIAM BLAKE. With

Selections from his Poems and other Writings. Illustrated from Blake's own Works. By ALEXANDER GILCHRIST. A New and Enlarged Edition, with Additional Letters and a Memoir of the Author. Printed on hand-made paper, the illustrations on India paper, and mounted in the Text. 2 vols., cloth gilt, with Designs by Frederick J. Shields after Blake, medium 8vo, £2 2s.

"One of the most beautiful and interesting books of the season."—Daily News.

THE YEAR'S ART: a Concise Epitome of all Matters relating to the Arts of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture which have occurred during the Year 1880, together with Information respecting the Events of the Year 1881. Compiled by MARCUS B. FLUISH, LL.B. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

GILBERT WHITE'S NATURAL HIS-

TORY and ANTIQUITIES of SELBORNE. New Edition. Edited, with Notes and Memoir, by FRANK BUCKLAND; a Chapter on Antiquities by LORD SELBORNE. With Illustrations by Professor Delamotte. Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ENGLISH POETS. Selections, with Critical

Introductions, by various Writers, and a General Introduction by MATTHEW ARNOLD. Edited by T. H. WARD, M.A. In 4 vols., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

Vol. I. CHAUCER to DONNE. Vol. II. BEN JONSON to DRYDEN. Vol. III. ADDISON to BLAKE. Vol. IV. WORDSWORTH to SYDNEY DOBELL.

"An excellent design admirably executed."—Pall Mall Gazette.

GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES. NEW VOLUME.

ESSAYS of JOSEPH ADDISON. Chosen and Edited by JOHN RICHARD GREEN, M.A., LL.D. 4s. 6d.

A DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSI-

CIANS (A.D. 1450–1878). By Eminent Writers, English and Foreign. With Illustrations and Woodcuts. Edited by GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L. In 3 vols., 8vo, Parts I. to XII., 3s. 6d. each. Vols. I. and II., cloth, 21s. each.

Vol. I. A to IMPROMPTU. Vol. II. IMPROPERIA to PLAIN SONG.

"Dr. Grove's Dictionary will be a boon to every intelligent lover of music."—Saturday Review.

ENGLISH MEN of LETTERS. Edited by JOHN MORLEY. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. New Volume. WORDSWORTH. By F. W. H. MYERS.

"Mr. Myers has given us an adequate Life such as only one in tune with the subject could give. His chapter on the natural theology of Wordsworth is excellent."—Graphic.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 255. JANUARY. Price 1s.

- CONTENTS.
1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Jun. Chapters XV.—XVIII.
 2. A STUDY of an OLD PARISH REGISTER. By the Rev. W. BENHAM.
 3. THE MISTLETOE.
 4. "SUBSCRIPTION." By the DEAN of WESTMINSTER.
 5. A ROYAL ZULU PROGRESS OVER BISHOPSTOWE. By FRANCES ELLEN COLEMAN.
 6. CHRISTMAS, and ANCESTOR WORSHIP, in the BLACK MOUNTAIN. By ARTHUR J. EVANS.
 7. MOSES'S TALE. By E. H. HICKEY.
 8. MR. TENNISON'S NEW VOLUME. By SIDNEY COLVIN.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S

NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth extra, 18s.

PROFESSOR SAYCE'S EDITION

OF

GEORGE SMITH'S

THE CHALDEAN ACCOUNT OF GENESIS.

Revised and Corrected.

Now ready, crown 8vo, price 6s.

THE CONFESSIONS of a FRIVOLOUS GIRL:

A Story of Fashionable Life.

Edited by ROBERT GRANT.

Will be ready early in January.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, price 21s.

THROUGH AMERICA; Or, Nine Months in the United States.

By W. G. MARSHALL, M.A.

This work will be embellished with nearly One Hundred Woodcuts of views of Utah country, and the famous Yosemite Valley, the giant trees, New York, Niagara, San Francisco, &c.; and will contain a full account of Mormon Life, as noted by the Author during his visits to Salt Lake City in 1878 and 1879.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FOR JANUARY.

Now ready, price 1s. 6d.

MEN OF MARK

FOR JANUARY.

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.

THE GREAT HISTORIC GALLERIES

FOR JANUARY.

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.

THE ETCHER

FOR JANUARY.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW

FOR JANUARY.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

DECORATION

FOR JANUARY.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

M. Eugène Müntz is a young scholar, gifted with a prodigious memory, hard-working and modest, and he worthily occupies the position of librarian at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts.

I may mention, but only mention—because these volumes, in spite of their charming vignettes by MM. Delort, Gilbert, and Toffani, belong more especially to the domain of literature—four octavo volumes of stories for young people, L'Ami François, by M. Ch. Deslys; Grand-père, by M. J. Girardin; Feu de Paille, by M^{me}. Colomb; and Pendragon, by M. A. Assollant. Pendragon is a Gaul, but a Gaul from the banks of the Garonne—that is to say, one whose truthfulness equals his courage, and who follows Alexander the Great to the banks of the Tigris and the Euphrates through a hundred heroic adventures. The author, M. Assollant, is a very original writer.

We have only to recal, à propos of the third volume of the Histoire des Romains by M. Victor Duruy, the commendation we have already twice bestowed on the text and the illustrations of this great work. Archaeology and numismatics lend the most valuable support to the researches of history. Happy is the rising generation! Equal assistance is offered to their intelligence and pleasure to their eyes in reading the instructive and chivalrous pages of Froissart's Chronicles. The text has been revised, page by page, by M^{me}. de Witt, née Guizot, who has cut out all repetitions and all useless superfluities, and has assimilated to modern French the text, somewhat difficult to explain, of old Jehan Froissart, "native of the good, fair, and pleasant city of Valenciennes." This work is, moreover, almost as interesting to you English as to ourselves. It contains maps, engravings from contemporary MSS., and a very piquant addition to the attractions of the volume—eleven compositions and twelve initial letters executed in chromo-lithography, and so reproducing with all possible fidelity the colours and the golds of the original MSS. of the fourteenth and sixteenth centuries preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale and at the Arsenal. The collection of seals in the National Archives has furnished many documents of incontestable authenticity.

The firm of Charles Delagrave has given powerful aid to the Republican movement—that is to say, the regeneration of France by public instruction. Everything relating to infant schools, to primary, secondary, and higher education, to geography, agriculture, to military publications, to instruction in drawing, has been published by them, whether in remarkably cheap forms or, on the contrary, in that state of perfection required from models of their kind. To their publications on the sciences they have added a journal similar to your English publications, Le Saint-Nicolas. St. Nicholas, as you are aware, is the patron of Catholic boys, as Catherine is the patroness of the girls. This periodical appears on Thursday, and is very well adapted to the needs of its young subscribers. To beardless readers and laughing-lipped little maidens are also addressed Le Chat de la Mère Michel, Les Contes de Tante Nicole, and the journal of an inhabitant of the Jura, Trois Mois sous la Neige.

Le Monde vu par les Artistes is the development of an idea which is more ingenious than serious. M. René Ménard has collected all the compositions of our ethnographic painters, and makes use of them to convey notions of the country or the scene represented. For instance, Régamey will have Japan, and Regnault Spain. It is not very solid, but is certainly diverting. I prefer Les grandes Époques de la France depuis les Origines jusqu'à la Révolution. This is a work of historical popularisation, by MM. Hubault and Marguerin, which has been "crowned" by the Académie Française. The illustrations in this new edition are by M. Godefroy Durand.

M. Delagrave is likewise the publisher of a book on Khmer architecture, written, on his return from Cambodia, by M. L. Delaporte, lieutenant in the navy, and containing most singular examples of a monstrous style of architecture, the work of powerful peoples who have left no records.

M. G. Charpentier publishes the second series of Promenades japonaises, by MM. Guimet and Régamey. This volume, which is at least as interesting and well illustrated as its predecessor, bears as its special title Tokio-Nikko. This implies that it records all that is seen and jotted down by an artist and a traveller from the capital to those picturesque mountains where are grouped the most beautiful and most ancient temples of Japan.

At the same time this firm offers to children—to grown-up children rather than to little ones, despite its title—a Théâtre des Marionnettes, by A. Duranty, a novelist and critic whose life was a very hard one, and who died at the beginning of this year. His melancholy reveals itself in the composition of these little dramas, in which Polichinelle and Pierrot are the actors, Polichinelle's wife and the policeman the victims, the stick with which the devil is killed, and the gibbet on which he is hanged, the decorations.

Les Légendes des Bois et Chansons marines are very elegant pieces of verse, written by M. André Lemoine, every page being bordered or decorated with tail-pieces or headings by M. Bellée, one of our most successful landscape-painters at the Salon. Finally, the same house publishes a Légende de Sainte-Odille, with illustrations as fantastic as the text, by M. Courboin, a young designer who made his appearance about a year ago in La Vie Moderne, a journal devoted to sketches by independent artists.

I have often spoken of Alphonse Lemerre, the publisher of the Poets, who has made a fortune by the elegance and care with which he re-issues our classics—Molière, Racine, and the rest. He accompanies his volumes with etched vignettes, of which the cleverest are by M. Pille and the most elaborate by M. Buhot. He gives us, on the occasion of the New Year, a Scarron's Roman comique, and an Illustrated Alphabet.

M. Jouaust is printer and publisher to the Société des Bibliophiles. His editions are charming. I have before me the Diable boiteux of Le Sage, with etchings designed and engraved by M. A. Lalauze. He has likewise just brought out the second volume of the Livre d'Or du Salon de 1880. Fifteen very careful etchings reproduce the pictures which gained the official prizes. M. Georges Lafenestre has accompanied them with judicious remarks, and at the close we find all the documents, including regulations, speeches, &c.

I have now reached the end of my notes. I can only make one general remark—at the present day we have too many engravings. This diverts the attention from the text. We no longer have dramas, but extravaganzas with exaggerated ballets and costumes.

One last word, on behalf of a good and most timely book. M. Eugène Muller publishes with Maurice Dreyfous Le Jour de l'An et les Étrennes. This is a history of the festivals and customs with which, among all peoples and in all times, however remote, the New Year has been celebrated. The text is drawn from the most trustworthy sources which modern scholarship has thrown open to us, and two hundred wood-engravings have been added from authentic documents ancient and modern. M. Eugène Muller finds among the Egyptians, who were Sun-worshippers, the most ancient proofs of the happiness which men felt at entering on a New Year, and of the ritual with which they celebrated this promise of life held out to them by their supreme god. Then follow the Tyrians and the ancient Persians. The Israelites take up an entire chapter, as well as the Greeks and the Romans. In country-places in France there remains to this day a proof of the rejoicings which the Druids offered to the Gauls; the children run about singing, "Au gui l'an neuf!" Christianity changed the order of ideas, and the birth of Jesus Christ was substituted for the new birth of the sun. Your "Noël" or Christmas is the Christian New Year's Day par excellence, and has never ceased to be celebrated in all Northern countries. It is likewise met with in Italy, at Rome and Florence. We cannot summarise the numerous facts accumulated by M. E. Muller, and certain to interest parents when their children are kind enough to lend them the volume; but will only point out, as very curious, New Year's Day in China and Japan, and all the last part of the book, entitled "In France, in Modern Times." It contains some charming pages on toys.

PH. BURTY.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE Society of Arts will award their gold, silver, and bronze medals and certificates of merit for specimens of fine art applied to industry exhibited in 1881 by manufacturers, designers, art workmen, or possessors of such works. The exhibition will be held at the Royal Albert Hall, and will comprise examples of (1) Carving in marble, stone, or wood; (2) Repoussé work in any metal; (3) Hammered work in iron, brass, or copper; (4) Carving in ivory; (5) Chasing in bronze; (6) Etching and engraving on metal—niello work; (7) Enamel painting on copper or gold; (8) Painting and modelling in pottery; (9) Decorative painting; (10) Inlays of wood (marquetry or buhl), ivory, or metal; (11) Cameo-cutting; (12) Engraving on glass; (13) Wall mosaics; (14) Gem-engraving; (15) Die-sinking; (16) Glass-blowing; (17) Bookbinding and leather work; (18) Embroidery.

THE Times records the death of Mr. John Cousen, the landscape engraver, whose works after Turner, Stanfield, &c., are well known. He was in his seventy-seventh year.

HERR ADOLF GUTHRIE, of Dresden, is about to publish, in parts, Rafael-Werk, which aims at giving reproductions of engravings and photographs from all the known works of the master. The explanatory text will be from the pen of Dr. Wilhelm Lübke.

AMONG the works attributed to Germain Pilon, one of the most famous sculptors of the French Renaissance, and now preserved in the Louvre, is a bas-relief in alabaster representing The Agony in the Garden. The execution and style of the design made the accuracy of the attribution incontestable; but whence it came, or for what purpose the relief was designed, remained doubtful. It has now been identified by Mrs. Mark Pattison as originally executed for the church of St.-Etienne-du-Mont, where it was seen by Germain Brice, and mentioned in his Description de Paris:—"C'est un bas-relief en marbre d'une excellente beauté qui représente N. S. en prière au Jardin des Oliviers" (vol. ii., p. 215). M. Courajod, the most competent authority on these matters, who has long been attached to the care of the Musée de la Renaissance, affirms "qu'il n'y avait point de doute sur la justesse de l'identification proposée par Madame Pattison."

AN exhibition of modern decorative and ornamental pictures has been opened at the Musée des Arts décoratifs.

FINE-ART exhibitions will be held at Dunkirk and Tours during the coming year.

It has been decided to hold at Paris decennial retrospective exhibitions of the most remarkable works which have appeared at the Salon. The first will take place in 1881, and they will be so arranged that there will be an interval of five or six years between them and the International Exhibitions, at which there is a display of a similar character.

M. VICTOR HUGO has agreed to be honorary president of the committee for the erection at Nice of a monument to Garibaldi.

THE most interesting article in the Gazette des Beaux-Arts for December is by M. Charles Ephrussi, in which he deduces from a leaf of sketches by Albrecht Dürer in the collection of Mme. Grehl, of Dresden, compared with another leaf of sketches at Berlin (an account of which appeared in the Gazette in 1878), that Dürer took a tour to Switzerland and Alsace in the year 1515. The two leaves appear to belong to the same sketch-book, and from them M. Ephrussi traces Dürer's steps from Nuremberg to Bâle. A further comparison between Holbein's illustrations to Erasmus' Praise of Folly and some sketches by Dürer once in the Esterhazy collection, and now in the Museum at Pesth, tends to prove that the two great artists met at the latter town in this year (1515) and made designs in friendly rivalry for the same texts. The article is illustrated with facsimiles of Dürer's silver-point sketches. The number contains, as an illustration to M. Georges Lafenestre's second article on the art treasures of Chantilly, a fine etching by T. de Mare of the celebrated portrait of Simonetta Vespucci, with naked breast and serpent necklace, formerly in the Reiset collection, and placed by Crowe and Cavalcaselle among the pictures doubtfully ascribed to Botticelli. It is now assigned to A. Pollaiuolo.

THE STAGE.

THACKERAY, whose habit it was to stay in bed to breakfast the morning after Boxing Day in order that he might read the accounts of the pantomimes undisturbed in the privacy of his chamber, would have found the practice unremunerative if he had lived to the present day, for pantomimes are few, and there is small account to be given of them. We explained the other day how it was that they had vanished very much from all west-central theatres except the two great ones, Covent Garden and Drury Lane, and criticism—at all events in a weekly journal like this—is not expected to take note of much that happens in the suburbs. Sometimes, however, at the Gaiety there has been a pantomime; and this year there is what was on the first night described in the bills as a comic drama, but by the third night, when we saw it, it had modestly shrunk to the proportions and the title of a burlesque, so that it is the "sacred flame" that is burning again. And, indeed, it flares up pretty high in The Forty Thieves. Never on the Gaiety stage was there a greater getting together of the elements of successful burlesque; never was Miss Farren more acidulated, or Mr. Terry and Mr. Royce more genially ugly; never was there a brighter blaze of lime-light; never a bigger muster of young women looking fairly well, but with no gifts for anything in particular. For all this, the piece cannot be said to be very charming as a whole, but taking and exhilarating in certain of its details. Certain stage effects, brilliant to the point of gaudiness, certain funny antics—not to speak of songs and snatches of dance—rouse a Christmas audience, and an audience that has dined, to enthusiasm. It does not seem to us that the story of The Forty Thieves is followed with much exactness. Alone among writers of pantomime the veteran Mr. Blanchard has the faculty of being at the same time entertaining and faithful to the legend. Most other writers—and Mr.

Reece here shows that he is among them—are wont to sacrifice fidelity to entertainment. But, indeed, in modern pantomime, a piece is named much on the same principle as the Speaker of the House of Commons. The Speaker does not speak; and a modern pantomime generally avoids the subject which its title would lead one to suppose it treated of. The Speaker fulfils his function nevertheless; and so does the pantomime. It amuses "the humour of our idleness," and pleases the children. It is chiefly very big children, however, who are to be amused at the Gaiety—innocents hailing chiefly from the clubs and from military messes—for whom a sight of Miss Kate Vaughan beginning to dance in an indolent, engaging way, and never quite making up her mind to finish or even to continue, is a Christmas treat; and for whom the apparition of Miss Gilchrist bouncing on the stage like a glorified harlequin is as good a thing in its fashion as is a bran-pie or a Christmas-tree in the proper quarters. Really Miss Gilchrist has improved very much, and is very pleasant to see. She does her insignificant work as earnestly as Miss Farren herself—and a good deal more sedately—and she is dressed exquisitely in the new piece. Exquisitely, it is true, is a big word to use; but she is dressed with a sense, quite rare upon the stage, of what is suited to her colours and lines; and Mr. Whistler, if he were painting her again, would have nothing to alter, because he would find nothing that he could not put into his picture. The square beef-eater hat—black, almost covered with gold—suits wonderfully well the roundish face with its fringe of warm-coloured hair. It is not possible as yet—unless we wish to be very affected—to discuss Miss Gilchrist as an actress. They give her almost nothing to act. One falls to talking of her as one talks of a Vandyke or a Romney. It is a pity that she cannot be bought by Mr. Burton when he comes back from Italy, and so set up in her proper place in the National Gallery—British side.

AND Covent Garden? There those old favourites, the members of the Vokes Family—so numerous a party that to distinguish the one from the others is an effort of the mind, and is exhaustive of the list of Christian names one knows—the members of the Vokes Family appear in renewed glory. Wherever they are, they constitute a pantomime. There is one to look graceful, and another to look funny; there is one to sing, and another to turn himself about as completely as if he were a bébé incassable, and had been brought over with other mechanical toys in a box from Paris. The piece is Valentine and Orson.

AT Drury Lane, Mother Goose is the avowed subject. Miss Kate Santley has a better singing voice than many of the stage heroines of pantomime, and, as she reappears after a long absence, her performance of a leading part may fairly be noted. There is here some good dancing. And, naturally, the scenery and "effects" both here and at Covent Garden are on a scale that cannot be attempted at smaller houses. This is what gives to the two larger theatres their pre-eminence in pantomime—a pre-eminence disputed only at the Gaiety by the enterprise of Mr. Hollingshead, who is not to be outdone.

ONE of those creditable performances of sterling drama which Mrs. Bateman has now made no rare thing at Sadler's Wells took place there on Boxing Night, and has been continued ever since. No more flippant entertainment than The School for Scandal was afforded to the playgoers of Clerkenwell and the New River head, and to those more sober of the West End playgoers who make the pilgrimage to Sadler's Wells. The School for Scandal was carefully and skilfully performed, the earnestness and vivacity of Miss Virginia Bateman serving that young comédienne in excellent stead as Lady Teazle, the long-trained art of Mr. Hermann Vezin coming out in his performance of Sir Peter, and the joyousness and heartiness of Mr. Charles Warner helping him to realise the best side—which is the popular side—of Charles Surface. Mrs. Bateman's announcements for future performances continue to be satisfactory, and there can be no sort of question that she is doing her utmost to bring Sadler's Wells into very high repute again—to make it one of those places which it becomes a social duty to go to.

WE are compelled to postpone any further mention than can be given in a line or two of Mr. Edwin Booth's third part in an English theatre. He played on Monday last, and has since every night repeated, the character of Bertuccio in The Fool's Revenge. This is a part admirably designed for stage effect, and Mr. Booth, whether he moves us or not, is a master of stage effect—of all that an actor can teach himself by thought and experience. The Fool's Revenge, moreover, is a piece written by Mr. Taylor when he was in possession of his fullest strength and freshness as a constructive dramatist; and, when the character of Bertuccio has been well performed—as it was undoubtedly by Mr. Phelps some fifteen years ago, and as it is now again by the American actor—it has never failed to interest audiences.

THE prudence of Mr. Irving has arranged that Mr. Tennyson's drama, The Cup, shall be played not in the middle of the evening at the Lyceum, but as a prelude to The Corsican Brothers, upon whose artfully presented horrors a great public sups every night. Generally, Mr. Tennyson's stage pieces have not been dramatically powerful enough to draw an audience not composed very much of the Laureate's more lettered admirers, but it is asserted that The Cup contains the materials of strong dramatic interest. Nevertheless, it is a making of assurance doubly sure to keep The Corsican Brothers in the bill, and to run it along with the literary work of the author of The Falcon.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186 Strand, and Messrs. CURTICE & Co., Catherine Street, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can also be obtained every Saturday Morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. W. H. SMITH AND SONS; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

PARIS.

Copies can be obtained in Paris every Saturday morning of M. FOTHERINGHAM, 8 Rue Neuve des Capucines.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

SATURDAY, JANUARY 8, 1881.

No. 453, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Temple or the Tomb. By Charles Warren. (R. Bentley & Son.)

STUDENTS of the topography of Jerusalem owe a debt of gratitude to Capt. Warren which they will not readily forget. Their regret must be that his labours were suspended when they seemed to promise the most interesting results, and that more has not been done to render what was actually effected generally available. By an extended search through his letters in the Reports of the Palestine Fund, or through the disjecta membra which make up The Recovery of Jerusalem and Underground Jerusalem, the enquirer may, at an altogether exorbitant expenditure of time and trouble, generally ascertain the result actually gained from any particular shaft or excavation: but, as Capt. Warren himself admits in the work before us (p. 31), the general results of the investigations he conducted still remain to be properly tabulated; while, as to the maps which profess to record these results, it has been up to the present year impossible to determine where the results of observation terminate and those of imagination begin.

Take, for instance, the plans which have been published during the last seven years professing to show something of the rock levels of Jerusalem by contour lines; it was not till last April that, through the publication in the Quarterly Statement of the Palestine Exploration Fund of a register of all rock levels hitherto taken, it became known for a certainty that much of the contouring on which arguments were being confidently rested was the merest work of fancy. Few points have been more keenly contested than whether the Temple occupied the south-western angle of the Haram area; few arguments against this more confidently relied on by Capt. Warren and others than the alleged slope of rock down to that angle from the north and east, showing a difference, according to most of the contoured maps, of something like a hundred and twenty feet in rock level between the angle and the Sakhrāh. It now turns out that not one single observation has been taken inside the Haram within the square roughly indicated by the south and west walls, the south edge of the platform, and the passage ending in the Triple Gate. In other words, the whole theory of the slope of 120 feet is as yet absolutely without proof; and, for anything really known, a rocky eminence little lower than the Sakhrāh itself may underlie the area which forms the site of the Temple according to Fergusson, Thrupp, and Lewin.

It was with some interest, then, that, notwithstanding the disappointments of former experience, we looked forward to the publication of the present work, heralded in its advertisements as intended to discuss "the topographical questions concerning the Temple Mount, and prove that the Temple must have stood on the rocky plateau near the present Dome of the Rock," and also to prove "from all sources, historical, archaeological, topographical, traditional, and architectural, that the Dome of the Rock cannot be the Church of the Holy Sepulchre." It has been, alas! the old story over again, with this difference: there was an exciting interest in the narrative of Capt. Warren's former writings; he has now succeeded in producing a work the greater part of which is as unreadable as may be.

The book, which, we may as well say at the outset, is a pamphlet of some two hundred and fifty pages against Mr. Fergusson and his views, is divided into a Preface and four parts. In the Preface—a remarkable specimen of that "vehemence of opinions, warmth of expression, and strength of invective" which Capt. Warren so strongly reprobates in the author of The Temples of the Jews—he tells us that his old opponent had better "abandon [his theory in as cheerful a manner as practicable under the circumstances;" that he "has been signally vanquished by facts;" that "local indications, historical facts, traditional reminiscences, architectural remains, and topographical details all unite in protesting against the practicability of his theory;" that "he cannot be considered a judge, but simply a skilful advocate;" that "his architectural argument hangs upon one point, and that upon this point he is hopelessly wrong;" and so on, and so on. In the body of the work (p. 108) it is even suggested that perhaps after all the whole of Mr. Fergusson's writings on his subject may be only a gigantic hoax to try how much the British public can stand!

We do not, however, come at once to close quarters. The first part consists of a chapter on what is called "The Parallel Holiness of Zion and Moriah," taken almost word for word from a paper published by the author in the Quarterly Statement of the Palestine Fund so far back as 1870 (so closely taken, indeed, that misquotations in the one are repeated in the other), the object of which is to prove that the north-western hill of the modern city was the Zion of David, the Akra of Josephus, and that the fortress of Akra cut down by the Asamoneans was in its south-eastern slope. The argument as to Zion is something like the following:—

Zion was a separate hill, though forming part of Jerusalem. It could not include Moriah, because Moriah in the time of David was the property of a Jebusite chieftain, and because the Ark was brought from Zion up to Moriah [the north-western hill, by-the-way, being the higher of the two]. In the poetical books, up to the dedication of the Temple, the praises of Zion alone are sung as sanctified by being the temporary resting-place of the Ark; afterwards "advantage was taken of the Hebrew style to parallel the present holiness of Moriah with the past glories of Zion," and the prophets "copy their style each from the other, thus originally deriving it from David," so that "it is evident how Zion might gradually acquire in the minds of the people a meaning synonymous with the Temple, except to those who were well acquainted with the historical books." In the times of the Maccabees, "we see the effects of poetry. The historical books may be forgotten, but the songs of David descend from father to son by word of mouth, and still reign in the hearts of all. Hence they call the sanctuary (though changed in position) Mount Zion." Josephus "must have been aware of the identity between the city of David and Zion (the Akra or north-western hill of Jerusalem); but he could not call it Zion; to do so would have raised a confusion in his story to anybody who had access to the books of the Maccabees; he therefore wisely left the name out altogether." And, "when Jerusalem came under the Roman and Christian rule, and the songs of David held diminished sway, history began to be examined, and it is likely that the term Zion should again designate the city of David; but the hill had disappeared [i.e., the fortress and its site had been levelled by the Asamoneans], and therefore it is possible that the adjoining hill, other than the Temple, should be called Zion, and this we find to be the case."

The argument that the north-western hill was Akra is almost as remarkable. It was not the upper city; it could not be to the south of it; if farther to the north than where Capt. Warren places it, the fortress built on it could not have commanded the Temple.

Those who have studied the subject will be inclined to smile at all this. They will hardly smile the less when told that throughout the chapter there is no reference to any one of the three great tests of the true position of Akra. Capt. Warren's hill is not ἀμφικύρτος; it is neither surrounded by three walls, nor girt by impassable ravines; while how the flames of its burning could reach Siloam is for Capt. Warren to say.

If the first part be a republished essay, the second—on the site of the present Church of the Sepulchre—is a republished lecture read before the Royal Historical Society, it is not said when, but reprinted with so little revision that it contains an apology for "the short space of time which can be devoted to the reading of an evening." In this much is made of the tombs discovered under the roof of the present church, as proving that the site was formerly a place of sepulture, and, therefore, outside the walls; but nothing is said of the declaration of Eusebius that the rock of the sepulchre was found "standing out erect and alone in a level land, and having only one cavern within it; lest, had there been many, the miracle of Him who overcame death should have been obscured" (Theophania, iii. 61). The defence of the city is urged as a reason for the line of wall being drawn so as to include the site, the fact being, as shown on both the maps in the book, that it was the worst line possible for the purpose, being down the slope of the hill, with a rising ground outside. The "foris murum" of the Bordeaux Pilgrim is interpreted as referring to what was practically an inner wall of the city. The historical proofs of the contended total destruction of the sepulchre by the Persians are quotations from Robinson, Besant, Milman, and Gibbon, 'the last of whom, with his usual caution, writes "consumed or, at least, damaged by the flames."

Part iii. treats of the Temple, and most, if not all, the arguments contained in it are repeated in part iv., which consists mainly of no less than sixty-two detailed objections to Mr. Fergusson's writings on this subject. We have laboured through them all, but they add little to what has been urged by former writers; while the number is swollen out by needless repetitions. Thus 27 is practically the same as 25, 42 the same as 19, 57 the same as 11, 60 the same as 12. Many of them are simply based on assertions, as 7, 17, 40; some on misinterpretations of Mr. Fergusson's meaning, as 3, 23; some on passages in the earlier writings of the latter, which have been revised and corrected in his later works, as 11, 14; while throughout there is the most vexatious absence of references to all but the passages themselves which are objected to. Of many—as, for instance, 5, 49, 53, 62, 63—it may be said that they can have but little effect on the general argument; while of some the marvel is that anyone should think of adducing them as arguments at all. Take, for example, the first, where Mr. Fergusson's point that Omar could hardly have been taken by Sophronius to pray at the present church, within the city, as being the Temple of David, is sought to be met by the following:—

"The Temple of Solomon was built on Mount Moriah, but the Ark, in the time of David, rested on Mount Zion, and Zion, as the seat of God's name, is most frequently referred to in the Book of Psalms. When, therefore, Omar asked to be shown the Mosque (Masjid, or Place of Adoration of David), he was taken to the Basilica of Constantine, built close to the wall of Zion" (p. 124).

Of all the sixty-two objections, the following alone, as not having been so prominently brought forward by former writers, seem to us worthy of the serious consideration of Mr. Fergusson and those who adopt his view:—(1) Objection 10, as to the ditch filled up by Pompey; (2) objections 12 and 60, as to what became of the site of Fergusson's Palace of Solomon during the time of Herod and the siege; (3) objection 15, as to the Haram wall stretching north from Wilson's Causeway; (4) objection 16, as to Fergusson's Antonia being founded in a ravine; (5) objection 20, as to Solomon having levelled the summit of the Temple hill; (6) objection 50, as to the Templars' assumed ignorance of a transference of sites carried out within so short a period of their own conquest.

We had expected from the terms of the prospectus we have referred to above that something at least of historical and archaeological research would have been attempted by the author, but nothing is more remarkable than the paucity, not of references (for these are never given), but of allusions to writers prior to the eleventh century. The Bordeaux Pilgrim, Eusebius, Cyril, Antoninus, Areluph, and Saewulf are all that are even referred to, with the exception of Innominatus I., and the quotations from the last are all from that portion of the text which its editor, Dr. Tobler, presumes to be a later addition by another hand. But enquiries of this nature seem hardly in Capt. Warren's line. He tells us (p. 180),

"It is not known how Mr. Fergusson arrives at the conclusion that, previous to the Crusades, the vicinity of the Temple was always connected with the place where Abraham erected his altar for the purpose of slaying Isaac, or what bearing it has on the argument."

Let us suggest to him that, if it can be proved that tradition has from the first erection of Constantine's Church fixed the site of the altar of Abraham in its immediate proximity, and that, for many centuries after Christ, that site was invariably identified with the eastern hill, the inference is a very obvious one. And in this light let us ask him to consider the following passages:—(1) As implying that the offering of Isaac took place on the Temple hill: Joseph. Antiq. i. 13, § 2; Jerome, Com. in Genesim, cap. xxii., 2, Com. in Jeremiam, cap. xxvi. (2) As showing that the site of the offering was close to Calvary: Jerome, Com. in Marcum, cap. xv.; August. Serm. 71, de Tempore; Innominatus I., § 2; Antoninus, § 19; Arnulph, i. 7. And (3) as fixing the respective scenes of the offering of Isaac, the building of the Temple, and the death of Christ on the eastern hill, the passage of Theodosius (the quondam Theodorus) quoted by the writer in Notes and Queries for January 27, 1877, and given at length in The Temples of the Jews, p. 241, note.

ALEX. B. McGRIGOR.

Studies in Song. By Algernon Charles Swinburne. (Chatto & Windus.)

MR. SWINBURNE in this volume opens no new stop of his instrument, but those who have heard his former fugues and fantasias with pleasure will gladly listen to another recital. Kindred themes, and the same manner of the same musician; the sea, and the sun, and the wind; the wind, and the sea, and the sun; life, and sleep, and death; desire, and delight, and derision; foul priest and traitor king; freedom; and the champion of freedom serene, august, and godlike, because most human. It is in no unauthentic voice that those rulers, sun, sea, and wind, address us through their chief envoy in English song. Some of the amplitude, the exultation, the terror, the everlasting changefulness in everlasting monotony of their utterance fill our ears as we read these poems. We seem to see into the mystery of their life, as they move apart from us, the one with the other; and secrets are confessed in our hearing not only of their joy, but of their mighty languors, their weariness, and hunger and desolation. Mr. Swinburne's poetry really liberates and dilates the imagination in its dealings with external nature; and in the mythology of his imagination the powers of nature are nobly conceived in their strangeness and their beauty as part monster, part human, part divine. His verse in its form and movement possesses some of their freedom and their energy; the stress of the gale, the sound of the tide, are in it. He alone among living English poets can command billowy verse forth in pursuit of billowy verse, each one a live and springing mass, with bright crest toppling, yet sustained until the appointed moment in accord with some fine law of the dynamics of natural forces.

No one who has yielded himself to the incantation of Mr. Swinburne's poetry will care to give it grudging praise. Praise comes to the lips as the spontaneous outcome of gratitude for an enlargement of our imaginative life. And, equally, no one who values the sincerity of poetry, wise thoughts, sane feelings, speech simple, luminous, and strong, can fail to perceive and to lament things lacking and things amiss, which impair the worth of his work, and render some of it unendurable. The greatest poets grow in wisdom and in knowledge; they grasp life with larger hands; their powers consolidate themselves, become more robust; their passion becomes more massive; their vision of the world more wide and deep. The garment of Mr. Swinburne's verse spreads its borders and sweeps in more voluminous folds, but the living thought, for whose sake the garment is wrought, has not waxed in stature, and seems half lost in its uncontrollable breadths and lengths of gear. Mr. Swinburne's writing often becomes obscure, not from thought amassed in block, nor from the crossing threads of a swift-weaving intellect, but because of the exhausting process which the reader is forced to undergo in shredding out a thought thin enough to cover its inordinate space of words. Certain rhetorical devices—antithesis, the pairing of kindred words, the balancing of equal-weighted clauses, even alliteration—come to serve as substitutes for invention and for ideas. And the tyranny of such processes withdraws the idea, when it exists, from simplicity, from reality, from the manifold subtle movements of life, and renders it mechanical, rigid, strained. It is ungracious to dispraise, and one is pleased to get another to perform the ugly part of one's task. An excellent French critic, M. Paul Stapfer, a true lover of the poetry of Victor Hugo, comments on its defects in words of which the reader may translate as much as he pleases, giving to them an English application.

"Beaucoup de termes, qui reviennent sans cesse, appellent inmanquablement leur contrepartie: l'ombre et la lumière, la vie et la mort, la nuit et le jour, le blanc et le noir, le berceau et la tombe, marchent toujours de compagnie. . . . Otez de l'arsenal de Victor Hugo les sesquipedalia verba: flamboiement, rugissement, formidable, monstrueux, surhumain, etc., il se trouvera fort empêché, car sa poésie ne se compose de plus en plus que de cela. Ce développement excessif du procédé . . . rend la poésie actuelle de Victor Hugo aisément imitable. On peut en donner la recette et l'enseigner en une leçon. De plaisants rimeurs se sont amusés à écrire aussi mal, et ils ont très bien réussi. Ce qu'il y a de pire, c'est que le vieux poète semble s'être chargé lui-même, et mieux que personne, de la parodie. . . . Il s'est copié et travesti avec une exagération grotesque. Il est devenu son propre singe."

But M. Stapfer hastens to qualify his words of censure. What other French poet but Victor Hugo has "le souffle, l'inspiration, le tonnerre de Dieu, et la terreur sacrée"? And the English reader can find substitutes for these brave French words which may suggest the due praise of Mr. Swinburne's poetry.

The poems which have given me most pleasure in the present volume are "By the North Sea," "Evening on the Broads," "The Emperor's Progress," "Off Shore," and the "Grand Chorus of Birds from Aristophanes." A sunset by the sea, with breaking waves beside our feet, invites us to an un-strenuous mood of lingering delight, and, if Mr. Swinburne's verse delay until twilight is dead, one is glad to delay with the verse and see the last relic of the day. When we close the volume we can recall little of "Evening on the Broads":—

"It is of the sky
And from our earthly memory fades away."

But we can bid the sunset live again, re-enter its peace, and watch the stars re-emerge by a return to the poem:—

"Here on the bar of the sand-bank, steep yet aslope to the gleaming
Waste of the water without, waste of the water within,
Lights overhead and lights underneath seem doubtfully dreaming
Whether the day be done, whether the night may begin.
Far and afar and farther again they falter and hover,
Warm on the water and deep in the sky and pale on the cloud:
Colder again and slowly remoter, afraid to recover
Breath, yet fain to revive, as it seems, from the skirt of the shroud.
Faintly the heart-beats shorten and pause of the light in the westward
Heaven, as eastward quicken the paces of star upon star
Hurried and eager of life as a child that strains to the breast-ward
Eagerly, yearning forth of the deeps where the ways of them are."

To such a poem as this the admirable words of Walt Whitman, in his Preface to "Two Rivulets," apply:—

"Human thought, poetry, or melody must leave dim escapes and outlets—must possess a certain fluid aerial character akin to space itself, obscure to those of little or no imagination, but indispensable to the highest purposes. Poetic style, when addressed to the soul, is less definite form, outline, sculpture, and becomes vista, music, half-tints, and even less than half-tints."

"By the North Sea," the noblest poem in the book, is, setting some few stanzas aside, in Mr. Swinburne's best manner:—

"A song the sea-wind gave me from the sea, Where nought of man endures before the sun."
It is a desolate sea, haunted only by death; and the desolate shore is like manifest Hades, where Anticleia statue-like looked upon her "wave-wandering, steadfast-hearted son." From the haggard sea and desolate shore, from the devouring hunger of death, and the unsatisfied craving of the wind the poet at last finds deliverance in the Sun's strength and pride and joy. The opening stanzas will lay their spell on the reader and make him seek what follows:—

"A land that is lonelier than ruin;
A sea that is stranger than death:
Far fields that a rose never blew in,
Wan waste where the winds lack breath;
Waste endless and boundless and flowerless
But of marsh-blossoms fruitless as freckles:
Where earth lies exhausted, as powerless
To strive with the sea."

"Far flickers the flight of the swallows,
Far flutters the weft of the grass
Spun dense over desolate hollows
More pale than the clouds as they pass:

Thick woven as the weft of a witch is Round the heart of a thrall that hath sinned,
Whose youth and the wrecks of its riches
Are waifs on the wind."

"The Emperor's Progress" is formed of three sonnets in sequence on the busts of Nero in the Uffizj—the child Nero, who "hails with wide eyes and lips his life on earth;" Nero the youth, crowned and beautiful and already weary; and, last, Nero before the close:—

"The heavy, fair-faced hateful head, at strife
With its own lusts that burn with feverous breath
Lips which the loathsome bitterness of life
Leaves fearful of the bitterness of death."

I care little, or not at all, for the poems in this volume written by Mr. Swinburne in his self-constituted office of Poet Laureate to the Republic Universal. It may be very proper to curse the White Czar's pleasure-boat, Livadia; execrations are, at all events, less irritating than dynamite; but Mr. Swinburne's mouth is so full of cursing that they press forth somewhat inarticulately:—

"Till the sum
Of all the sunless sum of curses told
Out on his head by all dark seasons rolled
Over its cursed and crowned existence;" &c., &c.

A schoolboy may think this dreadful; it will seem to others a pleasantry which might soon grow blandly soporific. To distinguish between the shame and guilt of tyrant and tyrant, to distinguish between the glory and virtue of patriot and patriot, would add a pleasing individuality to such poems as this and the verses to Mazzini; to recognise distinctions would help to consign to his true place in the Inferno each traitor, and to his place in Paradise each patriot saint. There are, indeed, moments when love quells all sense of difference; they are rare, and who shall render them into speech? One cannot doubt that Mr. Swinburne reveres and loves the memory of the high-minded Mazzini; but could he find nothing better to say of him than that he is God?

Of the longest poem in the book, the "Song for the Centenary of Walter Savage Landor," I hardly venture to speak. It is a kind of companion piece to the "Birthday Ode for the Anniversary Festival of Victor Hugo" in Songs of the Springtides—a huge monument built obelisk-wise, with the names of a hundred victories engraven on its sides. It is a panegyric throughout, celebrating Landor's chief works in chronological order. Its evolution is perhaps too methodical, and by continual levelling-up of eulogy the rise and fall, needful in so long a poem, become almost inappreciable. It is sixty pages in length. It contains much admirable writing; but its critic has human frailties, and felt an ignoble comfort rise as the end drew near. I do not venture to praise or dispraise, but I will transcribe two lines which characterise exquisitely some of Landor's Latin verses:—

"And through the trumpet of a child of Rome Rang the pure music of the flutes of Greece."

Mr. Swinburne addresses a sonnet to Dr. Grosart, "On the Resurrection of Alcilia." It ought not to be forgotten by those who would preserve just honour for the dead that Alcilia was published and edited six years ago in the Shakespeare Jahrbuch by the late Dr. Wilhelm Wagner.

EDWARD DOWDEN.

Notes on the Folk-Lore of the Northern Counties of England and the Borders. By William Henderson. (W. Satchell & Co.)

THIS is the second edition of a work published originally fourteen years ago. It is, however, so much enlarged and improved that, except in a library catalogue, it may well be treated as a new book. We have no hesitation in saying that it is the most important contribution to the branch of knowledge which it illustrates that has appeared since Sir Henry Ellis issued, upwards of sixty years ago, his edition of Brand's Popular Antiquities.

Mr. Henderson's range is narrower than that of Brand, but his knowledge of his subject is much wider, his classification more exact, and his language absolutely free from that bitterness which sometimes renders the earlier author unpleasant to read. Each chapter is a complete treatise in itself; and some of them—that on "Days and Seasons," for example—might, by the addition of the facts that have been gathered in by foreign students, be expanded into a complete treatise on the year and its divisions as they appealed to the imaginations of our forefathers.

The old kingdom of Northumbria was the essentially Catholic part of England, and the ancient form of faith died harder there than in the more Southern shires. The Pilgrimage of Grace and the Rising in the North, both of which were in the strictest sense popular movements, are proof of this, and evidence of a much later date could be given were it needed. It is, indeed, a pretty well-ascertained fact that, until the rise of Wesleyanism in the last century, the mass of the people who were not town-dwellers were adherents, open or secret, of the faith of their mediaeval ancestors, or that their thoughts and feelings were strongly coloured thereby. The faith we say advisedly, for the common folk never troubled their heads any more than their ancestors had done with certain questions as to foreign relations which had become so essential a part of the mind-furniture of professed theologians.

What we have said receives confirmation from almost every page of Mr. Henderson's book. The second chapter, to which we have before referred, is, however, by far the most noteworthy from this point of view. In the city of Durham and many other Northern towns and villages old women still carry from house to house on Christmas Day waxen figures of the Blessed Virgin and the Divine Infant, and sing a carol which seems to be the modern form of a very ancient ditty. The first verse runs:—

"God rest you, merry gentlemen, let nothing you dismay;
Remember Christ our Saviour was born on Christmas-day,
To save our souls from Satan's fold, which long had gone astray."

This pretty custom, which has been kept up until recent times in many places beyond the Northern counties, varied in its details in almost every parish. In one part of Lincolnshire the figures of the Mother and her Babe were carried in a covered basket lined with straw to represent a stable, and a piece of wood dressed and painted to represent a red cow was borne along with them for the purpose of making the realism more complete. The carol was not the same as that given by Mr. Henderson. We have more than once heard the whole of it sung in our childhood, but have been unable to recover any of the verses except the following fragment:—

“And now the King of heaven is born
To save rich and poor from hell,
That we may, when the death-hour's past,
In heaven with Mary dwell.”

The popular folk-lore bears witness to much that is not Christian. The Church's teaching overlay, but did not by any means eradicate, the older beliefs with which it came into contact. Sometimes the old and the new were kept separate in the mind; more often, it would seem, they blended in strange and fantastic confusion, and produced wild dreams of sorcery and magic. The older gods became demons; the places dedicated to them spots where evil spirits might be invoked, and where it was dangerous for Christian men and women to venture except upon the most holy errands. A frightful dream-world of sorcery and witchcraft was the result; the distorted reflection of the teaching of the Christian priesthood blended with the traditions of the old mythology. The power of this horrible fascination was intense. It has survived the attacks made upon it in the sixteenth century, and, notwithstanding the spread of education, yet lives and flourishes luxuriantly in places where we should little expect to find it.

If proof were really wanted on such a very simple matter there could not be stronger evidence than our modern folk-lore gives us for the fact that the Teutonic religion was an independent branch of the great tree of Aryan thought. It is in but remote relation with the mythologies of Greece and Rome; while almost every legend that is not distinctly Christian shows its kinship with those forms of nature-worship prevalent in Scandinavia and Germany.

The chapters on portents, auguries, charms, and witchcraft are especially worthy of notice. To say that they exhaust the subject would be going too far, but it is safe to affirm that anyone who has mastered the facts they contain is in a position to understand the peasant's mind, and to enter into his conceptions of nature far more fully than some of the wisest and best of our modern thinkers who have not been furnished with the very important knowledge they contain. Without entering into theological subtleties as to miracles, or portents beyond the laws of nature, we may safely affirm that the educated man or woman of to-day, whatever his or her creed may be, does not expect to meet with them in ordinary life. The succession of events is held to be regular; it is regarded as a network or a chain, not as a confused jumble of good and evil things following one another without order. To our mediæval forefathers this was not so, and the peasant of to-day is in this respect the counterpart of his ancestors of the Middle Ages, except that the wear and tear of centuries and contact with unpoetic forms of religion have destroyed much of the beauty which once gave these unhappy fancies a superficial air of loveliness. Once there were in the popular mythology good witches and fairies who, if not exactly willing servants of God, were at least not in enmity with His creatures here. Now these have vanished, and we have remaining but the fouler forms of the superstition—those at which Puritanism clutched so eagerly and which it fed upon with such ghoul-like savageness. The laws against witchcraft have long been abolished, and students write books telling us that the superstition is dead. Those, however, who dwell in the country, and are on sufficiently intimate terms with the common folk to get their real opinions, know that this is a delusion, and that it flourishes with little less vigour than it did when witchcraft was a crime in law, triable at the assizes and punished by death. The newspapers sometimes contain passages which have a tendency to shake the faith of these optimists; but for one instance of this delusion that is made public there are, it may be safely affirmed, hundreds that are talked over by the cottage fireside, and warded off by the old impious and disgusting incantations, of which no rumour ever reaches the ears of cultivated people.

The chapter on “Worms or Dragons” is perhaps the least satisfactory in the book, though it contains much useful information. We know too little of comparative mythology as yet to speak quite certainly, but it seems to be a fact that all the races of the world have dragon legends. If this be so, it points either to some fact which had been impressed on the consciousness of the race when they formed but one family, or to a tendency to exaggerate in their imaginations the size and power of things they really saw. The latter explanation does not seem a very reasonable one, for this exaggeration is but rare as regards the other parts of the animal creation. Whatever may be true, unless we give a much longer period to the duration of the human race than has yet been claimed for it by those who have the best right to be heard on anthropological subjects, we are bound to reject the notion that the dragon is a confused remembrance of the Pterodactyle or its far vaster Saurian kin. The human mind has a tendency to personify abstract qualities in bodily forms. A consciousness of sin has ever haunted all except the most degraded of our race. May it not be that, when we have desired to look at sin as external to us, we have been compelled by our own nature to picture it in some such loathsome form as the dragon?

EDWARD PEACOCK.

The Land of Gilead, with Excursions in the Lebanon. By Laurence Oliphant. (Wm. Blackwood & Sons.)

SOME men are like the crater of a volcano; no one can possibly predict where the next break-out will appear, former eruptions affording no probable indication of those of the future. The author of The Land of Gilead is in this sense equally beyond the power of prediction. None of his many previous appearances are likely to afford the slightest clue to his next movement. He is remembered as making his début by smuggling himself—hidden in a baker's cart—into Sebastopol just before the war; and the glimpse he got of that place, which was published in his book The Russian Shores of the Black Sea, was the only information to be found, official or unofficial, when the war broke out, as to what the mysterious stronghold was like. Before the campaign in the East was over, Mr. Oliphant had returned to the Black Sea, and we find him on the banks of the Ingour, in Georgia; and, although a non-combatant, he is helping in the most plucky way to fight a battle which Omar Pasha's troops were engaged in with the Russians in a flank movement for the relief of Kars. He is next heard of in the legation at Yeddo with Lord Elgin, where an attack is made by some hired ruffians, and our hero barely escapes with his life, but badly wounded. We find him between some of his outbreaks with “M.P.” hanging on to his name, but these letters imply what must have been a very tame life—a sort of quiescent condition of the crater—for him. To be “special correspondent” of the Times gives more chance of adventure, and affords something like a justification for breaking out anywhere; and in this character he has seen a good deal of the exciting events of modern history. The present writer forgathered with him in Metz, and we dined together on very bad horse-flesh the day after the German troops entered that place. We next met in the streets of Paris during the fighting between the Communards and the Versailles troops, when the streets were covered with barricades and the city was in flames. While experiences of this kind are going on, a novel breaks out in the pages of Blackwood under the title of “Piccadilly,” and the name of Laurence Oliphant is given as that of the author. This is not enough for our modern Proteus, and he “erupts” in an entirely new direction; but in this case we have only vague rumours as our guide. According to this uncertain authority, our hero had become a leader connected with a movement on the sunset side of the Atlantic, the movement being religious and social in its character. Here was surely enough of absorbing influences to smother any internal fires and keep a man quiet and subdued, and the world had begun to think that Laurence Oliphant had sunk to rest in the west, and was at last settled in peace. In this case the world was quite under a mistake. There is one part of the earth's surface which the Palestine Exploration Fund are just now informing the public that we are in a very gross state of ignorance about. That is Eastern Palestine, or the country beyond the Jordan. It is in this unknown region that Mr. Oliphant has made his last outbreak. This time it is with no light proposals that he appears. They have been described as something like an attempt to begin the Millennium, for it is an effort to restore the Jews to the Holy Land. The scheme includes more than this. Mr. Oliphant's plans comprise the political regeneration, if not of the whole of Asia, at least of a portion of it. He proposes to repeople a desert; restore habitations where there are now only ruins; produce food from the soil where little but thistles at present grows; evolve taxes to the impoverished exchequer of Stamboul; pay dividends on the necessary capital for the scheme; and relieve Europe of the poorer members of the Jewish population—all this leading to the “Grand Restoration,” which is the view the Jews themselves take of the scheme, for it has been discussed in the pages of the Jewish Chronicle, and meets there with warm approval. Mr.

Oliphant had an interview with the Sultan at Constantinople, and his scheme was approved of by his Majesty as well as by the leading officials of the Ottoman Cabinet.

The plan proposed is a very reasonable one, and there need be no doubt of its success—that is, if the region were America or Australia, where colonisation is familiar and easy of accomplishment. Being within the limits of the practicable in these countries, it ought to be the same on the eastern side of the Jordan. Here, however, lies the whole difficulty. In the East, the religious, the moral, and the political atmosphere is utterly different, and nothing seems to move, or, at least, to realise the intentions of those who try to improve. In 1869, when the present writer went to Jerusalem, a road was being made to connect it with Jaffa. I have often asked friends who have since been there whether that road was finished, and I understand that, after a portion was half-made, the work was stopped, and the whole ground has relapsed again to its primitive state. This was a small matter, but the case is typical, and it suggests the probable fate of Mr. Oliphant's plans, even if they should reach the stage of being carried out. The site of the proposed Jewish colony would be bounded on the west by the Jordan and the Dead Sea, by the River Jabbok on the north, and the River Arnon on the south; while the Haj road passes down close on its eastern frontier. This encloses a space of ground about fifty by thirty miles in extent. A map in the book shows the position very distinctly, as well as a system of proposed railways in connexion with the scheme. The main line is to be from Damascus to Ismailia, on the Suez Canal, there connecting with the Egyptian railway system. This line comes down the Jordan Valley, passing through the proposed colony; there will be a small branch line from Tiberias to Haifa, thus forming a line from the Mediterranean to Damascus. A still smaller branch will connect Jerusalem; and at the southern end of the Dead Sea a branch will go down by Petra to Akabah, and thus make a connexion with the Red Sea. Independently of the commercial advantages likely to grow out of this last portion of the line, Mr. Oliphant thinks it would at once become profitable from the Mecca pilgrims, who would be able to go from Damascus by rail to Akabah, and there they could take steamers to Yenbo and Jeddah, the ports of Medina and Mecca. Without taking into consideration Mr. Oliphant's colonisation scheme, we may admit that this is a very ingenious and clever system of railways for this part of the world. That the country east of the Jordan is capable of supporting a large population we have abundant proofs. These consist in the ruined cities, of which the remains are still visible. From Baalbec to Petra, and as far east as the Hauran, the land is full of ruins of a highly architectural character, implying in former times a large and wealthy population. The architecture is of the Roman period, thus giving us some data as to when this condition of things existed. How ancient this prosperity may have been is uncertain, but there is no doubt that it existed down through some of the first centuries of our era, Gilead, which is the place of the proposed colony, was noted of old for its "balm;" and in the time of Jacob we read that "Ishmeelites came from Gilead with their camels bearing spicery and balm and myrrh, going to carry it down to Egypt" (Gen. xxxvii. 25). It was through this region from Palmyra that the commerce of India at one time reached the West. This last condition is not likely to come back again, but its productive state might be restored, and with that result commerce with the countries around would be developed. If Mr. Oliphant's scheme should succeed, it would be a beginning of much good, and a thing to be desired by all. It has excited a very great deal of attention not only among the Jews themselves—all the way from Bucharest to New York, the details of which will be found in the volume—but also by others who regard it from religious or philanthropic motives.

Although the object of Mr. Oliphant's travels in Eastern Palestine, as well as the publication of The Land of Gilead, was to develop this remarkable proposal, yet the work is not to be altogether judged of by this motive. Book-making is no new affair with the author; he is a tried and experienced traveller, and, as he gives minute accounts of the country, dealing with its inhabitants as to their social, religious, and moral condition, readers will find it interesting quite independently of their hopes or wishes as to the restoration of the Jews. There is much that illustrates the folk-lore of localities, and the archaeology is not overlooked, which is of importance at the present moment, for the Palestine Exploration Fund are about to begin the survey of the whole country east of the Jordan, though it will take years before their labours can be presented to the public. Every traveller who has visited and described the ground only makes it evident how important it is to have a complete survey and exploration of the whole region. No traveller comes back but he laments that he was unable to visit some wonderful place of which he heard. Of this we find a good example in the present case. Mr. Oliphant regrets deeply that he did not visit the subterranean cities of Derat, Beloola, and Rahab. He gives a short translation from Wetzstein's account of Derat, and, according to that writer, it must be a very extraordinary spot. It seems to be a city cut into the rock, with streets, and a market-place, extending like a labyrinth so far that he spent at least an hour and a-half exploring, and did not reach the limits of the place. He describes doors made of a single stone, which description recalls to the mind similar doors at Bashan, one of which is in the Egyptian Room of the British Museum. Wetzstein identifies this with Edrei, and calls it the "Residence of King Og." Edrei is generally placed at a spot called Edr'a to the north-east of this and close to the boundary of the Lejah. I do not know whether Wetzstein is a trustworthy authority or not. He resided in Damascus as a consul for some time, but his account of this place requires confirmation. It looks doubtful, for it is not the first rock-cut palace of interminable extent I have heard of which dwindled to the most modest dimensions when properly explored.

WILLIAM SIMPSON.

NEW NOVELS.

The Leaden Casket. By Mrs. Alfred Hunt. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Geraldine and her Suitors. By M. C. M. Simpson. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Errant. By Percy Greg. In 3 vols. Sampson Low & Co.)

IN these days of multiplication of words and darkening of knowledge, the reviewer is generally thankful and grateful for signs of excellence in any one branch of novel-writing—for a well-conceived plot, for clever condensations, for life-like characters. What must be his feelings, therefore, towards a writer who excels in a high degree in each of these branches, and gives us a book containing characters which become as real to us as Mrs. Elton and Mr. Collins have done, and fragments of conversation and description which will for ever be interwoven with the subjects of which they treat? The heroine, Olive Brooke, is a young lady we should all of us like to know, and be the better for knowing. She is essentially a modern girl, yet she unites the best of the modern qualities with the shyness and charm of maidens of an earlier date. Unlike almost all the heroines of our acquaintance, we perfectly understand why she was so popular, and why men found her irresistible. Her love-story begins when she was quite a little girl, playing in Yorkshire fields with Willie Morrison, a low-born youth but an excellent playfellow. He is very outspoken on the subject of his birth, and Olive is quite aware how great is the drawback of being the nephew of a butcher, but is willing to condone it on condition that he will work his way upwards.

"Your uncle keeps a carriage, Olive, and is quite a grand gentleman. My father told me that, and that he lived in the aristocratic part of the metropolis."

"If your father said that, Willie, he speaks very nicely, quite as well as my uncle. He doesn't use a bit longer words than that. But never mind about the carriage or where we live. I will wait patiently in my home till you come for me."

Soon after this the visit comes to an end, and she returns to her novel-writing aunt and medical uncle, who introduce her, after she is grown up, to various aesthetic people, among others to a painter of the name of Ambergreen. We have not space to tell how Willie Morrison became famous, but we cannot resist quoting a specimen of Mr. Ambergreen's conversation when he comes to pay a visit to the promising young landscape painter.

"I am going to send in for competition to the Old Water-Colour Society. Tell me what one has to do to get elected; or does one do anything? Will they elect me on my reputation? That would be the best way."

"Never, perhaps, in Morrison's life had he opened his eyes so wide as he did now. 'But you don't paint in water-colours!' cried he.

"No, but I am going to—the election is not till spring. . . . But you are sure they will expect me to send in? they ought to know my work very well. . . . Besides, look what a bother oil-colours and canvases are in the country when you are doing landscape."

"Landscape!" exclaimed Morrison; "but you never paint landscape."

"Not paint landscape? What do you call that acre of mud that I put my last saint up to the waist in? It did a lot of people who always go off to German baths no end of good to look at my mud. I'll be hanged if I can see how anyone, who has been trained to draw the figure, and has had to use his brains to invent figure-subjects, can find any difficulty in sitting down and painting a landscape. There it is all ready for you—you have not got to imagine anything."

On this somewhat new exposition of art, Mr. Ardrossan, the Silver Casket, breaks in. As no mere description would do him justice, we will not try to describe him; but here, again, we are made to feel the charm of the man, and speedily fall victims to his many fascinations. The conversation turns accidentally on Olive, whom Amber-green knows well, having painted her as "Saint Elizabeth of Hungary with Six Penny Buns in her Apron," and he is wild to act as emissary from Morrison, who has spoken to her unconscious of her identity, and made many severe comments on the useless and luxurious life she had passed with her step-mother since the return of the latter from India. The object of Lady Brooke is to get her step-daughter married, and this she nearly accomplishes twice—first in the case of Sir John Ellerton, a rich young baronet, and second in that of Mr. Ardrossan—but in both instances she is foiled by the constancy of Olive to the ideal of her childhood. Of the tragedy that underlies all the lively sketches of society and pleasant talk we have not room to speak. It is one that must have left its mark on Olive's whole life, and had indirectly the effect of making Mrs. Brooke give up her novel-writing and devote herself to domesticity. Perhaps the imperilling of a legacy of £70,000 from her sister-in-law, through Mrs. Brooke's inability to refrain from giving an exact portrait of this lady in her latest work, called "Cross and Fifty," caused her to withdraw from fiction. The mildest temper would not enjoy remarks like the following:—

"She contradicted her fellow-creatures, as the only means at her disposal of keeping up a conversation. Perhaps in her heart she would have preferred to bring a sledge-hammer stroke to bear on each subject that was started; but, as from experience she had found that her opponents seldom rose again after this blow had been dealt to them, she had adopted the method of contradicting at large, thus goading friends and enemies alike to renewed speech, which she met by renewed contradictions."

With this quotation we are reluctantly compelled to close our remarks upon Mrs. Hunt's book—not because we have no more to say, but no space to say it in.

In most respects we prefer Mrs. Simpson's former novel, Winnie's History, to her latest work. The scene in both is laid in Wales, but, while Winnie was a bright, unsophisticated damsel still in her teens, Geraldine Desmond is a young widow. She has at an early age married her cousin, with whom she has been brought up, and three years after his death comes with her uncle and father-in-law to live at a remote place in Wales, in order to be near her brother, who is quartered close by. Here her kindness of heart and dislike of giving pain lead her into more than one doubtful position. Most of the single gentlemen fall in love with her, among them an Irish curate, the breadth of whose compliments would have been likely to scare away the prettiest of women; but Geraldine's temper is proof against all temptation. At last he proposes, and is rejected in a passage that cannot but recal to our minds the proposal and rejection of Mr. Collins in Pride and Prejudice, till, like Elizabeth, Geraldine finally threatens to "ask her father to write and decline his obliging proposals." This matter settled, she turns her attention to a far more troublesome wooer, a Major in her brother's regiment, whose misfortunes in early life have made him gloomy even beyond the wont of saturnine majors. As Geraldine's liking for him and his violin is not sufficiently strong to induce her to marry him, the Major extorts a promise from her which we hardly think any woman would consent to give, that she will never marry anyone else. Even then he is not satisfied, but torments her with doubts and fears and regrets such as seem inconceivable in anyone still retaining control over his senses. Of course, no sooner does his duty call him elsewhere than the real hero appears, is refused by Geraldine on the score of her promise, overcomes her scruples, and is shortly afterwards pushed over a rock by the Major in a scuffle. After being ill for a sufficient time to make everyone but the reader imagine he is killed, he turns up, and the Major, seeing the case is hopeless, sells out and becomes a missionary.

Mr. Greg has contrived to compress into three volumes more incident and adventure than is usually spread over twenty ordinary novels. It is useless to attempt any sketch of the plot, but when we say that his hero can trace back his ancestry to the time of Charlemagne we know that we can ask for no proof of his courage and virtue that he is not prepared to give. After performing prodigies of valour at the beginning of the Indian Mutiny, he comes back to England invalided, and obtains a good appointment—he is only twenty—on the staff of a leading newspaper. Then follow some sketches of a social and journalistic life that are amazing indeed. Not only does the office furnish himself and his sister, who has come to live with him, with tickets for the theatre twice every week, but, being present on one occasion at a first performance, the two young people go home to Highgate (!) and embody their remarks in a "volunteer criticism" which appears in the "next edition" of the paper. What had become of the dramatic critic, and how did the critique arrive at the office in time to go to press? This, however, is not all. One night our hero, Lionel Darcy, is sent to the House to be present at a debate in which a distinguished member of the Government (a connexion of his own) arraigns an equally distinguished member of the Opposition on a charge involving the honour of the latter. The accused is unable satisfactorily to reply, and it is understood in the House that if the charge is pressed the most serious consequences will ensue. Lionel writes an article supporting the impeachment, and goes home to bed. Next morning there arrives the granddaughter of the accused Earl, a young lady whose life Lionel has saved in the Mutiny, and with whom he is in love. She not only asks him to beg his editor to drop the unpleasant subject, but to entreat the accuser to do so likewise, on the grounds that it is making her mother ill. Far from getting kicked for his impudence, as he had every right to expect, Lionel absolutely succeeds in his mission, and the affair drops. Comments are needless. We cannot stop to tell of all Major Darcy's romances—how a half-caste Indian girl whom he has taught to read, being left desolate in England, begs him to take her to live with him, which, much against his will, he does; how she dies, and he is outlawed through fighting a sabre-duel in defence of her honour; how he goes to the Southern States and arrives to find some girls, whom he had known as children in India, on the point of being sold as slaves, through some informality in their father's marriage; how he buys them and lives with them as their guardian for four years, when he sends them to England; and how, finally, just as all misunderstandings with the object of his affections have been cleared away, he is killed in a battle. It will be seen there is plenty of excitement in the book, and there is also as much brotherly kissing on the part of the Major and his lady friends.

LEONORA B. LANG.

RECENT VERSE.

Home they brought her Warrior Dead. By Julian Home. (Newman.) Mr. Julian Home is to be sincerely pitied for having undertaken a task the conditions of which make success impossible. Two hundred pages of somewhat closely printed verse rapidly written, and modelled with extraordinary closeness on the versification, diction, and almost the very words of In Memoriam, invite a comparison which cannot but be fatal. The subject of Mr. Home's lament is the late Prince Imperial. The personal acquaintance and affection of the author, as well as a considerable faculty of verse-writing, ought to have enabled him to produce something tolerable were it not for his suicidal adoption of the Laureate's form. Even as it is, there are passages in this book which by no means lack beauty and pathos. But the initial error is so great that it will in all probability make the book unreadable to most people.

Ave. By Meta Orred. (Smith, Elder and Co.) Miss Orred's is another book of personal threnos, most daintily got up, and evidently written with much thought and study, while Mr. Home's verse is hasty and improvised. The result is, perhaps, not much more successful in the one case than in the other, the note of imitation being present in both works, and the subjects of both being of the kind which only great genius has ever succeeded in handling with real effect. It might, one would think, excite some suspicion of the truth in the minds of young poets if they would remember that of all the poets who have lost friends only the present Laureate has produced poetry of great excellence on the subject in which the personal note is dominant. Lycidas itself is only partially elegiac, and Adonais, it is hardly necessary to say, still less so. Miss Orred's verse gives us the idea which In Memoriam (as we hold improperly) gave M. Taine, that of merely private expression of feeling, which the looker-on beholds with all respect and a certain vague sympathy, but with nothing more.

Philæ: a Drama of Ancient Egypt. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.) It is probable that at no time when tragedy and serious drama were practically excluded from the stage have more tragedies and more serious dramas been written than at present. There was a time, at least tradition says so, when every youthful aspirant in poetry wrote epics. At present the drama seems to win from the epic with "hands down." Nothing is more difficult than to find distinguishing criticism for this class of compositions. For the most part they show a certain familiarity with the manufacture of blank verse, and occasionally some power of thought. Philæ is perhaps a little more remarkable than most of its fellows in the latter point; but its author does not appear to have mastered the fact that tragedy absolutely demands passion, or, if he has mastered the fact, he has not been able to communicate this quality to his own work.

Thoughts in Rhyme and Prose. By W. Milne. (Nimmo.) Mr. Milne deserves the praise—not inconsiderable praise either—which is due to an author whose title exactly expresses his book. The contents of his volume are strictly thoughts expressed for the most part in verse of a somewhat pedestrian character. The author has aimed at no more, and, in a fashion, he has hit his mark. His thoughts are not, indeed, very profound, but they are original in the sense of being to all appearance independent. Perhaps Mr. Milne is right in thinking that for such things verse is a more attractive garb than prose. We think, however, that, even waiving the point about pedestrian verse, the example of Horace, whereby he justifies himself, should have shown him that considerably more elegance of style and point of expression than he has given us is required in such work.

The Legend of Allandale. By Felix Morterra. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) This is a more sustained and careful attempt at the narrative verse of Scott's most successful poems than we have lately seen. The Legend of Allandale deals with the time and incidents of the "Rising in the North," and evinces considerable skill in a metre which has not recently been fashionable. The mannerism of the Last Minstrel and Marmion is so strong, and so identified with its inventor, that we can hardly think imitation wise; nor is there perhaps much demand at the present day for narrative poetry, unless it has a much more individual savour than Mr. Morterra's. But his work deserves at least the praise due to conscientious workmanship, nor is it marred by any absurdities. The smaller poems which accompany the Legend are less successful, though there are some sonnets which can at least be called fair.

Poems and Dramatic Sketches. By Joseph Kindon. (Newman.) Mr. Kindon tells us, not altogether arrogantly, that he himself has no doubt that he is a poet. We cannot say that he has succeeded in conveying the same certainty to us. Oddly enough, and contrary to expectation, the "dramatic sketches" are better than the "poems," perhaps because the licences of dramatic verse suit Mr. Kindon, who is evidently not an exact poet. His rhymes are often anything but correct, and the most indulgent finger, not to say ear, cannot always succeed in scanning his verses. But what we have worst against him is a certain desperate commonplaceness of expression which is not, we think, common even in the first books of poets who are poets. However, it is a great thing to have faith, if it be only in oneself, and perhaps Mr. Kindon's faith will enable him some day to move away the mountains which at present keep him from the land of song.

The Last Plague of Egypt, and other Poems. By the Rev. J. B. McCaul. (Longmans.) This is a book which contains a considerable quantity of very artless verse. Mr. McCaul seems to be in the habit of versifying whatever comes uppermost in his mind, and of committing the verses to paper. We have no doubt that, as in the case of a character of George Eliot's, "the process is accompanied by a considerable sense of power," but this sense does not exactly justify itself to the reader.

Collected Verses. By Violet Fahe. (Smith, Elder and Co.) When, some little time ago, the name of "L. E. L." was casually mentioned in a newspaper controversy, it was observed that if anyone opened the works of that ill-fated lady nowadays he would be not a little surprised to see what his fathers took for poetry. The criticism was rather hard on "L. E. L.," but it had a grain of truth in it. We think that Violet Fahe bears, from a literary point of view, somewhat the same relation to the true poets of to-day as "L. E. L." did to those of forty years ago. Her verse is really pleasing, and seldom shows any glaring fault, nor is it exactly commonplace. The following poem will fairly show its strength and weakness:—

"A MEMORY.

"A thousand lilies blossom unaware Here, where the earth seems chill with buried love,
And in the flowery arbutus the dove
Still calls her truant mate, who lingers yet
As though the world were always sweet and fair,
And you and I had nothing to regret
And hope for against hope and think upon,
Till all things fade.

"And so your lips may often wear a smile,
And so my heart may leap to music still.
Your soul may fire and all your being thrill
And all your manhood lift itself on high
In din of battle or in sacred aisle.
Yet under all must lurk one memory,
The grieving for a good time that is gone
Till all things fade."

Gaslight and Stars. By Frederick Langbridge. (Marcus Ward and Co.) Mr. Langbridge appears to have been a frequent contributor to weekly and monthly periodicals which publish verse, and it is no wonder that his contributions have been accepted. They are not exactly poetry, but they are excellent "copy" of the metrical kind, and not unfrequently show a great deal of feeling and some thought. He is, indeed, rather apt to commit flirtation with the muse of other poets, but this is very pardonable in magazine verse.

Alice Vertun. By R. B. Slipper. (Hamilton, Adams and Co.) This small volume opens with the following Advertisement, signed, "Mary Slipper." "Composed before the author's ordination, with the exception of some slight alterations, and committed to the press without his knowledge, I alone am responsible for the publication of this poem." Grammatically, this means that Miss or Mrs. Mary Slipper was composed before Mr. R. B. Slipper's ordination, but we presume that the date of composition assigned is that of the poem. We cannot think that Mrs. or Miss Slipper's father, husband, brother, or son has any reason to thank her for surreptitiously publishing his youthful fault. Such verse as the following is, in print, absolutely without excuse:—

"The beachmen hurry to the shore,
A race whose generous pride
Heedless of dangers braved before
Would yet again be tried.
The boat from hostile labours free
Labours the ship to near,
And gliding o'er the wondering sea
Her outlines faint appear."

Dantzick, and other Tales. (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.) These tales are for the most part suggested by German originals, and are written apparently with the somewhat ambitious hope of bringing about a rapprochement between England and Germany. Non nostrum est to estimate the chance of their doing this. We can only say that they have no particular value as literature. The Preface is dated from the Reform Club. This is the only clue we possess to the book's authorship, the honour of which the poetical members of that society will doubtless eagerly dispute.

King Alfred, and other Poems. By Percy Russell. (Wyman.) Considering that Mr. Russell has included in this little volume, which is not bigger than a fair-sized pocket-book, a King Alfred in three books, a King Edward II. in five acts, and a goodly number of short poems, he may be granted considerable merits as a packer. As a poet we can hardly allot him the same praise.

NOTES AND NEWS.

A VOLUME of poems, by Mrs. Horace Dobell, entitled Ethelstone, Eveline, and other Poems, will be issued next week by Messrs. C. Kegan Paul and Co. The same publishers have in the press a new volume of poems by the Hon. Roden Noel, entitled A Child's Monument.

PROF. SAYCE's article on the Hittites in Fraser's Magazine has been translated into Greek and published at Smyrna.

TOWARDS the close of last year an interesting work was published at Kazan by M. D. Korsakov "On the Reign of the Empress Anne" (Vozarenie Imperatritsy Anny Ioannovny). Besides its intrinsic merits, this book demands attention on account of the author having had access to State papers which had been till recently very jealously guarded. It is well known to students of Russian history that the Empress Anne was compelled by a faction of nobles to sign a document whereby the Imperial power was greatly limited. As soon, however, as she felt her throne secure she was enabled, with the help of a rival faction, to tear the paper in pieces before the assembled Court. Till the appearance of M. Korsakov's book it was not known that any copy existed. It has, however, been discovered and published by him. It was found enclosed in a cover on which the Empress Catherine had written, "Not to be shown to anyone without express order." On the wrapper of some other papers concerning the election of Anne, that Sovereign has written with her own hand, "Documents concerning the deceit practised upon me when I came to the throne." An important lacuna in Russian history seems hereby to be filled up.

WE understand that Mr. Arthur J. Munby is the author of Dorothy: a Country Story in Elegiac Verse, reviewed in the ACADEMY of December 24.

THE interesting letters on Disturbed Ireland which have been appearing in the Daily News from the pen of its special commissioner, Mr. Bernard H. Becker, will, we understand, be published immediately in a volume by Messrs. Macmillan and Co.

THE same publishers will, in the course of the next few weeks, issue the following educational works:—Anthropology: an Introduction to the Study of Man, by Mr. E. B. Tylor, F.R.S.; a Manual of Ancient Geography, from the German of Dr. H. Kiepert; in the "Classical Series," the Fasts of Ovid, edited by Mr. G. H. Hallam, and the Miles Gloriosus of Plautus, edited by Prof. R. Y. Tyrrell; in the "Elementary Classics," the Second Book of the Odes of Horace, edited by Mr. T. E. Page, and Scenes from the Fifth and Sixth Books of the Gallic War of Caesar, edited by Mr. C. Colbeck.

ACCORDING to the Publishers' Circular, the publications of 1880 were less numerous by 126 than those of the preceding year. In 1880, 4,293 new books and 1,415 new editions appeared, or a total of 5,708, as against 5,834 in 1879.

AN interesting and instructive inaugural address by Mr. Joseph S. Nicholson, as Professor of Commercial and Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh, has been published (Edinburgh: David Douglas). The subject of the address is Political Economy as a Branch of Education. Without discarding altogether the a priori method, Mr. Nicholson advocates the historical and inductive method as the main instrument of investigation in economics.

The Church at Home is the title of a new work by the Right Rev. Rowley Hill, D.D., Bishop of Sodor and Man, containing a series of short Sermons with Collect and Scripture for Sundays, Saints' Days, and Special Occasions, which will be published shortly by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.

MR. WILLIAM SMITH, F.S.A.S., of Morley, near Leeds, proposes to publish by subscription, with Messrs. Longmans, Old Yorkshire: being Historical Notes relating to the People, Customs, and Traditions of the County.

THE Library of the Society of Telegraph Engineers and of Electricians is now open, for purposes of reference only, to members of all scientific bodies, and (on application to the librarian) to the public generally, between the hours of eleven a.m. and eight p.m., except on Thursdays and Saturdays, when it closes at two p.m.

WE are promised very shortly Catalogo Ragionato degli Scritti sparsi di S. D. Luzzatto, con Riferimenti agli altri suoi Scritti editi ed inediti, by Dr. Is. Luzzatto. This Catalogue, consisting of 504 pages, is of great importance, as a good many of Prof. Luzzatto's articles on various subjects are not easily accessible, through their being dispersed in many newspapers.

A NEW volume of the Codex Diplomaticus Saxoniae Regiae, edited, with the assistance of the Saxon Government, by Dr. Otto Posse and Dr. Hubert Ermisch, is to appear shortly. It is the work of Dr. Posse, and will contain the "History of the House of Wettin and of the Meissen Constitution." The editor, with the assistance of the excellent historical material which is stored up in the Royal Hauptstaatsarchiv of Dresden, will show that the princes of Wettin are neither of Old-Saxon nor of Slavonic origin, as has been generally affirmed by historians, but that they can boast of Suabian descent, and have held their great possessions in the "Schwabengau," between the Rivers Saale and Bode and the Harz Mountains, from time immemorial. It was only in the year 1088 that the Markgrafschaft of Meissen was conferred upon them; and from this time the formation and gradual confirmation of the power of the Misnian Counts has depended upon the Wettin family, the representative of which is the present King of Saxony.

OF The Shakspeare Calendar of Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co. sixty thousand copies are printed and sold annually. This year so pressing has been the demand that, when one of the partners asked for a copy for himself after New Year's Day, answer was returned to him that there was not one left in the house, and he actually had to send out and buy a copy at a retail shop.

THE new Goethe MS., which we mentioned in a former issue, is, as we said, the first draft of the "Singspiel" Jery und Bätely, but is, especially for Goethe scholars, of considerable interest, because this first version has been hitherto unknown, and offers a text in some parts differing from the printed edition. It was sent by Goethe to his friend, the composer Kayser, in Zürich, who was to put it into a musical form; and it was afterwards, on July 12, 1780, performed at the amateur theatre at Weimar with the music of Seckendorff, as Kayser had not finished his music in time for the performance. The MS. accompanied Goethe on his Italian journey, and was revised before it was printed in Goethe's complete works published by Goeschen. The principal alterations in the printed edition are the substitution of Bätely's father for her mother and the change of the rhythmical dialogue into prose.

DOM LUIS, King of Portugal, who is known as the translator of several plays of Shakspeare into Portuguese, has just sent to press a translation of Richard the Third. The proceeds of this new literary work are to be devoted to various benevolent institutions.

THE University of Basel has largely increased the number of its students during the present winter-semester. It counts 140 students in the philosophical faculty, 104 in the medical, 64 in the theological, and 27 in the juristic. All except forty are Switzers, while twenty-two of the foreign students are Germans.

THE University of Berlin during this winter has more than four thousand students, the largest number ever yet reached by any German university.

MR. JOHN G. PALFREY, of Boston, who has attained his eighty-fifth year, is at present engaged on the fifth and concluding volume of his History of New England.

PROF. E. SIEVERS, of Jena, is preparing a new edition of his Lautephysiologie, under the title of Phonetik, which will in many places be entirely rewritten. In his new edition Prof. Sievers will do fuller justice to the results of the English school of phonetics than in his first edition, which was written in complete ignorance of them.

THE Old-Scandinavian Text Society (Samfundet til udgivelse af gammel nordisk litteratur) has the following texts in preparation, which will shortly be issued to the members: Gyðinga sögur, edited by Þorláksson; several rímur by Wisén, and the Old-Danish translation of Mandeville's Travels, by Lorenzen.

ON November 23 last, Dr. Worsaae read a paper before the Royal Society of Antiquities at Copenhagen on the moaning of the figures on the golden horns and the bracteates. He finds depicted on the horns—which he ascribes to the sixth century—all the most important of the Scandinavian myths, grouped round the myth of Balder: one horn gives the life in Helheim and the crimes of Loki; the other the life in Valhalla. He finds the same representations on the bracteates and other remains, and considers Prof. Bugge's view that the Scandinavian mythology is of comparatively modern and Celtic origin to be untenable.

MR. SAMUEL NEIL writes:—

"Allow me to point out, in reference to a paragraph in your issue of the 1st inst. (p. 8, col. 1), that in my edition of Macbeth in 'Collins' School and College Classics,' 1876, in a note to 'Introduction, Section I, The Literature of the Story of Macbeth' (p. 9), the most important of Warner's lines are quoted, with an acknowledgment by me of indebtedness to Prof. G. L. Craik (died June 1866) for pointing out the reference, and to Prof. David Masson for a transcription of the passage. It is not, therefore, an 'overlooked allusion to Macbeth' to which Mr. Knight calls attention now."

THE death is announced of Sir William Cooze Seton, Bart., author of Notes on the Operations of the North-German Troops in Lorraine and Picardy; of M. Gaillardin, author of a Histoire du Moyen-Age, Les Trappistes, ou l'Ordre de Cîteaux au XIX^e Siècle, &c.; of Dr. John Stenhouse, F.R.S., well known by his chemical researches in the laboratories of the University of Glasgow and Anderson's College; of Dr. J. Heller, a contributor to the Monumenta Germaniae; of Dr. Arnold Ruge, "father of the German Revolution," author of numerous political works, and translator into German of the Letters of Junius and the works of Courier; and of Mr. J. T. Towson, author of Practical In- formation on the Deviation of the Compass, for the Use of Masters and Mates of Iron Ships.

WE have received The Future of Palestine, by B. Walker (Nisbet); Forty Coming Wonders, fourth edition, enlarged, by the Editor of the Christian Herald (Christian Herald Office); The Orthoëpist, by Alfred Ayres (New York: Appleton and Co.); Bankruptcy Reform, by T. L. R. Davison, and The Adhesive Stamp: a Fresh Chapter in the History of Post Office Reform, by P. Chalmers (Effingham Wilson); A Complete Course of Problems in Practical Plane Geometry, new, revised, and enlarged edition, by J. W. Palliser (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.); Report of the Kew Committee for the year ending October 31, 1880 (Harrison); Conscious Matter, by W. Stewart Duncan (Bogue); Ralph Allen, John Palmer, and the English Post Office, by Jerom Murch (Longmans); The Apostle of Ireland and his Modern Critics, by W. B. Morris (Burns and Oates); The Sabbath: Presidential Address to the Glasgow Sunday Society, by John Tyndall, F.R.S. (Longmans); Studies in the Early History of Institutions, by D. W. Ross, III. (Cambridge, Mass.: Sever); Thoughts on Theism, revised and enlarged (Tribner); Memoir of Governor Andrew, by Peleg W. Chandler (Boston: Roberts Bros.); The British Almanac of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge for 1881 (printed for the Stationers' Company); Fancy Pigeons, by J. C. Lyell, Part VIII., The Practical Fisherman, Part XIII., and The Book of the Rabbit, Part V. (Bazaar Office); La Téléscopie électrique basée sur l'Emploi du Sélénium, par Adriano de Paiva (Porto); Selected Essays (University Philosophical Society, Trinity College, Dublin) (Dublin: Browne and Nolan); Wild Roses of Cape Ann, and other Poems, by Lucy Larcom (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin and Co.; London: Tribner); Irish Land as viewed from British Shores (Blackwood); The Year-Book of Photography and Photographic News Almanac for 1881 (Piper and Carter); Catechisms for the Young (Church of England Sunday School Institute); The Day of Rest for 1880 (Strahan); &c.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

ALMOST all the articles in the current issue of the Antiquary are worth reading, and some of them are of permanent value. We must except from this catalogue, however, the paper on the spelling of Shakspeare's name. There are but few subjects of enquiry that are useless, but this is surely one of them. In the sixteenth and early part of the seventeenth centuries the spelling of surnames was quite arbitrary. It is no uncommon thing to find one name spelt in three or four different ways in a single document. If a bundle of Shakspeare's letters were, by some piece of unlooked-for good fortune, to be brought to light, we should be much surprised if the signature in every case contained the same number and arrangement of letters. Mr. Blades contributes a paper on "The First Printing Press at Oxford," which is marked by his usual modesty and fullness of treatment. We cannot flatter him by saying that the question as to whether 1468 or 1478 is the true date of the introduction of printing into that university is set at rest by him, for we believe that wrong-headed folk will continue to argue about it for ever. The evidence for both the dates is most carefully given, and we have no manner of doubt that Mr. Blades is right in believing 1478 to be the true one. Mr. Gomme's article on "Some Traditions and Superstitions connected with Buildings" is important, as it connects together widely scattered fragments of folk-lore on a most curious subject. We hope that this short paper is to be regarded but as a specimen brick of a house he hopes to build,

Mr. Cornelius Nicholson contributes a careful account of the Roman villa which has recently been found at Brading. Among the mosaic ornaments discovered there is a medallion representing "a composite creature, part man and part cock." Mr. Nicholson suggests more than one possible explanation of this. It is, perhaps, not unduly rash to assume that it is a symbol connected with the worship of Mithras.

THE Nineteenth Century, among other articles suggested by the crisis in Ireland, contains one by Mr. F. Seeböhm, upon "The Historical Claims of Tenant Right," which deserves to be read in conjunction with a recent pamphlet, entitled The Case of Ireland Stated, by Mr. T. de Courcy Atkins. Both writers dwell upon the tribal form of landholding, which endured in Ireland longer probably than in any other part of Western Europe. Mr. Seeböhm goes on to show that the modern demand for tenant-right can be connected historically with the primitive customs of the sept. He quotes from Sir John Davis and Sir William Petty several passages which indicate that in the seventeenth century they were prepared to recognise rights in the Irish cultivator analogous to those of the copyholder in an English manor. Unfortunately, the progress of economical change, which ran its natural course in England, and on the Continent has sometimes been accelerated by revolution, was checked in Ireland by the strong arm of an alien Government. What Mr. Seeböhm proves from history, that Mr. de Courcy Atkins formulates in the language of juristic philosophy. As a companion to these studies, it would be very valuable to have an historical examination of the two fundamental changes in English land-holding by which the villen first became a proprietor, and subsequently was merged in the tenant-farmer.

IN Blackwood appears an article "On Some of Shakespeare's Female Characters: by One who has Personated Them. I.—Ophelia," of which we made mention some time since as a pamphlet printed "for strictly private circulation." It bears the writer's signature, Helena Faucit Martin, and is made public in compliance with entreaties "past all refusing." The interest of the article is chiefly subjective; it tells us how an artist of distinction conceived and recreated the character of Ophelia; weaving from slender hints, or from none, a pretty romance about her heroine's childhood, infusing her own spirit into the character, until an Ophelia possessed of charm and individuality, whether Shakspeare's Ophelia or not, came into being on the stage. A critic standing away from the character would naturally seek for the original of Ophelia in the old History of Hamlet, and observe how Shakspeare, retaining some features, elevated that original; he would pursue the comparative method of study, and notice how about the Hamlet period it was such characters as Helena of All's Well and Portia of Julius Caesar that chiefly attracted Shakspeare; he would set special store upon the interpretation of so great a poet and so accomplished a stage-manager as Goethe. An artist rightly creates her impersonation out of her own personality, whence alone it can derive vital unity. And the confessions of artists are so rare that we may well feel grateful to Lady Martin.

THE Contemporary Review for January does not contain much of general interest. Miss Wedgwood's study of Plutarch, as giving expression to moral sentiments which have much in common with Christian morality, is too slight and too restricted in its limits to contribute much to the interesting subject which it raises. Prof. Jevons calls attention to a writer on political economy who is almost unknown in England, Richard Cantillon, and whose history and nationality are so obscure that it cannot be clearly discovered whether his treatise was written in English or French. Prof. Green, in a style that might serve as a model of courtesy and modesty in polemics, replies to Mr. Hodgson's criticism of his strictures on Mr. Herbert Spencer. The best article is that on "The Jews in Germany," by the author of German Home Life; it is full of the sarcastic vigour of English common-sense.

Macmillan's Magazine is chiefly dedicated to Mr. Henry James's tale. An article by the Rev. W. Benham on the Parish Registers of Margate seems more appropriate to the Transactions of an archaeological society. Mr. Arthur Evans gives an account of "Christmas in the Black Mountain;" his object is to connect the Yule-tide rites which he there observed with primitive Ancestor worship. As another article is to follow, it would be premature to judge of the success of his attempt.

GEORGE ELIOT.

A FEW words of deep regret were all that were possible to us when first we heard of the death of George Eliot. Time was wanting in which to say more; it was needful to prune the words and control the thoughts which swelled and thronged at the news of that loss—so great to English literature, so far greater to those who had the high honour to call her friend.

Not even yet is the hour for a true estimate, though more is demanded than our first brief tribute of respectful sorrow, and many of our readers may wish, in no spirit of idle curiosity, to hear more, and more accurately, about a great and beautiful soul. So much, however, has been said and written on the facts of an outwardly uneventful life that only a slight summary is here needed, which may, in passing, correct a few trifling inaccuracies to which some credit has been given. Mary Ann Evans was born near Nuneaton, in Warwickshire, on November 22, 1820. Her father was a land agent, administering estates to the management of which his son has succeeded; but he had begun life as a carpenter and joiner, a well-to-do village tradesman. There can be no doubt that Mr. Burge and Caleb Garth, though not direct portraits, are, as far as their occupation and outward surroundings are concerned, based on the recollections of these two stages in her father's life. Her mother died when she was fifteen, but that there had been deep love between mother and daughter is clear from the way in which she always speaks of that relation, while in the autobiographical Sonnets called Brother and Sister is one touch which speaks volumes.

"Our mother bade us keep the trodden ways,
Stroked down my tippet, set my brother's frill,
Then with the benediction of her gaze
Clung to us lessening, and pursued us still Across the homestead to the rookery elms."

The keynote of the Sonnets is her love for her brother in childhood's days, till school parted them. Afterwards came a greater separation, when

"the dire years whose awful name is change
Had grasped our souls still yearning in divorce,
And pitiless shaped them in two forms that range,
Two elements which sever their life's course."

The story of Tom and Maggie Tulliver is the story of her own childish affection for her brother, and, with differences, the story of their later severance.

One more passage in her early life, noted in the Sonnets, was remembered also in her fiction; it is that in which she speaks of her own dread of the Gipsies who played so large a part in Maggie Tulliver's adventures.

Her early education at Coventry, and her later teaching by the vicar of that parish, together with her studies alone, have all been so well and so accurately told in the Pall Mall Gazette from information supplied by one of her oldest friends that it were superfluous to travel over the same ground. It may only be said, in addition, that those true friends stood by her when family differences came for religion's sake, in a day when toleration by elders of a wayward child's views was less understood than now. Through those same friends she became accidentally associated with the first literary work of her life.

In 1844 Strauss's Das Leben Jesu was exciting great attention in England, and it was determined by a party assembled at the house of the late Mr. Joseph Parkes that those present should furnish the necessary funds for English translation and publication. The work of rendering the book into English was entrusted to a lady then about to be married to Mr. C. C. Hennell, one of the subscribers; and by her half the first volume as it now stands was translated. Her marriage to Mr. Hennell put a stop to her work, and it was transferred by her husband to her friend and bridesmaid, Miss Evans. When it was ready for publication, however, the subscribers' zeal had waxed cold—only two of the original twelve were ready with their contribution, and the main expense fell on Mr. Joseph Parkes. £20 was the total sum paid to Miss Evans for the translation of this important work. Her translation of Feuerbach is less known, but no less masterly, than that of Strauss, and we learn since her death that Spinoza's Ethics also occupied her during the years which she spent at Foleshill, near Coventry, up to 1849, in which year her father died. We trust that this translation may also see the light, which is now more possible since Mr. Pollock's exhaustive work on Spinoza has again brought this great philosopher's name before the world.

In 1849, after the death of Mr. Evans, his daughter went abroad with the same friends of whom we have spoken, and remained behind them to study at Geneva. On her return, we believe in 1851, she took up her abode with Dr. then Mr., John Chapman, publisher, in the Strand, who, with his wife, received several boarders in a house which was far too large for their own occupation. She became associated with Mr. Chapman as sub-editor of the Westminster Review. Her employment was mainly editorial, and her writing was as a rule confined to executing a very considerable part of the précis of contemporary literature at the end of each number. Some few articles, however, may be specified as hers. In 1852 she contributed an article on "Lady Novelists;" in 1854 one on "Woman in France: Madame de Sablé;" in 1856 an article on "George Forster, the German Naturalist;" in 1857, a very remarkable study of Young and Cowper, called "Worldliness and Other-Worldliness;" in 1859 a paper on "Weimar and its Celebrities." Two of these especially deserve careful study by those interested in the after-career of George Eliot. It has been noted as a fault by many critics of her later style that she so constantly introduced illustrations from physical science; and it has been said that these have been brought in somewhat at random because she happened in later life to have her attention specially directed to such studies. Others, however, have not taken this view; they have believed that the studies were really a part of herself, and as such found expression in all that she wrote. In the article "Worldliness and Other-Worldliness" we find the following sentences:—

"Where the fully developed insect is parasitic, we believe the larva is usually parasitic also, and we shall probably not be far wrong in supposing that Young at Oxford, as elsewhere, spent a good deal of time in hanging about possible and actual patrons."

And again,

"He [Dr. Doran] has ascertained that the internal emotions of prebendaries have a sacerdotal quality, and that the very chyme and chyle of a rector are conscious of the gown and band."

Again, from another article,

"The woman of large capacity can seldom rise beyond the absorption of ideas; her physical conditions refuse to support the energy required for spontaneous activity; the voltaic pile is not strong enough to produce crystallisations."

These are selected at random from many passages with a strong affinity to those to which so much exception has been taken in Middlemarch and Daniel Deronda. On the other hand, there are expressions about virtue or religion as they really existed, and not in the imagination of poets and divines, which are quite in the manner of her later works. She speaks of religion existing

"in the emotions of a man dressed in an ordinary coat, and seated by his fireside of an evening, with his hand resting on the head of his little daughter; in courageous effort for unselfish ends, in the eternal triumph of justice, in pity for personal resentment, in all the sublime self-renunciation and sweet charities which are found in the details of ordinary life."

It would take too long, however, to point out in detail the resemblances in style between the earlier and the later work. A passage from the article on Mme. de Sablé has a far deeper and more personal bearing. It is that in which George Eliot speaks of marriage. She is noticing

"the laxity of opinion and practice with regard to the marriage-tie. Heaven forbid that we should enter on a defence of French morals, most of all in relation to marriage! But it is undeniable that unions formed in the maturity of thought and feeling, and grounded only on inherent fitness and mutual attraction, tended to bring women into more intelligent sympathy with men, and to heighten and complicate their share in the political drama. The quiescence and security of the conjugal relation are, doubtless, favourable to the manifestation of the highest qualities by persons who have already attained a high standard of culture, but rarely foster a passion sufficient to rouse all the faculties to aid in winning or retaining its beloved object—to convert indolence into activity, indifference into ardent partisanship, dullness into perspicuity."

We have made the above extract because it were pedantry, or, worse, hypocrisy, to pass over in silence the relation which grew up between George Eliot and George Henry Lewes, whose name she bore for almost the whole remainder of her life. It would be, moreover, to do her gross wrong; for silence implies that the position maintained in the face of the world, and never concealed, was one for which there was need of excuse. The unusual circumstances may demand a word of explanation, no more. Mr. Lewes was separated from his wife as completely as though death had come between them. There is no need to apportion blame or disinter the buried past, but all his married life was over. Without a thought of self, Mary Ann Evans entered into a relation which neither first nor last was considered by her wrong or blameworthy. Had she been free to do so, she would no doubt have thought it well to follow the usages of society and surround the union with all traditional sanction; but that was not possible, and to her the union was permanent and sacred. It is clear that her view of marriage was not the conventional one. It is probable that only a series of untoward circumstances made her act upon her convictions; but she carried them out openly and fearlessly, considering herself, and considered by her friends, as Mr. Lewes' wife, acting as a tender mother to his boys, who repaid her care with true filial affection. She sought no acquaintances, but to those who sought her she was accessible, neither flaunting her difference of opinion, nor concealing what was unusual in her position. If any were deceived, they were not deceived by her or by Mr. Lewes. Few would maintain that to every visitor at their house it was their duty to proclaim that the Church had not blessed their marriage. What those who came there saw was a companionship second to none in all "mutual society, help and comfort that the one ought to have of the other both in prosperity and in adversity." They saw a versatile, high-strung, somewhat wayward nature restrained, raised, ennobled, and purified by his association with her, so strengthened, so raised, that many who had only thought that they admired the intellectual dexterity and bright adaptiveness of the man were affected at his death by a thrill of surprise on finding how deeply they had valued and loved him.

It was after she thus became the wife of Mr. Lewes that all the works by which she is best known were given to the world. We do not intend here to review them. Enough to say that to us it seems no exaggeration to hold that, in the delineation of character and the subtle analysis of human motive, we must go back to Shakspeare to find her superior. There have been greater story-tellers; we need only mention Sir Walter Scott. In individual scenes as well as in plot Sir Walter, at his greatest, is greater. Nothing that George Eliot has ever written approaches the wonderful scene in which Jeanie Deans pleads her sister's cause before Queen Caroline in Richmond Park. But George Eliot has been, is, and will be no mere writer who can amuse a leisure hour; nor is she only a literary study or an intellectual delight, but her wish is fulfilled that she might "be to other souls

A cup of strength in some great agony,
Enkindle generous ardour, feed pure love,
Beget the smiles that have no cruelty."

While the authorship of the earlier books was known but to very few, and George Eliot as a distinct personality had scarce become visible to the London world, men had not discovered what was the religious creed she held. That she was deeply religious none could doubt. It was clear she upheld a lofty morality, stringent, inexorable, without evasion or escape; yet, though she could fling herself with almost passionate fervour and devotion into the feelings of Dinah pleading with the stolid Midland intellectuals and striving to bring home a sense of sin to Hetty's poor little soul, or into Savonarola's sermons to believing Italian Catholics, the orthodox did not hear their shibboleth. The writer was deeply interested in creeds and in their effects upon the mind of man. They all seemed a part of his development. She never contemplated the final rest of man in any which had yet been formulated.

In a very valuable paper in the Home and Foreign Review Lord Acton was the first to point out her extreme unorthodoxy, and what, of course, he could not but consider the dangerous positivism underlying all she taught. Positivism was, indeed, the religion in which she rested. It was not, perhaps, the exact form in which the Religion of Humanity is maintained by any one school. She held it "with certain scholarly reservations;" but, on the whole, Comte formulated her religious views, and in the light of his teaching the past became to her intelligible. Hers was not the attitude of one who "sat apart holding no form of creed, but contemplating all;" rather was it that of one who had assimilated whatever is deepest, truest, most human in every creed, whose love and sympathy with men were so great that all which has aided and strengthened her fellows was to her sacred, benign, and beautiful.

Therefore it was that some of those who stood by her coffin when the last words were said thought the service, however touching in itself, both inadequate and inappropriate. They could well have wished either that words should have been spoken by some of those who more nearly held her belief—since she was not a Unitarian nor even a Theist—or else that the rite should have been that of the Church of England, a service so far more beautiful than any garbled portion of it, one which means so much to the believer, and is to him who does not believe the fair expression of a faith past for him, but still held by the majority of the nation. It is not for us, however, to complain that those most concerned had the service which seemed best to them. Our words are rather spoken in the hope that the slight sense of unreality which struck on the hearts of some at the grave of her they loved may lead to a closer perception of the need of reality for themselves at that supreme moment.

Those who were admitted to the friendship of George Eliot would be indeed blameworthy if they raised the veil too far from the home in which they knew her for so many years, and that second home, so full of promise and of affection, after she became the wife of Mr. Cross. She chose to keep her public and her private life apart. She wrote and is criticised as George Eliot. She was known to her friends under her private names, and her home should be as inviolate as that of anyone who had not filled a public position. Yet it may not be unfair to say that those who knew her carried away from her presence the remembrance of a charm even greater than any which lay in her writings; of a low sweet voice vibrating with emotion; of language in which, without the faintest tinge of pedantry, every sentence was as complete, as fully formed, as though written in her own published works; of a knowledge and a breadth of thought which, had we not found them in her, the pride of the male intellect would have designated masculine; of a sympathy which never failed, a toleration almost excessive, and of a nature which, with all this weight of learning and greatness, was feminine and tender throughout. How many young men, both of this country and of others, remember that, when they were as yet unrecognised, George Henry Lewes saw that the sacred fire burnt in them, and his doors were opened to receive them; his kindly hand and that of his greater wife were stretched out to give them encouragement on their path!

So much as was possible of herself she put into her writings. Perhaps no other soul but Shakspeare's is so completely manifested in written words; that this is largely recognised was shown by the crowd which pressed round her grave. Men and women who had never known her in life were there as at the grave of a personal friend, with violets in their hands to strew on her remains. They came with deep grief in their hearts and strong emotion written on their features. It was pathetic to see some of the greatest minds, as we judge them, known to our London society, grouped there at the grave, silent, reverent, and sad, as though feeling that a greater than they was laid to rest.

Many who knew George Eliot can use no more fitting words in regard to her than those in which one, a gifted woman also, has recorded her own feelings on the death of Mazzini, her master and her friend:—

"I am not proud for anything of mine,
Done, dreamed, or suffered, but for this alone:
That the great orb of that great human soul
Did once deflect and draw this orb of mine,
Until it touched and trembled on the line
By which my orbit crossed the plane of his;
And heard the music of that glorious sphere
Resound a moment; and so passed again,
Vibrating with it, out on its own way."

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- FÉTIS, F. J. Biographie universelle des Musiciens. Supplément et Complément publiés sous la Direction de M. Arthur Pougin. T. 2. Paris: Firmin-Didot.
- GÖRDEK, K. Grundriss zur Geschichte der deutschen Dichtung. 3. Bd. 6. Hft. Dresden: Ehlermann. 4 M.
- JAHREBUCH der königl. preussischen Kunstsammlungen. 2. Bd. 1. Hft. Berlin: Weidmann.
- KAWCZYŃSKI, M. Studien zur Literaturgeschichte d. XVIII. Jahrh. Moralische Zeitschriften. Leipzig: Matthes. 5 M.
- KNOX, A. A. The New Playground; or, Wanderings in Algeria. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 10s. 6d.
- RACINET, A. Le Costume historique. 10^{me} Livr. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 12 fr.
- ROMANET DU CAILLAUD, F. Histoire de l'Intervention française au Tong-King. 1872-74. Paris: Chaillet elod. 6 fr.
- SCARSON, P. Œuvres de. Notice par A. France. Paris: Lemerre. 5 fr.
- STIRLING, E. Old Drury Lane: Fifty Years' Recollections as Author, Actor, and Manager. Chatto & Windus. 21s.
- SWINBURNE, A. C. Studies in Song. Chatto & Windus. 7s.
- TEMPLE, Sir Richard. India in 1880. Murray. 16s.
- VOITURE, V. Lettres de, publiées par Octave Uzanne. Paris: Lib. des Bibliophiles. 16 fr.
- WEBB, T. E. Faust. From the German of Goethe. Longmans. 12s. 6d.

HISTORY.

- AGNETH, A. Ritter v. Briefe der Kaiserin Maria Theresia an ihre Kinder u. Freunde. 1. u. 2. Bd. Wien: Braumüller. 16 M.
- FORSTER, C. T., and F. H. BLACKBURN-DANIELL. Life and Letters of Ogier Ghiselin de Busbecq. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 24s.
- HEISTERBERG, B. Ueb. den Namen Italien. Eine histor. Untersuchung. Freiburg-i-B.: Mohr. 4 M.
- HEBRIE, E. Memoir of the Public Life of the Right Hon. J. C. Herries. Murray. 24s.
- KLOPP, O. Der Fall d. Hauses Stuart. 9. u. 10. Bd. Wien: Braumüller. 16 M.
- LECOY DE LA MARCHE, A. Saint Martin. Tours: Mame. 25 fr.
- MONUMENTA Germaniae historica inde ab anno Chr. 500 usque ad annum 1500. Poetorum latiorum medii aevi tomus I. pars I. Rec. E. Duemmler. Berlin: Weidmann. 10 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERTRAND, A. L'Aperception du Corps humain par la Conscience. Paris: Germer Baillière.
- CARNER, B. Grundlegung der Ethik. Wien: Braumüller. 9 M.
- FRAGMENTA SILURICA e dono C. H. Wegalin. Opus studio Nicolai Petri Angelini inchoatum, edendum curavit G. Lindström. Stockholm: Samson. 30s.
- WERNKE, K. Johannes Duns Scotus. Wien: Braumüller. 10 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- APPENDICE al Corpus Inscriptionum Italicarum ed ai suoi supplementi di A. Fabretti. Edita per cura di G. F. Gamurrini. Turin: Loescher. 12 fr.
- GODEFROY, F. Dictionnaire de l'ancienne Langue française. 50 Fasc. Paris: Vieweg. 5 fr.
- LAURE, M. Armenische Chrestomathie. Wien: Braumüller. 6 M.
- MARTZNER, E. Altenglische Sprachproben. 2. Bd. Wörterbuch. 7. Lfg. Berlin: Weidmann. 3 M. 60 Pf.
- RINGER, Zum Sprachgebrauch d. Caesar. I. (Et, que, atque [ad]). Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- SMITH, George. The Chaldean Account of Genesis. Ed. Prof. Sayce. Sampson Low & Co. 18s.
- WAGNER, E. Da M. Valerio Martiale poetarum Augustae aetatis imperatores. Königsberg-i-P.: Hartung. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ROMAN INSCRIPTION DISCOVERED AT BROUGH-BY-STANEMORE.

Liverpool: December 1880.

In your number of December 4 there appears a letter from Dr. Hübner, of Berlin, on the subject of this stone, of which I published an account in the ACADEMY of November 13.

Though very glad to see that Dr. Hübner has turned his great experience and acumen towards the solution of the inscription, I am sorry to have to differ from him on one or two points connected with it, as previously, when difficult inscriptions have been forwarded to both of us simultaneously, our readings have been identical.

Dr. Hübner's remark, that the stone probably came from Old Penrith, is very extraordinary. Brough, where it was found, is the Roman Verterae, garrisoned, as the Notitia tells us, by the Numerus Directorum (a sort of guides). The remains of this walled castrum still exist. A mediaeval castle stands within its area built out of its stones, and the church at a little distance was no doubt erected from the same convenient quarry. It is highly improbable, then, that the builders of the fabric should proceed twenty-six miles to the north, passing two large-walled castra (Kirkby Thore and Brougham) on the way, to bring this stone. We may therefore at once dismiss the Cohors II. Gallorum from having had any share in its erection. It would also (assuming for the moment Dr. Hübner's reading of D E C in the last line to be correct), I think, be irregular, according to Britanno-Roman inscriptions at least, to find a decuria named as belonging to a cohort, even though that cohort had its proportion of cavalry (equitata). Indeed, Dr. Hübner seems to admit this, as he says subsequently that "the office of decurio fits the cavalry numerus." Had the stone been an altar, there would have been nothing unusual in a centurion erecting it. But the inscription is a commemorative tablet dedicated to the reigning emperors, evidently one of the class of fine slabs placed over the gateways of the castra, and which, in Britain at least, are stated in the inscriptions to have been executed (instante) under the superintendence of the commanding officer, generally a Tribunus or Praefectus. But Dr. Hübner's reading would make it to have been superintended by a corporal (decurio). This is highly improbable also, and decurio, in its civil sense, is out of the question in the learned doctor's reading.

I am quite willing to accept Dr. Hübner's reading of the end of the third line; what now looks in its worn state like M C I I may have been A V G E T, as it would be in accordance with the rest of the inscription. I must, however, renew my statement (which Dr. Hübner neither accepts nor contradicts) that traces of letters on a smaller scale exist in the large space between the ends of the first and second lines; also, that the letters at the close of the second line, P M., are not in their normal position, I admit. In the fourth line Dr. Hübner recognises another N before I N O. (I do not, for typographical reasons, give the ligulate form here.) If the inscription does commemorate Caracalla, of course this would be correct; but this rests upon the correct reading of the sixth line, for the fifth is utterly obliterated. It is somewhat singular that in this line both Dr. Hübner and myself recognise (though in different forms) the name of Clemens. He reads the commencement of the part visible as N T E in a ligulate form, which I cannot detect; to my eye the commencement seems C L E M E, followed by two letters, which I make N T; but Dr. Hübner D E. As to the D, there appears to be an abrasion of the stone in the form of an arc of a circle, with the extremities resting upon the first upright stroke of the N, thus giving somewhat the appearance of D, but the diagonal and second upright strokes of the N seem clearly visible through the abrasion. The next letter, Dr. Hübner's E, is at present simply an upright stroke, with a horizontal one resting on the top of it—to my eye, T. The next letter, C, we are both agreed upon, but here Dr. Hübner stops. To me S are plainly visible beyond, with a smaller s outside the margin (a common practice with Roman stone-cutters). I consider it almost certain that consuls are named in this line, and, as before said, prefer (T E R T V L L E T) C I E M E N T C O S S as the original inscription; but I do not state these names absolutely. I cannot make out D E C.

Dr. Hübner remarks that C O S S. (for C O S.) "would have been a blunder." Are these letters, then, a blunder in Nos. 351 and 371 of his volume of Britanno-Roman inscriptions? There he adopts them.

Without extending this letter to a greater length by quoting authorities, I may say that Dr. Hübner must be aware that Caracalla was appointed Caesar in the first half of the year

A.D. 196, before the defeat of Albinus, and that we have a law bearing his name dated June 30 of that year; also that he changed that title for the one of Augustus circa February A.D. 198, so that were he named in the inscription (as Dr. Hübner asserts) its date might be any time between June A.D. 196 and February A.D. 198. Yet Dr. Hübner fixes it absolutely as of A.D. 197. There is not a shadow of evidence in favour of such a date for it, or for the Ilkley inscription which he names. In fact, he gives the date with a query when treating of the latter (C. I. L., vol. vii., No. 203). Though aware of the existence of this inscription before the publication of my last annual list in the Archaeological Journal, I waited to ascertain if more could be made out of it. The photograph Dr. Hübner names I also received, but, not satisfied with it, obtained another, as well as the opinion of several antiquaries based on the stone itself. W. THOMPSON WATKIN.

PS.—Had P I . , P I O . , or P E R . been at the end of the second line, I should of course at once have adopted it.

MR. GURNEY'S "POWER OF SOUND."

Rock, Alnwick: Jan. 3, 1881.

I believe it will be proper for me to make a few remarks on Mr. Gurney's letter in the ACADEMY of January 1.

1. I certainly understood that the admission first referred to included the whole of the preceding discussions; of course Mr. Gurney may not have intended this. As to my own opinion of the discussions, I see no reason to change anything.

2. I do not quite agree with Mr. Gurney as to the experience in question. It is in my opinion well established, and I have my own experience to appeal to, that any novel melodic elements, though they may be disagreeable at first, can by study and custom be appreciated, without sacrificing the appreciation of the existing scale. I pass freely from the piano with Beethoven and Mozart to the enharmonic organ, with commas and harmonic sevenths, and other matters, constituting distinctly new melodic elements, as well as modifications of temperament. But no doubt an education was needed to attain this. I think Mr. Gurney misunderstands the sense in which the phrase "quarter-tones" was probably meant to be used. My experience is that, whenever a musical person, wholly ignorant of the subject of temperament, is introduced to my enharmonic organ, or anything of the kind, he says, "Ah! you have the quarter-tones, I suppose." I have, therefore, become accustomed to regard the phrase as the expression used for temperament modifications by persons ignorant of the subject. And I still think that this was probably what was intended by the person of whom Mr. Gurney speaks as longing for quarter-tones.

3. Possibly I made the mistake about the inverted commas. I have not the book here to refer to. But it still seems to me that the important distinction in question is not realised. A man may "distinguish," even write down, the parts of a polyphonic composition after hearing it, by dint of long practice and education, through modes of perception which I cannot here enter into, and yet be quite incapable of presenting to himself the two, three, four, or more simultaneous notes of a chord in their melodic aspect. It is a matter of minute subjective analysis. Though it may be an ordinary feat of musicianship for the higher organisations to hear different notes thus simultaneously in their melodic aspect, it is a power certainly only attainable by a small percentage of the population. And I have found musicians who had great difficulty in realising the nature of the question as to their possession of this power, and certainly some who ultimately answered it in the negative.

R. H. M. BOSANQUET.

SPELLING REFORM.

Algiers: Dec. 31, 1880.

In correcting Dr. Littledale's misstatements as to the history of recette, Mr. Sweet has himself made one or two which, though of no consequence for his argument, are too important to remain uncorrected. Writing without access to any books or to my own notes, and with a memory temporarily enfeebled by bodily weakness, I am, however, unable to speak on all parts of the subject as definitely as I could wish.

Modern French recette is the phonetically exact descendant of Latin recepta; its oldest extant form is recele, and the later recette, followed by recepte—whose p was never sounded and has since been discarded—is, like the last, a merely orthographical variation. Receite, on the other hand, is (not the regular Old-French development of Latin receptum, which gave recet, Middle-English resset, but) a phonetically distinct form (not a distinct word), altered from recete by analogy of the Old-French verb receivre, which is the regular development of Latin recipere; whether the new form arose in Old French itself, or in Middle English, I cannot at present say. The former is a priori more likely, but I have no evidence at hand except a vague notion of having seen an Old-French reçoite, which would make probable the existence of an earlier recete, but neither have I any recollection of Middle-English forms, such as recette, receite, which would show that the primitive Old-French form recete had been borrowed. The never-sounded Early-Modern p of recepte is due to imitation of such Early-Modern French spellings as recepte, and not only misleads people to think that the English word was borrowed from Latin (or from Early Modern French) by eye, instead of from Old French by ear, but ignores the etymological fact that the t of recepte contains in itself both the p and the t of recepta—the p was first assimilated to the t, and the resulting double consonant was simplified before English borrowed the French word.

HENRY NICOL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, Jan. 10, 5 p.m. London Institution: "The French Revolution and the Various Histories of it," by Mr. Frederic Harrison.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: Anatomy (Demonstration, IV.), by Mr. J. Marshall.
TUESDAY, Jan. 11, 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Inaugural Address, by Mr. Abernethy, President.
8 p.m. Anthropological Institute.
8 p.m. Spelling Reform Association: "Manuscript Forms of New Letters," by Mr. J. B. Randall.
8.30 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: Anniversary Meeting; "Notes on Early Babylonian History," II., by Mr. Theo. G. Pinches.
WEDNESDAY, Jan. 12, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Anatomy (Demonstration, V.), by Mr. J. Marshall.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "A Sanitary Protection Association for London," by Prof. W. Fleeming Jenkin.
8 p.m. Microscopical: "On Three Microspongiadae belonging to the Hexactinellids from the Deep Sea," by Prof. P. M. Duncan; "On the Aperture Series," by Mr. G. Sbadolt; "On the True Conditions of Stereoscopic and Pseudoscopic Effect in Microscopical Vision," by Prof. E. Abbe; "On a Species of Acarus believed to be unrecorded," by Mr. A. D. Michael.
THURSDAY, Jan. 13, 4.30 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Art of Popular Illustration," by Mr. H. Blackburn.
8 p.m. Mathematical: "On an Apparently Paradoxical Relation of the Circle, Parabola, and Hyperbola," by Mr. A. J. Ellis; "A Proof of the Differential Equation which is satisfied by the Hypergeometric Series," by the Rev. T. R. Terry; "On the Periodicity of Hyperelliptic Integrals of the First Class," by Mr. W. R. Westropp Roberts; "On the Tangents drawn from a Point to a Nodal Cubic," by Mr. R. A. Roberts.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, Jan. 14, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Anatomy (Demonstration, VI.), by Mr. J. Marshall.
8 p.m. Quekett.

SCIENCE.

History of North American Pinnipeds: a Monograph of the Walruses, Sea-lions, Sea-bears, and Seals of North America. By Joel Asaph Allen. (Washington: Government Printing Office.)

THIS is one of the many excellent books published at Washington for the United States Geological and Geographical Survey of the Territories, and given with unexampled liberality to numbers of European naturalists. Consisting of 785 pages, this history of the fin-footed aquatic carnivora is really a very exhaustive natural history of all the present and past members of the group. Every species has its synonymy, anatomy, external characters, sexual, adolescent, and individual variations, geographical variation, comparative speciology, geographical distribution, general history, and habits carefully recorded, and, in some instances, the method of capture also. Hence there is much that will interest the anatomist, zoologist, and economist; and those who pursue this last profession will find some remarkable passages explanatory of the evil results of fashion among civilised women upon the lives and prospects of less luxurious children of nature. Just as every gallon of spermaceti oil was said to contain a drop of human blood, so every seal-skin paletot has a gloss of hungry tears shed by starving savages.

"Fully one-third of the population south of St. Lawrence Bay perished the past winter (1878) for want of food, and half the natives of St. Lawrence Island died; in one village of two hundred inhabitants all died excepting one man. Mothers took their starving children to the burying-grounds, stripped the clothing from their little emaciated bodies, and then strangled them, or let the intense cold end their misery. It is heartrending to hear how they suffered."

"Capt. Cogan says that for every one hundred walruses taken a family is starved." "About 11,000 walruses have been taken and 30,000 or 40,000 destroyed this year." Walrus ivory and oil reflect the intensest human misery, and thus three highly important gold-producing adjuncts to the civilised world are accursed. It is not satisfactory to read,

"For my own part I cannot help thinking that the diminution in the number of seals caught near the principal Danish settlements has a great deal to do with the prevalence of consumption and other diseases among the native inhabitants of those places. Seals are becoming scarcer every year, and, in company with the bisou of the North American prairies, will ere long be of the past, and leave the poor Greenland and Red Indian to follow them."

It is a satisfaction to know that the English Government (1876) established a close-time for the protection of the seals during the period when the young are brought forth; but Mr. Carroll, on the other hand, states in a passage quoted by Mr. Allen, "I make bold to state that not less than from ten to twelve thousand pounds' currency worth of seal's pelts is lost to the country each sealing voyage (or season) by the present system of hunting carried on by the sealing masters and their crews." In the more scientific portion of the book Mr. Allen notices that the existing pinnipeds as a sub-order are divisible into three families—the walruses or Odobenidae, the eared seals or Otariidae, and the earless seals or Phocidae. The first two are nearly allied, and can be contrasted with the Phocidae, which are the most generalised.

"The walruses are really little more than thick, clumsy, obese forms of the Otarian type, with the canines enormously developed, and the whole skull correlatively modified. The walruses are merely elephantine Otariids, the absence or presence of an external ear being a feature of minor importance."

Hence Mr. Allen divides the pinnipedia into Gressigrada (Odobenidae and Otariidae) and Reptigrada (Phocidae). In the first group the hind legs are capable of being turned forwards and used in terrestrial locomotion, the neck is lengthened, the anterior limbs are nearly as long as the posterior, and the hind feet, susceptible of great expansion, have the three middle digits only with claws, and all the digits terminate in long narrow cartilaginous flaps. In the second group the hind legs are not capable of being turned forwards, and are not serviceable for terrestrial locomotion, the neck is short, the hind feet are capable of moderate expansion, all the digits have strong claws, and they have not the flaps. The anterior limbs are smaller than the posterior. The animals have a high cerebral development, are easily domesticated, exhibit strong social and parental affection, and defend their young with great persistency and courage. All are carnivorous, subsisting upon fish, mollusca, and crustacea. As a group they are characteristic of the Arctic, Antarctic, and Temperate portions of the globe, several of the genera being strictly Arctic or sub-arctic in their distribution. In the anatomical descriptions Dr. Murie's admirable essays in the Proceedings and Transactions of the Zoological Society of London are fully quoted; and the generic and specific determinations of the late Dr. Gray, of the British Museum—a grand zoologist, not a mere hardener and slicer of microscopic stuff—are very favourably noticed, and the criticisms on them are fair and properly stated. Van Beneden, Ray Lankester, Lamont, Robert Brown, and indeed every old or later naturalist concerned in these ponderous forms is in his proper place. Mr. Allen decides that there are two species of walrus—one Atlantic and the other Pacific—in its Arctic distribution; and, after a very elaborate treatise on the first, gives the old literature relating to it. The pictures, taken from Dr. Gray's book, of Morsus Norvegicus by Olaus Magnus, 1568, and of the Porcus Monstrosus Oceani Germanici by the same author, and of the Rosmarus by Gesner, A.D. 1569, are highly imaginative caricatures of nature by those old authors, and are given by Mr. Allen. The very admirable delineation of an adult and young walrus by Hessel Gerard, taken, however, from stuffed specimens, A.D. 1613, Mr. Allen states to be the only drawing which approximated the truth until a sketch was taken of a living form in the Zoological Gardens at London in 1853. Dividing the family Otariidae into the Hair seals or Sea-lions, and the Fur seals or Sea-bears, the author notices five species of the former and four of the latter group. Remarking that no species of these Eared seals is known from the North Atlantic, the author states that the Hair and Fur seals are about equally and similarly represented on both sides of the Equator, but they are confined almost wholly to the temperate and colder latitudes. The two groups have nearly the same geographical distribution, but, although they may frequent the same shores, they live apart. A most elaborate analysis of the species of the Earless seals—the Phocidae—which does great credit to the author, ends with the remarkable statement that no less than one hundred and three distinct specific and varietal names have been bestowed upon sixteen species, thus leaving eighty-seven of the names as synonyms. Evidently there ought to be a special circle in the Inferno for imaginative zoologists. Lesson and Gray have the credit of the largest amount of name-evolution. The Phocidae are found along the sea-shores of all parts of the temperate and colder parts of the globe, but those of the Southern Ocean belong, with one exception, to different genera from those whose habitat is in the Northern hemisphere. One sub-family is confined to the South temperate and Antarctic seas, while the other—the Phocinae—are strictly Northern, only two or three species reaching the middle temperate latitudes. The Monk seal of the Mediterranean and Black Seas lives around the Canaries, and a representative is found on the shores of Yutucan, Cuba, and Jamaica. All the other species are more Northern in their range, and one-half of them live in both of the great oceans, Phoca foetida being a winter resident of the icy shores of Davis Straits and Jan Mayen Island. The seal found in the Caspian and largely hunted there is Phoca caspica; it differs specifically from the seal of the great fresh-water lake Baikal, and both are allied to the Ringed or Arctic seal, Phoca foetida. The question of the origin of the two land-locked seals is referred to a Pliocene ancestor from the South. Mr. Allen may be proud of his very good book.

P. M. DUNCAN.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

It is stated that during a voyage on Lake Nyassa the Rev. Dr. Laws has recently discovered a fine protected bay on the eastern shore with coal close at hand. In default of a better position being found, it is not unlikely that the head-quarters of the missionaries will be moved to this spot from Livingstonia, which is not so healthy as could be wished.

In a letter to the China Inland Mission from Tsinchow, in the extreme North-west of China, Mr. Easton mentions the arrival at Lanchow, the capital of the Kansu province, of a Russian consul, attended by eighteen Cossacks, who demanded facilities for trade at Lanchow, Tsinchow, Hanchung, and all marts on the way to the coast.

IN order to bring the vast outlying region of Eastern Siberia into connexion with the Russian railway system, it is proposed to construct a line some two hundred miles long to Tiumen, whence there is a water-way in various directions by the Rivers Tura, Tobol, Irtysh, Obi, and Tom to Tomsk. From this point there is communication by road and water to Vladivostok on the coast of Russian Manchuria.

COL. PREJEVALSKY is expected to reach St. Petersburg on January 19, and will be received at the railway station by the committee of the Imperial Russian Geographical Society, of which he has just been elected an honorary member. An extraordinary meeting of the society will also be held in his honour.

THE last number of the Alpine Journal is an exceedingly full one, not so much in the number of its articles as in their quality. Mr. Whymper's "Expeditions among the Great Andes of Ecuador," simply consists of summary excerpts from his notes, arranged in diary form, and will be continued. They suggest so much in this curt shape that they will set the reader wishing for the detailed record of his enterprise, elaborated in his own delightful manner. "Wanderings in Ticino," by A. Cust, contains, as a first instalment, a very lively picture of the Val Maggia. Mr. D. W. Freshfield's "Notes on Old Tracks" is a gossip on the Dolomites by a true expert. His notes at the end of the paper ought to be translated into Italian and German, and circulated among those whom they concern; the geographical range of their application is very much wider than the author's present "track." The Rev. T. G. Bonney contributes an "In Memoriam" on the late Elijah Walton, and, as a geologist, does justice to his drawing of rocks. Mr. Frederick Pollock's "Peter Rubi" is reprinted from the St. James's Gazette. The section given to "New Expeditions" contains an unusually solid mass of well-arranged reports.

THE January number of the Monthly Record of Geography opens with Sir Bartle Frere's paper on Temperate South Africa, which is illustrated with a useful general map of the region. A brief account is next given by the Rev. T. J. Comber of his recent journeys in the interior of Congo, and their geographical results are embodied in a sketch map. Perhaps however, the most useful paper is one by the Rev. John Milum, in which he describes at some length the details of his recent journey from Lagos up the River Niger to Bida, the capital of Nupé, and Ilorin in the Yoruba country, but from the want of a map his progress is not always easily followed. Some of the geographical notes are of considerable importance and interest. Mr. Hore sends from Ujiiji some observations regarding the still unexplained phenomenon of the long-continued rise in the level of Lake Tanganyika, which, he maintains, cannot be accounted for by an unusual rainfall. A long note (with sketch map) gives the results of Pere Duparquet's investigations respecting the River Okavango or Cubango, by which he claims to have ascertained the true course of this little-known river. Mr. W. H. Dall, of the United States Coast Survey, next furnishes some details respecting last summer's work on the North-western coast of America in the neighbourhood of Behring Strait.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The Silurian Fossils of Girvan.—Dr. Nicholson, of St. Andrews, and Mr. Etheridge, of the British Museum, have recently issued the third fasciculus of their elaborate Monograph of the Silurian Fossils of the Girvan District in Ayrshire (W. Blackwood and Sons). This instalment, which completes the first volume, not only contains descriptions of the annelides and echinoderms of the Girvan fauna, but includes a great deal of supplementary matter, dealing with fresh materials obtained by Mrs. Robert Gray and other collectors. The authors are carrying on their labours with singular thoroughness, and are ably assisted by Mr. C. Berjeau, who illustrates the text with a series of excellent lithographic plates. It is a work which can never be a pecuniary success, and we hope, therefore, that the scientific societies which have assisted in defraying the cost of production will continue their support until the work is brought to completion.

FINE ART.

Peruvian Antiquities. The Necropolis of Ancon in Peru. A Series of Illustrations of the Civilisation and Industry of the Empire of the Yncas, being the Results of Excavations made on the Spot. By W. Reiss and A. Stübel (with the aid of the General Administration of the Royal Museums of Berlin). Part I. (Asher & Co.)

THIS beautifully illustrated work will contain the results of excavations in the ancient burial-ground of Ancon, on the coast of Peru, conducted by the authors, Messrs. Reiss and Stübel, during several months. The present issue is the first of ten parts. Ancon is a fishing village to the north of Lima, surrounded by a sandy plain strewn with stones; and the burial-ground is enclosed by a hill tract consisting of high naked ridges, offshoots from the maritime cordillera of the Andes.

The importance of these researches will be understood when it is remembered that they throw light on the history of a civilised race of which we know very little—a race that had lost its independence and had been conquered by the Yncas at least a century before the discovery of America, and which has since almost entirely disappeared, giving place to Negro slaves and the numerous shades of half-castes during Spanish times.

Yet a deep interest attaches to this once highly civilised people of the Peruvian coast valleys. These coast people, called Yuncas by their Ynca conquerors, formed distinct communities in the different valleys, which are separated from each other by sandy deserts, each under a chief more or less independent. The most civilised and powerful of these chiefs was the Chimú, whose palaces and city were in the valley where the town of Truxillo now stands, and whose sovereignty extended over other valleys to the south. The vast palaces of the Chimú now form extensive ruins, and justify the conclusion that his people had reached a high state of civilisation.

It is from the ruins of palaces and fortresses, and from the places of sepulture, that we must chiefly, but not entirely, glean a knowledge of the Ynca civilisation. Many things were buried with the dead. The bodies were wrapped in cloths woven in ornamental figures and patterns of different colours. The cloths were frequently ornamented with plates of silver cut into shapes of fishes and birds, and edged with fringes of feathers. With the mummies were deposited gold and silver vases with ornaments struck up from the inside, plaques representing groups of figures with trees in silver, pottery, knives and agricultural and warlike implements in bronze, and various implements for household use. In the Ancon burial-ground, it would not appear that chiefs or persons of importance were interred. Still, even in the humbler graves of Ancon, there are many indications of a people who had made advances towards high civilisation. There is a richly ornamented woollen dress, with elaborate feathers in artistically blended colours, beside simpler woollen garments. But the most interesting Ancon relics are the spinning implements and the work baskets of plaited grass, used as receptacles for them. The spindles are often beautifully painted.

Eventually, the scientific examination of the burial-places will yield a very complete history of the industry, customs, and habits of the coast people; and the work of Messrs. Reiss and Stübel is a most valuable contribution to our knowledge. The contents of graves are, however, only one source of information. The ruins of fortresses and palaces are another; showing, as they do, that the elaborate character of the internal arrangements of the buildings was necessary to meet the needs of a people having many wants; and that the tasteful designs on the arabesque walls ministered to the requirements of a cultured and artistic race.

There are also proofs of a dense population. The Yuncas set apart every square foot of ground that could be reached by water for cultivation. Hence, not only the burial-places, but the towns and fortresses are in the deserts, or quite on the edges of the fertile valleys. Their system of irrigation was as perfect as any that modern science has since adopted. They not only supplied the fields by regular turns, as Cieza de Leon tells us, but also raised the water to irrigate higher levels. In the valley of Nasca many vineyards and cotton estates owe their existence to an elaborate system of subterranean irrigation channels designed and constructed by the ancient coast people.

Fortunately, the pious care of a Spanish priest who was born in one of the coast valleys, and loved the people, has preserved to us a grammar of the Yunca language. It was printed at Lima in 1644, but, when the Mercurio Peruano was published in 1793, we are told that this language had entirely disappeared. Bishop Oré, of Guamanga, has also saved from oblivion one of the dialects of the Peruvian coast. It is curious that our slight knowledge of the religious ideas and superstitions of the Yuncas is due to the elaborate and systematic attempts of the Spanish priesthood to root them out and destroy all memory of them. We learn the details of Yunca beliefs from proceedings of councils of bishops, from the long strings of inquisitorial questions drawn up for use in the confessionals, and from the reports of zealous missionaries like Avila and Areche.

It is necessary, however, to remember that the coast people had been under the domination of the Yncas for at least a century before the arrival of the Spaniards; that there must be careful discrimination between the Yuca buildings and remains and those of the coast people; and that the coast languages had become largely corrupted with Quichua words. The serious study of coast civilisation renders a previous knowledge of the language, literature, and works of the Yuca people quite essential in order to qualify the student for the task of eliminating all Yuca elements from questions relating to coast archaeology, and of discriminating correctly what truly appertains to the ancient Yunca people.

It will thus be seen that there is a noble field for research in the coast valleys and deserts of Peru. The scientific examination of places of sepulture is not the only means of acquiring a more extended and more accurate knowledge of this most interesting people and of their civilisation, but it is one of the most important means. The labours of Messrs.

Reiss and Stübel will consequently be very highly appreciated by students of American archaeology, who will be duly grateful for this beautiful instalment of a really valuable work.

C. R. MARKHAM.

ART BOOKS.

MR. HAMERTON'S new edition of his Etching and Etchers (Macmillan) may be sought for for one of two reasons, or for the two together. It is published in luxurious form, and its display of etchings and reproductions of etchings has the attraction of combining an agreeable drawing-room book with a really furthermost illustrated commentary on the subject of which Mr. Hamerton writes. Therefore as a drawing-room book it may fairly be wanted. But the other reason for desiring it is, in truth, the more permanent, and that is that it contains a very considerable amount of fresh writing on the themes of which Mr. Hamerton knows, perhaps, the most, and in which his writing, which is always suggestive, is the most wholly satisfactory. We shall say a word farther on as to what are the additions to the book which seem to us the most important; but we may say here at once that it is to be hoped Mr. Hamerton will pretty promptly republish the text in a cheap form—a form more generally accessible. Three-fourths of the people who by this time will have possessed themselves of this luxuriously equipped volume will have done so with only the most superficial interest in the art of etching, and with no approach whatever to serious knowledge of the works of the masters with whom Mr. Hamerton deals. Substantial and independent interest—at all events well-directed interest—in the literature of art, in art history, and art criticism, hardly exists in England, except among highly cultivated people. The general public, even of the upper class, is ridiculously ignorant of what has been done in art, and by whom and under what conditions. Very many of the buyers of Mr. Hamerton's book will have bought in guileless simplicity that which they heard it was the right thing to buy—the luxuriously issued work of a most competent man, issued by a successful publisher. But there exist altogether beyond this public, which enquires for the finely presented volume, many readers and students, practically interested, who will regret if some of the most sensible criticism of the time is to be shut up permanently between the covers of an exceedingly costly tomo. The text should be in the hands of the people whose knowledge and whose studies best enable them to read it intelligently—neither with the blindness of confidence nor with the indifference of pure dilettanteism. We hope measures may promptly be taken to spread the text abroad in this form, and we hope so all the more because, good as many of the illustrations are, there is little in them to give the book a permanent value equal to that of the First Edition. The First Edition is plainly worth the money now asked for it; but this is not so plainly so. There are twenty-six etchings in this volume, and about two-and-twenty reproductions by the Amand-Durand process; but of the twenty-six etchings few are capital examples or presented in "states" that do them justice. Thus Le Bonhomme Misère of Legros is thin and hard, and the Billingsgate of Mr. James Whistler black, without richness, because without gradation. Unger's Sleeper after Ostade is one of the best; it is, indeed, as clever as it can be. Mr. Hole's Leith Docks is very good; Martial's Street Angle in the Rue St.-Roch is a quite admirable little thing. But few others reach the level of these, nor is Mr. Hamerton in the slightest degree to blame because they do not. The impossible was not within his reach, and in the issue of the First Edition he had chances which could scarcely recur. Such a Jacquemart as the Oriental Arms in the Third Edition is not to be named beside such a Jacquemart as the Trépié ciselé par Gouthière of the First. The Samuel Palmer of the First was worth the original price of the volume, for it is simply the most largely poetical work of an artist generally dainty. The Chauvel was almost as good as a drawing by Gainsborough; the Voyressat was in its delicate economy of means and simplicity of treatment a perfect work—though in Veyressat's case the representation of the master in the new volume is also remarkably fortunate. The reproductions by the Amand-Durand process are generally excellent; those of the Rembrandt—the Rembrandt Drawing—the Paul Potter, and the Vandyke are especially so. But as a whole, desirable as the New Edition is as a possession, we cannot rate it as highly as the First with regard to its illustrations. It is not in the nature of things that it shall remain pecuniarily valuable as long. Turning, however, to the text, we find exactly that improvement which would justify—as we said earlier—the issue of the new text separately and in an accessible way. The number of etchers treated of in the New Edition seems to be greater than in either the First or the Second; Mr. Hamerton has not been afraid to modify certain opinions previously expressed, and he has in nearly every case carefully explained the reasons for the modification. Thus he has noticed Ruysdael and Zeeman with a fullness not hitherto accorded them; he has written excellently on Tiepolo; he has enlarged his reference to Hollar; and, having praised a modern man—M. Jongkind—very much and very justly in the First Edition, he has not hesitated to say on the present occasion that Jongkind has, during the twelve years' interval, been doing worthless work. The change in the opinion expressed of him is one of the disadvantages belonging to writing which concerns itself with living men; but Mr. Hamerton, it must be remembered, does not desire to unseat what was said of old in praise of Jongkind's brilliant and expressive memoranda—the very shorthand of art—but merely to add that the memoranda have become more careless. Nor indeed is M. Jongkind the only etcher whom facile successes have made heedless, and in whom a too early reputation for mastery has induced a self-satisfaction quite as premature as his fame. The short chapter on Turner has been added to, and the material is "up to date." The Méryon chapter is perhaps hardly as worthy of the writer, and hardly as complete; but it must, nevertheless, be remembered that Mr. Hamerton was one of the first—probably the first—of English critics to draw attention to the merits of Méryon, since his original observations on that gifted artist who was the etcher of Paris were published as far back as twelve years ago. Incidentally—and quite apart from the criticism on particular etchers—there is a fair amount of fresh matter in Mr. Hamerton's book, and what there is is always in the best manner of the writer. That is a very true remark with which he ends his Preface. He has been speaking of the temper in which a man works, and he says of the Old Masters that "we might have something of their quiet skill, if we could only win back their serenity." To sum up our opinion of the book: while the illustrations are not equal to those of the First Edition, the text is even better, and that is Mr. Hamerton's proper part in the work. We must say again that separate publication should be given to this text.

WE have received from Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. the English edition of Mr. Koehler's translation of Maxime Lalanne's well-known Treatise on Etching. The value of the text has long been recognised, for it has served to many as a guide in their practical studies, and Mr. Koehler, the managing editor of the American Art Review, has been well advised in placing before M. Lalanne's work an introductory chapter of a yet more elementary nature than what comes first in M. Lalanne's own treatise. The object has been to make doubly easy the commencement of practical work in etching, and this purpose is no doubt attained. The beginner at etching cannot now want for guides to instruct him. To those not doing practical work the book may be somewhat attractive by reason of the etchings by M. Lalanne which illustrate it; for, though these are wrought chiefly for the object of practical illustration and not for any beauty that they may possess, the graceful point of M. Lalanne is enjoyable in several of them. They serve, at all events, to make comely a little volume which would otherwise be purely a lesson book. We are glad that Mr. Koehler's interest—and intelligent interest—in the matter has resulted in giving us this little practical treatise in English dress.

THE OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

(First Notice.)

WHEN it is remembered that this is the Twelfth Winter Exhibition of the Royal Academy, that each year the rooms have been crowded with fine and interesting works of deceased masters, and that the present collection shows no falling off in quantity or quality, some notion may be formed of the enormous artistic wealth of England. When it is added that some of the finest collections have not been touched, and others but slightly drawn upon, and that the contributors to the present exhibition are but comparatively few in number, it is evident that we may hope to witness these gatherings for many more years without exhausting their resources, and that sufficient interval will then have elapsed to make the re-appearance of most of the pictures delightful and fresh even to those who have seen them before. We may, therefore, look upon these exhibitions without any fear that we shall see the last of them, or that succeeding generations will miss the annual treat.

Except for the ordinary dangers of accident, such as fire, the oldest pictures are, we may hope, safe. The pigments that have remained as fresh as those of the two fine works ascribed to Wohlgemuth, with every appearance of reason, and that brilliant piece of old Franco-Italian work, which scarcely answers to the name of Dürer given in the Catalogue, seem able to defy Time; while the condition, bad as it is, of a few of the others, especially one or two of the Andrea del Sartos of Lord Cowper, is not likely to become worse. It is in the paintings of our own school—of such men as Reynolds and Turner—that we may most fear still further and unavoidable deterioration; but it is to be hoped that there is a limit even to this, and that such a lovely work, for instance, as the Earl of Carnarvon's portrait of Lady Elizabeth Herbert, afterwards Countess of Carnarvon, and Child (180), may ever retain its sunset glory. Luckily, the exquisite heads are in comparatively good preservation, and the rest of the picture has decayed with such rich variety of golden browns that the wreck is at least preferable to the more perfectly preserved accessories of some of the portraits here—such, for instance, as the wretched trees, &c., which disfigure Romney's fine full-length of Mrs. Banks of Kingston Lucy (175). This picture is remarkable, however, for the beauty of its drapery and the unusually (for Romney) clear, natural tints of the handsome face. Unfortunately, the dry, hard reds and pinks and the flatness of modelling which so often spoil his pictures are ob-servable in most of his other works here. In spite, however, of these defects, his portrait of Mrs. Grove of Ferne (23), with her sweet and capable face and beautifully sketched hands, made of some substance more delicate and transparent than flesh, is very enjoyable; and the face of The Hon. Mrs. Lane Fox (33) has much character; while more interesting, perhaps, than either is Mrs. Harvey of Ickwell-Bury's early portrait of Emma Lyon (fuller in face than in later pictures), when she was, according to the Catalogue, a pretty girl at the inn at Southall. If she could at that time look and pose herself like this, it is easy to imagine how quickly she must have made a conquest of the impossible artist. Altogether, these works of Romney's, including the portraits of Thomas Grove (11) and Sir George Prescott (174), though none of them are up to his highest level, show him in his fair relation to Reynolds and Gainsborough, as a bright star to the Sun and the Moon of art in England, in the latter half of the eighteenth century. So fertile in resource and motive was Reynolds—and this is one of the distinctions which must ever separate him from his rivals—that scarcely any selection from his pictures can be accepted as representative; but here are fair specimens of many of his moods. Of his fancy, which, when it worked by itself, was always somewhat thin and affected, we have Mr. Angerstein's Nymph and Pan (35) and Lord Carnarvon's Sleeping Cupid (34), the latter attractive for its colour, and, if without classic sentiment, pleasant as the picture of a rosy baby comfortably asleep on a cloud. The head is thoroughly natural, and seems scarcely to belong to the rather rudely blocked limbs; but it is a nice little picture. Of compositions in which his fancy was lit by humanity, as his Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse or Garrick between Tragedy and Comedy, we have no example here. Of his peculiar sense of the charms of childhood there is a good instance in the portraits of the Melbourne Family (136), belonging to Earl Cowper; Master Proby, afterwards First Earl of Carysfort, and Miss Proby (12) (a faded, but harmoniously faded, picture), are also refined and pretty; but the Angerstein Children (30) do not seem to have inspired the artist so much as their father, whose portrait (51) is singularly fine in expression. Of the other wall portraits by Sir Joshua, the most remarkable is the large canvas of Colonel Acland and Lord Sidney (181), supposed, by a very violent exercise of the imaginative faculty, to be shooting red deer with bows and arrows. "Alas!" these two gentlemen "had been friends in youth," but before the picture was finished they are said to have quarrelled, and to have shown that "to be wroth with one we love doth work like madness in the brain," by severally refusing to have anything to do with the picture. It now belongs to Lord Carnarvon, and is full of wasted power. In that special faculty in which Sir Joshua stands unrivalled among all artists—the power of seizing the fleeting expressions of tenderest domestic feeling—there are two pictures here which it would be difficult to match. One is the Lady Elizabeth Herbert and Child already mentioned. The naked boy, with his beautiful face, is looking up to his mother and caressing her chin with the tenderest expression of love and trust; while she, with "mind and music breathing from her face," looks at him, her features full of the proud condescension of a mother's love, lovely and loving, not quite smiling, but her whole face pregnant with an unborn smile. In the other (138), Lady Melbourne, the wife of the first Baron, is caressing her infant son, the Hon. Peniston Lamb, afterwards the celebrated Lord Melbourne. Here the mother, with alert attention, seems to be endeavouring to catch the moaning of the broken words babbled by the child into her ear. A fine and well-preserved portrait of Mrs. Charlotte Hanbury, mother of the first Lord Bateman (8), the sweet face of the first wife of the first Earl of Carysfort, the Master Proby of No. 12, painted with the tenderest appreciation of its delicate beauty, a pretty half-length of Mrs. Woodley (25), and an unfinished sketch of Kitty Fisher (58) close a list of Sir Joshua's which are as a rule remarkable for their good preservation.

His rival in life, but brother in death, Gainsborough, less varied in genius and less daring in effort, but more uniformly successful in the direction of his unique and well-understood powers, is represented first and chiefly by his superb portrait of the superb Viscountess Ligonier (177), wife of the second Viscount, a work which need fear no comparison with any single figure by Sir Joshua. The same may be said of his portrait of William Pitt (47), to whose thin, stiff figure he has managed to impart grace without loss of character, and to whose stubborn features he has given the intellect of the statesman and the presence of a gentleman. Happily hung as a pendant to this is the portrait of Lady Ann Elizabeth Rawdon, afterwards Countess of Ailesbury (43), with her straight but graceful figure and gentle face, holding with exquisite delicacy of touch a light scarf in her pretty fingers. His power of seizing character is well shown in his sprightly and carefully drawn head of Miss Tyler (31), and in his sweet, quaint, prim little Miss Tryon (38). Of his rustic subjects, the Earl of Carnarvon's Woodgatherers (172) is a fine example, but the two landscapes here do not do justice to his powers in this branch of art. Of his other pictures, none is so remarkable as a scene in the House of Commons, with the yellow waistcoat of the burly George Fox as the centre light. It does not appear a very impressive assembly, those rows of gentlemen in knee breeches and top boots closely packed in a little room with about as much architectural pretension as a village Methodist chapel; but it is none the less interesting for that, and, though the picture seems to have suffered much, and the subject was unsuitable to the artist, the play of delicate colour in the dresses of the members shows his hand.

There is much to admire in the sensitive modelling of the face of old Mrs. Locke of Norbury (39), by Sir Thomas Lawrence, and there is a brave air about his portrait of The Fifth Earl Cowper (26), but the contrast between these works and those of his predecessors is so painful that it is difficult to do justice to them on the same page. On the other hand, two fine works by Francis Cotes, Sir William Welby-Gregory's Chessplayers (49) and the Queen's portraits of The Daughters of Frederick Prince of Wales (142), and one by Copley (133) (The Daughters of George III., also from Buckingham Palace), can scarcely fail to raise the reputations of these artists; nor is there to be found a finer specimen of the art of Stubbs than his group of Melbournes and Milbanks (2), with its perfectly drawn horses, its fine finish being combined with great delicacy of colour and handling, especially in the figure and dress of Lady Melbourne. Interesting is Mr. Dashwood's Family Portraits (41) by Zoffany, painted in India about 1784 in his bright, definite manner. Opie's vigorous and careful, but sombre, pictures of himself, his father, and mother (44, 53, and 57), belonging to Lord Bateman, and James Ward's masterly likeness of himself (48), are also well worth attention.

In English landscape the exhibition would be weak but for two fine early works of Turner in good preservation. The Kilgarran Castle (173), belonging to Mr. Bischoffsheim, was exhibited in 1799, and is a splendid example of his manner, after the inspiration of his visit to the North, and, restricted as it is in colour, and darkened by time, its bright sky still gleams with wonderful power from the wall; while Lord de Tabley's Lake at Tabley (178), painted 1804, seems bright throughout as it was in that year. This curious work seems to be an instance of Turner's desire to render interesting as a picture a scene which had no great artistic attraction. The little lake is more like a busy port, so alive is it with boats, of which two, one going before the wind and the other close hauled, are crossing nearly at right angles; wonderful are the light dance of the water and the freshness of the cold, bright sky. Lord Durham's large Calm on the Medway, by Callcott (46), despite its fine, broad effect of sunshine and picturesquely-arranged shipping, seems very empty compared with Lord Wimbome's lovely little warm Sandy Bank, by Crowe (22), a Watermill (5) by Patrick Nasmyth, belonging to Mr. Howard-Keeling, and Mr. G. D. Leslie's boldly lit and broadly massed sketch by Constable, of Flatford Mill (13), which contain as much beauty as could well be pressed into such small areas. More striking, because less to be expected of the master, is Mr. Boulter's rare little night scene, by Morland, called Travellers at an Inn (24), with its soft effect of artificial light throwing up shadows on each side of the porch, lighting the underbranch of the tree, glistening on the sign-post, casting the horses and travellers into transparent darkness, and mellowing the rough, white wall with soft radiance; both this and Mr. Ames' pleasant landscape (10) show what he could do before he had sunk to be a picture-dealer's hack; and what he might have done if the promise of his youth had been fulfilled is shown still more clearly by Mr. Adam Macrory's beautiful series of Domestic Happiness (14, &c.), painted in that brief period of mental rest and physical temperance which followed his marriage. Unfortunately, the first of the set was lost, and that which was painted after the engraving by Thomas Richmond in its place, though clever, is manifestly inferior to the rest. Simple, but thoroughly effective, in design, showing the story of the girl's fall and penitence, with directness and refinement, full of skilful and finished painting, and glowing with a variety of pearly tints, these little pictures teach even more than the artist intended of the beneficent influence of domestic happiness. The series was no doubt suggested by those of Hogarth, whose Lady's Last Stake (55) is the only other picture here of the same class of domestic tragedy. It is as fresh and forcible as when painted for Lord Charlemont for £100. It fetched £1,585 at Christie's in 1874, and is now the property of Mr. Louis Huth. The picture is specially interesting as containing the portrait of Miss Salusbury (Mrs. Piozzi), and specially disagreeable from the utter absence of noble emotion in the tempter and tempted.

Among the curiosities of the exhibition should be noticed The Cricket Match, by Francis Hayman, belonging to the Marylebone Cricket Club, to which, unfortunately, no date is assigned; and a powerful picture of a boy tugging at a kite-string, by one Hugh Robinson, whose name is not mentioned in any history of English art. This work (1) belongs to Mr. Teesdale, and is remarkable in more respects than there is space to mention here. One of them is that the boy is dressed in green, and has a very green landscape behind him. In fact, Hugh Robinson attempted a more difficult feat than Gainsborough in his Blue Boy. Its success is not perfect, as the figure is not sufficiently relieved from the background.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE daily papers tell us that the Bishop Suffragan of Nottingham has bought the ruin of the old palace of the Archbishops of York at Southwell from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, with the intention of presenting it to the bishopric of Southwell. It is to be hoped that a "restoration" of the old palace is not intended. The bishop of the new see will want a house to live in, but some other site may surely be found for it than that already occupied by the most interesting fourteenth-century domestic remains in England.

SOME of the members of the French School at Athens, while making an excursion along the western coast of Asia Minor, have discovered close to Budrum (Halikarnassos) the longest Greek inscription yet known. It was lying at the bottom of a spring of clear water at which they had halted for their midday meal.

WE understand that the February part of the Magazine of Art will contain an article on Sir Frederick Leighton's house in Holland Park Road. The illustrations which accompany it are pronounced by the President to be the best reproductions of the various apartments in his residence that have been made.

THE Liverpool Autumn Exhibition of modern works, comprising paintings in oil, water-colour drawings, etchings, and sculpture, closed on the 6th ult. During the three months for which it was open no less than 77,830 persons paid for admission. Two hundred and sixty-nine works of art were sold, realising at catalogue prices £11,611 7s. 6d. This amount has only once been exceeded since the inauguration of the exhibition in 1871, viz.—in 1875, when the sales reached £12,299 18s. 6d. The profits arising from the exhibition are spent in pictures for the permanent collection of the Corporation, which is becoming a most extensive one. The pictures selected for purchase for the permanent collection this year are as follows:—The Village Lawyer (Carl Schloesser); Down in the Reeds by the River (Frank Walton); One of the Family (F. G. Cotman); Blanchisseuses (Alice Havers); Sunday Morning (J. Campbell Noble); and Moorland, Barmouth (Albert Hartland). The following works have been purchased and presented to the Gallery by Mr. J. A. Picton:—Weal and Woe (Charles Gregory); Table d'Hôte at a Dogs' Home (J. C. Dollman); and by Mr. Hy. Thompson, jun., Flower Sellers (Gustave Doré).

THE French Chambers refuse to vote the grant demanded for a Museum of Casts at the Trocadéro, so that project, which has been much talked of, will, to the regret of all lovers of art, have to be given up for a time.

THE Chronique announces that the works of restoration at the Château de Loches have been begun. The Château de Loches is one of the most important historic monuments of France, and its proposed restoration, which is a work of sheer necessity, has not been undertaken without the most thorough consideration. Commissions have been appointed, Art Ministers driven to despair, and all the architects of the kingdom consulted. Finally, the work is entrusted to M. Brunesu, the architect attached to the Ministry of Fine Arts, under the direction of which the works will be carried out. The expense will be something enormous. For the works for the present year only, on the façade of Louis XII., a very small part of the whole, the estimate is 48,000 frs., two-thirds of which falls on the budget, and the rest on the funds of the Department.

THE Christmas number, if we may so call it, of L'Art is especially rich, giving two fine etchings, of full-page size, such as anyone might care not only to look at in a journal, but to have framed for the decoration of his room. One is a striking sea-piece, painted by Troyon and etched by Chauvel; the other, painted by Isaak van Ostade, represents a halt before a wayside inn, with all its usual accompaniments. It is etched by Gaujean.

THE battle of the Salon, which has raged so fiercely in Paris of late, is by no means over, but a truce has been agreed upon for a fortnight—that is to say, the combatants will not meet again until January 15, when no doubt the battle will be renewed with fresh fury. On the one side are the conservatives, who think that a few small changes might perhaps be made with advantage in the règlement; on the other, the radicals, who wish for a thorough reform in the whole constitution. The subject is one that interests Paris greatly at present, helps to fill the newspapers, and provides a subject for debate in artistic circles. It is thought on the whole likely that the final result will be as follows:—All the artists who have already exhibited will be invited to attend a general meeting in the Palais de l'Industrie. They will be required to name a committee, which will be empowered to deliberate on the rules by which the Salon will be permanently organised. The number of members who will form this committee is not yet decided; it is known, however, that each branch of art represented in the Salon—painting, sculpture, architecture, &c.—will take rank in the formation of the committee according to its importance.

M. HENRI ROCHEFORT is about to start, it is said, on an expedition to Silesia, with the view of securing a fine collection of pictures that is to be sold there. Three friends, who are associated with him in the projected purchase, will accompany him.

M. MANET, the painter of sensational pictures, whose canvases are always the subject of much speculation and wonder in France, is reproducing, in oils, the episode of Rochefort's escape from New Caledonia.

M. CERAMANO is preparing for the Salon a remarkable picture (nine feet by six) of Le Charlemagne, the giant-oak of Fontainebleau Forest.

THE death is announced of Mr. Henry O'Neill author of works on Antient Irish Crosses, Irish Art and Civilisation, The Round Towers of Ireland, &c.; and of M. Lefuel, architect to the Louvre and the national palaces, &c.

THE Swiss Nationalrath, on the motion of Prof. Vögelin, of Zürich, has voted an annual grant of 20,000 frs. towards the erection of a Swiss Historical Museum. The proposal was first started by the Society for the Preservation of Swiss Art Monuments. Cantonal historical museums already exist in some of the cantons.

THE STAGE.

MR. TENNYSON'S NEW PLAY.

IT is highly probable that Mr. Tennyson's new play, The Cup, which was brought out at the Lyceum on Monday night, will have a longer stage-life than has been vouchsafed to either of his earlier dramatic essays; for it has several qualities that place it—and especially for the purpose of stage representation—above The Falcon and above Queen Mary. There is every reason to believe that it will obtain at the theatre that kind of success which the Poet Laureate must have proposed to himself to win—a success very complete within its proper limits. The Cup cannot constitute the entertainment of an evening, for the performance of it is finished within an hour and a-half of its beginning, which is scarcely more than half the time during which the London playgoer demands to be actively

LIFE IN ALGERIA.

NOTICE.—The NEW PLAYGROUND; or, Wanderings in Algeria, by ALEXANDER A. KNOX, is published This Day, large crown 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

LONDON: C. KEGAN PAUL & CO., 1, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

Now ready, in demy 8vo, p.p. 720, price 24s.

AN INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of FISHES.

By ALBERT C. L. G. GÜNTHER, M.A., M.D., Ph.D., F.R.S.

Keeper of the Zoological Department in the British Museum.

CONTENTS.

- | | | |
|----------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------------|
| 1. HISTORY and LITERATURE. | 5. NEUROLOGY. | 9. DISTRIBUTION. |
| 2. EXTERNAL PARTS. | 6. THE ORGANS. | 10. CLASSIFICATION. |
| 3. THE SKELETON. | 7. GROWTH and VARIATION. | 11. COLLECTING and PRESERVING. |
| 4. MYOLOGY. | 8. PALAEOLOGY. | 12. INDEX. |

Illustrated with 320 Wood Engravings.

EDINBURGH: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

NEW AND CHOICE BOOKS FOR ALL READERS.

FRESH COPIES of all the BEST BOOKS of the SEASON continue to be added to MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY as the demand increases, and arrangements are made with the leading Publishers for an ample Supply of the Principal Forthcoming Books as they appear.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM

For a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS PER ANNUM

For the Free Delivery of Books in every part of London.

BOOK SOCIETIES AND LITERARY INSTITUTIONS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

Prospectuses postage free on application.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), New Oxford Street.

CITY OFFICE: 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

GERVASE OF CANTERBURY, VOL. II. COMPLETION.
Vol. II., in royal 8vo, pp. 682, price 10s., half-bound.

THE HISTORICAL WORKS of GER-

VASE OF CANTERBURY, Vol. II., the Minor Works, comprising the Gesta Regum with its Continuation, the Actus Pontificum, and the Mappa Mundii. Edited from the MS. C.C.C. 438 by W. STUBBS, D.D., Hon. LL.D., &c., and published by the Authority of the Lords Commissioners of H.M. Treasury, under the Direction of the Master of the Rolls.

The present volume contains the minor historical works of the Chronicler Gervase of Canterbury, the Smaller Chronicle, the Actus Pontificum, and the Mappa Mundii, together with a continuation of the Smaller Chronicle from the reign of John to that of Edward II. Of this material the whole is now for the first time published, with the exception of the Lives of the Archbishops, which fill about ninety pages, and which, more than two centuries ago, were edited, together with Gervase's Greater Chronicle, among the Decem Scriptores of Sir Roger Twysden.

LONDON: LONGMANS & CO. and TRUBNER & CO. Oxford: PARKER & CO. Cambridge: MACMILLAN & CO. Edinburgh: A. & C. BLACK and DOUGLAS & FOULIS. Dublin: A. THOM & CO.

IRISH STATE PAPERS, 1615—1625.

Now ready, in imp. 8vo, pp. 752, price 15s., cloth.

CALENDAR of STATE PAPERS relating to IRELAND of the Reign of JAMES I., 1615—1625, preserved in H.M. Public Record Office and elsewhere. Edited by C. W. RUSSELL, D.D., and J. P. FENNER, Barrister-at-Law, and published under the Direction of the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of H.M. Secretary of State for the Home Department.

* In the present volume will be found a series of important papers concerning the plantation of Ulster; also abundant documentary materials relating to the great northern plot for the capture of the forts in Ulster, for the surprise and burning of Derry and Coleraine, and the massacre of the new planters inhabiting those towns. With this volume, the Fifth of the series, is concluded the Calendar of State Papers relating to Ireland during the reign of King James the First.

LONDON: LONGMANS & CO. and TRUBNER & CO. Oxford: PARKER & CO. Cambridge: MACMILLAN & CO. Edinburgh: A. & C. BLACK and DOUGLAS & FOULIS. Dublin: A. THOM & CO.

NEW NOVEL.

BOUND BY THE LAW.

BY HELEN WESCHÉ.

"Narrates the slow, but finally successful, struggle undergone by a man who has to win anew the affection of his wife."—Athens.
"Clever and right-hearted. The author has given us a new moral situation."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The plot is interesting and well worked out, and several of the scenes are really powerful."—London Figaro.

At all Libraries.

LONDON: ELLISSEN & CO., 10, Type-street, Finsbury, E.C.

Just published.

CAMOENS' LUSIADS. Englished by

Captain BURTON. 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, 12s.

LONDON: BERNARD QUARTICH, 15, Piccadilly.

Just published.

THE KASIDAH (Couplets) of HAJI

ABDU EL-YEZDI: a Lay of the Higher Law. English Version, by F. B. 4to, 4s.

LONDON: BERNARD QUARTICH, 15, Piccadilly.

463rd Edition, with Portrait, 1s. 6d.

BUTTER'S SPELLING.

BUTTER'S READING and SPELLING, in Easy Gradations. Seventy-second Edition. 1s. 6d.

LONDON: SIMKIN, MARSHALL, & CO.; and all Booksellers.

Now ready.

FREE CHURCH SERVICES.

FOR MARRIAGES, FUNERALS, BAPTISMS, AND THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Adapted, from the Book of Common Prayer, for Nonconforming Congregations.

Crown 8vo, price 2s.

LONDON: S. BAOSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

A COMPANION TO TENNYSON'S POEMS.

Just published, crown 8vo, with Steel Engravings of the Earliest Portrait of Tennyson (and Somersby Cross), price 6s.

ALFRED TENNYSON: his LIFE and

WORKS. By WALTER E. WACE. Contains the fullest Life of the Poet yet published, an Account of his Works and their Reception, Explanation of Obscure Passages, Parallel Passages, Alterations, Bibliography, &c., &c.

Edinburgh: MACNIVEN & WALLACE.

TENTH THOUSAND—will be ready at CHRISTMAS.

Now ready, in demy 4to, cloth, 8s., post-free.

HEBREW and GREEK LEXICONS,

containing every Word in the Scriptures, with their Varied Renderings; also a Treatise on the True Use of the TENSES, being a Companion or REVEALED INDEX to the "ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE" (42s.). By ROBERT YOUNG, LL.D.

Edinburgh: O. A. YOUNG & CO., 81, Nicolson-street; and all Booksellers.

STANDARD WORKS

PUBLISHED BY

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY. Translated from the German of Professor MAX DUNCKER. By EVELYN ABBOTT, D.C.L., M.A., of Balliol College, Oxford. 4 vols., demy 8vo, each 21s.

PROFESSOR MOMMSEN'S HISTORY of ROME, from the Earliest Time to the Period of its Decline. Translated (with the Author's sanction, and Additions) by the Rev. W. P. DICKSON. With an Introduction by Dr. SCHMITZ. 4 vols., crown 8vo, £2 6s. 6d.; or separately, Vols. I. and II., 21s.; Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., with Index, 15s.

Also, a LIBRARY EDITION, in 4 vols., demy 8vo £3 15s. These Volumes are not sold separately. The Indices to the Two Editions separately, each 3s. 6d.

PROFESSOR CURTIUS'S HISTORY of GREECE. Translated by A. W. WAERN, M.A. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, with Index, 90s.; or each vol. separately, price 18s.

"A history known to scholars as one of the profoundest, most original, and instructive of modern times."—Globe.

SIR EDWARD CREASY'S RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SIR EDWARD CREASY'S FIFTEEN

DECISIVE BATTLES of the WORLD, from Marathon to Waterloo. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. With Plans. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Also, a LIBRARY EDITION, in 8vo, with Plans, price 10s. 6d.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY, from St. Augustine to Juxon. By the late Very Rev. WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK, D.D., Dean of Chichester. 11 vols., demy 8vo, price £8 5s. Or sold separately, as follows:—Vol. I., 15s.; Vol. II., 15s.; Vols. III. and IV., 30s.; Vol. V., 15s.; Vols. VI. and VII., 30s.; Vol. VIII., 15s.; Vol. IX., 15s.; Vol. X., 14s.; Vol. XI., 15s. The Second Series commenced with Vol. VI.

WORKS by the Late DR. M'CAUSLAND.

1. ADAM and the ADAMITE; or, the Harmony of Scripture and Ethnology. With Map. Crown 8vo, 6s.

2. SERMONS in STONES; or, Scripture Confirmed by Geology. New Edition, with Memoir of the Author. Crown 8vo, Nineteen Illustrations, 6s.

3. THE BUILDERS of BABEL; or, the Confusion of Languages. New Edition. In crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SUN. By Amedee Guillemin, Author of "The Heavens." Translated by Dr. PHIPSON. With Fifty Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE HEAVENS: an Illustrated Handbook of Popular Astronomy. By AMEDEE GUILLEMIN. Edited by J. NORMAN LOCKYER, F.R.A.S., F.R.S. New and Revised Edition, embodying all the latest Discoveries in Astronomical Science. Demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.

WORKS by the Late JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A.

THE LIVES of WITS and HUMORISTS. 2 vols., 12s.

THE LIVES of the LATER WITS and HUMORISTS. 2 vols., 12s.

THE LIVES of PAINTERS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON;

NEW BURLINGTON STREET;

Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Messrs. CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN & CO. will publish, in Monthly Parts, price 7d.,

ILLUSTRATED British Ballads

A SELECTION OF BRITISH BALLADS, OLD AND NEW,
WITH Several Hundred Original Wood Engravings.
PART I. READY JAN. 25.

To be completed in TWENTY-FOUR PARTS.

The Engravings which will enrich the pages of ILLUSTRATED BRITISH BALLADS are all New and Original, and have been specially executed for the Work, at a cost of SEVERAL THOUSAND POUNDS, by some of the Leading Artists of the present day, amongst whom may be mentioned—ERNEST CROFTS, A.R.A., C. BURTON BARBER, A. BARAUD, R. BARNES, W. H. J. BOOT, E. BREWTNALL, J. E. CHRISTIE, G. CLAUSEN, H. FENN, A. B. FROST, H. GIACOMELLI, M. L. GOW, C. GREEN, C. GREGORY, H. HOLIDAY, W. B. HOLE, R.S.A., A. HOPKINS, E. B. LEIGHTON, R. W. MACBETH, P. MACQUOID, W. H. OVEREND, H. M. PAGET, J. M. L. RALSTON, W. RALSTON, P. SKELTON, AND W. SMALL.

With Part I. will be issued, free of charge, a beautiful ETCHING, as a Frontispiece, entitled "The Braes of Yarrow," by M. L. GOW, etched by LALAUZE.

. Prospectuses can be obtained of all Booksellers, or will be sent post-free on application to the Publishers,

CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & Co., Ludgate-hill, London.

Will be shortly published,
PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

THE EDUCATIONAL YEAR BOOK For 1881.

THIRD YEAR OF ISSUE.

"This book is a long way in advance of any previous scholastic directory. It concerns itself only with those institutions of a public character in the United Kingdom which provide secondary and superior education, and seeks to give full information respecting their government, their course of instruction, their fees, their resources, and the conditions of admission. This object has been obtained with a skill and conscientious diligence which fully entitle the 'Year-Book' to public favour."—Academy.

"Brimful of information. . . . The attention paid by the compiler to schools for girls is deserving of praise. On the whole the book is excellent."—Athenaeum.

CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & Co., Ludgate-hill, London.

THE CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

ANGLICE REDDENDA; or, Extracts for Unseen Translation. For the use of Lower and Middle Forms.
Selected by C. S. JERRAM, M.A., late Scholar of Trinity College, Oxford; Editor of "Lucian's Yers Historia," "Cebetis Tabula," "Euripidis Alceste," &c. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE QUR'AN. Translated by Professor
E. H. PALMER. Being Volumes VI. and IX. of the SACRED BOOKS of the EAST. Translated by various Oriental Scholars, and Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, £1 1s.

A SELECTION from the DESPATCHES,
MEMORANDA, and other Papers relating to INDIA, of Field Marshal the DUKE OF WELLINGTON, K.G. Edited by SIDNEY J. OWEN, M.A., Reader in Law and History, and Tutor at Christ Church; Reader in Indian History in the University of Oxford; formerly Professor of History in the Elphinstone College, Bombay. With an Introductory Essay, Maps, and Plans. Demy 8vo, cloth, £1 4s.

PRIMER of FRENCH LITERATURE.

By GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 5s.
"This is a book which is not only indispensable to the beginner in French literature, but most useful to the reader who has wandered at his will, picking and choosing at random in the garden which Mr. Saintsbury has made completely his own. So much recent writing on French literature has been scandalously inaccurate, flippant, and dull, that Mr. Saintsbury and the Clarendon Press confer a really rare benefit on the public in a little introduction to a wide subject."—Daily News.

INTERNATIONAL LAW. By William

EDWARD HALL, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE CONSTRUCTION of HEALTHY

DWELLINGS—namely, Houses, Hospitals, Barracks, Asylums, &c.
By DOUGLAS GALTON, late Royal Engineer, C.B., F.R.S., &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"Great simplicity of language and a liberal supply of woodcuts bring all the subjects discussed within the reach of those readers who are altogether without special knowledge; while the mastery displayed over all the applications of physical and physiological laws of hygiene entitles the book to a standard place in technical literature."—Academy.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ENGLAND, in its ORIGIN and DEVELOPMENT. By WILLIAM STUBBS, D.D., Regius Professor of Modern History. Library Edition.

3 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, £2 8s. Also crown 8vo Edition, 3 vols., cloth,
12s. each.

"The most valuable contribution to the knowledge of English constitutional history and law in our generation."—Westminster Review.

ITALY and HER INVADERS, A.D. 376-

476. By T. HOODKIN, Fellow of University College, London. Illustrated with Plates and Maps. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, £1 12s.

"To his task Mr. Hoodkin has brought scholarly precision and workman-like skill. But he has done more than this. He has brought also keen interest and power of realisation of the events with which he deals. His book is one of a class which only an Englishman can write. It bears on every page the mark of being written by a man who is not only a scholar, but is also conversant with affairs. Everything in it is vital with the life of our own day; occurrences are paralleled and characters illustrated from modern politics."—Times.

EXERCISES in PRACTICAL CHEMIS-

TRY. Vol. I. (ELEMENTARY EXERCISES.) By A. G. VERNON
BARCROFT, M.A., F.R.S., Reader Student of Christ Church, and Lect.
Reader in Chemistry; and H. G. MADAN, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford. Third Edition, Revised and considerably Enlarged.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 9s.

A LATIN DICTIONARY, Founded on

Andrews' Edition of Freund's Latin Dictionary. By CHARLTON T.
LEWIS, Ph.D., and CHARLES FROST, LL.D. 4to, cloth, £1 11s. 6d.

"Must supersede all its rivals for common use."
Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR in Notes and Queries.
"The etymological notes certainly far surpass in accuracy and usefulness anything as yet attempted in any dictionary."—Athenaeum.

"The work of Messrs. Lewis and Frost is a real advance on any previous Latin-English Dictionary. The orthography has been corrected throughout, a step which, however obvious, easy, and necessary, is of immense practical benefit to Latin scholarship in England, where we have for some time, in books available for school teaching, been troubled with more confusion in this matter."—Prof. NETTLESHIP in the Academy.

"What would not the scholars of the last century have given for such a Latin Dictionary? The great advances which philological study has made of late years, and the vastly increased knowledge of ancient life and thought, have given to this Dictionary a scholarly completeness which places it in the very first rank among works of reference. It will undoubtedly become a standard authority."—Westminster Review.

"Those who wish to purchase a new Latin-English Dictionary had better invest in this, as embodying the latest results of Latin scholarship, and giving all that the others give, and more."—Guardian.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE, arranged on an Historical Basis. By W. W. SKELTON, M.A. To be completed in Four Parts. Parts I.—III., 4to, 10s. 6d. each. Part IV. in the Press.

"Its merits are those of laborious and conscientiously accurate research, guided by profound learning and never-failing sagacity."

"When completed it will be honourably distinguished as the first thorough-going attempt to write the history of every word in the language."
English Independent.

"A work of enormous and self-denying labour, and quite unusual erudition, which, if it ends as it begins, should be a national possession."
Daily News.

London: HENRY FROWDE,

Oxford University Press Warehouse, 7, Paternoster-row.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth extra, 1s.

PROFESSOR SAYCE'S EDITION

OF
GEORGE SMITH'S

THE CHALDEAN ACCOUNT OF GENESIS.

Revised and Corrected.

ENGLISH PHILOSOPHERS.

Edited by IWAN MÜLLER, M.A., New College, Oxford.

To each Philosopher will be assigned a separate volume, giving as comprehensive and detailed a statement of his views and contributions to Philosophy as possible, explanatory rather than critical, opening with a brief biographical sketch, and concluding with a short general summary, and a bibliographical appendix.

Price and Size:—180 to 200 pp. Size, crown 8vo. Price 3s. 6d.

ADAM SMITH, J. Farrer, M.A.,

Author of "Primitive Manners and Customs."
[Just ready.]

Now ready, crown 8vo, price 6s.

THE CONFESSIONS OF A FRIVOLOUS GIRL:

A Story of Fashionable Life.

Edited by ROBERT GRANT.

In 3 vols., now ready at every Library, a Second Edition of
A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," "John Holdsworth, Chief Mate," &c.

"THIS VERY NOBLE NOVEL."—Standard.

A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.—Second Edition.

"It is strikingly original. . . . One cannot read the story fast enough."—Athenaeum.

A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.—Second Edition.

"We have no hesitation in giving to the author of 'A Sailor's Sweetheart' the very highest praise among all authors, living or dead, who have written of sailors and the sea."—Graphic.

A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.—Second Edition.

"Mr. Clark Russell's latest novel is one of the most exciting and engrossing of which it is possible to conceive."—Morning Post.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

For JANUARY.

100 pp., Fully Illustrated.

Now ready, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

THE IRISH LAND QUESTION, and ENGLISH PUBLIC OPINION.

With a Supplement on Griffith's Valuation.

By R. BARRY O'BRIEN, Author of "The Parliamentary History of the Irish Land Question."

NEW WORK BY CANON TRISTRAM.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—To be published in Twenty-Two Monthly Parts, 4to (size of "Men of Mark"). In Wrapper, price 2s. 6d.

PATHWAYS of PALESTINE:

A Descriptive Tour Through the Holy Land.

By the Rev. Canon TRISTRAM.

Illustrated with Forty-four Permanent Photographs.
(The Photographs are large, and most perfect specimens of the art.)

Part I. (Now ready) contains Photographs of

THE SAMARITAN ROLL

(As Frontispiece to Volume).

HEBRON.

BETHLEHEM.

FROM THE PREFATORY NOTE.

"The Photographs which illustrate these pages may justly claim, as works of art, to be the most admirably executed views which have been produced.

"As the writer is on the point of making a fourth visit of exploration to the country, any new discoveries which come under observation will be at once incorporated in this work."

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

interested, not to take into account the time consumed by playing him in and the time consumed by playing him out. Another considerable piece will always have to be presented when The Cup is presented. But judged even by the commonplace test of the space of time which its performance occupies—a question of practical value at the theatre—The Cup is important enough to contribute substantially towards the drawing of an audience; and when the audience has been gathered, and is listening to the play, it is felt that the fame of the writer is by no means the only thing that justifies the attendance of the public. The interest of elaborate plot is not in the drama, nor the interest of the development of character. The story is as simple as it is grim; the chief characters are known almost as soon as they are seen; the humours of no secondary personages light up the darkness of the fable; the poem is without marked subtlety of thought, though it abounds in vigour of expression. Much that might have been present in a great drama by a great poet is, therefore, absent; but something considerable remains. A powerful, if dreadful, story has been strongly handled; its horror and its strange beauty—which are the essentials of tragedy—have been impressed upon us by a writer who, in the performance of the business that was before him, has turned neither to the right hand nor to the left.

We are all of us, by this time, so familiar with what story there is that there can be no need to repeat it here at any length. The theme which Mr. Tennyson has selected, and not invented, is that of the evil love of an unscrupulous tyrant thwarted, when it seems to be indulged, by the devoted wife of a man whom he has slain. Sinnatus is the husband, who was killed in the act of protecting his wife's honour from the assault of the man who would be her lover. Camma is the wife. Synorix is the ex-Tetrarch whose ill deeds had procured his deposition, but whose cunning and firmness of purpose lift him again to the highest place, whence he renews the offer of his love—and with it this time his hand—to the wronged woman whose mind is set upon vengeance. Devoted, since the murder of her husband, to the service of the Ephesian Artemis, Camma has been held by her companions to have forsworn love, and to be certainly a priestess for the remainder of her days. Their surprise when they hear of her acceptance of Synorix's offer of marriage is greater than their surprise when they discover for what purpose the offer was accepted. In a scene which on the whole is wonderfully impressive—and which owes not a little of its impressiveness to those stage devices in which Mr. Irving is so lavish and so ingenious—Camma begins the celebration of the marriage rites, makes prayer to Artemis for a curse instead of a blessing, and pledges her spouse in a poisoned cup, of which she drinks first, and which he afterwards drains. A robust appetite for horrors enables us to watch with satisfaction while the poison that may not be "walked down," and for which there exists no antidote, is doing its work in the veins of both Camma and Synorix. The will of Camma, and her savage joy in her vengeance, enable her to suppress for a while the exhibition of her tortures. Meantime, it is Synorix who writhes. His ghastly death is followed by hers, and the horror of the thing is completed.

But the work would hardly be Mr. Tennyson's if there were not beauty and tenderness besides. The imagination which in its later workings has been occupied with Philip of Spain and with Rizpah has been occupied also with the gentle pathos of The Children's Hospital and the patriot note of The Revenge, and neither the beautiful expression of pathos nor the vigorous expression of patriotism is lacking to the new tragedy. Perfectly Tennysonian is the speech of Camma in which, when Galatia is threatened, Camma counsels resistance to those who counsel submission; and hardly less characteristic is the tender little love-song which Camma, in the first act, chants in the absence of her lord. This, however, is neither the place nor the time for any attempt at literary criticism upon a work which must, of course, have greater claims than are immediately discernible to rank highly as Literature. The full text must be before one before it is safe to speak of The Cup from any other point of view than that from which it is regarded as a drama to be acted. As a drama to be acted it is sufficiently rich in situations that tell, in the presentation of strongly contrasted character, in the expression of emotions that move to horror and of emotions that move to approval. It affords opportunities to the actor. And, furthermore, it affords opportunity, of which the Lyceum management has fully and most intelligently availed itself, for the display of all the best resources of scenic art.

The actors' opportunities, and how they are used, and the occasions seized for scenic display, alone remain to be spoken of. If the play were more completely filled with various incident, and some of it of a homely kind, so that one could realise a little more by experience, and a little less by hearsay, the parts played by the principal personages in their habits as they lived, nothing would be wanting to the piece in the way of furnishing both Mr. Irving and Miss Ellen Terry with two of the best characters these players have ever performed. The outlines of these characters of Synorix and Camma are suited precisely to the actors who appear in them. Nothing more than some further development by the dramatist was required to make Mr. Irving's Synorix one of his most memorable performances, and Miss Terry's Camma one of her most delightful. The outlines, as it is, have been really admirably understood and rendered both by actor and actress. Mr. Irving, who neglects nothing, gives us, for about the twentieth time in his career, a "make-up" that is as remarkable as it is new. He reproduces with careful precision just what the part of Synorix requires—the type of the Roman at his cruellest and his worst as it comes to us through the skilled and repulsive representations of Mr. Alma Tadema. Mr. Irving's own power of grim satire serves him in good stead in giving vitality to this picture. He was never more incisive in his method of utterance; he never expressed with a more extraordinary fidelity the force of evil and mean desire. It is not his fault if he has but about two beautiful things to say—about two things which are not the appropriate utterances of the unmitigated baseness he is required to represent. One of them is a pretty compliment to Camma, on her coming, when she, as a

"twin-sister of the morning star, Foreleads the sun."

The other is a half-remorseful reflection, after he has made a violent end of his rival, Camma's husband, that he "might have left this stroke to Rome," but that yet he might "make Galatia prosperous," and that so he and Camma might

"chirp among our vines, and smile
At bygone things, till that eternal peace."

Mr. Irving gives additional force to an illustration which, in the text of the Poet Laureate, is already forcible and fine—the passage in which it is recounted how the hunted Lion slew four dogs,

"and knew it not; and so remained
Staring upon the hunter. And thus Rome
Will crush you if you wrestle with her."

That the death-scene which ends all is studied with rare power hardly requires to be said; nor on this occasion has Mr. Irving any need to echo Charles the Second's considerate apology for being so unconscionable a time in dying.

I have seldom seen Miss Ellen Terry to greater advantage than as Camma. Her part—which, in another version of the tale, Ristori, it seems, has acted before her—allows room for the suggestion, if not for the complete development, of all that she can do most satisfactorily, and is almost without trace of any of those demands which she fulfils less perfectly. The part abounds in occasions for the display of her particular gifts, which are gentleness, pathos, and grace. She speaks already with conviction, but she might speak with more of fire and impulse, Camma's patriotic call to resistance against Rome. Once or twice it is felt that the lines she is delivering are capable of an intensity that she does not bestow on them. Once or twice it is felt that an actress of larger physical resource would "let herself go" where Miss Terry reins herself in, and would produce a great and legitimate effect where Miss Terry makes no great point. But those changes of the voice which betoken gathering excitement, in speeches of appeal, come at the moments when they are most requisite, as, especially, in the moment of Camma's second appeal to the goddess in her temple—that beginning "Artemis, Artemis," in a tone dictated by profound feeling or arrived at by a self-concealing art. And if Miss Terry is not seldom ready with the required accent of passion, she is at all times ready with the required movement of grace. To some of us, in past performances, that grace has seemed too obviously studied; it has been so chiefly when what are called statuesque attitudes were assumed in dresses of the day. In modern drama the term "statuesque attitude" implies a measure of mild reproach, for attitudes of the heroines of the day should be graceful and lifelike—not graceful and statuesque. It is not sculpture, with its arrested movement, that you want most to recall in representations of daily life; it is the infinitely varied gesture of the actions of daily life. I do not myself see, however, that Miss Terry is open to this implied reproach, even in the representations of contemporary life. But what may be a little dubious there becomes, in such a piece as the present tragedy, distinctly a point for praise. Under her thin, sea-green raiment of lissome stuff, the movement and the arrested movement of the actress are equally perfect. Aided by draperies arranged with the most singular skill, the figure, in its freedom and suavity, recalls the Elgin Marbles and the designs of the artist who has learnt the best from them—Mr. Albert Moore. In line and hue the actress is a realisation of Mr. Moore's paintings.

Scenic arrangements, nowadays, are so apt to be turned from their proper purpose of helping the necessary business of the play, that the praise which might be given to their ingenuity is withheld because of their inappropriateness. They are wont to encumber instead of assisting. But, in the representation of the Temple of Artemis, legitimate occasion has been found for wealth of scenic appliances, and all that is here, as well as being surprisingly beautiful in itself, is helpful of the effect. The group of priestesses and attendants, with lights borne aloft, and dancing boys bearing flowers, is similarly serviceable. Down to the last details of colour and lighting, as the groups press forward and gather back, all is equally well managed. Costly, of course, such a presentation of a great function in a noble temple is bound to be; but its costliness and its elaboration are not so apparent as its intelligence and its high taste. The play does not humbly accompany the spectacle, but the spectacle splendidly illustrates the play.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

SHAKSPEARE AT MEININGEN.

A CORRESPONDENT who is at Meiningen for the purpose of studying how Shakspeare is acted in Germany sends us some interesting notes on the recent doings of the Meiningen troop, which has just now made its reappearance for the season in the dilettante little capital. It appears that the Meiningen actors, having been reproved for their too great attention to antiquarian detail and scenic effect, and having also been informed that their success was in a large measure due to such attention, determined to play a Shaksperian piece with that scantiness of decoration—not to say complete absence of decoration—which obtained in England on the stage in Shakspeare's time. The piece selected was The Taming of the Shrew, "or rather," says our correspondent, "a condensed version of it with the Christopher Sly introduction intact." "The scenery," our friend proceeds, "represented a balcony (in which, during the play proper, Christopher Sly and the lord and page and others sat), from which, and at the sides of which, hung curtains with slits, so as to make three exits at the back. Place and change of place were indicated by little notices which were hung up under the balcony, thus: Before an Inn in a Wood—Room in Baptista's House—&c." Our correspondent was struck, and, it would seem, at first displeased, with the amount of farce introduced into this performance; but he afterwards—perhaps indulgently—came to the conclusion that The Taming of the Shrew could never have been meant seriously; and "besides," he adds, "it is a play devised entirely for the delectation of Christopher Sly." He had come to this conclusion before observing a criticism or notice in the Meiningen Tageblatt, to the effect that, "conformably with the character of the play and with its prologue, the performance must be throughout in burlesque style." The Meiningers, it will be remembered, are coming to London this next season. They will doubtless present certain of the pieces of their répertoire with all the completeness of ornament and accessory for which the Ducal theatre is celebrated; but they would also do well to present some Shaksperian dramas, and, if possible, something more weighty than The Taming of the Shrew, with the same old-world economy of decoration which has been commented on above. And English managers might, at all events for a change and a novelty, adopt this plan. It would not fill a London theatre for a hundred nights, but it would fill it for a fortnight at almost no expense. Curiosity would be great. We commend the suggestion to Mr. Irving, who is fond of intellectual experiments, and who might take it seriously; and, in default of Mr. Irving, to Mr. Hollingshead, who is of so happy a temperament that he is always very ready to have a laugh at the expense of the Past, if that glorifies the Present. This would be but another form of the "Palmy Day" satire—the elaborate practical joke which consisted in Mr. Hollingshead's offering the hospitality of places in his theatre to critics who were willing to sit an afternoon while George Barnwell was being gone through upon the stage.

STAGE NOTES.

A CHANGE of programme, which bids fair to be for the best, is announced at the St. James's Theatre for to-night. Good Fortune is to be withdrawn, and Mr. Tom Taylor's most effective one-act drama, A Sheep in Wolf's Clothing, is to be produced for the first time at this theatre, Mrs. Kendal taking the part of Anne Carew, which was created many years ago by a leading actress of the time, but which playgoers of the younger generation associate with Miss Kate Terry. Together with Mr. Taylor's little drama there is to be played The Money Spinner, by Mr. Pinero, the young dramatist who is the author of Hester's Mystery and other pleasant and clever little pieces. A very strong cast is promised for this—Mr. and Mrs. Kendal, Mr. John Clayton, and Mr. John Hare, beside other approved actors.

MISS LITTON begins on Monday afternoon the series of daily performances at the Gaiety Theatre which she has undertaken. She begins with Wycherley's Country Girl, arranged, and doubtless made presentable, by John Bannister. We shall be delighted to see the piece. Other standard comedies succeed to this; among them that comedy of Goldsmith's which is the least frequently presented—The Good Natured Man. Those who saw a very admirable private performance of this piece in London last season by some highly accomplished amateurs will understand that its stage merits are by no means inconsiderable.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, ADRIENNE LECOUFFEUR, Comedy in five acts, by Messrs. SCHREIBER and LECOUFFEUR. Characters by Messrs. Forbes-Robertson, J. D. Beveridge, Lin Hayne, Brian Darley, Neville Doone, J. W. Lawrence, J. W. Pinney, &c., and O. W. Ansell. Medallions: Holmes, Modest, Winifred Emery, Kate Varro, Blanche Garnier, K. Lesson, Julia Hoselle, &c., and Amy Roselle (her first appearance since her recent severe illness). To conclude with J. MORTIMER'S successful Comedy, TWO OLD BOYS. Doors open at 7, commence at 7.30. Carriages at 11.

DRURY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

Grand Comto Pantomime, written by E. L. BLANCHARD, MOTHER GOOSE. Music by F. Wallerstein. Miss Kate Santley (her first appearance after her severe illness), Misses Ada Blanche, Little Addie Blanche, Emma D'Aubain, Agnes Hewitt, Carrie Costa, Marian D'Aubain, Ibrahim, De Vere, Praeger, Kidway, Hogarth, Howard, Fanny Louise Payne, Messrs. Arthur Roberts, John D'Aubain, James Fawc, Mark Klughorn, Charles Ross, Frank Wyatt, John Kidley, W. Waite, Storey, Cullen, Abrahams, Bradford, and the celebrated Julian Girard.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY. At 8.15, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CRUST. Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Gardon, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Misses Lillian Cavalier, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne. At 10.15, a new and utter Absurdity, by HENRY J. BYRON, THE LIGHT FANTASTIC. Mr. SAMUEL SLITHERY, of the Hall of Terpsichore, Old Kent-road. Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. ALEX. HENDERSON.

Every evening, at 8.30, a new and original Comique, entitled LES MOUSQUETAIRES. Composed by LOUIS VARNY, produced under the direction of Mr. H. B. FARNIE, with the following company—Messrs. H. Bracy, Harry Paulton, G. Ashford, E. Stepan, Lewis, and F. H. Celi; Madames Alice May, Esie Moore, Davis, and M. Taylor. Conductor, Mr. Miller. Preceded, at 7.15, by DUTCH METAL. Box-office open daily from 11 till 5. Doors open at 8.45. Carriages at 11. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HENRY IRVING.

THE CUP. THE CORICAN BROTHERS. ALFRED THREYNON'S Tragedy, in two acts, THE CUP. Every evening, at 7.45. Miss ELLEN TERRY—Mr. IRVING—Mr. TERRISS. At 9.30, THE CORICAN BROTHERS. Mr. IRVING as LOUIS and FAHREN DE FRANCH. Doors open at 7.15. Box-office (Mr. HURST) open from 10 to 8 daily. Seats booked by letter or telegram. MORNING PERFORMANCES OF THE CORICAN BROTHERS, TO-DAY (SATURDAY), and SATURDAY, JANUARY 10TH, at 2.30. Doors open at 2. Stage Manager, Mr. H. J. LOVEDAY. Acting Manager, Mr. BRAM STOKER.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.) Proprietor and Manager, Mr. R. F. BATEMAN. Engagement for a limited term, of Mr. CHARLES WAINMAN and Mr. HERMANN VEZIN. To-night, at 8, will be presented SHERIDAN'S Comedy, THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL. With the following Cast—SIR PETER TEAZLE—Mr. HERMANN VEZIN. CHARLES SURFACE—Mr. CHARLES WAINMAN. JOSEPH SURFACE—Mr. E. H. BROOKE. LADY TEAZLE—Miss VIRGINIA F. BATEMAN. Crabtree—Mr. William Farnen; Sir Oliver—Mr. Edmund Lyons; Sir Benjamin—Mr. H. Buckstone; Moses—Mr. A. Wood; Trip—Mr. Walter Brooks; Careless—Mr. Wainman. Lady Suerwell—Miss M. Bell; Mrs. Candour—Mrs. W. Sidney; Maria—Miss Hilda Hilton. The original Prologue written by GARRICK will be spoken. Prices from 0 to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. No fees.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'OLY CARTE. THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE. A new and original Melodramatic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, every evening. Preceded, at 8, by IN THE SULKS. By Messrs. FRANK DESPREZ and ALFRED CELLIER. Messrs. G. Grossmith, Richard Temple, Rutland Barrington, F. Thornton, Burward Lely, Geo. Temple; Madames Marion Hood, Ellen Shirley, Jessie Bond, Gwynne, Burdell, and Alice D'Amico. Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier. This piece produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE. To-night, an English version of P. GIACOMETTI'S great Italian Play, "La Morte Civile," called A NEW TRIAL. Mr. COUGHLIN, as CORRADO. Preceded, at 7.45, by IN HONOUR BOUND. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOUGH. To-night, at 8, TOM TAYLOR'S great romantic Drama, THE FOOL'S REVENGE. Mr. EDWIN BOOTH as BERTUCCI, and specially selected company. New scenery by Mr. Charles Brooke. New costumes by Mrs. S. May. Preceded, at 7.30, by AN OLD MASTER. To conclude with the laughable Farce, THAT BLESSED BABY. Stage Manager, Mr. HARRY JACKSON. Box-office open daily. Doors open at 6.30, commence at 7.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER. This evening, at 6.15, THE SECRET. At 7.30, BOW BELLS. To conclude, at 9.30, with DON JUAN JUNIOR. Madames Kate Lawler, Brennan, Ritta, Julia Vivian, Crawford, Lavender, Carlin, Ward, and Annie Lawler; Messrs. Lightfoot, Cooper, Kelcey, S. Dallas, and T. P. Heynes. Powerful chorus.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

BOXES of BOOKS, containing the NEWEST WORKS in all departments of ENGLISH and FOREIGN LITERATURE, together with VOLUMES of MUSIC, are regularly despatched to Subscribers in the Country.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS visiting London will find in the GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY the advantage of a First-rate CLUB. The READING and WRITING ROOMS, the REFERENCE LIBRARY, the LUNCHEON and DINING ROOMS, the LADIES' DRAWING-ROOM, and the GENTLEMAN'S SMOKING-ROOM, are open daily, from 9 A.M. till 10 P.M.

Prospectuses, with Terms of Subscription, forwarded post-free on application to
MR. CHARLES ALLEN, Grosvenor Gallery Library, Limited, New Bond-street.

GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY.

HANDSOME BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

A LARGE ASSORTMENT of RICHLY ILLUSTRATED ARTISTIC PUBLICATIONS, both ENGLISH and FOREIGN, is now on SALE at the LIBRARY. Also a COMPLETE COLLECTION of the WORKS of STANDARD AUTHORS, handsomely bound in calf and morocco.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY LIBRARY (Limited),
NEW BOND STREET.

"WESTWARD HO!"

WILLS' "WESTWARD HO!" NEW SMOKING MIXTURE.

"When all things were made, none were made better than Tobacco; to be a lone man's Companion, a bachelor's Friend, a hungry man's Food, a sad man's Cordial, a wakeful man's Sleep, and a chilly man's Fire. There's no Herb like it under the canopy of heaven."—Kingsley's "Westward Ho!"

In 1 oz., 2 oz., and 4 oz. packets, lined with tinfoil.

W. D. & H. O. WILLS.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa." Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way." W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted." CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.E., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE. BRYANT & MAY'S PATENT SAFETY MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.
ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS
Are free from SMELL
Are manufactured
Without Phosphorus
Are perfectly harmless
To the Operatives employed
Are very DAMP PROOF
LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and
POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.
Also
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THREADNEEDLE STREET;
BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHANCERY CROSS;
And Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Life Assurances of all descriptions.
Specially low rates for young lives, and for non-participating Policies.
Prompt settlement of Claims.
A new and greatly simplified form of Proposal, also the Society's newly revised Prospectus, will be forwarded on application.

J. G. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds.

The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.

Moderate Premiums. Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000 has been paid as Compensation.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £20. No commission charged for keeping accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880. FRANCIS RAYNESCROFT, Manager.

STEPHENS DRAWING INK.

For Architectural Drawing and Artists' use.

Does not require stirring while in use.

Dries quickly, flows evenly from the pen, and becomes an insoluble colour when dry. Drawings executed with it can be washed without fear of injury. The most delicate Drawing Pens used with this Ink are not impaired by corrosion. On the contrary, instruments left with the Ink to dry on them are preserved as with a lacquer.

Sold in Bottles 6d. and 2s. each.

Can be procured through any Stationer.

H. C. STEPHENS, 391, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal.

Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £6 6s. to 50 guineas.

Drawing-room Suites, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

THE PRINTERS of Society, The Citizen,

Four other Newspapers, Twenty Monthly Periodicals, and other Publications possess unrivalled facilities both at London and Chisworth for the production of this class of work. Estimates Furnished.—UNWIN BROTHERS, The Grosvenor Press, 109A, Cannon-street, E.C.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.

Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.

Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW BOOKS ON IRELAND.

NEW VIEWS on IRELAND; or, Irish Land
Grievances and Remedies. By CHARLES RUSSELL, Q.C., M.P. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"Should be studied by everyone who desires to understand the existing crisis in Ireland."—Spectator.

THE LIFE'S WORK in IRELAND of a LANDLORD who TRIED to DO his DUTY. By W. BENICE JONES, of Lisselan. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"An interesting and instructive book, but not the least enlightening part of it is the Preface, dated the 12th of December, 1880. He had just been threatened with 'Boycotting,' which he now undergoes."—St. James's Gazette.

THE IRISH LAND LAWS. By Alexander G. Richey, Q.C., LL.D., Deputy Regius Professor of Feudal and English Law in the University of Dublin. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"To all who, either as legislators or publicists, are called on to take part in the present controversy, the book will prove invaluable."—Times.

"This book cannot fail to do good."—St. James's Gazette.

DISTURBED IRELAND: being the Letters written during the Winter of 1880-81 by BERNARD H. BECKER, Special Commissioner of the Daily News. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LIFE of WILLIAM BLAKE. With Selections from his Poems and other Writings. Illustrated from Blake's own Works. By ALEXANDER GILCHRIST. A New and Enlarged Edition, with Additional Letters and a Memoir of the Author. Printed on hand-made paper, the Illustrations on India paper, mounted in the Text. 2 vols., cloth elegant, gilt, with Designs after Blake by Frederick J. Shields, medium 8vo, 42s.

"One of the most beautiful and interesting books of the season."—Daily News.

GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

THE ESSAYS of JOSEPH ADDISON. Chosen and Edited by JOHN RICHARD GREEN, M.A., LL.D. 18mo, 4s. 6d.

DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSICIANS
(A.D. 1450—1878). By Eminent Writers, English and Foreign. Edited by GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L. 3 vols., 8vo, with Illustrations and Woodcuts. Parts I. to XII., 3s. 6d. each. Vols. I. and II., 21s. each.

Vol. I. A to IMPROMPTU. Vol. II. IMPROPERIA to PLAIN SONG.

"As a complete account of the biographical as well as technical materials relating to the art of music and its history, Mr. Grove's Dictionary is without precedent in England."—Quarterly Review.

ENGLISH MEN of LETTERS. Edited by John MORLEY. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. New Volume.

WORDSWORTH. By F. W. H. Myers.

"Mr. Myers gives us a picture of the man, and an estimate of his work, which is certainly not inferior to anything that has preceded it."—Academy.

ENGLISH POETS: Selections, with Critical Introductions by various Writers, and a general Introduction by MATTHEW ARNOLD. Edited by T. H. WARD, M.A. 4 vols., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

Vol. I. CHAUCER to DONNE. Vol. III. ADDISON to BLAKE.
Vol. II. BEN JONSON to DRYDEN. Vol. IV. WORDSWORTH to SYDNEY DOBELL.

"A work of the very highest excellence, which promises to be a most valuable addition to the standard criticism of English literature."—Academy.

THE YEAR'S ART: a Concise Epitome of all Matters relating to the Arts of PAINTING, SCULPTURE, and ARCHITECTURE which have occurred during the Year 1880, together with Information respecting the Events of the Year 1881. Compiled by MARCUS B. HUISSH. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Let us conclude this notice by heartily thanking Mr. Huish for his excellent handbook. It is sold at half-a-crown; we would willingly have given a guinea for it, and only regret that it was not thought of sooner."

GILBERT WHITE'S NATURAL HISTORY and ANTIQUITIES of SELBORNE. New Edition, with a Poem and Letters never before published. Edited, with Notes and Memoir, by FRANK BUCKLAND; a Chapter on Antiquities by Lord SELBORNE. With Illustrations by Professor Delamotte. Cheap Edition, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE ABBOTT'S FARM; or, Practice with Science.
By HENRY TANNER, M.R.A.C., F.C.S., Author of "First Principles of Agriculture." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S PROGRESSIVE FRENCH READER.
II. Second Year. Containing Fiction in Prose and Verse, Historical and Descriptive Extracts, Essays, Letters, Dialogues, &c. By G. EUGENE-FASNACHT, Author of Macmillan's "Progressive French and German Courses," &c. Extra fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

RECENT CLASSICAL BOOKS.

SELECTIONS from the ATTIC ORATORS, ANTIPHON, ANDOKIDES, LYSIAS, ISOCRATES, and ISAEOS. Edited, with Notes, by R. C. JEBB, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Greek in the University of Glasgow. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

"Professor Jebb occupies justly a foremost place among English classical scholars, and his writings are especially attractive to general readers, because of the beautiful prose in which he expresses himself."—Westminster Review.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of M. T. CICERO: being a Translation of the Letters in Mr. Watson's Selection, with Historical and Critical Notes by the Rev. G. E. JEANS, M.A. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Mr. Jean's translation deserves to take its place side by side with Davies and Vaughan's 'Republic,' and Church and Brodribb's 'Tacitus.'"—St. James's Gazette.

MACMILLAN'S CLASSICAL SERIES.

XENOPHON'S MEMORABILIA SOCRATIS. Edited, with Notes and Introductions, by A. R. CLUER, B.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Extra fcap. 8vo, 6s.

"This is more than a short book. It far surpasses in every respect all the English Editions of the 'Memorabilia.' The notes evince considerable scholarship. We can strongly recommend the work to students and teachers."—Athenaeum.

MARTIAL—SELECT EPIGRAMS. Edited by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., Head-Master of St. Peter's School, York. Extra fcap. 8vo, 6s.

XENOPHON'S ANABASIS, Books I.-IV. Edited, with Notes adapted to Goodwin's Greek Grammar, by Professors W. W. GOODWIN and J. W. WHITE, of Harvard University. With a Map. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

"This is an excellent school-book. . . . There are many editions of the 'Anabasis' or its parts, but we are inclined to think that this is the best for a young scholar who is bent on making himself a good one."—Dublin Evening Mail.

PLINY'S LETTERS. Book III. The Text of H. Keil, with a Commentary by JOHN F. B. MAYOR, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, and Professor of Latin in the University of Cambridge; and a LIFE of PLINY, by G. H. RENDALL, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

THE STORY of ACHILLES, from HOMER'S "ILIAD." Edited with Notes and Introduction, by the late J. H. PRATT, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Assistant-Master at Harrow; and WALTER LEAF, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.

VERGIL. THE SECOND GEORGIC. Edited by Rev. J. H. SKRINE, M.A., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and Assistant-Master at Uppingham. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

"He gives us a carefully written introduction, and some notes which show both taste and scholarship. . . . If any teacher desires to interest a pupil in Vergil's poetry, he cannot do better than put this little book into his hands."—Academy.

HORACE. SELECTIONS from the EPISTLES and SATIRES.
Edited by Rev. W. J. F. BAKER, B.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Assistant-Master at Marlborough. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

THE GREEK ELEGIAC POETS. Selected and Edited by Rev. HERBERT KYNASTON, M.A., Principal of Cheltenham College, and formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

"This capital selection supplies an obvious need, and should be used in all schools where Greek is taught, and by senior students who cannot afford complete editions of the poets in question."—Athenaeum.

LIVY. The HANNIBALIAN WAR. Being part of the 21st and 22nd Books of Livy, adapted for the use of Beginners. By G. C. MACAULAY, M.A., Assistant-Master at Rugby, formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

"It is an adaptation of Livy's difficult text to the wants of beginners, the peculiarities of Livy's beautiful style being carefully and most ingeniously preserved, while its difficulties are entirely removed. . . . We heartily recommend this little book for use in schools. There could be no better introduction to Livy, nor to the Art of Latin Prose Composition."—Dublin Evening Mail.

A SCHOOL LATIN GRAMMAR. By H. J. Roby, M.A., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, Author of "A Grammar of the Latin Language from Plautus to Suetonius," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"The appearance of a new School Latin Grammar, by Mr. Roby, is an event in educational literature."—Educational Times.

AN ELEMENTARY GREEK GRAMMAR. By W. W. Goodwin, Professor of Greek in Harvard University. New Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is the best Greek Grammar of its size in the English language."—Athenaeum.

FIRST LESSONS in GREEK: adapted to Goodwin's Greek Grammar, and designed as an Introduction to the Anabasis of Xenophon. By JOHN WILLIAMS WHITE, Ph.D., Assistant-Professor of Greek in Harvard University. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

SECOND STEPS to GREEK PROSE COMPOSITION, with Miscellaneous Idioms, Aids to Accentuation, and Examination Papers in Greek Scholarship. By BLOMFELD JACKSON, M.A., Author of "First Steps to Greek Prose Composition," &c. 18mo, 2s. 6d.

"* A KEY to both Parts, for the use of Teachers only, is in preparation.

"Mr. Jackson's work is a distinct gain to both composition, master and pupil."—Examiner.

"* * * Messrs. Macmillan & Co.'s Catalogues of Educational and other Books may be obtained on application."

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 454.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 15, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

Just ready, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

LOCKE'S CONDUCT of the UNDERSTANDING.

Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c. By THOMAS FOWLER, M.A., Professor of Logic in the University of Oxford, Fellow of Lincoln College.

"I cannot think any parent or instructor justified in neglecting to put this little treatise in the hands of a boy about the time when the reasoning faculties become developed."

HALLAM, in his Introduction to the Literature of Europe.

With an Introductory Essay, Maps and Plans, demy 8vo, cloth, £1 4s.

THE WELLINGTON DESPATCHES, Memoranda, and other Papers (Selections from). Edited by SIDNEY J. OWEN, M.A., Reader in Law and History, and Tutor at Christ Church; Reader in Indian History in the University of Oxford, formerly Professor of History in the Elphinstone College, Bombay.

"Mr. Owen has already earned and deserved a reputation as an Indian Historian. . . . His prefatory essays display great care and a thorough knowledge of his subject. . . . We shall in some measure indicate the value of the editor's labours when we say that Mr. Owen, in addition to a most instructive introduction, has given us a synopsis by which we may trace, without the least trouble, our great commander's connexion with and views concerning places and events, and that he has added to the collection despatches penned by the Duke long after he left India, and treating of matters of present and permanent interest; and, lastly, that capital maps and military plans accompany the volume."—Times.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE CONSTRUCTION of HEALTHY DWELLINGS

—Namely, Houses, Hospitals, Barracks, Asylums, &c. By DOUGLAS GALTON, late Royal Engineers, C.B., F.R.S., &c.

"Great simplicity of language and a liberal supply of woodcuts bring all the subjects discussed within the reach of those readers who are altogether without special knowledge; while the mastery displayed over all the applications of physical and physiological laws of hygiene entitles the book to a standard place in technical literature."—Academy.

3 vols., demy 8vo, £2 8s.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ENGLAND, in its ORIGIN and DEVELOPMENT. By WILLIAM STUBBS, D.D., Regius Professor of Modern History. Library Edition. Also crown 8vo Edition, 3 vols. cloth, 12s. each.

"The most valuable contribution to the knowledge of English constitutional history and law in our generation."—Westminster Review.

2 vols., cloth, £1 12s.

ITALY and her INVADERS, A.D. 376–476. By

T. HODGKIN, Fellow of University College, London. Illustrated with Plates and Maps.

"To his task Mr. Hodgkin has brought scholarly precision and workmanlike skill. But he has done more than this. He has brought also keen interest and power of realisation of the events with which he deals. His book is one of a class which only an Englishman can write. It bears on every page the mark of being written by a man who is not only a scholar, but is also conversant with affairs. Everything in it is vital with the life of our own day; occurrences are paralleled and characters illustrated from modern politics."—Times.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

PRIMER of FRENCH LITERATURE. By George SAINTSBURY.

"This is a book which is not only indispensable to the beginner in French literature, but most useful to the reader who has wandered at his will, picking and choosing at random in the garden which Mr. Saintsbury has made completely his own. So much recent writing on French literature has been scandalously inaccurate, flippant, and dull, that Mr. Saintsbury and the Clarendon Press confer a really rare benefit on the public in this little introduction to a wide subject."—Daily News.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORY of the NORMAN CONQUEST.

By F. A. FREEMAN, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., Honorary Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford; Corresponding Member of the Imperial Academy of Sciences of St. Petersburg.

"The little book has all the interest of a romance, with, as we believe, all the accuracy of sound history. It will be a delightful school-book, and it will be good reading for many who are not now at school."—Scotsman.

Third Edition, considerably enlarged, crown 8vo, cloth, 9s.

EXERCISES in PRACTICAL CHEMISTRY. Vol. I.

(ELEMENTARY EXERCISES). By A. G. VERNON HARCOURT, M.A., F.R.S., Senior Student of Christ Church, and Leo's Reader in Chemistry, and H. G. MADAN, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

"No pains have been spared to make the work practical in every sense of the word."—English Mechanic.
"An invaluable work for those who are beginning to learn practically the beautiful science of Chemistry."—Medical Press and Circular

2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE QUR'AN. Translated by Professor E. H.

PALMER. Being Volumes VI. and IX. of the SACRED BOOKS of the East. Translated by various Oriental Scholars, and Edited by F. MAX MULLER.

4to, cloth, £1 11s. 6d.

A LATIN DICTIONARY, Founded on Andrews'

Edition of Freund's Latin Dictionary. By CHARLTON T. LEWIS, Ph.D., and CHARLES SHORT, LL.D.

"Must supersede all its rivals for common use."—Prof. J. E. B. MATOR in Notes and Queries.
"The etymological notes certainly far surpass in accuracy and fullness anything as yet attempted in any dictionary."—Albion.
"The work of Messrs. Lewis and Short is a real advance on any previous Latin-English Dictionary. The orthography has been corrected throughout, a step which, however obvious, easy, and necessary, is of immense practical benefit to Latin Scholarship in England, where we have for some time, in books available for school teaching, been troubled with mere confusion in this matter."—Prof. NETTLESHIP in the Academy.
"What would not the scholars of the last century have given for such a Latin Dictionary? The great advances which philological study has made of late years, and the vastly increased knowledge of ancient life and thought, have given to this Dictionary a scholarly completeness which places it in the very first rank among works of reference. It will undoubtedly become a standard authority."—Westminster Review.

Parts I.—III., 4to, 10s. 6d. each.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE, arranged on an Historical Basis. By W. W. SKEAT, M.A. To be completed in Four Parts. Part IV. in the Press.

"Its merits are those of laborious and conscientiously accurate research, guided by profound learning and never-failing sagacity."—H. SWEET in the Academy.
"A work of enormous and self-denying labour, and quite unusual erudition, which, if it ends as it begins, should be a national possession."—Daily News.

THE OXFORD BIBLE for TEACHERS. Three New

Editions on India Paper, extremely light and thin.

THE SUPERINTENDENT'S EDITION, in Minion Type, measuring 7½ inches long, 5½ inches broad, and 1 inch in thickness. Weighing 22 ounces when bound.

THE POCKET EDITION, in Ruby Type, measuring 6½ inches long, 4½ inches broad, and 1 inch in thickness. Weighing 15 ounces, including binding.

THE SMALLEST EDITION, in Pearl Type, measuring 5½ inches long, 3½ inches broad, and 1 inch in thickness. Weighing 12½ ounces when bound.

THE OXFORD BIBLE for TEACHERS. Nine Sizes, corresponding page for page with each other.

Descriptions of Bindings.	THREE THIN EDITIONS ON INDIA PAPER.			SIX EDITIONS ON BEST RAG-MADE PRINTING PAPER.
	No. 2A	No. 3A	No. 6A	No. 1	No. 2	No. 3	No. 4	No. 5	No. 6
	Superintendent's Edition.	Pocket Edition.	Smallest Edition.	Minion 4to, with Margins.	Minion 8vo.	Nonp. 8vo.	Nonp. 8vo, with Red Borders.	Ruby 16mo.	Pearl 16mo.
	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.
Cloth boards, red edges	—	—	—	12 0	8 0	5 6	—	4 6	3 0
French Morocco	13 6	9 0	7 0	—	10 0	7 0	—	5 6	4 0
Paste Grain Morocco	15 6	11 0	8 0	18 0	12 8	9 0	12 0	8 0	6 0
Persian Morocco, limp	18 0	12 0	10 0	24 0	15 6	11 0	15 0	9 0	7 6
Turkey Morocco, limp	21 0	15 0	12 0	30 0	19 6	13 0	19 0	12 0	9 0
Do. flap edges	24 0	18 0	14 0	36 0	21 0	16 0	21 0	16 0	12 0
Levant Morocco, lined calf, flap edges	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Do. very flexible, silk sewed, the most durable binding extant	31 6	22 6	18 6	45 0	28 6	22 6	28 0	21 0	15 0

Specimen Pages and Prospectuses, giving full particulars, post-free.

THE HELPS to the STUDY of the BIBLE. Comprising all the Additional Matter that is contained in the Oxford Bible for Teachers, viz. :—

I. NOTES ANALYTICAL, HISTORICAL, GEOGRAPHICAL, CHRONOLOGICAL, ARCHAEOLOGICAL, PHYSIOLOGICAL, ZOOLOGICAL, BOTANICAL, and GEOLOGICAL.

II. AN INDEX to the HOLY BIBLE.

III. THE NEW OXFORD CONCORDANCE.

IV. DICTIONARY of SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES, with their PRONUNCIATION, MEANINGS, and REFERENCES.

V. SCRIPTURE ATLAS (INDEXED).

Pearl, 16mo	1s. 6d.	Nonp. 8vo	2s. 6d.
Ruby, 16mo	1s. 6d.	Minion 8vo	2s. 6d.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, 7, PATERNOSTER ROW.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
GAIRDNER'S LETTERS AND PAPERS OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII., by LORD ACTON	37
THE JOURNAL OF HELLENIC STUDIES, by D. B. MONRO	38
THE LIFE OF SIR ROWLAND HILL, by the Rev. C. J. ROBINSON	39
WADDINGTON'S ENGLISH SONNETS BY LIVING WRITERS, by GEO. SAINTSBURY	40
HALL'S INTERNATIONAL LAW, by J. WESTLAKE	41
CURRENT LITERATURE	42
NOTES AND NEWS	43
OBITUARY	44
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	44
LETTER FROM RHODES, by Prof. A. H. SAYCE	45
SELECTED BOOKS	46
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Dr. J. G. Wetstein, by Prof. W. Wright; Mr. Swinburne's New Volume, by A. C. Swinburne; Buddhagoshala and the "Milindapañā," by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris	46
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	46
CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE	46
NOTES OF TRAVEL	47
SCIENCE NOTES	47
PHILOLOGY NOTES	48
MARIETTE'S CATALOGUE OF THE ANTIQUITIES FOUND AT ADYDOS, by AMELIA B. EDWARDS	48
THE OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY, II., by COSMO MONKHOUSE	49
THE GROSVENOR GALLERY WINTER EXHIBITION	50
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	50
"THE COUNTRY GIRL," by FREDK. WEDMORE	51
STAGE NOTES	52
SATURDAY AND MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	52

GIRTON COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.—

The NEXT ENTRANCE EXAMINATION will be held at the London University, Burlington-gardens, in Edinburgh, and in Manchester, and will begin on MONDAY, March 7.—Forms of Entry should be filled in by Candidates, and sent, by January 31, to the Secretary, Mrs. CROOK-ROBERTSON, 31, Kensington-park-gardens, London, W., from whom all particulars may be obtained.

The Classical Foundation Scholarship, of the value of not less than £80 a Year for Four Years, and Two Scholarships, of the value of £60 and £45 a Year respectively, tenable for Three Years, will be awarded in connexion with this Examination.

The Clothworkers' Exhibition, of the value of Eighty Guineas a Year, for Three Years, will be awarded in connexion with the ensuing June Examination.

ABINGDON SCHOOL, Berks.—The new buildings give further accommodation. BOYS are prepared in modern subjects as well as for the Universities, where the School has valuable Scholarships. TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS are now open to boys entering in January. A scholar's total expenses average £35 per annum.—Apply to Rev. E. SUMMERS, Head Master.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 25TH JANUARY, 1881. F. W. MADDEN, M.R.A.S., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WARBERRY

HOUSE, Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEPHEN, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 60 Guineas.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Rev. C. B.

DRAKE, M.A., is able to OFFER to CANDIDATES for WOOLWICH the special advantages of Residence at Cambridge. Home life. Numbers strictly limited.—Address, 12, Queen Anne-terrace.

SAINT PAUL'S SCHOOL.—About

TWELVE SCHOLARSHIPS will be awarded next Term.—For information, address CLERK to GOVERNORS, Mercers' Hall, E.C.

BEDFORD COLLEGE (for LADIES),

8 & 9, YORK PLACE, BEDFORD SQUARE, LONDON.

LENT TERM begins JANUARY 29, 1881.—The College provides Systematic Lectures in the ordinary Higher subjects of Instruction, and Special Classes for Students preparing for the Matriculation, the B.A., and B.Sc. Examinations of the University of London. Chemical and Physical Laboratories are attached to the College for the study of Practical Science. F. KENSINGTON, Hon. Sec.

STUDIO, with Ante-Rooms, &c., in Pembridge-place, Bayswater.—Specially built for the purpose. lofty and well lighted. £50 per annum.—Apply to E. & F. SWAIN, 82, High-street, Notting-hill, W. (7,375.)

RAVENNA, BOLOGNA, VOLTERRA,

PERHARRA, &c.—THE PICTURES, ARCHITECTURE, and OBJECTS OF ART.—A Fine New Series of Splendid PHOTOGRAPHS by Alinari Bros., in 4s., and 6s. each. Inspection invited.—W. A. MANSELL & CO., 316 & 317, Oxford-street, London, W.

ODD VOLUMES of the "ACADEMY"

Newspaper for SALE at HALF-PRICE.—Vols. XII., XIII., XIV. (1877, 1878), in Cases, ready bound; and JANUARY—MAY, 1879, in loose numbers.—Apply to Miss PHILLIMORE, 5, Arlington-street, London, S.W.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

CHANGE IN THE LECTURE ARRANGEMENTS.

Professor EDWARD A. SCHAFER, F.R.S.—FIRST of ELEVEN LECTURES on the BLOOD, on TUESDAY, JANUARY 25 (instead of TUESDAY, JANUARY 18), at 3 P.M. One Guinea the Course.
FRANCIS HUFFEY, Esq.—FIRST of FOUR LECTURES on the THROATDOORS, on THURSDAY, JANUARY 27 (instead of THURSDAY, JANUARY 20), at 8 P.M. Half-a-Guinea.
SIDNEY COLVIN, Esq., Master Professor of Fine Art, Cambridge.—FIRST of FOUR LECTURES on "THE AMAZONS: A CHAPTER IN THE HISTORY OF GREEK ART AND MYTHOLOGY," on SATURDAY, JANUARY 29 (instead of SATURDAY, JANUARY 22), at 3 P.M. Half-a-Guinea.
Subscription for all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.
FRIDAY, JANUARY 21st, at 8 P.M., WARREN DE LA RUE, Esq., D.C.L., F.R.S., Sec. R.I.—"THE PHENOMENA OF THE ELECTRIC DISCHARGE with 140,000 CHLORIDE OF SILVER CELLS," at 9 P.M.
To the Friday Evening Meetings Members and their Friends only are admitted.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.—

The Rev. Dr. CHARLES ROGERS, having tendered his RESIGNATION to the Society, which has been accepted, ceased to be its Secretary from the 5th January, 1881. All Communications concerning the Society must be addressed to WM. HERBAE, Esq., the Treasurer and Hon. Secretary pro tem, 7, Fenchurch-street, City, London, who alone is authorised to receive Subscriptions and to make Payments.
By Order of the Council.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.—

The FIRST QUARTERLY VOLUME of the Society's TRANSACTIONS will be ISSUED early in MARCH, 1881, and contains papers by James Heywood, Esq., F.R.S.; Cornelius Walford, Esq.; Dr. Hyde Clarke; J. H. Chapman, Esq.; Dr. Zerill, &c.; as also Bibliographical Notices on the latest Historical Works published in England, America, and on the Continent. Fellows who wish to contribute papers are requested to forward them to WM. HERBAE, Esq., 7, Fenchurch-street, City, London, marked "For Publishing Committee."
By Order of the Council.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

MONDAY, JANUARY 24TH, 1881.
A PAPER will be read by W. SIMPSON, Esq., F.R.S., on "THE IDENTIFICATION OF NAGAIKA-HAIA IN THE JELLAHABAD VALLEY, with REFERENCE to the TRAVELS of HIOUEN-TSANG."
W. S. W. VAUX, Sec. R.A.S.

SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.

CLOSE SHORTLY.
WINTER EXHIBITION, OPEN 10 to 5 daily, at the SUFFOLK STREET GALLERIES, PALL MALL EAST. Admission 1s.
THOS. ROBERTS, Secretary.

ROYAL SCHOOL OF MINES.

DR. FRANKLAND, D.C.L., F.R.S., will COMMENCE a COURSE of THIRTY LECTURES on ORGANIC CHEMISTRY at the SCIENCE SCHOOLS, SOUTH KENSINGTON, on MONDAY NEXT, the 17TH INST., at 12 NOON, to be continued on each succeeding Wednesday, Friday, and Monday, at the same hour. Fee, £3, or to those who have attended the Inorganic Course, £2.
F. W. RUDLER, Registrar.

THE SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION, including a Loan Collection of Works by the late George Dodgson, is NOW OPEN, 5, PALL MALL EAST, from 10 till 5.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—The

Exhibition of Works by the Old Masters, and by Deceased Masters of the British School, including a Collection of Drawings by John Flaxman, R.A., is now open. Open from 9 till 6. One Shilling. Catalogues sixpence or bound in cloth, with pencil, one Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Colotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.
Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.
The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection, and is a cheap method of illustration where quantities are required.

"For Terms and Specimens apply to the Manager."
AUTOTYPE is especially adapted for REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART, possessing a wide range of monochrome expression, and reproducing with fidelity the Artist's touch.

JUST PUBLISHED on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s. "Come into these Yellow Sands," after the painting by Walter Field, Esq., exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1878, and the Paris Universal Exhibition, 1879. This fine Autotype combines the merits of an engraving with complete fidelity to the artist's touch, Mr. Field having produced a monochrome expressly for AUTOTYPE.
Will be ready in January, Autotype Reproductions of Twelve Drawings and Paintings by P. G. Hamerton, Esq.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY

Displays a noble Collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and many interesting examples of MODERN ART. To adorn a home with permanent photographic Masterpieces, examples of the greatest Masters of Art and of the best of the AUTOTYPE GALLERY, to be a matter of trifling cost. Admission free.

Catalogue of the Company's Publications, 138 pages, sixpence, free by post. Gratis to Purchasers.

General Manager, W. S. DIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

HEREFORD SQUARE, SOUTH KENSINGTON.

A conveniently arranged Residence, with an excellent detached Studio, having north light, separate entrances, and a large Garden. With Possession.

MESSRS. FAREBROTHER, ELLIS,

CLARK, & CO. are instructed to offer for SALE by AUCTION, at the MART, E.C., on WEDNESDAY, 27TH FEBRUARY, 1881, at 2 o'clock precisely, the very desirable RESIDENCE, No. 25, Hereford-square, South Kensington, situated close to the Gloucester-road Station, and within easy reach of Hyde-park, Brompton, and the other fashionable and favourite resorts. It is conveniently arranged, and contains ample accommodation for a family. Excellent detached Studio, and large Garden with side entrances. Held for seventy years at a moderate Ground Rent. Messrs. Farebrother may be had of Messrs. WILLIAMS, JAMES, & WASON, Solicitors, 62, Lincoln's-inn-fields; at the MART, E.C.; or of Messrs. FAREBROTHER, ELLIS, CLARK, & CO., 5 and 6, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C., and 18, Old Broad-street, E.C.

Just published, price 1s. 6d.; post-free, 1s. 8d.

THE CALENDAR of the UNIVERSITY

COLLEGE of WALES, 1880-81.

Manchester: J. E. CORNISH.

Now ready.

FREE CHURCH SERVICES.

FOR MARRIAGES, BURIALS, BAPTISMS, AND THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Adapted, from the Book of Common Prayer, for Nonconforming Congregations.

Crown 8vo, price 2s.

London: S. BAOSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW

No. 313, is published THIS DAY.

CONTENTS.

I. MEMOIRS OF PRINCE METTERNICH.

II. THE NAVIES OF THE WORLD.

III. JACOB VAN ARTEVELDE, the DREWER of GHEENT.

IV. ENUYMON by LORD HEACONSFIELD.

V. DR. CAIRD on the PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION.

VI. LAVELEYE'S ITALY AS IT IS.

VII. ARMY REFORM.

VIII. GROVE'S DICTIONARY of MUSIC.

IX. KINGLAKE'S INVASION of the CRIMEA.

X. ENGLAND and IRELAND.

London: LONGMANS & CO. Edinburgh: A. & C. BLACK.

CATES'S BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY.

New Edition, 8vo, pp. 1,492, price 28s., cloth; or price 35s., half-bound in Russia.

A DICTIONARY of GENERAL BIOGRAPHY. By WILLIAM L. CATES. Third Edition, Revised throughout and Completed to the Present Time; with the Supplement of 1875 incorporated, and new matter equal to one Hundred Pages, comprising nearly Four Hundred Memoirs and Notices of Persons recently deceased.
London: LONGMANS & CO.

GREEK AND GOTHIC:

PROGRESS AND DECAY IN THE THREE ARTS OF ARCHITECTURE, SCULPTURE, AND PAINTING.

By the Rev. R. ST. JOHN TYRWHITT, Christ Church, Oxford.

Crown 8vo, 12s.

"We feel that we have given but an imperfect sketch of a very attractive book; but we think that we have said enough to induce those of our readers who are interested in the study of Christian art and architecture to consult it for themselves. We are sure that no one will do so without much profit and pleasure."—John Bull.

London: WALTER SMITH (late MOZLEY & SMITH),
6, PATERNOSTER-ROW.

408th Edition, with Portrait, 1s. 6d.

BUTTER'S SPELLING.

BUTTER'S READING and SPELLING, in Easy Gradations. Seventy-second Edition, 1s. 6d.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & CO.; and all Booksellers.

FRENCH GRAMMAR, Founded upon the Principles of the French Academy, by JULES A. L. KUNZ, Teacher of Modern Languages in the Edinburgh Institution, the Philosophical Soc., John Watson's do., George Heriot's Hospital, &c. Price 3s. 6d.

Edinburgh: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK.

"Without more quotations, enough has been said to prove this book the bonest work of a well-read and accurate scholar."—Academy.
"A better manual for boys from twelve to sixteen years of age need not be desired."—Scotsman.

"This grammar is carefully written and well arranged."—Athenaeum.
"M. Kunz, whose excellent grammar we noticed a few weeks back,"
"A great feature of M. Kunz's book is its thorough completeness."—School Board Chronicle.

"A careful examination has given us a very favourable opinion of the book. It is handy in form, and the matter is well arranged."—North British Daily Mail.

"The book bears traces throughout of having been the work of a practical teacher of ripe experience, and is admirably adapted for use in our secondary schools."—Daily Review (Edin.).

"The student in search of a clear, thorough, and methodical grammar of the French language will find all he requires in the French grammar of M. Kunz."—School Guardian.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Now ready, price 1s. 6d., postage free, a NEW EDITION of MUDIE'S LIBRARY CATALOGUE.

A New Edition of the List of Books recently added to MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, containing every Recent Work of acknowledged merit and general interest, is also now ready, and will be forwarded on application.

All the best New Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure, and the Higher Class of Fiction continue to be taken in large numbers on the day of publication, and fresh copies are added as the demand increases.

Arrangements have again been made with the Leading Publishers for an ample supply of all the Principal Forthcoming Books as they appear.

Subscription, One Guinea per Annum,

For a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD STREET.

City Office: 2, King-street, Cheap-side.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and

DRAWINGS by the most esteemed OLD MASTERS may be obtained at GEORGE LOVE'S OLD PRINT SHOP, 81, BUNHILL ROW, LONDON. The Engravings, &c., are in fine condition, and have formed portions of the most celebrated collections. A Catalogue of a small portion of the Stock will be sent on receipt of two penny postage stamps.

* Established above 80 years.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST.

By Mrs. GEORGE SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. O. H. SUMNER, Hon. Canon of Winchester, Rector of Old Alresford, Hants. 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.

MY JOURNEY ROUND the WORLD: viâ CEYLON, NEW ZEALAND, AUSTRALIA, TORRES STRAITS, CHINA, JAPAN, and the UNITED STATES. By Capt. S. B. JONES PARRY, late Royal Madras Fusiliers. 2 vols. 2s.

"It is pleasant to follow Captain Jones PARRY on his Journey Round the World. He is full of life, sparkle, sunlight, and anecdote."—Graphic.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE. (1787—1874.) By his daughter, Madame DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol. 8vo, 15s.

AN ACTOR ABROAD; or, Gossip,

Dramatic, Narrative, and Descriptive. By EDMUND LEATHES. 8vo, 15s.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and

BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifth Edition. Royal 8vo, with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

"This work is the most perfect and elaborate record of the living and recently deceased members of the Peerage of the three Kingdoms as it stands at this day. We are happy to bear testimony to the fact that scrupulous accuracy is a distinguishing feature of this book."—Times.

THE NEW NOVELS.

BERYL FORTESCUE. By Lady

DUFFUS HARRY. 3 vols.

FIXED as FATE. By Mrs. Hous-

TOUX. Author of "Recommended to Mercy," "Twenty Years in the Wild West," &c. 3 vols.

JEANNETTE. By Mary C. Row-

SELL. Author of "Love Loyal," &c. 3 vols.

"Jeannette" is a love story replete with deep interest, which engrosses the attention to the last page."—Court Journal.

"This story is clearly told, and the situations are neither strained nor improbable. The author deserves praise for the faithfulness with which she portrays life and its ordinary incidents."—Daily Telegraph.

GERALDINE and her SUITORS.

By Mrs. SIMPSON. Author of "Winno's History," &c. 3 vols.

"This book is both pleasing to read and pleasing to remember."

"A delightful novel. It is cheerful and wholesome in tone, it contains several types of character which are well drawn, and the interest is well preserved to the end."—John Bull.

LITTLE PANSY. By Mrs.

RANDOLPH. Author of "Gentianella," &c. 3 vols.

"This novel is sure to be popular. It is a most amusing story. Little Pansy is a charming creature."—Sunday Times.

DIMPLETHORPE. By the Author of "ST. OLAVE'S," &c. 3 vols.

"Dimplethorpe" is a well-written, ingenious, agreeable, and interesting story. The characters are naturally drawn."—St. James's Gazette.

STRICTLY TIED UP. 3 vols.

"Strictly Tied Up" is entertaining. It is in every sense a novel conceived in a light and happy vein."—Athenaeum.

"Strictly Tied Up" is a very cleverly constructed novel, as amusing as it is ingenious."—St. James's Gazette.

IDONEA. By Anne Beale, Author of "Pay Arlington," &c. 8 vols. [Just ready.

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by

Mr. J. GILBERT, MILLAIS, HUNT, LEECH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. John Halifax, Gentleman. The Crescent and the Cross. By Elton Warburton. Nathaniel. By Miss Kavanagh. A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of "John Halifax." Adam Graeme. By Mrs. Oliphant. Sam Slick's Wise Sawes. Cardinal Wiseman's Popes. A Life for a Life. By the Author of "John Halifax." Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb. Margaret and her Bridesmaids. Sam Slick's Old Judge. Darien. By Elton Warburton. Sir B. Burke's Family Romance. The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs. Oliphant. The Englishwoman in Italy. Nothing New. By the Author of "John Halifax." Freer's Life of Jeanne d'Albret. The Valley of a Hundred Fires. Burke's Romance of the Forum. Adele. By Miss Kavanagh. Studies from Life. By the Author of "John Halifax." Grandmother's Money. Jefferson's Book about Doctors. Mistress and Maid. By the Author of "John Halifax." Les Misérables. By Victor Hugo. St. Olave's. Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

TRÜBNER & CO'S LIST OF PUBLICATIONS.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT within

HISTORIC TIMES; with Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Demy 8vo, with Illustrations by Wolf and others, cloth, 14s. A few Copies printed on Large Paper, 31s. 6d.

DR. APPLETON: his Life and Literary

Relics. By JOHN H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, Sussex; and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, and Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE RELIGIOUS REVOLUTION of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. From the French of EDGAR QUINET. Forming an Explanation and a Defence of the Principle of the Policy of the French Government with reference to the Roman Church in France. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

THE ENEMIES of BOOKS. By William

BLADES, Typograph. Author of "The Life and Typography of William Caxton," &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, with Illustrations, parchment, 5s.

KING'S COLLEGE LECTURES on ELO-

CUTION; or, the Physiology and Culture of Voice and Speech, and the Expression of the Emotions. By Language, Constitution, and Gesture. Being the Substance of the Introductory Course of Lectures annually delivered by CHARLES JOHN PLUMPTRE, Lecturer on Public Reading and Speaking at King's College, London, in the Evening Classes Department. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. New and greatly enlarged Illustrated Edition, to which is added a Special Lecture on the Causes and Cure of Impediments of Speech. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

LETTERS from my MILL. From the French of ALPHONSE DAUPET. By MARY COREY. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s.; boards, 2s.

CHEAP EDITION OF MR. ARNOLD'S POPULAR POEM ON BUDDHA

AND BUDDHISM.

THE LIGHT of ASIA; or, the Great

Renunciation. Being the Life and Teaching of Gaatama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Told in Verse by an Indian BUDDHIST. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Author of "The Indian Song of Songs." Crown 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.

THE ENGLISHMAN and the SCANDI-

NAVIAN; or, a Comparison of Anglo-Saxon and Old Norse Literature. By F. MEYERLE, M.A., Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, Translator of "Gallus" and "Charities," Author of "The Grouse in Iceland," &c. 8vo, cloth, 18s.

NEW VOLUMES OF

"TRÜBNER'S ORIENTAL SERIES."

THE HISTORY of ESARHADDON (Son of Sennacherib), King of Assyria B.C. 681—669. Translated from the Cuneiform Inscriptions in the British Museum Collection. Together with a Grammatical Analysis of each Word, List of Eponyms, &c. By E. A. BUDGE, M.R.A.S., Assyrian Exhibitioner, Christ's College, Cambridge. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY of the JAPANESE. By BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yeigo Henkaku Ichiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

A TALMUDIC MISCELLANY; or, a

Thousand and One Extracts from the Talmud, the Mishnah, and the Kabbalah. Compiled and Translated by P. I. HERMON. With Preface by the Rev. F. W. FARRAR, D.D., Canon of Westminster. Post 8vo, cloth, 14s.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES; or, Jataka

Tales. From the Original Pali of the Jatakavannana, now for the first time Edited by Prof. V. FAUSBOLL. Translated by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 18s.

THE GULISTAN; or, Rose Garden of

Sheikh Musliim-din Sâdi of Shiraz. Translated for the first time into Prose and Verse, with a Preface and a Life of the Author, from the Atish Kadah. By EDWARD B. EASTWICK, F.L.S., M.R.A.S., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

LINGUISTIC and ORIENTAL PHILO-

SOPHICAL LIBRARY.

Written from the year 1836 to 1875. By R. N. CUNY, late Indian Civil Service; Hon. Sec. R. Asiatic Society. Post 8vo, cloth, 15s.

NEW VOLUMES OF

"THE ENGLISH and FOREIGN PHILO-SOPHICAL LIBRARY."

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of the HUMAN RACE. Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEIGEL, Author of "Origin and Evolution of Human Speech and Reason." Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER, Ph.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

AN ACCOUNT of the POLYNESIAN

RACE: its Origin and Migrations. By A. FOENANDER. Vol. II. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

SEE IN GOOD WORDS

For JANUARY

The Beginning of

Mr. R. D. BLACKMORE'S

(Author of "Lorna Doone," &c.)

New Dartmore Romance,

CHRISTOWELL ("Written in his happiest manner," says the Illustrated London News);

AND OF

Mr. FROUDE'S Papers on the

OXFORD HIGH CHURCH

REVIVAL. ("Nothing in the forthcoming magazines is likely to excite more lively interest," says

the Pall Mall Gazette.)

* * Both Works will be continued month by month until completed.

SIXPENCE MONTHLY, ILLUSTRATED.

ISBISTER AND CO., Limited,

56, Ludgate Hill, E.C. ;

And at all Booksellers' and Bookstalls.

SECOND EDITION.

F A R O U T :

ROVINGS RETOLD.

By LIEUT.-COL. W. F. BUTLER, C.B.,

Author of "The Great Lone Land," &c.

Post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"The author's powers of picturesque description bring before his readers with equal ease the desolate North, the unique wonders of the Yosemite Valley, and many fair scenes in South Africa and Cyprus."—Athenaeum.

"'Far Out,' is not a series of mere travelling sketches. . . . In the chapter on South Africa the author discusses with full knowledge of the subject, and with great ability, problems which have long occupied English statesmen, and for which even now satisfactory solutions have still to be found."—St. James's Gazette.

"If only for the manly and outspoken Preface, we should welcome this volume."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"No ordinary book. It ought to be marked, learned, and inwardly digested by every Englishman."—Graphic.

"Brilliant, exhilarating, beautifully humorous. . . . A narrative of travels in the mountains of British Columbia, which cannot be excelled for magnificent presentment, takes two hours to read; readers could put up with twenty-two without boredom."—Vanity Fair.

"Colonel Butler has not merely glanced at the scenes of which he writes—he has lived in them; and not a week of the many months which he has spent alone on the prairie or under the frozen pines of northernmost America has been without its results in his pictures of them. . . . The introductory chapter on the colonial policy of England is also worthy of careful attention, for Colonel Butler is as liberal and original a thinker as he is poetical a describer."

Tablet.

WM. ISBISTER, Limited,

56, Ludgate-hill, London.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

SCIENCE PRIMERS.

Under the Joint Editorship of Professors HUXLEY, ROSCOE, and BALFOUR STEWART.

18mo, Illustrated, 1s. each.

- Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.
Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe, F.R.S. With Questions.
Physics. By Prof. B. Stewart, F.R.S. With Questions.
Physical Geography. By Prof. Geikie, F.R.S. With Questions.
Geology. By Prof. Geikie, F.R.S.
Physiology. By M. Foster, M.D., F.R.S.
Astronomy. By J. N. Lockyer, F.R.S.
Botany. By Sir J. D. Hooker, K.C.S.I., F.R.S.
Logic. By Prof. Jevons, F.R.S.
Political Economy. By Prof. Jevons.

*. Others to follow.

ELEMENTARY SCIENCE.

- Astronomy. By J. N. Lockyer, F.R.S. With Illustrations, 5s. 6d.—QUESTIONS, 1s. 6d.
Botany. By Prof. Oliver, F.R.S., F.L.S. With Illustrations, 4s. 6d.
Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe, F.R.S. With Illustrations, 4s. 6d.
Chemical Problems Adapted to the Same. By Prof. THORPE. With KEY, 2s.
Chemistry.—Owens College Junior Course of Practical Chemistry. By F. JONES. Preface by Prof. ROSCOE. 2s. 6d.
Questions on Chemistry. By Francis Jones. 18mo, 3s.
Logic, Deductive and Inductive. By Prof. JEVONS, LL.D., M.A., F.R.S. 3s. 8d.
Physiology. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S. With Illustrations, 4s. 6d.—QUESTIONS, 1s. 6d.
Political Economy for Beginners. By M. G. FAWCETT. With QUESTIONS, 2s. 6d.
Physics. By Prof. B. Stewart, F.R.S. With Illustrations, 4s. 6d.
Natural Philosophy for Beginners. By I. TODHUNTER, M.A., F.R.S. Part I. PROPERTIES OF SOLID and FLUID BODIES, 3s. 6d. Part II. SOUND, LIGHT, and HEAT, 3s. 6d.
Physical Geography. By Prof. A. Geikie, F.R.S. With Illustrations, 4s. 6d.—QUESTIONS, 1s. 6d.
Class-Book of Geography. By C. B. Clarke, M.A., F.G.S. With Maps, 3s.
Sound: an Elementary Treatise on. By Dr. W. IL STONE. Illustrated, 3s. 6d.

MANUALS FOR STUDENTS.

- Ancient Geography: a Manual of. From the German of Dr. H. KIEPERT. [Nearly ready.]
Elementary Practical Physiology. By Michael FOSTER, M.D., F.R.S., and J. N. LANGLEY, B.A. Crown 8vo, 8s.
Anthropology: an Introduction to the Study of Man. With numerous illustrations. By E. H. TYLOR, F.R.S. [Nearly ready.]
The Student's Flora of the British Islands. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, K.C.S.I., F.R.S. Globe 8vo, 10s. 6d.
Physiology: an Introduction to the Study of Nature. By Prof. HUXLEY, F.R.S. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo. New and Cheaper Edition, 6s.
Elementary Biology. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S., assisted by H. N. MARTIN, M.B., D.Sc. Crown 8vo, 6s.
The Principles of Science: a Treatise on Logic and Scientific Method. By Prof. W. STANLEY JEVONS, LL.D., F.R.S. Crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.
Manual of Political Economy. By Right Hon. HENRY FAWCETT, M.P. Crown 8vo, 12s.
Economies of Industry. By A. Marshall, M.A., and MARY P. MARSHALL. 2s. 6d.
Studies in Deductive Logic: a Manual for Students. By W. STANLEY JEVONS, LL.D., M.A., F.R.S. Crown 8vo, 6s.
Guide to the Study of Political Economy. By Dr. LIGI COSSA, Professor in the University of Pavia. Translated from the Second Italian Edition. With a Preface by W. STANLEY JEVONS, F.R.S. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

HISTORY & LITERATURE PRIMERS.

18mo, 1s. each.

Edited by JOHN RICHARD GREEN.

- Homer. By the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
English Grammar. By R. Morris, LL.D.
Rome. By M. Creighton, M.A. Maps.
Greece. By C. A. Fyfe, M.A. Maps.
English Literature. By Stopford Brooke, M.A.
Europe. By E. A. Freeman, D.C.L. Maps.
Greek Antiquities. By J. P. Mahaffy, M.A.
Roman Antiquities. By Prof. A. S. Wilkins.
Classical Geography. By H. F. Tozer.
Geography. By George Grove, F.R.G.S. Maps.
Children's Treasury of Lyrical Poetry. By F. T. PALGRAVE. In Two Parts, each 1s.
Shakspeare. By Prof. Dowden.
Philology. By J. Peile, M.A.
Greek Literature. By Prof. Jebb.
English Grammar Exercises. By R. Morris, LL.D., and H. C. BOWEN, M.A.
France. By C. M. Yonge. Maps.
English Composition. By Prof. Nichol.
*. Others to follow.
Primer of Pianoforte-Playing. By Franklin TAYLOR. Edited by GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L. 18mo, 1s.
First Principles of Agriculture. By Henry TANNER, F.C.S. 18mo, 1s.

HISTORICAL COURSE.

Edited by E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L.

- General Sketch of European History. By E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L. With Maps. 3s. 6d.
England. By E. Thompson. Maps. 2s. 6d.
Scotland. By Margaret MacArthur. 2s.
Italy. By W. Hunt, M.A. 3s.
Germany. By James Sime, M.A. 3s.
America. By J. A. Doyle. Maps. 4s. 6d.
European Colonies. By E. J. Payne. 4s. 6d.
France. By C. M. Yonge. Maps. 3s. 6d.

*. Others to follow.

- A Short History of the English People. By J. R. GREEN. With Maps, &c. 6s. 6d. [2nd Thousand.]
Analysis of English History, based on the Above. By C. W. A. TAIT. 3s. 6d.
Readings from English History. Edited by J. R. GREEN. 3 vols., 1s. 6d. each.
Old English History. By E. A. Freeman, D.C.L. With Maps. 6s.
Cameos from English History. By C. M. YONGE. 4 vols., 5s. each.
History of England. By M. J. Guest. With Maps. 6s.
A Short Geography of the British Islands. By JOHN RICHARD ORREN and ALICE STOPFORD GREEN. With Twenty-eight Maps. 3s. 8d.
A Short History of India, embodying the History of the Three Frontier States of Afghanistan, Nepal, and Burma. By J. TALBOYS WHEELER. With Maps. 12s.
A Shakespearian Grammar. By Dr. Abbott, 6s.
Longer English Poems. Edited by Prof. HALES. 4s. 6d.
Historical Outlines of English Accidence. By Dr. R. MORRIS. 6s.
Historical English Grammar. By the Same. 2s. 6d.
On the Study of Words. By Archbishop TRENCH. 5s.
English, Past and Present. By the Same. 5s.
Select Glossary of English Words, used formerly in Senses different from the Present. By the SAME. 5s.

MODERN LANGUAGES.

- Progressive French Course. By Eugène FASNACHT. First Year, 1s.; Second Year, 1s. 6d.; Third Year, 2s. 6d.
Progressive French Reader. By the Same AUTHOR. First Year, 2s. 6d.; Second Year, 2s. 6d.
Progressive German Course. By the Same. First Year, 1s. 6d.; Second Year, 2s.
First Lessons in French. By H. Courthope BOWEN, M.A. 18mo, 1s.
French Dictionary. By G. Masson. 6s.
German Dictionary. By Prof. Whitney and A. H. EDGREEN. 7s. 6d.—German-English Part, 5s.
German Grammar. By Prof. Whitney. 4s. 6d.
German Reader. By the Same. 5s.
Beaumarchais.—Le Barbier de Seville. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by L. P. DLOUET. 3s. 6d.
Molière.—Le Malade Imaginaire. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by F. TARTER, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Dante.—The Purgatory. Edited, with Translation and Notes, by ARTHUR JOHN BUTLER. 12s. 8d.
De Monarchia. Translated by F. J. Church. 4s. 6d.
Goethe's Faust. Translated into English Verse by Professor BLACKIE, F.R.S.E. 9s.
New Guide to German Conversation. By PYLODET. 2s. 6d.
Handbook to Modern Greek. By E. Vincent and T. O. DICKSON. 5s.

ELEMENTARY DIVINITY.

- By Dr. Maclear.
A Class-Book of Old Testament History. 4s. 6d.
A Class-Book of New Testament History. 5s. 6d.
A Class-Book of the Church Catechism. 1s. 6d.
A First Class-Book of the Catechism. With Scripture Proofs. 6d.
A Shilling Book of Old Testament History.
A Shilling Book of New Testament History.
Scripture Readings for Schools and Families. By C. M. YONGE. 5 vols., price 1s. 6d. each. Also, with Comments, 3s. 6d. each.
The Bible in the Church. By Canon Westcott, D.D. 18mo, 4s. 6d.
The Book of Common Prayer: an Elementary Introduction to. By F. PROCTOR and Dr. MACLEAR. 16mo, 2s. 6d.
Children's Treasury of Bible Stories. By Mrs. GASKOIN. Edited, with Preface, by Dr. MACLEAR. Part I. OLD TESTAMENT, 1s. Part II. NEW TESTAMENT, 1s. Part III. THREE APOSTLES, 1s.

TRANSLATIONS.

- Cicero's Academica. Translated by J. S. REID, M.A. 8vo, 5s. 6d.
Cicero's Letters. Translated from Watson's Selection by Rev. G. E. JEANS, M.A. 10s. 6d.
Homer's Odyssey. By S. H. Butcher, M.A., and A. LANG, M.A. New Edition. Revised and Corrected. 10s. 6d.
Horace in English Prose. By Lonsdale and LEE. With Introductions, Notes, &c. 3s. 6d.
Plato.—The Republic. By J. LI. Davies, M.A., and D. J. VAUGHAN, M.A. 4s. 6d.
Plato.—Euthyphro, Apology, Crito, and PHAEDO. By F. J. CHURCH. 4s. 6d.
Tacitus. By Church and Brodribb.
The History. 6s.
The Annals. 7s. 6d.
The Agricola and Germany, with the DIALOGUE on ORATORY. 4s. 6d.
Theocritus, Bion, and Moschus. By A. Lang, M.A. 6s.
Virgil in English Prose. By Lonsdale and LEE. With Introduction, Notes, &c. 3s. 6d.

[See next page.]

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.

18mo, price 1s. 6d. each.

- Virgil.—Aeneid V. Edited by A. Calvert, M.A.
- Horace.—Odes. Book I. Edited by T. E. PAGE, M.A.
- Selections from Ovid. Edited by E. S. SHUCKBURN, M.A.
- Caesar.—The Gallic War. Second and Third CAMPAIGNS. Edited by W. G. RUTHERFORD, M.A.
- Thucydides. Book IV. Chaps. 1–41. Edited by C. E. GRAVES, M.A.
- Herodotus. Selections from Books VII. and VIII. Edited by A. H. COOKE, B.A.
- Virgil.—Georgic II. Edited by Rev. J. H. EKRINE, M.A.
- Horace.—Epistles and Satires. Selected and Edited by Rev. W. J. V. BAKER, M.A.
- Greek Elegiac Poets. Selected and Edited by Rev. H. KYNASTON, M.A.
- Livy.—Scenes from Hannibalian War. Adapted for the Use of Beginners. By G. C. MACAULAY, M.A.
- Caesar.—Scenes from the Fifth and Sixth BOOKS OF THE GALLIC WAR. By C. COLBECK, M.A. [Next week.]
- Horace.—Odes. Book II. Edited by T. E. PAGE, M.A. [Nearly ready.]

* * Others to follow.

MACMILLAN'S CLASSICAL SERIES.

- Aeschylus.—Persae. Edited by A. O. PRICKARD, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- Cicero.—The Second Philippic Oration. From the German of Halm. By Prof. JOHN E. B. MAYOR. 5s.
- The Catiline Orations. From the German of Halm. With Additions, by Prof. A. S. WILKINS, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- Pro Lege Manilia. Edited, after Halm, by Prof. A. S. WILKINS, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- Pro Roscio Amerino. Edited, after Halm, by E. H. DONKIN, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Demosthenes.—De Corona. Edited by B. DRAKE, M.A. New and Revised Edition. 4s. 6d.
- Homer's Iliad.—The Story of Achilles. Edited by J. H. PRATT, M.A., and WALTER LEAF, M.A. 6s.
- Homer's Odyssey. Books IX.—XII. Edited by Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR, M.A. Part I. 3s.
- Juvenal.—Select Satires. Edited by Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR. Satires X. and XI. 3s. XII.—XVI. 3s. 6d.
- Livy. Books XXI. and XXII. By W. W. CAPES, M.A. 5s.
- Martial.—Select Epigrams. Edited by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 6s.
- Ovid's Fasti. Edited by G. H. Hallam, M.A. [Immediately.]
- Ovid.—Heroidum Epistulae XIII. Edited by E. S. SHUCKBURN, M.A. 4s. 6d.
- Plautus.—Miles Gloriosus. Edited by Prof. R. Y. TYRRELL, 5s.
- Pliny's Letters. Book III. Edited by Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR. With Life of Pliny, by G. H. RENDALL, M.A. 5s.
- Sallust. Edited by C. Merivale, B.D. 4s. 6d.
- The CATILINA and JUGURTHA separately, 2s. 6d. each.
- Tacitus.—Agricola and Germania. Edited by CHURCH and BRODRIBB. 3s. 6d. Separately, 2s. 6d. each.
- The Annals. Book VI. By the Same Editors. 2s. 6d.
- Terence.—Hauton Timorumenos. Edited by E. S. SHUCKBURN, M.A. 3s. With Translation, 4s. 6d.
- Phormio. Edited by Rev. John Bond, M.A., and A. B. WALPOLE, B.A. 4s. 6d.
- Thucydides. Books VI. and VII. Edited by the Rev. P. FROST, M.A. 5s.
- Xenophon.—Hellenica. Books I. and II. Edited by H. HAILSTONE, B.A. 4s. 6d.
- Cyropaedia. Books VII. and VIII. Edited by Professor ALFRED GOODWIN, M.A. 5s.
- Anabasis. Books I.—IV. Edited by Professors W. W. GOODWIN and J. W. WHITE. 5s.
- Memorabilia Socratis. Edited by A. R. CLUER, B.A. 6s.

CLASSICAL WORKS.

- First Latin Grammar. By M. C. Macmillan, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- School Latin Grammar. By H. J. Roby, M.A. 5s.
- Latin Prose Composition. By H. Belcher, M.A. 1s. 6d.—KEY, 2s. 6d. Part II., 2s.
- Latin Prose Composition, Hints towards. By A. W. POTTS, LL.D. 3s.
- Passages for Translation into Latin Prose. By the SAME. 2s.—KEY, 2s. 6d.
- Latin Prose Composition, First Steps to. By C. RUST, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- Synthetic Latin Delectus. By E. Rush, B.A. 2s.
- A Grammar of the Latin Language, from PLAUTUS to SUETONIUS. By H. J. ROBY, M.A. In 2 Parts. Third Edition. Part I., crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. Part II., 10s. 6d.
- Greek and Latin Etymology, an Introduction to. By J. PELLE, M.A. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- Homeric Dictionary. By Dr. G. Autenreith, Translated by Dr. KEEP. 6s.
- Greek Prose Composition. First Steps. By B. JACKSON. 1s. 6d. Second Steps, 2s. 6d. [Key in the press.]
- Greek Iambics for Beginners. By Rev. H. KYNASTON, M.A. 4s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d.
- Greek for Beginners. By Prof. J. B. Mayor. Part I., 1s. 6d.; II. and III., 3s. 6d. Complete, 4s. 6d.
- First Greek Reader. By Prof. John E. B. Mayor. 4s. 6d.
- First Greek Grammar. By W. G. Rutherford, M.A. New Edition, Enlarged. 1s. 6d.
- Syntax of the Greek Moods and Tenses. By Prof. GOODWIN. New Edition. 6s. 6d.
- Elementary Greek Grammar. By Prof. W. W. GOODWIN, Ph.D. 6s.
- First Lessons in Greek. By Prof. J. White. 4s. 6d.
- Elements of Greek Grammar. By Prof. J. O. GREENWOOD. 5s. 6d.

MATHEMATICAL WORKS.

- By Barnard Smith, M.A.
- Arithmetic and Algebra. 10s. 6d.
- Arithmetic for the Use of Schools. 4s. 6d.—KEY, 8s. 6d.
- Shilling Book of Arithmetic. For National and Elementary Schools. 18mo. Or separately, Part I., 2d.; Part II., 3d.; Part III., 7d. With ANSWERS, 1s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d.
- School Class-Book of Arithmetic. 18mo, 3s. Or in Three Parts, 1s. each.—KEY, Three Parts, 2s. 6d. each.
- Arithmetic in Theory and Practice. By J. BROOK-SMITH. 4s. 6d.
- Exercises in Arithmetic. By S. Pedley. 5s.
- Algebraical Exercises. Progressively Arranged. By C. A. JONES, M.A., and C. H. CHEYNE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- By T. Dalton, M.A.
- Rules and Examples in Arithmetic. 2s. 6d.
- Rules and Examples in Algebra. Part I., 2s.; Part II., 2s. 6d.
- Note-Book on Practical, Solid, or Descriptive GEOMETRY. By J. H. EDGAR and G. S. FRITCHARD. Fourth Edition, by A. G. NEEZE. 4s. 6d.
- Geometrical Note-Book. By F. E. Kitchener. 2s.

MATHEMATICAL WORKS.

- By J. M. Wilson, M.A.
- Elementary Geometry. Books I. to V. New Edition, Enlarged. 4s. 6d.
- Solid Geometry and Conic Sections. 4s. 6d.
- Natural Geometry: an Introduction to the Logical Study of Mathematics. With Explanatory Models. By A. MAULT. 1s.
- MODELS to illustrate the above, in Box, 12s. 6d.
- Analytical Geometry, Exercises in. By J. M. DYER, M.A. [In the press.]
- Plane Trigonometry, Graduated Exercises in. By J. WILSON, M.A., and E. R. WILSON, B.A. 4s. 6d.
- Elements of Descriptive Geometry. By J. B. MILLAR, C.E. 6s.
- Conic Sections: a Geometrical Treatise. By W. H. DREW. Crown 8vo, 5s.—SOLUTIONS, 4s. 6d.
- By I. Todhunter, M.A., F.R.S.
- Euclid for Colleges and Schools. 3s. 6d.—KEY, 6s. 6d.
- Mensuration for Beginners. 2s. 6d.
- Algebra for Beginners. With numerous Examples. 2s. 6d.—KEY, 6s. 8d.
- Trigonometry for Beginners. 2s. 6d.—KEY, 8s. 6d.
- Mechanics for Beginners. 4s. 6d.—Key, 6s. 6d.
- Algebra for the Use of Colleges and SCHOOLS. 7s. 8d.—KEY, 10s. 6d.
- The Theory of Equations. 7s. 6d.
- Plane Trigonometry. 5s.—Key, 10s. 6d.
- Spherical Trigonometry. 4s. 6d.
- Conic Sections. With Examples. 7s. 6d.
- The Differential Calculus. With Examples. 10s. 6d.
- The Integral Calculus. 10s. 6d.
- Examples of Analytical Geometry of Three DIMENSIONS. 4s.
- Analytical Statics. With Examples. 10s. 6d.
- By S. Parkinson, D.D., F.R.S.
- Mechanics, an Elementary Treatise on. With Examples. 9s. 6d.
- A Treatise on Optics. 10s. 6d.
- By Prof. G. Boole, F.R.S.
- Differential Equations. Crown 8vo, 14s. Supplementary Volume, 8s. 6d.
- Calculus of Finite Differences. 10s. 6d.
- An Elementary Treatise on Conic Sections and ALGEBRAIC GEOMETRY. By G. H. PUCKLE, M.A. 7s. 6d.
- Dynamics of a Particle. By Prof. Tait and Mr. STEELE. 12s.
- Dynamics of the System of Rigid Bodies. By E. J. ROUTH, M.A., F.R.S. Third Edition, Enlarged. 8vo, 21s.
- The Elements of Dynamic. By Prof. W. K. CLIFFORD, F.R.S. Part I. KINETIC. 7s. 6d.
- The Theory of Electricity. By L. Cumming. M.A. With Illustrations. 8s. 6d.
- Mathematical Problems. Devised and Arranged by J. WOLSTENHOLME. New Edition, Enlarged. 8vo, 12s.
- Units and Physical Constants. By Prof. J. D. EVERETT, F.R.S. 4s. 6d.
- Elementary Applied Mechanics. By Prof. T. ALEXANDER, C.E. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

* * CATALOGUES OF EDUCATIONAL AND OTHER WORKS FORWARDED ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S NEW WORKS.

THE POLITICAL DIARY of LORD ELLENBOROUGH, 1828—1830.

Edited by LORD COLCHESTER.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, £1 10s.

[Immediately.]

ACROSS PATAGONIA. By

LADY FLORENCE DIXIE. With Illustrations by Julius Beerbohm. Demy 8vo, 15s.

"The book is not to be described, it is to be read. The narrative is most stirring, and the interest goes on increasing until it culminates in the last five days' famished ride into Cabo Negro. If the book is translated into French the Parisians will, we venture to predict, forget M. Gambetta for a good fortnight."—Vanity Fair.

"A book which ought to be read by everybody."

Morning Post.

"A very delightful book."—Pall Mall Gazette.

UNKNOWN HUNGARY. By

VICTOR TISSOT. Translated by Mrs. OSWALD BRODIE. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

ROUND ABOUT NORWAY. By

CHARLES W. WOOD, Author of "Through Holland," &c. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s.

PAST HOURS. By the late Mrs.

SAROTIS (Adelaide Kemble). Edited by her Daughter, Mrs. GORDON. In 2 vols., post 8vo, 12s.

"The reader is struck to find wit, insight, and a sense of the ridiculous at once robust and refined, combined with the most straightforward simplicity and sense of justice."

Pall Mall Gazette.

"The passionate warmth, the ready wit, the many picturesque and humorous touches, scattered freely over these pages, reveal the artistic nature and the emotional temperament."—Daily Telegraph.

THE CORAL LANDS of the PACI-

IFIC: being an Account of nearly all the Inhabited Islands of the Pacific, their Peoples, and their Products. By H. STONEHOUSE COOPER. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Illustrations, 28s.

"For completeness as a tableau of the scenery and resources, the life, manners, and customs of these islands, Mr. Cooper's work is perhaps without a rival. His chapters are written in a lively style."—Daily News.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE MYSTERY in PALACE

GARDENS. By Mrs. RIDDELL, Author of "George Geith," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Enough has been said to show that the novel is of exceptional interest. Some passages, which only want of space forbids us quoting, particularly are of remarkable pathos and power."—Graphic.

HIRAM GREG. By J. Crowther

HIRST. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

FOLLY MORRISON. By Frank

BARRETT. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mr. Barrett's powerful story is full of strong situations, which are described with a true dramatic instinct."—Athenaeum.

THE MYSTERIES of HERON

DYKE. By the Author of "In the Dead of Night." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The story is clearly told, and the incidents carefully developed. The novel is decidedly readable."—Daily Telegraph.

QUEENIE'S WHIM. By Rosa

NOUCHETTE CAREY, Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo. [Immediately.]

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,

NEW BURLINGTON STREET,

Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE NEW PLAYGROUND; or,

Wanderings in Algeria. By ALEXANDER A. KNOX.

"This brilliant and delightful volume. . . Mr. Knox's pen, we rejoice to find, has not lost its cunning; it has all its old freshness and vigour, and among the multitude of books of travel we know nothing to compare with 'The New Playground' in felicity and charm of style."—Daily News.

Square 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

DECORATION and FURNITURE of TOWN HOUSES. A Series of Cantor Lectures delivered before the Society of Arts, 1880. Amplified and Enlarged. By ROBERT W. EDIS, F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A., Architect.

2 vols., with Frontispiece, demy 8vo, cloth, price 21s.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of

OGIER GHISELIN de BUSBECQ, Seigneur of Bousbecque, Knight, Imperial Ambassador. By CHARLES THORNTON FORSTER, M.A., and F. H. BLACKBURN DANIEL, M.A.

Demy 8vo, with Two Maps, Six Full-Page and Four Smaller Illustrations, cloth, price 16s.

A POLAR RECONNAISSANCE:

being the Voyage of the Isbjörn to Novaya Zemlya in 1879. By Capt. A. H. MARSHAM, R.N., Author of "The Great Frozen Sea," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

A YEAR'S MEDITATIONS. By

Mrs. CRAVEN, Author of "Récit d'une Sœur," "Fleur-ange," &c. Translated from the French.

2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, price 25s.

THE PROPHECIES of ISAIAH.

Translated, with Critical Notes and Dissertations, by the Rev. T. K. CHEYNE.

"Written with a scholarship so thorough, and a spirit of interpretation so honest and independent, that all students of the great prophet will read it with gratification."

British Quarterly Review.

"Mr. Cheyne's notes are full of value from a philological as well as from an historical point of view."—Athenaeum.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

GENERAL PHYSIOLOGY of MUSCLES and NERVES. By Prof. J. ROSENTHAL. With Illustrations.

. Vol. XXXII. of "The International Scientific Series."

Crown 8vo, with Two Maps and 100 Woodcuts, cloth, 5s.

THE NATURAL CONDITIONS of EXISTENCE as they AFFECT ANIMAL LIFE. By KARL SEMPER.

. Vol. XXXI. of "The International Scientific Series."

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

JEWISH LIFE in the EAST. By

SYDNEY MONTAGU SAMUEL.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

ETHELSTONE, EVELINE, and other Poems. By Mrs. HORACE DOBELL, Author of "Versus a Woman pro Women," "A Man's Thought about Men," &c.

Large post 8vo, parchment antique, price 6s.

MARY MAGDALENE: a Poem.

By Mrs. RICHARD GREENOUGH.

"Mrs. Greenough has dealt with a difficult subject well, and has given us some poetry of a high order."

St. James's Gazette.

"Full of tender pathos. . . It is a succession of word-pictures of rare grace and beauty."—Scotsman.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

LATIN and GREEK VERSE

TRANSLATIONS. By CHARLES DONALD MACLEAN, M.A.

LONDON: I, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S LIST.

The FIRST EDITION having been exhausted on the day of publication, a SECOND EDITION is being prepared, and will be ready shortly, of

MR. GEORGE MACDONALD'S

NEW NOVEL,

MARY MARSTON.

In 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

PHILOSOPHY.

ENGLISH PHILOSOPHERS. Edited by

IRAN MULLER, M.A., New College, Oxford.

To each Philosopher will be assigned a separate volume, giving as comprehensive and detailed a statement of his views and contributions to Philosophy as possible, explanatory rather than critical, opening with a brief biographical sketch, and concluding with a short general summary, and a bibliographical appendix.

Price and Size.—180 to 200 pp. Size, crown 8vo. Price 3s. 6d.

ADAM SMITH. By J. FARRER, M.A., Author of "Primitive Manners and Customs." [Now ready.]

HAMILTON. By Professor MONK; and

HARTLEY and JAMES MILL. By G. S. BOWER, B.A. [Nearly ready.]

Other volumes in the press.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth extra, 18s.

PROFESSOR SAYCE'S EDITION of GEORGE SMITH'S THE CHALDEAN ACCOUNT of GENESIS.

Revised and Corrected.

Will be ready shortly, in 1 vol., demy 8vo, price 21s.

THROUGH AMERICA; or, Nine Months

in the United States. By W. G. MARSHALL, M.A.

This work will be embellished with nearly One Hundred Woodcuts of Views of Utah country and the famous Yosemite Valley; the Giant Trees, New York, Niagara, San Francisco, &c.; and will contain a full account of Mormon Life, as noted by the Author during his visits to Salt Lake City in 1878 and 1879.

Now ready, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

THE IRISH LAND QUESTION and

ENGLISH PUBLIC OPINION. With a Supplement on Griffith's Valuation. By R. BARRY O'BRIEN, Author of "The Parliamentary History of the Irish Land Question."

Now ready, crown 8vo, price 6s.

THE CONFESSIONS of a FRIVOLOUS

GIRL: a Novel of Fashionable Life. Edited by ROBERT GRANT.

ASK YOUR BOOKSELLER TO SHOW YOU

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for JANUARY.

160 pp., fully illustrated. With continuation of Mr. T. HARDY'S New Novel, "A LAODICEAN." Price 1s.

"Harper's Magazine" is so thickly sown with excellent illustrations that to count them would be a work of time; not that it is a picture magazine, for the engravings illustrate the text after the manner seen in some of our choicest editions of Le Livre.—St. James's Gazette.

"It is so pretty, so big, and so cheap. . . An extraordinary shilling's worth—160 large octavo pages, with over a score of articles and more than three times as many illustrations."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

"An amazing shilling's worth. . . combining choice literature of both nations."—Nonconformist.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.—AN AMAZING SHILLINGSWORTH. Nonconform

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 183, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 15, 1881.

No. 454, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, of the Reign of Henry VIII. Arranged and Catalogued by James Gairdner, Assistant Keeper of the Public Records. Vol. V. (Longmans.)

MR. GAIRDNER'S new volume is worthy of the school in which he learned his craft. During the years 1531 and 1532 the centre of interest is at home, in Parliament and Convocation, and the foreign correspondence which was the chief feature in Mr. Brewer's work becomes less prolific. Spain continued to urge the Pope against Henry VIII., Clement was pleading for time, and France tried to isolate England; but the scene did not change, and no transaction occurred of decisive moment to English diplomacy. Mr. Gairdner has been able to publish a volume equal to all its predecessors by including the letters of the Imperial ambassador, Chapuys, which were seen by Mr. Froude too late to influence his narrative, and have been made by Mr. Friedmann the groundwork of searching investigations into the life of Anne Boleyn. Chapuys writes awkward French, but his knowledge and judgment are remarkable, and his letters, which are very numerous, abound with facts.

Most of the volume was prepared under Mr. Brewer's care, and his continuator reminds us that he intended to include every known source of contemporary information. In the twenty years that have passed over that undertaking many archives have poured out their secrets, the Vatican has begun to publish its Catalogues; the Affaires Etrangères, the Hofburg, and the Hermitage have opened their doors; improved ways of making their contents available in print have been considered and, by common consent, adopted; and now that Mr. Brewer's Calendar is studied as an authority in half the countries of Europe, and is passing over to a new generation, it is time that his plan should be revised and defined more strictly. For it promises more than can be performed. No work primarily devoted to unpublished matter can be made to embrace all that has been printed. Accident, if not design, will draw the limit somewhere. Nobody complained of Mr. Brewer for omitting papers published long ago in works that are prominent in every library, or for overlooking the most curious letters of Erasmus because they chanced to be unknown to Le Clerc. Mr. Gairdner gleans from Erasmus and Vives, but discards Luther, whose letter to Barnes on the Divorce, written in 1531, and communicated on September 22 to the Landgrave, was charged with serious consequences. The large sums lately spent in procuring transcripts from Paris and Rome have yielded little apparent fruit for the years which occupy this volume. The letters contained in Legrand's answer to Burnet are abridged from his pages without further enquiry. A collation which I have obtained from Paris shows that about sixty of Legrand's pieces are incorrect. In the MS. 3006 of the French division in the Bibliothèque Nationale I find a letter from King Henry to Montmorency, dated June 23, 1532, which would teach us nothing if published, but, being unknown to Mr. Gairdner, indicates that he has been unable to profit by M. Baschet's commission. The objection is not that too little is given, but that too much is promised. The principle laid down does not justify the execution, and does not explain it, as we neither obtain all that is easily accessible in print, nor all that is within everybody's reach in the MSS. of public libraries. The legitimate anxiety to present foreign writings in the most intelligible shape sometimes makes them in reality less available. Mr. Brewer, who did not over-estimate his materials, hardly foresaw the part they were about to play in the reconstruction of European history. It is an obvious precept, undisputed since the disinterment of archives has been pursued methodically, that every passage likely to sustain weighty conclusions or hostile discussion shall be printed as it stands. Handwriting, spelling, grammar, are so many sources of obscurity that there must be no additional risk from translation or abridgement where the originals remain unprinted. Passages of this kind are frequent, especially in the despatches of Chapuys. The Duke of Norfolk's triple argument against the superiority of Rome—that Brennus was an Englishman, the Empress Helena an Englishwoman, and King Arthur, Emperor of Germany and Gaul; his speech to the Nuncio on the Annates; the Nuncio's attempt to address Convocation; More's speech to both Houses, assuring them that Henry's scruples were sincere; the pithy statement of the King's case by Croke; the paper drawn up by Warham just before his death, which is almost as decidedly Ultramontane as Latimer's highly coloured description of his own early views—all this is matter worthy of more authentic record than abstract or translation, or something which may be either one or the other. Integrity of text would be still more desirable where character is at stake, as in Catharine's complaint of Fisher, or the conversation in which it is reported that his dexterity verged upon deceit. Mr. Gairdner and his assistant, Mr. Martin, who has acquired by the constant practice of eighteen years an almost unrivalled familiarity with the State papers of that age, afford the best security for the true reading and true rendering of documents. Where there is much that is illegible to read, that is unintelligible to interpret, even the best security is insufficient. In several places we are left in doubt as to the meaning of the original.

Henry, not having heard of the election of the King of the Romans, says, "It ought not to be done." He means, apparently, that it cannot have been done. The Duke of Norfolk "is well acquainted with French practices." More probably "is averse to them." A Jew,

"finding his first opinion not accepted, has forged another." If it was his own he can hardly have been said to have forged it. A gentleman "of 700 or 800 ducats of rent" resembles the Jew, for in both cases a word seems to have been misunderstood in the same way. The Margrave of Brandenburg is supposed "to have grown warm, and to be quite changed." The word intepuisse would rather imply that he grew lukewarm, and was changing in the opposite direction. "They do not wish the Rota to refer it, as they (the Rota) suspect it." The emendation that here suggests itself is, "They do not wish the Rota to report, as they (the English) suspect it." Forum Iulii on the short road from Austria into Italy must be Friuli, not Fréjus. "As [Henry] had forborne to proceed in the cause of Rome (i.e., in throwing off allegiance to Rome?) in consequence of the interposition of Francis with the Pope, his Holiness ought not now to proceed in this inhibition without his knowledge." The original of this confused sentence is subjoined in a note, and plainly means that Francis had induced, not Henry, but Clement, to stay proceedings at Rome. A few more notes like this in obscure places would meet the only criticism to which the work is open.

The shortness of the Introduction will be regretted by every thoughtful reader. Except Mr. Gairdner himself, our only living writers capable of speaking with authority on these matters happen to be divines, whom some conceive it no insult to suspect of viewing the Reformation by the light of surviving controversies. Mr. Gairdner betrays no opinion even on the gravest problem which his papers disclose. In the year 1528 Clement VII. was willing that the question of the marriage should be decided by English judges only. Henry would not hear of it. In 1531 Henry applies for the concession he had repudiated three years earlier; and Clement will not hear of it. The explanation of this momentous change which certain pages of this volume suggest is that Charles the Fifth inspired greater fear, and paid better, than Henry the Eighth. The decision rested with the Dean of the Rota, and with the Cardinals of Ancona and Ravenna. Simonetta, the Dean, disgusted Charles's envoys by his unblushing cupidity. Ancona received two thousand ducats from them. He informed the English that his terms were: a revenue of six thousand crowns, a bishopric, an abbey, and adequate security for payment. For that price he undertook to vote against Catharine's strongest plea. Ravenna, next in importance, was a little cheaper. The bargain was struck on February 7, 1532. At the close of the year, Ancona died unpaid, and Ravenna was waiting for 3,000 ducats supposed to be at Lyons on their way to him. It was the opinion of the Imperialists that these men were led by influence or interest, not by conviction, and that the deciding argument in their eyes would be a victory over the Turks on the Danube. I infer that Mr. Gairdner's judgment would be less severe.

On one point he is explicit and peremptory. He has so little mercy on the old belief that Anne Boleyn became Queen of England by a studied resistance that he pronounces it mere affectation even to pretend to believe it. He supports this opinion with four authorities, beginning with Du Bellay, the French ambassador, who proclaimed the scandal early in the summer of 1529. It would follow that Henry persisted in marrying Anne after they had lived together for three years and a-half without hope of issue. Mr. Gairdner accordingly relies less on this premature assertion than on evidence produced lately, on the opinion of the Pope, of the Imperialists in Rome, and of Chapuys himself. This cloud of witnesses is practically no more than one. The Spaniards in Rome, Mai and Ortiz, knew nothing. One of them believed that the King had married Anne. The other confesses his ignorance, and petitions the Nuncio for information. It would be curious to know the reply; but the Nuncio's letters unfortunately fail us. Meanwhile, it is hazardous to conclude that he transmitted evidence such as would give valid support to Mr. Gairdner's case. In December 1531 Clement suspected that there had been a marriage. In the following April he assured the Emperor that there was no warrant for energetic action against Henry. In the middle of August 1532 he declares that he has no proof of improper intimacy. So far, therefore, the echoes from Rome add nothing to the voice of Chapuys; but there is no doubt that he speaks of Anne Boleyn's position in the same terms as Mr. Gairdner, and no doubt of his capacity. Anne Boleyn was the efficacious instrument by which those who were scheming to dissolve the political connexion which Chapuys came to England to defend accomplished their purpose. He was, of necessity, her inveterate enemy. His testimony will avail when, in a coming volume, it damages the men who brought her to the block. It cannot be decisive against her. Mr. Brewer, who had not yet seen these despatches, has expressed the same opinion as Mr. Gairdner. I believe that Mr. Brewer inclined to the hypothesis of an early marriage. The evidence that Catharine lived with Arthur as his wife is stronger, legally, than the evidence that Anne Boleyn lived with Henry as his mistress. It was so strong that the Imperial diplomatists, Mai and Chapuys, doubted whether it could be met. Yet they disbelieved it. Being advocates, not judges, they resisted proof adverse to their cause, and were less exacting with regard to proof that favoured it. Mr. Gairdner's argument unquestionably enforces the manifest suspicion, the flagrant scandal. It must strengthen the case against Anne Boleyn in the judgment of men who deem that it wanted no confirmation. I hesitate to affirm that it converts doubt into certainty, and makes it affectation or pretence to-day to accept a theory which, for three hundred and fifty years, has been consistent with prudence and good faith.

ACTON.

The Journal of Hellenic Studies. Vol. I. Nos. 1 and 2. (Published by the Council of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies, and sold on their behalf by Macmillan & Co.)

Nor many years ago a distinguished Aristotelian scholar, in publishing a short pamphlet full of excellent criticism (entitled Miscellaneous Emendations and Suggestions, by Henry W. Chandler, M.A.), took occasion in the Preface to express his regret that in England we are either unwilling or unable to support any journal in which such matters might be discussed. "It is hardly creditable," he continued, "that, in a country professing such a profound respect for what is called a classical education, those who take an interest in ancient literature, or even live by it, should be absolutely destitute of any medium of communication devoted to their special studies." The pamphlet duly came into the hands of Prof. Spengel (the eminent Aristotelian whose loss is still recent), and was noticed by him in his Seminarium. The statement which I have quoted excited his utmost astonishment. "Denken Sie nur, meine Herren!" he said in a voice of emotion, "im Vaterland des Bentleys!" Within a short time, however, after Mr. Chandler's appeal, it was answered by the publication at Cambridge of the Journal of Philology (in the year 1868). The range of subjects undertaken by that journal was indicated, according to the announcement made in the first number, "by the term philology, in its wider signification—i.e., comprising not only the criticism of language, but every topic connected with the literature and history of antiquity." It is an interesting sign of the progress of knowledge in these departments that the phrase "criticism of language" was then used to comprehend both the interpretation of ancient authors and the etymological or comparative study of language—two subjects now separated by a line that becomes clearer every day.

A few years afterwards (in 1873) the Journal of Philology found a worthy rival, or rather ally, in the philological part of the Dublin Hermathena, an annual publication maintained by members of Trinity College. Somewhat earlier (in 1869-70) the American Philological Association had begun to publish a series of Transactions containing papers of great value, both classical and linguistic. Quite recently the American Journal of Philology has been started under the happiest auspices. Such are the chief steps that have been taken, since Mr. Chandler wrote, to remove the reproach which he brought against English scholarship.

The Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies has entered upon a similar task with a vigour and completeness, and with a success in respect of the numbers and distinction of its members, that point to a real movement of thought and taste. Its main object (to quote the first rule) is to advance the study of Greek language, literature, and art, and to illustrate the history of the Greek race in the ancient, Byzantine, and Neo-Hellenic periods. It would be interesting to compare the notions underlying this mode of defining the society's province with those which have prevailed in the older classical revivals. Some of the differences lie on the surface. The idea of development, for instance, which impels us to follow the continuous history of a civilisation or a literature as far as we can, rather than to dwell exclusively on brilliant epochs; the idea of science, which tends to put all the phenomena on the same level of interest, rather than to choose out this or that portion as especially worthy of study; the idea of nationality even, which is satisfied by the long historical life of the Greek people—all these ideas are distinctively modern; and their influence may be seen in the province marked out by the new Renaissance. That province is not classical antiquity, or even antiquity as a whole; it is best described by the word "Hellenism"—Hellenism of every period and in every exhibition of its spirit. And the success which has thus far attended the movement is due, not merely to the literary prestige of "Hellenic Studies," but still more to the consciousness that they offer in a supreme degree the conditions of scientific interest.

The different subjects indicated by the rules of the society are not quite equally represented in the volume of its Journal which is now before us; but no great department is entirely absent. Of the sixteen articles (not counting the lucid and charming Introductory Address of Mr. Newton) eleven are mainly archaeological. Classical scholarship is represented by one article and one review; and two articles are occupied with Romanic. This undue proportion of archaeology is to be referred, in part at least, to temporary and accidental causes. The chief of these is the circumstance that the field of classical philology is already occupied by the Journal of Philology, which seems to find room enough for the contributions of English scholars; whereas classical archaeology has hitherto been without a periodical. Again, the society was brought into existence in London, which is, for obvious reasons, the centre of archaeological study; hence it is dominated by the spirit of the British Museum rather than of the Oxford and Cambridge lecture-rooms. Finally, an immense impulse has been given to archaeology by the remarkable progress made within the last few years. The excavations at Olympia are enough of themselves to absorb the interest of lovers of Greek art; and if the discoveries of Dr. Schliemann at Troy and Mycenae do not bear as directly on "Homer" as they are popularly supposed to do, they are at least geographically within the area consecrated by Hellenic settlements. It is to be hoped, however, that in future the balance will be redressed. If Greek things are to hold their place in the field of study, it will be chiefly, after all, through the literature, in which alone the ideas and aims of Greek civilisation find sufficient expression.

The Journal opens with an admirable monograph on the Island of Delos by Prof. Jebb. His materials are derived partly from the French exploration of the island (by M. Lebégue in 1873, M. Homolle in 1877, 1878, and 1879), partly from personal observation, aided by M. Homolle himself. Among the interesting discoveries made may be mentioned the traces of earlier worships than that of Apollo; in particular, an oracular grotto on Mount Cynthus, with a block of granite probably older as an object of worship than any statue of a god. It appears, too, that in pre-Ionic times the Tyrian Melkarth (identified by the Greeks with Heracles) was probably established in Delos, and shared for a time the temple of the Delian Apollo. The site and character of the later temple has also been ascertained; it is assigned by M. Lebégue to about 400 B.C.; but Mr. Jebb gives strong reasons for thinking that there was a temple of much earlier date distinct from the grotto on Mount Cynthus. The largest gain, however, seems to have been made in the field of epigraphy. One inscription, in particular, is referred to the seventh century B.C. Mr. Jebb has not happened to see a short article by W. Dittenberger (Hermes, xv. 225), pointing out the curious fact that the use of both H and E in this inscription to denote long e is in reality regular, the rule being that H answers to a Doric ā, while E answers to pan-Hellenic η: e.g., ΚΑΣΙΓΝΕΤΗ (Dor. Κασινῆτα). Hence, too, ΑΑΗΟΝ probably stands for ἀλλῶον, and Δεινοδίκχο for Δεινοδίκχο.

Mr. Ramsay, who has gone out to study archaeology at the expense of a distinguished member of the university—the university itself being still too poor for such things—has sent no less than three papers, all the result of his own observation. The first is a careful account of two sites which he explored near Smyrna—one commanding the road between that place and Sardis, the other on a hill to the north. The ruins on the latter have been identified by M. Weber with the Hieron of Cybele—a view which, in Mr. Ramsay's opinion, does not sufficiently account for the dimensions of the remains found. It would seem that very much may be expected from research in the territory of the old Lydian empire; but the wretched political state of the country makes exploration almost impossible. Mr. Ramsay's next paper, "On Some Pamphylian Inscriptions," is certainly ingenious and suggestive, but it deals with an extremely difficult subject. It can hardly be said either that the general drift of the long inscription has been made out or that the relation of its language to the Greek dialects is determined; and, this being so, there is great uncertainty as to details. The article has suffered a little from being printed in the absence of the writer; in several places, for instance, a special type has been used—no doubt copied from Mr. Ramsay's MS.—where the context shows that he meant to write an ordinary English y. His third contribution is a Romaic ballad of much historical interest; it comes from the Island of Icaria.

Mr. Sayce's "Notes from Journeys in the Troad and Lydia" are in great part a résumé of matter that has appeared in the ACADEMY. In the necropolis of Thymbra he has found some more characters of the Kypriote syllabary. The inscription in Greek letters which he thinks may be "a fragment of the old language of the country is surely to be read (with a little correction)— (Κα)λισθένης ἐμὶ τοῦ Νικίῳ τοῦ Γαυκίῳ (?).

Thus it offers a parallel to the celebrated Sigeon inscription (No. 8 in the C. I. G.). In the Lydian part of Mr. Sayce's tour the most interesting point is the account of the two figures in the pass of Karabel described by Herodotus as representations of Sesostris. Mr. Sayce has found that both the style of the figures and the hieroglyphs which are still to be seen on one of them agree with the remains brought from the ancient Hittite capital Carchemish on the Euphrates—a discovery which may prove to be of the highest importance. The figure of Niobe is also described by Mr. Sayce; but our readers will have seen, from the letters of Mr. Dennis, that there is some doubt as to the details. The whole country, it is evident, is full of valuable monuments of antiquity, which the present lamentable brigandage (i.e. government) renders inaccessible.

The articles which come next are archaeological in the strictest sense. The first is a careful, lucid, and (I venture to add) conclusive refutation, by Mr. Percy Gardner, of Dr. Stephani's theory of the Tombs at Mycenae. It is followed by Mr. Sidney Colvin's dissertation "On Representations of Centaurs in Greek Vase-Painting," illustrated by three very beautifully executed plates. This is the longest article in the volume, and is evidently the fruit of long study. It has in a high degree the merit, which the English system of training ought to favour, of uniting a thorough knowledge of the special subject to an exact and scholarly acquaintance with ancient literature and the ancient world as a whole. Thus Mr. Colvin is especially happy in tracing the relation of the vase-paintings which are his immediate subject, not only to other forms of art, but also to mythology and literature. As a vindication, by way of example, of the claim of archaeology to a place among classical studies, this monograph is unanswerable. The contribution of Mr. Charles Waldstein—an essay "On Pythagoras of Rhegion and the Early Athlete Statues"—is interesting and suggestive. The first part is devoted to proving, by arguments which seem adequate, that many works hitherto supposed, especially from the treatment of the hair, to be statues of Apollo are really representations of victorious athletes. Then the "Omphalos Apollo" is discussed, and assigned to Pythagoras of Rhegion. The analysis given of the term "rhythm" (as applied to sculpture) seems rather fanciful, and certainly does not answer very well to the general meaning of the word ῥυθμός, which is not "flow," but "order." This article is succeeded by an interesting memoir on an archaic vase which the writer (Mr. Cecil Smith) explains as representing a nuptial procession. Mr. Percy Gardner's second article, on the Pentathlon, has the same qualities of accurate and scholarly treatment which distinguish the one already noticed. Then comes a note by Mr. A. S. Murray on the Erechtheum, and an instructive report by Mr. E. S. Roberts on the Oracle Inscriptions recently found by M. Carapanos at Dodona.

Classical philology is represented by Mr. Verrall's article on the use in Attic tragedy of the nouns in -όσυνος and -όσυνη. His thesis is, if I have rightly apprehended it, that, with the exception of a few words belonging to ordinary Attic, these forms are only used when a writer wishes to give an Ionic colour to his style. He shows first that the termination is not used freely in Attic, and then endeavours to point out the influence of Ionic associations in the examples found in tragedy. Here he seems to some extent to confuse two things that are essentially distinct. The phenomenon, as he rightly says at the outset, may be due to the Ionian or Asiatic origin of epic poetry; in which case these forms, though Ionian in origin, would be employed by tragic writers merely as part of the poetical vocabulary which Greek literature inherited from Homer. Further on, however, he speaks of "recent or contemporary importations from the living Ionic," and connects some of his examples with the circumstance that medicine and music, at the date of Attic tragedy, were especially Ionian sciences. Surely importation of this kind would be confined to a few characteristic terms; and, at all events, it must be carefully distinguished from the other (and generally sufficient) hypothesis as to the source of the tragic vocabulary.

The remaining articles are reviews. It would be difficult to imagine a more concise and, at the same time, adequate notice than that which Mr. Bywater has given of Prof. Bernays' Lucian and the Cynics. Mr. Tozer gives a short account and specimen of a collection of mediæval Greek love-poems, published by Dr. W. Wagner shortly before his lamented death. The MS. was discovered by him in the British Museum; the poems are Rhodian, and probably of the fourteenth century.

It is significant that, while the national universities, in order to effect a slightly more beneficial application of their great revenues, have to pass through a crisis which employs some of their best energies for years, a really important step in the progress of the higher studies is the work of a voluntary association, set on foot by a small number of persons.

D. B. MONRO.

The Life of Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B., D.C.L., and the History of Penny Postage. By Sir Rowland Hill, and his Nephew, George Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L. In 2 vols. (De La Rue & Co.)

MORE than a century and a-half ago, the Postmasters-General under Queen Anne expressed themselves in the following terms:—"We have found by experience that where we make the correspondence more easy and cheap, the number of letters has been thereby much increased." It is, at first sight, rather surprising that this experience, which must have gone on increasing year by year, was so long in producing any result, and that when, in 1837, the principle was publicly asserted the chief opposition to it was offered by the very Department which it was designed to benefit. But Government offices are notoriously hostile to reform. And though Mr. Gladstone was perhaps a little too bold when he asserted that Sir Rowland Hill "stands alone among all the members of the Civil Service as a benefactor to the nation," it is certainly true that, until very recent times, no important improvement in postal matters can be traced to the Post Office establishment. "The town-posts originated with a Mr. Dockwra, shortly before the Restoration; the cross-posts with Mr. Allen, about the middle of the last century; and the substitution of mail coaches for horse and foot posts was, as is well known, the work of Mr. Palmer some thirty years later." Dockwra and Allen encountered much the same difficulties which awaited Hill, and shared with him the distinction of being dismissed from office. Palmer was more fortunate, and the reward which he ultimately received for his services far exceeded that bestowed on the inventor of the Penny Postage.

The life of a discoverer seldom fails to interest the reader, for it is tolerably sure to be the narrative of a struggle between a strong will and adverse circumstances. Innovation provokes hostility, and timidity rather than boldness is the characteristic of men in office. But Sir Rowland Hill's biography contains more than the common elements of interest, for the invention with which his name is associated has added so much to the happiness and wealth of the nation that we regard the author rather as a benefactor than a mere ingenious inventor. It is, of course, possible that another view may be taken of the results of Sir Rowland Hill's discovery. There may be moments in our lives when, worried by the perpetual postman's rap or agitated by the receipt of trivial telegrams, we sigh for the repose which reform has banished. Then the statement that so many millions of letters passed through the Post Office in a given year will only provoke the remark that half of every one's life is now wasted over unnecessary correspondence, and we may be tempted to agree with that fine old Conservative, Mr. Bentinck, who, as late as the year 1857, told the House of Commons "that he had always thought that the Penny Post Act was one of the greatest jobs ever perpetrated and one of the greatest financial mistakes ever committed by the country."

The best remedy for such morbid or obsolete notions is to be found in a perusal of the volumes before us. Dr. Birkbeck Hill is right in supposing that the world will like to know, not only all about the invention itself, but also about the inventor. And, accordingly, he has prefaced Sir Rowland's own History of Penny Postage (which is an autobiography commencing only with the first conception of the scheme) with a detailed memoir of his uncle's earlier years. Much of this will be familiar to the readers of the admirable Life of the Recorder of Birmingham—Sir Rowland's eldest brother; but it, of course, contains also many personal details which have not been previously published. Especially it brings into prominence the more than ordinary union which existed between the different members of the Hill family, and which contributed in no slight degree to its worldly success. The plan for mutual insurance, which went by the name of "The Family Fund," was a very practical expression of this feeling, and deserves to be largely imitated. It is true that it was not started until after both parents and children had emerged from poverty; but we see throughout their lives that the determination to stand by one another was always present. Whenever any important step was to be taken by a member of the family, a consultation was held and the matter freely discussed. Advice was given and, which is more surprising, was generally taken, for "age was never put forward as a substitute for argument," and parents and children "at all times, with set purpose, aimed at placing themselves under the guidance of reason." The picture which Dr. Birkbeck Hill calls up by the use of such terms as these will raise a smile, and, unless proof to the contrary existed, we should have fancied that the family circle was a trifle dull, and that originality would not have found there a congenial home.

It was, however, from such a source that one of the greatest inventions of the age was derived. As we read Sir Rowland's account of the state of things which existed fifty years ago, our wonder is raised not so much by his persistent efforts at reform as by the opposition it excited. One would have thought that any scheme which promised relief from a system that impeded trade, oppressed the poor, and presented innumerable temptations to fraud would have been hailed with delight. Nowadays—thanks in some measure to a free press and more enlightened public opinion—the mere publication of such facts as the following would be enough to arouse attention and secure redress:—

"If, when residing at Birmingham, we received a letter from London, the lowest charge was ninepence, while the slightest enclosure raised it to eighteenpence, and a second enclosure to two shillings and threepence, though the whole missive might not weigh a quarter of an ounce. We had relatives at Haddington; the lowest rate thence was threepence-halfpenny; others at Shrewsbury, but the postage thence I do not remember, as we never used the Post Office in our correspondence with them. . . . In looking over letters antecedent to the Post Office reform, I find constant reference to expedients for saving postage. . . . In the year 1823, taking a holiday excursion through the lake district to Scotland, and wishing to keep my family informed as to my movements and my health, I carried with me a number of old newspapers, and, in franking these, according to the useless form then required, while I left the post-mark with its date to show the place, I indicated my state of health by selecting names according to previous arrangement—the more Liberal members being taken to indicate that I was better, while Tories were to show that I was falling back; 'Sir Francis Burdett' was to imply vigorous health, while probably 'Lord Eldon' would almost have brought one of my brothers after me in anxiety and alarm."

But in spite of the evident and monstrous abuses that prevailed, it took Rowland Hill four years of the hardest possible work to carry through in some shape his scheme of Postal Reform. The Penny Postage system came into action on January 10, 1840. In the forty years that have since elapsed it has been a fruitful parent of a progeny of blessings. Cobden did not hesitate to term the Corn Law League "the spawn of the penny postage;" and we may certainly attribute to it by far the largest proportion of the advance which our country has recently made in wealth, in culture, and in content. The Post Office has now become one of the great Departments of the State, and, though it deals with other matters besides the transmission of letters, it adheres consistently to the policy which Sir Rowland Hill initiated, and is emphatically "the friend of the poor."

We give a hearty welcome to these interesting volumes. They deserve the widest circulation, and we hope Dr. Birkbeck Hill may be able to issue in a cheap and popular form this most instructive of modern biographies.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

English Sonnets by Living Writers. Selected and Arranged by Samuel Waddington. (George Bell & Sons.)

MR. WADDINGTON has had a happy inspiration in imagining this book, and has obeyed his inspiration with success. As he remarks, neither of the two recent collections of English sonnets has included the work of living writers, and the work of living writers in sonnet form happens to be of peculiar excellence. Never in England, except in the Elizabethan time, and hardly ever out of Italy, except in France at the same period, and again in our own day, would it have been possible to get together such a collection. Nor is it remarkable only for bulk and for general formal excellence. It is invidious to specify individuals in such a case. But the sonnet work of Mr. D. G. Rossetti alone would be enough to enable any age to hold up its head with the best in this kind, and not a few of the many writers whom Mr. Waddington has laid under contribution come very close to Mr. Rossetti. One other name we shall mention, and one only, because it is by no means so well known to the present generation of poetry-readers as it should be; and that is the name of Lord Hammer, some specimens of whose work Mr. Waddington has here given. To those who know it it needs no commendation; to those who do not we shall only say that for a certain quiet grace and thoughtfulness it yields to hardly any work of any poet of the time. But indeed the task, as difficult as it is invidious, of singling out examples for praise is an unnecessary task. All things here are not equally good, but almost all of the 178 examples given may be read with pleasure, and perhaps the majority of them cannot fail to be so read.

Such a collection as this must make the reader ask himself, What is the value of this curiously favourite and fortunate form of verse? Its favour and its fortune in some sort answer the question, but not wholly. For ourselves we do not know that we can profess any affection for the abstract sonnet, and we think that of its forms we prefer the incorrect Shaksperian triad of quatrains with a final couplet to the proper form. But we cannot agree with Mr. Waddington that "incorrect" is too strong a word to apply to this and other deviations from the form. If you play any game you may as well play it in its rigour, and this rule applies to poetical games especially. The truth, however, seems to us to be that the interlaced quatorzain which makes a regular sonnet is too long for a unit. The extreme limit seems to us to be reached in the Spenserian stave with its nine and the chant-royal stanza with its eleven lines. That the sonnet is after all not a unit, or only a very artificial one, is shown by the tendency it has in the hands of its most precise practitioners to split into a huitain and a sixain. Yet when it abdicates complete integrity it ceases to have any formal raison d'être. Still the orbis terrarum has practically judged for us, and there is no use in kicking against the pricks of its judgment. So many great poets have used some form or other of the metre, so many small ones have risen to the poetical heaven with the aid of this particular feather of Pegasus, that the abstract merits of the form are almost franked from criticism. Blanco White and Felix Arvers may have tempted many poetasters to make many feeble experiments, but in the lottery of poetry what other ticket has ever turned up such a prize as the sonnet in these particular cases of Arvers and White? Ronsard's sonnets, Shakspeare's, Wordsworth's, Keats', might have been as charming poetry had their writers selected any other form; but, as a matter of fact, they did not, and "Quand vous serez bien vieille," and "When to the sessions of sweet silent thought," and "Much had I travelled in the realms of gold," and "The world is too much with us" somehow or other exert a tyrannical force and make us admit that their special form has something, and probably a great deal, to do with their goodness.

Mr. Waddington's note on the history of the sonnet is careful and instructive, but he seems to lean too much to the theory of its Provençal origin. He even goes beyond this, and makes a very astounding statement that it is possible that the chant-royal, ballade, rondeau, &c., as well as the sonnet, are of Arabian origin, and were all introduced into Sicily and other parts of Europe in the ninth century. This is one of those statements which argue a curiously insufficient acquaintance with the history of literature. As for the sonnet, it is sufficient to say that in the vast mass of Provençal literature which we possess there is not a trace of the sonnet as an early production. M. Paulin Paris' excellent remark about the Provençal epic that it had only one defect—le défaut d'être perdu—seems to apply with double force here. As for the chant-royal, rondeau, &c., we had hoped that most people knew now that they were exclusively Northern-French forms. That the Trouvères may have been inspired to invent them by emulation of the canço, the ballata, the retroenza, and all the other Provençal subtleties is possible. But that they did invent them is certain, and it is equally certain that they were not invented until the thirteenth century; so, if the Arabians brought them into Sicily and other parts of Europe in the ninth century (and we must leave it to Prof. Palmer or Dr. Badger to say whether we are or are not correct in supposing that nothing at all similar exists in Arabic poetry), not only must these vivacious forms have dived under for four centuries and have come up at the end of that time, but they must have chosen for the place of their appearance exactly that part of Europe where the Arabians never had influence, neglecting those where they had. That the sonnet is as genuine an Italian invention as the various refrain-forms are French is probably a safe statement; while that the refrain-forms are French is all but a certainty.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

International Law. By William Edward Hall, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

MR. HALL is well known in this field both in England and abroad, being a member of the Institute of International Law, to which he was elected by reason of his work on the Rights and Duties of Neutrals, published in 1874. The present work, in which the former one is incorporated "with some additions and modifications of form," is a complete treatise on public international law, ranking in extent and thoroughness by the side of Wheaton, Phillimore, or Twiss. We have no hesitation in saying that in merit also it takes its place in the front rank of those which have been written in English on either side of the Atlantic, and that there is none which can be more recommended either to students, to statesmen, or to such of the general public as wish to be fully equipped for forming an opinion on the international questions in which England is from time to time involved. The amount of historical illustration, and of information as to the opinions of other writers, far exceeds what might have been expected to be found in a volume of about seven hundred pages—a result which is due to Mr. Hall's clear and concise manner of stating illustrative cases and the discussions which arose from them, and to his knack of selecting passages for quotation. With regard to those topics on which a considerable body of opinion is now opposed abroad to that still most common in this country, our author's position is generally that of a moderate progressist, by no means wholly averse from change in the directions indicated, but firm against any premature representation of the actual law to the prejudice of England, and especially firm against the hasty assumption of far-reaching doctrines with a view to the decision of the particular controversies in question.

Of course the most remarkable of the controversies alluded to is that concerning the capture of private belligerent property at sea, in cases other than those of blockade and contraband which equally affect neutral property. And in order to discountenance such capture, a far-reaching doctrine has been widely introduced which it is difficult to state with precision. As invented by Rousseau and adopted by Portalis, it was that individuals are not parties to a war "as men, nor even as citizens, but only as soldiers." This, however, would distinctly condemn all interference by invading armies with the persons and property of non-combatants; and accordingly later writers, while continuing to quote Portalis as an authority—the dignity of science is apt to shrink from quoting Rousseau—produce the doctrine in vague forms to which Mr. Hall very liberally lends intelligibility by representing it as the doctrine that an individual is an enemy "to the extent only that he is in the service of his State, or that he contributes to enable it to sustain hostilities," p. 55. With regard to the main controversy, Mr. Hall, after maintaining the actual legal right to capture at sea private belligerent property as such, and arguing that there is no moral reason for abandoning it, sums up the question of policy as follows:—

"It may very possibly be for the common interests that a change in the law should take place; it is certainly a matter for grave consideration whether it is not more in the interest of England to protect her own than to destroy her enemies' trade. Quite apart from the dislike of England and jealousy of her commercial and maritime position, there is undoubtedly a good deal of genuine feeling on the Continent of Europe against maritime capture. It is not clear how far the latter is strong and general, but it is not unlikely that there is enough of it to afford convenient material for less creditable motives to ferment; and contingencies are not inconceivable in which, if England were engaged in a maritime war, European or other States might take advantage of a set of opinion against her practice at sea to embarrass her seriously by an unfriendly neutrality. The evils of such embarrassment might perhaps be transient, but there are also conceivable contingencies in which the direct evils of maritime capture might be disastrous. English manufactures are dependent on the cheap importation of raw material, and English population is becoming yearly more and more dependent on foreign food. In the Contemporary Review for 1875 I endeavoured to show that there are strong reasons for doubting whether England is prudent in adhering to the existing rule of law with respect to the capture of private property at sea. The reasons which were then urged have certainly not grown weaker with the progress of time" (p. 380).

With regard to the subsidiary, though wider, question of distinguishing in theory, whether on Rousseau's lines or on any others, between the enemy character of individuals and of their State, Mr. Hall objects to such a distinction as being fictitious—"to separate the State from the individuals which compose it is to reduce it to an intangible abstraction"—and as being mischievous:—

"Still more objectionable is its effect upon the legal position of the inhabitants of a militarily occupied country. If they are not enemies, they have no right of resistance to an invader; the spontaneous rising of a population becomes a crime; and the individual is a criminal who takes up arms without being formally enrolled in the regular armed forces of his State. The customs of war no doubt permit that such persons shall under certain circumstances be shot, and there are reasons for permitting the practice. But to allow that persons shall be intimidated, for reasons of convenience, from doing certain acts, and to mark them as criminals if they do them, are wholly distinct things. A doctrine is intolerable which would inflict a stain of criminality on the defenders of Saragossa" (p. 61).

Our author has given about as much attention as is usual to the deepest problems of international law, such as the ground of its obligation and the comparative value of the various classes of sources from which its particular rules must be drawn. Perhaps in this department he has not met with more than the usual amount of success. The subject can scarcely be considered as having been placed on a philosophical basis so long as clashing rights are asserted in it. Whether it be the right of independence in one State, and that of self-preservation in another, war-ranting its interference with the independence of the first; whether it be the right of a belligerent to carry on his war without obstruction from neutrals, and that of a neutral to trade with his belligerent friend; these and all other cases of clashing right must one day be eliminated both from the substance and from the nomenclature of the subject before it will have fully vindicated its claim to be a science. The point is not saved even by establishing an order of priority among rights, for the essence of public international law is the approval or disapproval of conduct not cognisable in a court of justice, and in that point of view it is contradictory to give any place in the scale of right to conduct which, in the given circumstances, is disapproved. This, however, we advance rather by way of what lawyers call "continual claim" on behalf of what we deem to be the only true and, we hope, the ultimate form of the subject, than with any idea that such a test may fairly be applied to a working treatise of the nineteenth, or perhaps even of the twentieth, century. In discussing the axiomata media which stand next to these deeper matters, the present work is really very good. Mr. Hall looks all round them, and has his eyes wide open to their bearing and consequences. An example has been seen in the case of the enemy character of individuals; and another is furnished by the chapter on "Military Occupation," in which there is an able discussion of the various theories that have been put forward in order to account for or to limit what an invader may do. The conclusion is "the uselessness of the illogical and oppressive fiction of substituted sovereignty," in opposition to which "the rights of occupation may be placed upon the broad foundation of simple military necessity."

J. WESTLAKE.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Across Patagonia. By Lady Florence Dixie. (Bentley.) Lady Florence Dixie can apparently ride, swim, and shoot well. This we take for granted; but we can add, on our own authority, that she can write well. We do not think that she has named any plant or bird not known before, and she has not placed on record that she ever boiled a thermometer; science, in short, will gain little from her pages; but for a bright account of a wild excursion there are not many persons who can excel her. She is never dull; what is not worth recording she omits, and seems instinctively to know what will interest. Her touchstone is probably her own delight, and with the brightness of a school-girl and the pen of a clever woman she narrates her journeys over the pampas and into the eastern spurs of the Cordilleras in the pleasant company of her husband, her brother, and Mr. Beerbohm, whose account of a somewhat similar excursion (Wanderings in Patagonia) will be fresh in the memory of some of our readers. We are glad to meet him again, and to see that he has improved in his drawing. His pictures of guanacoës in full gallop and ostriches in full stride and of some peaks of the Cordilleras which adorn this volume are a real contribution to the illustration of the world. The experiences of the party did not differ materially from those of other travellers in Patagonia. The occasional meetings with the tall Tehuelches, the scampers after guanacoës and ostriches, the dispatching of a few cowardly pumas, the straying of their horses, the attempt of a wild horse to drive off the mares, are all incidents of which we have read before. The extraordinary luck with which her husband brought down a condor from an enormous height by a chance shot from his rifle, the gallop through the prairie fire, and the peculiar succulence of "fat-behind-the-eye," and chorlitos which have fed upon cranberries, are nearly all the novelties of the book. To this statement an important exception must, however, be made with regard to their short trip to the mountains already alluded to. From Lady Florence's descriptions and Mr. Beerbohm's drawings the scenery must be grand, uncommon, and beautiful, and we expect that this book will send a good many Englishmen to explore this almost unknown region. We trust that they will be as tenderhearted towards the beautiful and trustful golden deer as the author of Across Patagonia.

Bilder aus dem englischen Leben, von Leopold Katscher (Leipzig: Wilhelm Friedrich), is one of those useful little collections of foreign sketches which put it within our power "to see ourselves as others see us." Mr. Katscher, the translator of Taine's Histoire de la Littérature anglaise into German, was long domiciled in this country, and would seem to have made good use of his opportunities. The varied subjects which constitute the themes of his collection are not equally well treated, it is true, some of them reading too much like leading articles revamped; but, as a whole, the volume would be a useful handbook for the foreigner, and a not unuseful work of reference for the native. In the "London Sketches," especially, will be found much that is as new as true for the English reader himself—such as, for instance, some sections of "Underground London" and the "East End." The essays on the representative hospitals and charitable foundations of the metropolis are well worth the Londoner's perusal; while the account of Lent suppers at Christ's Hospital—although "blue-boys" is not a correct description of the scholars of that noble institution—is interesting as showing the vivid impression which that exhibition leaves on the mind of a foreign spectator.

The Emigrant's Friend, by Major Jones, United States Consul, Newcastle-on-Tyne (Hamilton, Adams and Co.), is a most useful guide for all intending emigrants to the United States. "It is not the object of this book to encourage emigration to the United States," says the author, "but rather to furnish complete, authentic, and impartial information to those who contemplate leaving 'the Old Home' to try their fortunes in the West." Avoiding all needless digressions and literary flourishes, Major Jones has contrived to pack into the compass of less than 250 pages a mass of necessary information and practical advice which it would be difficult to obtain out of any number of gazetteers, books of travel, or consular reports. The book is one that has long been wanted, and it is only strange that such a work has not appeared before. We would suggest an Index as a useful complement to the work when reprinted.

My Journey Round the World. By Capt. S. H. Jones-Parry. In 2 vols. (Hurst and Blackett.) Although the subject of a journey round the world in beaten tracks—if such an expression be permissible with regard to what is mainly an ocean voyage—is worn well-nigh threadbare, Capt. Jones-Parry has ventured to add yet another work to the long list of those published in recent years. In the course of his journey he passed through the Suez Canal, and visited successively Ceylon, New Zealand, and parts of Australia; thence he voyaged through Torres Straits to Singapore and Hongkong. His experiences of China, as is the case with most travellers round the world, were confined to our colony of Hongkong and the city of Canton; but in this respect a great mistake is made, for much that is worth seeing is missed by not extending the programme to the coast-ports at least, and the mighty Yangtsze-kiang. Capt. Jones-Parry devotes a large section of his book to Japan, whither he went direct from Hongkong, and to the United States. His narrative is necessarily superficial, but his way of writing is often amusing, if not always strictly grammatical, and, taken as a whole, his book is a fairly good specimen of its class.

The Story of the Zulu Campaign. By Major Ashe and Capt. the Hon. E. V. Wyatt-

Edgell. (Sampson Low and Co.) Major Ashe is careful to disclaim the title of historian. He tells us in his Preface that his little work (an octavo of more than four hundred pages) lays no claim to historical value, but assumes to be merely the impressions de voyage of those who were actors in the scenes described. He himself was not one of those actors, but derived his information mainly from his friend Capt. Wyatt-Edgell, who fell at Ulundi. The war is minutely described, and importance given to every raid and skirmish. The Major's style is florid, abounding in similes and metaphors. He likens the heavy fire of the 57th Regiment to a "torrent of lead poured upon the enemy from murderous tubes." The author being a soldier, we naturally looked for his judgment on the disaster of Isandhlwana; but here we were disappointed. He approaches the subject unwillingly.

"So much," he remarks, "has been said and written as to the cause of, and so many people have been held responsible for, the Isandhlwana disaster that the subject cannot here be passed over in silence. The living, no less than the dead, have a claim to a full share of justice and truth; but, remembering that the mouths of one party—'les morts qui ne reviennent pas'—are closed, we should be extremely careful in drawing any conclusions from acts which, could the testimony of the fallen be obtained, it would not only explain and excuse, but amply justify."

So cautious is the author, that, though he proposes every possible question relating to Isandhlwana, he answers none, and leaves the matter pretty much as he found it. If the reader had no other source of information than Major Ashe's story he would conclude that our army was little short of perfect, and the enemy but little inferior to the French under Napoleon. He seems quite unconscious that there is anything to be ashamed of in the way the authorities at the Cape forced on the war, or in the manner in which we conducted it. On one occasion Major Ashe lays aside his caution and his admiration of everything connected with the English army. He speaks his mind boldly on the subject of the death of the Prince Imperial, and denounces with honourable if unwarranted indignation the "craven spirit of those who, had they rallied back to back, could have saved a noble life and preserved a nation's honour." Here, again, we should have wished for a more careful enquiry into the conduct of those who let the Prince go on such an expedition; but the Major's book is not a history, and we must be content with what he gives us.

MESSRS. SPOTTISWOODE have reprinted in pamphlet form a paper on The National Duty with Respect to the Administration of Justice, read by Mr. E. K. Blyth at the meeting of the Incorporated Law Society held at Sheffield in October last. Mr. Blyth takes for his motto the famous words of King John in Magna Carta, "Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus aut differemus rectum vel justitiam;" and then, in clear and vigorous English, proceeds to show how imperfectly our civil courts of law are provided with the necessary means for giving effect to that weighty promise. For justice long delayed, or justice dealt out at exorbitant cost, is equivalent in a multitude of instances to justice actually withheld. Chancery actions which have on the average six months to wait, and often nine, before being heard; the frequent and, so to say, compulsory reference of causes to arbitration, whereby suitors are mulcted in a double set of costs; the antiquated and vexatious forms which attend and impede the payment of moneys out of court; the inadequacy of the legal staff in certain tribunals, and the unemployed, or but half-employed, talent in other departments of the legal market are among the points especially dwelt upon as arguments in favour of a reform that would inevitably involve some increase of existing machinery, but which might also be largely forwarded by the prohibition of unnecessary forms, unnecessary delays, unnecessary work, and duplication of work, too common at present. There is much sound sense in Mr. Blyth's paper, and it is refreshing to meet with a practical lawyer who recognises the need for reform, and has the courage of his opinions.

The Sunshine of Home. By J. J. Hart. (Routledge.) Mr. Hart, who has, it appears, the misfortune to be blind, has beguiled the hours of his imprisonment by composing this little volume of sketches, turning chiefly on the domestic affections. The work which he has produced is not ambitious, but it appears by no means ill-suited for its purpose, which is apparently to inculcate pure morality. It is very carefully written—perhaps a little too carefully; but that is not a bad fault in such literature. For certain uses of gift books, such as prizes in private schools, gitts to children and domestics, &c., it seems to us very well qualified, and of such books the supply is never too large. "The Letters of a Young Lady," which form part of the book, are better than the rest of it, and contain some lively enough description, though the implied satire is perhaps a little of the cut-and-dried kind.

NOTES AND NEWS.

PROF. SAYCE, after his visit to Rhodes, an interesting account of which, from his own pen, we publish elsewhere, proceeded to Cyprus, where, in spite of very bad weather, he succeeded in unearthing some Phœnician and Greek pottery at Larnaka and examined the site of Inarium. We very much regret to hear that he has since met with a distressing accident, the small bone of one of his legs having been broken below the knee by a kick from a mule. He is at present at the Commissioner's residence at Limasol, and it is, we fear, uncertain whether he will be able to carry out any further portion of his original programme. This unfortunate interruption of a tour which had opened so successfully, and from which so much was to be hoped, will cause a feeling of universal regret and sympathy.

MR. DANTE G. ROSSETTI has a volume of English Ballads ready for the press.

MR. BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN, M.R.A.S., of the Imperial Naval College, Yedo, Japan, has presented to the library of the Royal Asiatic Society 205 volumes of Japanese poetry, including the chief standard works of the Japanese poets, both lyric and dramatic, with the most approved commentaries thereon.

MR. W. NIVEN, of Epsom, Surrey, author of Old Worcestershire Houses, Old Warwickshire Houses, &c., has in progress a similar work on Old Staffordshire Houses. Though not so rich as some other counties in remains of ancient domestic architecture, Staffordshire yet has much to show that merits preservation and permanent record. Among the houses which it is proposed to illustrate or describe are:—Ingestre; Tixall (the Gate-house); Blackladies; Chillington; Long Birch (now destroyed); the Deanery and the Old Hall, Wolverhampton; Holbeche; Priestwood House; Dudley Castle; Rushall; Beaudesert; Little Wyrley Grove; Whittington; Fisherwick (now destroyed); Tamworth Moat House; Haselour Hall; Hamstal Ridware Manor House; Caverswall Castle; Wootton Lodge; Haregate; Broughton Hall, &c.

Indian Summer is the title of a new work containing poems and pictures by American writers relating to autumn. Among the authors represented are Emerson, Holmes, Lowell, Longfellow, Bayard Taylor, Joaquin Miller, and N. P. Willis.

THE Rev. J. T. Walters, M.A., has written a series of letters, addressed chiefly to working folk, on the formation and promotion of habits of thrift, to be issued shortly, under the title of Thrift Lessons, in one volume, by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton.

MR. CORNELIUS BROWN, the author of the History of Newark, is writing the Lives of "Nottinghamshire Worthies." The volume is to be a quarto, and to be copiously illustrated with photographs and engravings. Among the many eminent men of whom biographical details, carefully collected, will be given, may be mentioned Cranmer, Byron, Kirke White, Warburton, and others of world-wide celebrity.

Sir John Franklin, by Prof. A. H. Beesly, M.A., Author of "Germanicus," "The Gracchi," "Marius and Sulla," &c., will be the next volume in Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co.'s "New Plutarch" Lives of men and women of action. The author, who has long studied the subject, has had, through the kindness of Sir John Franklin's niece, Miss Cracroft, some special advantages in the preparation of his work, which also contains a notice of Lieut. Schwatka's expedition and a résumé of Arctic discovery.

WE understand that Messrs. Macmillan and Co. will publish early in February a translation of the First Book of Aristotle's Metaphysics. This, as our Cambridge readers are aware, is one of the set subjects for the approaching classical trips.

THE first number of the Palatine Note-Book was issued, under the editorial care of Mr. J. E. Bailey, F.S.A., on the 1st inst. It is intended that the new magazine shall form a medium of intercommunication for the antiquaries and book-lovers of Lancashire and Cheshire. Many local publications of this character have been started during the last few years; and the latest venture promises, if the articles in the succeeding issues keep up to the level of the contents of the first number, to be not the least interesting or instructive.

MESSRS. RIVINGTON will shortly publish: St. Bonaventure's Meditations on the Life of Christ, translated and edited by the Rev. W. H. Hutchings, sub-warden of the House of Mercy, Clewer; Ecclesia Anglicana, a History of the Church of Christ in England, extending from the Earliest to the Present Times, by the Rev. A. C. Jennings, M.A., Jesus College, Cambridge; and A Church History to the Council of Nicaea, A.D. 325, by Christopher Wordsworth, D.D., Bishop of Lincoln.

PROF. SCHÄFER's course of eleven lectures on the Blood, at the Royal Institution, will begin on the 25th inst. instead of the 18th, and Mr. Francis Hueffer's course of four lectures on the Troubadours will begin on the 27th inst. instead of the 20th.

THE list which has been prepared by Mr. G. W. Porter of the "Bibliographies, Classified Catalogues, and Indexes" placed in the extra cases in the British Museum Reading Room has been printed by order of the Trustees, and will be issued to the public immediately.

THE Bookseller of this month has the first part of what will be a very entertaining article on "Some French Bibliographies." Their number and value cannot but excite the envy of bibliophiles on this side of the "silver streak." Bibliography is one of the sciences which are cultivated more thoroughly in France than in England. This is not a gratifying statement to our insular pride, but it is the truth.

AN American Dante Society is in contemplation, and it is expected that Mr. Longfellow will accept the presidency.

THE Sheffield and Rotherham Independent of the 10th inst. contains an interesting article on "George Eliot's Associations with Derbyshire," based, in great part, on a series of letters written many years ago by George Eliot to Mrs. Elizabeth Evans and Mr. Samuel Evans, of Wirksworth, and now in the possession of a grandson of "Dinah Bede" residing in Sheffield.

ONE of the officials in the Probate Office has amused himself by taking notes, from time to time, of the different ways in which the word "cushions" was spelt in the old wills that have come under his notice. His list of various spellings has now reached the number of 235, and is probably not yet complete. Q seems as favourite an initial as c, and in the Northern and Eastern dialects the qu naturally becomes w.

THE British Museum has got a grant from the Treasury not only to print the entries of all their fresh books for their Catalogue, but also some of their old ones. The work will have to be done gradually, and the volumes of the Catalogue first put into type will be those gorged ones that readers know so well, of original width at the back, but swelling to double breadth in the middle through additional entries. Printing their titles will bring them to a tenth of their present unwieldy bulk. The process will of course include the painting, from time to time, of important headings, such as "Shakspeare" (the Catalogue rightly spells the name as Shakspeare generally wrote it), "Homer," "Dante," &c.; and it is probable that these sections will be issued for separate sale, as, though the Museum collection is not complete under any one head, students all over the world will be glad to know what editions the National Library has. Moreover, when gaps in a collection are widely known to exist, they have a better chance of getting filled up.

SINCE the Gentleman's Magazine has put aside the character for which it was celebrated for many generations, literary enquirers have often lamented over the fact that no English periodical kept up that useful list of "Obituaries" which was published monthly by "Sylvanus Urban." The directors of the Index Society recognised the justice of the lament, and promptly resolved upon supplying the want. Their list of deaths for the year 1879, with precise references to the journals in which notices of the deceased worthies can be found, has just been issued to the members. It is in every respect a great improvement upon its predecessors, and bids fair to become an indispensable addition to the biographical literature of this country.

M. BARBIER DE MEYNAUD is engaged on a Supplément aux Dictionnaires turcs, which will deal more particularly with Turkish as spoken by the common people, and in the form which it assumes in proverbs, adages, and the like.

WE understand that a Biography of the late Dr. Hodgson, Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh, is in preparation.

M. ASHARIN has commenced the publication at Mitau of a series of German translations of the best Russian novels under the general title Russischer Novellenschatz. The first two volumes, already issued, contain translations of Gogol's May Night and The Mantle.

THE distinguished Russian novelist, I. A. Goncharof, whose pen has been for a considerable time inactive, has lately republished in a collected form, under the title of Four Sketches, a series of papers which have already appeared in various periodicals. The first of those is a criticism of Griboiedof's famous comedy The Sorrow of Much Knowledge. The second is an appreciative estimate of Bielinski, the first of Russian critics. The third, entitled "A Literary Evening," contains several character sketches outlined in the author's peculiar manner. The fourth and concluding paper, under the heading "Better Late than Never," reviews the writer's own productions, and presents an unusually candid account of their origin and limitations. "I have described," he says, "only what I have experienced, thought, felt, loved, and known most intimately; in short, only my own life, and that which has had relation to it."

DON J. MUÑOZ Y RIVIERO has prepared a Manual de Faleografía Diplomática española, which is intended as a guide to the decipherment of Spanish documents dating from the twelfth to the seventeenth centuries. The work is illustrated with 179 plates designed by the author.

PADRE F. FITA Y COLOMÉ, under the title "Galería de Jesuitas ilustres," has collected from the inedited "Cartas de Edificación" possessed by the Royal Academy of History in Madrid twenty-five memorial sketches of Jesuit Fathers from 1611 to 1762. Among them appear three British names: Luke Wadding, died 1652; Hugh Semple, 1654; and Thomas Butler, 1705. This little volume, published by Perez Dubrull, Madrid, is highly creditable to Spanish editing and typography.

MESSRS. TEUBNER, of Leipzig, announce:—Fasti consulares inde a Caesaris nece usque ad imperium Diocletiani, by J. Klein; the Frogs of Aristophanes, edited by A. von Velsen; Hesychii Milesii Illustris Fragmenta, collected and edited by J. Flach; &c.

WE have received John Ruskin: his Life and Works, by W. Smart (Manchester: Heywood); Lessons in Sabre, Singletick, Sabre and Bayonet, and Sword Feats, by J. M. Waite (Weldon); Sea-side Thoughts, and other Reflections, by the Rev. J. Muir (Glasgow); Wagner's Lohengrin Musically and Pictorially Illustrated (Bogue); Statistical Report of the Health of the Navy for 1879; The Religious Revolution of the Nineteenth Century, from the French of Edgar Quinet (Trübner); Éléments de Calcul approximatif, and Exposition géométrique des Propriétés générales des Courbes, par Ch. Ruchonnet, new editions (Paris: Gauthier-Villars); &c.

OBITUARY.

THE Reading Room of the British Museum is a haven of refuge where many strange characters congregate together daily; but perhaps the most mysterious of these visitors were the two brothers, booted and spurred, and with their martial cloaks around them, who used to sit apart at a small table about ten years ago. The elder died in 1872; the death of the younger occurred in a steamer off Bordeaux on Christmas Eve. Their claim to be the lineal descendants of the unfortunate House of Stuart, as the grandsons of the young Pretender, was often mentioned by the readers, many of whom used to detect in the look and bearing of the brothers some resemblance to the Merry Monarch. Their real names were John Hay Allen and Charles Stuart Allen; but the historic titles which they assumed were John Sobieski Stolberg Stuart and Charles Edward Stuart. They published in conjunction an elaborate and expensive volume on the Costume of the Clans of Scotland, and a couple of imaginative and fantastic works, full of mysterious allusions and obscure references to their pretensions to represent the fallen family of Stuart. The titles of these latter works were Lays of the Deer Forest (1848) and Tales of the Century 1746-1846 (1847). Rather more than thirty-three years ago the pretensions of these brothers were subjected to a critical investigation in the pages of the Quarterly Review.

THE Rev. Frederick James Jobson, D.D., one of the most eminent Wesleyan ministers, died at Highbury Place on the 4th inst. He was born at Lincoln in 1812, and articled to an architect, deriving from this connexion some valuable knowledge for his work on Chapel and School Architecture (1850). He was ordained to the Wesleyan ministry in 1834, and became President of the Conference in 1869. In 1857 he published a useful little volume on America and American Methodism, and in 1862 an account of Australia, with Notes by the Way in Egypt, a second edition of which was issued in the same year. His talents were much in request for funeral sermons and memorial tributes for his brethren in the Methodist body. Three of such productions, to the memory of the Rev. J. Bunting, the Rev. D. J. Draper, and Dr. Hannah, were published separately.

THE Rev. William John Kidd, whose death occurred on the 17th ult., was one of the oldest beneficed clergymen in the diocese of Manchester. He had been Rector of Didsbury since 1841, and for the five previous years had held the living of St. Matthew, Manchester. During his long life he was a frequent author on points of polemical divinity connected with the other Christian bodies in England, and especially with the Unitarians, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. He also published several small works on portions of the Bible, and collections of hymns for Sunday-schools.

THE death is announced of the Italian Senator Mauro Macchi, well known as a liberal politician. He has also been a voluminous writer, among his best-known works being a Storia del Consiglio dei Dieci; Vita di Massimo d'Azeglio; Contraddizioni di Vincenzo Gioberti; and Storia del Parlamento subalpino. Since 1867 he has brought out an Annuario od Almanacco popolare politico.

THE death is likewise announced of M. Louis Combes, author of various works on the French Revolution; of the Rev. C. B. Pearson, author of Latin Translations of English Hymns, Sequences from the Sarum Missal, &c.; and of M. Lucereau, an African explorer.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Cornhill for January starts off gallantly with two new stories, one by Mr. James Payn, "A Grape from a Thorn," in which there is sure to be plenty of grape and very little thorn for his readers; and the other, "Love the Debt," by a new writer who has tried, not unsuccessfully, to be like more than one old writer. Of the miscellaneous papers none is equal in interest—at least before it is read—to the editor's reprint of his recent lecture on "The Moral Element in Literature." We say before it is read, for Mr. Leslie Stephen has rather "confessed and avoided" on this occasion. He is very severe on the persons who maintain that there is no relation between art and morality; and certainly if anyone ever said anything so foolish he is right in his severity. But the really important question, whether the goodness or badness of the morality of a work of art affects its goodness or badness as a work of art, Mr. Stephen respectfully skirts and turns. He seems to be satisfied with representing the negative answer as equivalent to saying that "one might say a man's writings were those of a beast and a blackguard without committing oneself to any opinion about their literary value." This is an admirable statement of the case, and no one who holds the view opposite to Mr. Stephen's will reject it. For the first clause very accurately describes much of Swift, a good deal of Rabelais, some of Shakspeare, and in making it so apply we at least are not committing ourselves to an unfavourable opinion of these three insignificant writers. After finding the "dependence," as old duellists would have said, so neatly stated, it is disappointing to come to nothing more than commonplaces to the effect that Mr. Stephen would prefer to have as friend a man "whom he could leave in his library or his cellar without feeling it necessary afterwards to count his books and his bottles." The fallacy is sufficiently palpable. Oddly enough, Mr. Stephen illustrates in this very essay the strongest argument which the defenders of art-for-art can bring. He champions Byron most vigorously; and why? Because he "tears to pieces flimsy sophistries and conventionalities," &c., &c. That is to say, Mr. Stephen sympathises strongly with certain views, political, social, theological, or what not, which a poet held, and therefore admires his poetry. The critics towards whom he is so contemptuous say that this is inevitable whenever irrelevancies of this sort are admitted, and that therefore they will not admit them. This elenchus Mr. Stephen, if he has not wholly ignored it, has certainly not met.

THE Fortnightly Review has a polished and dainty poem by Mr. Matthew Arnold called "Geist's Grave." It is a threnody on a favourite Dachs-hund to which he gave the appropriate name of "Geist," and whose philosophy of life, as exhibited during the brief space of four years, Mr. Arnold contrasts approvingly with the more presumptuous systems of mankind. Are these things an allegory? and are they meant to usher in a new departure of Mr. Arnold's literary activity? Besides this poem the Fortnightly contains a sensible article by Mr. J. H. Farrer on "Freedom of Contract," in which the writer discusses very thoroughly the real meaning and necessary legal limitations of a phrase that has recently been current without much attention to exactness or accuracy.

Le Livre presents its subscribers with a December number which is in itself not a bad Christmas present, containing, as it does, two etchings, one Rembrandt's Doctor Faustus, the other a charming little piece of Spanish life entitled Les Bibliophiles. In this latter, divers book-lovers are turning over the contents of a stall, conspicuous among them two ecclesiastics with enormous hats. The articles of the number are also interesting. Beside continuations of Mr. Blades' treatise, and of the useful series on "La Reliure illustrée," there is a paper by M. Champfleury on "L'Art et la Littérature romantique," and one by M. Fernand Drujon on books with keys. The latter, it is perhaps as well to say, does not refer to locked bindings, but to explanations of allusions. M. Drujon has already distinguished himself in out-of-the-way monographs of this sort, and his work is always careful and conscientious. The latest book with a key—or rather without one—Endymion, is not mentioned, and could hardly be; but England has a share in M. Drujon's investigations. M. Champfleury's special subject is Emile Cabanon, one of the oddest of the odd literary figures of 1830. Readers of M. Charles Asselineau know something about the eccentric author of the eccentrically named Roman pour les Cuisinières. M. Champfleury tells them a little more, and gives them a pretty vignette from the book. Why, we should like to know, has no one ever taken up Asselineau's Bibliothèque romantique, which went no farther than Louis Bertrand?

THE January number of the Deutsche Rundschau has several interesting articles. Herr Brücke discusses the "Expression of Motion in the Fine Arts" in a practical manner, and deserves to be read by painters. Herr Brandes writes an excellent and discriminating criticism of Balzac which does full justice to his merits. Herr Lamp gives a careful account of the present condition of Mexico, and Herr Schmidt uses the letters of the Brothers Grimm as materials for a sketch of the literary activity of Prussia during the first forty years of the present century.

THE energetic editor of the Revista de Ciencias históricas in the November number prints from an inedited MS. in the British Museum "A Short Method for learning the Vozcayan (Basque) Language" by Rafael de Micoleta, a priest of Bilbao, 1633. The grammatical part of the work is of very little value, but the vocabulary and the dialogues contain variations which will be useful to Basque students. Señor F. de Bofarull commences from unpublished documents a Life of Felipe de Malla, ambassador from Ferdinand I. of Aragon to England in 1415, partly to promote a peace between France and England, partly to negotiate a marriage between Henry V. and Leonora, daughter of Ferdinand. De Malla gives an interesting account of his embassy, which failed on both these points. The King, of whom he speaks most highly, was, he says, at one time disposed to accept the French terms of peace. Pedro Nanot, in a continuation of his articles on Catalonia, attributes the sudden eclipse of Catalan literature in the sixteenth century to the influence of Lope de Vega during his visit to Valencia in 1585, and the fashion which then set in of writing in Spanish.

LETTER FROM RHODES.

Rhodes: Dec. 18, 1880.

After a stormy voyage from Palermo, my fellow-traveller, Mr. F. W. Percival, and myself arrived at Smyrna on a cold but cloudless December morning. There we were met by Mr. Dennis with the welcome intelligence of his important discovery of Hittite characters on the image of the Niobe which he has already communicated to the ACADEMY. The inscription consists of three hieroglyphs, all recognisably Hittite. He also put into my hands a rough copy of a Hittite inscription of five lines which Mr. Richards has discovered near Kaisariyeh, the Mazaka of early geography. At Smyrna I further saw a unique specimen of ancient Lydian jewellery which has lately been acquired by Mr. Lawson. It consists of a number of plates of white gold, which once formed part of a pectoral or necklace, and were found in a tomb on the southern slope of Mount Tmōlos. The most interesting portions of the ornament are two plates, one of semi-circular, the other of rectangular, shape. The first has a series of animals' heads, of considerable size, projecting from its upper part; two rams' heads at the corners, gazelles' heads below them, and two ox-heads in the centre. In the centre of the curve of the semi-circle, and descending to its edge, is the upper part of a goddess, the head-dress in the Egyptian style, and the arms hanging down at the sides. On the rectangular piece of gold are other human faces, projecting from the surface of the plate, with marked features, and the hair arranged in a curious way. The beautiful bead-work of early Mediterranean jewellery appears everywhere on the ornament, which, so far as I am aware, is the only example at present known of native Lydian work in gold.

Mr. Ramsay afterwards showed me some interesting ornaments of an archaic character discovered in a tomb in Rhodes. Among them were two hæmatite Babylonian cylinders, both of the early period. They have strengthened my belief that the early Babylonian cylinders found in Cyprus were not imported from the East by the Phœnicians, but are actually memorials of that early period when Sargon and his son Naram-Sin, of Accad or Northern Babylonia, carried their arms as far as Cyprus and introduced the elements of culture and the art of engraving gems among the barbarous nations of the West.

Mr. Ramsay accompanied us to the acropolis of Old Smyrna, Texier's Tantalus, where we noticed that the edges of the stones at the four corners had been cut in a curious way so as to resemble two angular flutings. Mr. Ramsay had observed a similar mode of ornamentation at the ancient city he has discovered at Kavaklıdere. He afterwards took us to see a small and rudely made fortress, with five sides and towers abutting on the outside surface of the walls, discovered by M. Weber at Burnabat. It was probably the predecessor of the Roman settlement at Burnabat, and one of the fortified villages inhabited by the Greeks after the fall of Old Smyrna and before the foundation of the modern city; though I am inclined to think that the towers may have been added during the Byzantine period. It commands a good view of the bay.

We landed at Rhodes on the 11th, with a good deal of difficulty, since the port is practically an open roadstead, and a gale was blowing from the south-west. Here we were received by the kind hospitality of Mr. Edmund Calvert, who, it will be remembered, had informed me a year ago of the existence of a Hittite sculpture and inscription at Frahtin, between Kaisariyeh and Ghurun. He has since heard of similar sculptures and inscriptions about half-an-hour distant from a village called Sudjetin, twelve hours from Nigdeh, in the direction of Tarsus and Adana.

Among the collections of antiquities I have seen in Rhodes I may mention one belonging to the Greek consul, which contains an archaic vase with dolphins and birds in maroon on a drab ground, and a goblet of the Hellenic period in black and red with two faces painted opposite one another on the one side and two figures standing upright on the other, the word ΔΑΜΟΠΑΤΗΣ being scratched on the inner side of the lip. At another house a number of objects found in tombs in the little island of Khalki was offered to me for sale. Among them were several terra-cotta reliefs. One of these represented a head in profile in the Assyrian style, almost life-size. Another, also of large size, represented the upper part of the Asiatic goddess, the head-dress and left side alone being wanting. The arms were braceleted, the hands placed against the breasts, the right hand holding a flower, while the ears were ornamented with earrings. The character of the whole relief was thoroughly Oriental and archaic. The other reliefs were Hellenic. Among the pottery was a small gilded cup, inside which a black vase filled with small glass objects had been found.

We left the picturesque town of Rhodes on the 13th, and rode along the northern coast of the island, past the site of Ialysos—now marked by a solitary column, shattered and fallen, and multitudes of potsherds—to Kalavarda, where we rested for the night. The day was warm and cloudless, the trees green with foliage, the ground studded with anemones, and the air filled with butterflies of various kinds. On our right rose the mountains of Lykia, where the Khimaera was reared, and the Xanthos pours into the sea; then Syme was passed; and finally the Triopian promontory, beneath which Knidos once stood, came into view. We halted for lunch under the shadow of the trees of Kufa, hard by a ruined castle of the Knights of St. John; and, after arriving at Kalavarda, walked off to the site of Kameiros, in the deep recess of an amphitheatre of hills, where we watched the clouds of sunset from what had been the citadel of the old Phœnician city. The tombs opened here have been again covered with soil, and the only records of their existence are the broken fragments of Hellenic pottery with which the ground is strewn.

From Kalavarda we made our way inland, through a country rent with earthquakes and almost without inhabitants. We first skirted the base of Mount St. Elias, once the sanctuary of Helios, the Phœnician Baal, and then climbed the northern spurs of Attairo, the Atabyros of classical geography, along an almost obliterated track through a dense forest of pine and arbutus. At one spot, where the road branches off to Embona, a village where the best wine of the island is made, the ruins of a Hellenic fortress are marked in the Admiralty map (compiled from the survey of Capt. Graves in 1811), but all trace of them has now disappeared. In the evening we reached the solitary monastery of Artamiti, built on the slope of Mount Artamiti, one of the shoulders of Atabyros, above which, on the highest peak of the mountain, stands the church of St. John, built on the foundations of the Greek temple of Zeus. While descending the path which leads from the church to the monastery on the following morning I came across two magnificent eagles sunning themselves on a pinnacle of rock, which flapped their wings defiantly at me as I gazed at them through my glass. We carried away from the monastery some gold coins of Justinian in an excellent state of preservation, twenty-eight of which had been found in tombs at Yannadi. The name of Atabyros, I may add, I would derive from the Karian taba, "rock," comparing the termination of the word with that of Nisyros and similar names. No one who has seen the great rocky mass of the mountain rising into the sky can fail to be struck by the appropriateness of such a title.

A very bad road brought us to Lardos, with its ruined castle and beautiful bay, curving away to the southernmost point of the island. On the shore I noticed a sculptured block of marble, which testified to the former existence of a Greek or Roman building in the neighbourhood. Another hour and a-half over one of the worst paths it has ever been my fortune to traverse, and we looked down on the picturesque city of Lindos, nestling, with its flat houses, in a narrow ravine of broken limestone rock. On one side lay a small bay of deep blue water almost entirely enclosed by rugged cliffs; on the other the modern harbour of Lindos; while in front rose the triangular mass of lofty rock, on the summit of which stand the battle-mented towers of the mediæval castle. We made our way to the Greek theatre, hewn out of the rock below the castle, and there watched the sun setting over the gray hills; then we returned to our quarters for the night through the steep streets of the city, whose houses, like those of Rhodes, are ornamented with the arms of the knights and fragments of mediæval carving, or built among the gateways and arches of the mediæval town. The next morning we visited the Greek tombs, cut in the rocks on the northern side of the city, one of which, now shattered by earthquake, has been carved into the likeness of an Ionic façade. Then we climbed to the castle, despite the heat, and there enjoyed the view and the cool breeze from the sea. Within the castle, more especially in the neighbourhood of the cistern and ruined chapel, are several fragments of sculptured or inscribed marble. It is fortunate that the inscriptions have been copied, as the work of smashing the marble into small pieces has already begun. The tombs on the north-east side of Lindos excavated by Messrs. Biliotti and Salzmann are now again covered up.

In returning to Rhodes, we slept at Manola (not Malona, as the Admiralty map writes it), surrounded by orange gardens and in view of the square mass of rock on which the ruined castle of the knights is perched. We reached the capital of the island only just in time, as a thunder-storm burst upon us shortly after our arrival which lasted till noon to-day.

The Island of Rhodes is one of the most picturesque parts of the world I have ever visited; the variety of scenery through which one passes in the course of a few hours is really surprising. But, archaeologically, it is disappointing; the Knights of St. John have left little that is ancient standing above ground, and the interior of the island could never have been thickly populated. I regret, however, that I did not think of visiting Siana, between Atabyros and Akramitis, in the promontory of which Cape Monolithos forms the point, as Greek tombs have recently been found there.

A. H. SAYCE.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- APPLETON, John H., and A. H. SAYCE. Dr. Appleton: his Life and Literary Relics. Trübner. 10s. 6d.
 AUBOUARN, O. Voyage au Pays des Boyards, Etude sur la Russie actuelle. Paris: Dentu. 5 fr.
 HARDCASTLE, Mrs. Lord Campbell's Life and Letters. Murray. 30s.
 MOLMENTI, P. G. Tiepolo: les Fresques de la Villa Valmarana à Vicence. Venice: Ongania. 200 fr.
 STAFFORD, P. Variétés morales et littéraires. Paris: Fischbacher.
 SUMNER, Mrs. O. Our Holiday in the East. Hurst & Blackett. 15s.

THEOLOGY.

VZASION latine du Pentateuque antérieure à Saint Jérôme, publiée d'après le Manuscrit de Lyon par Ulysse Robert. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 50 fr.

HISTORY.

- CUBIE-SIMMONS, A. Essai sur les Villes fondées dans le Sud-ouest de la France, aux XIII^e et XIV^e siècles, sous le Nom générique de Bastides. Toulouse: Privat.
 DURKEI, T. Histoire de quatre Ans (1870-73). T. 3. La Commune. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
 FRANCK, Ad. Réformateurs et Publicistes de l'Europe—Dix-septième Siècle. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
 GIRARD, Ch. La Maréchaie de Villars et son Temps. Paris: Hachette.
 LACAZE, H. L'île Bourbon, l'île de France, Madagascar, Recherches historiques. Paris: Imp. Parent.
 STEVENS, A. Madame de Staël: a Study of her Life and Times. Murray. 21s.

PHYSIOLOGICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ACHENFELD, L. Das niederrheinisch-westfälische Steinkohlengebirge. 1. Lfg. Essen: Silbermann. 10 M.
 HARTING, J. E. British Animals extinct within Historic Times. Trübner. 14s.
 MICHELET, C. L. Das System der Philosophie als exacter Wissenschaft. 4. Bd. 2. Abth. Berlin: Nicolai. 6 M.
 NADAILLAC, le Marquis de. Les premiers Hommes et les Temps préhistoriques. Paris: Masson.
 NEMESKI, O. Beiträge zur Kenntnis der Amphipoden der Adria. Wien: Hölder. 7 M. 20 Pf.
 PAUCHON, A. Recherches sur le Rôle de la Lumière dans la Germination. Paris: Masson.
 PINTNER, Th. Untersuchungen über den Bau d. Bandwurmkörpers. Wien: Hölder. 9 M. 20 Pf.
 REPORT on the Scientific Results of the Voyage of H.M.S. Challenger, prepared under the Superintendence of Sir C. Wyville Thompson. Zoology. Vol. I. Trübner. 37s. 6d.
 TANNER, H. The Abbott's Farm; or, Practice with Science. Macmillan. 3s. 6d.
 UPHUES, K. Das Wesen d. Denkens nach Platon. Landsberg: Schönrock. 3 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- KAEGI, A. Der Rigveda, die älteste Literatur der Inder. 2. Aufl. Leipzig: Schulze. 4 M.
 LEVY, J. Neuhebräisches u. chaldäisches Wörterbuch über das Talmudim u. Midraschim. 13. Lfg. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 6 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DR. J. G. WETZSTEIN.

Cambridge: Jan. 8, 1881.

Mr. W. Simpson will no doubt be glad to learn that Dr. J. G. Wetzstein, now Professor in the University of Berlin, is a thoroughly "trustworthy authority." He resided in Damascus as German consul, not "for some time," but for many years. His collection of Arabic MSS. is one of the chief treasures of the Berlin Library. He knows both ancient and modern Arabic thoroughly, as is shown by his contributions to the Zeitschrift d. D. M. G. and other periodicals. He has explored in person almost every district of Syria and Palestine, and Mr. Simpson will probably read with pleasure and profit his short Appendix to Delitzsch's Commentary on Job, second edition, 1876, entitled "Das Hiobskloster in Hauran und das Land Uz." In reality, few European scholars have done so much for the topography and epigraphy of the land eastwards of the Jordan as Prof. Wetzstein; and, from my personal knowledge of him, I should say that he is a very sober-minded, matter-of-fact man, whose account of a place or an incident is unlikely to be distorted or exaggerated.

WM. WRIGHT.

MR. SWINBURNE'S NEW VOLUME.

Jan. 7, 1881.

In this week's number of the ACADEMY I find the following remarkable verse attributed to my hand:—

"Till the sum

Of all the sumless sum [sic] of curses told," &c.
 "A schoolboy," says the reviewer, "may think this dreadful;" and I must say I should agree with the intelligent youth. Only, this monstrous nonsense being none of mine, I do but discharge the duty of an honest man in consigning to the hand of its real parent—the reviewer or the printer—all responsibility for so portentous a bantling. The figure of speech which I have really used in speaking of a sum of sumless curses, only to be summed up after the close of a criminal's existence, is too common in ancient as well as in modern verse to be worth notice or justification.

Nor perhaps is it necessary to remark that the previous reprint of Alceia by a German scholar, however creditable to his taste and learning, can surely in no degree lessen the obligation of Englishmen to the editor who first revived it for the benefit of the author's countrymen.

A. C. SWINBURNE.

BUDDHAGOSHA AND THE "MILINDAPAÑHA."

Lordship Lodge, Wood Green, N.: Dec. 28, 1880.

In the Preface to the Milindapañha, the learned editor makes the following remarks respecting the date of his author:—"It [the Milindapañha] is older than the beginning of the fifth century, for it is quoted by Buddhagosa, who, besides it, mentions no writings but those of commentators, and to have acquired sufficient authority it cannot then have been of recent production."

Doubtless Dr. Trenckner is in a position to be able to furnish chapter and verse in support of his interesting statement; but it seems a pity that he did not give, in a foot-note, the exact passage in which Buddhagosa quotes the Milindapañha. In the absence of any such reference, it may indeed be open to doubt whether Buddhagosa ever makes mention of any writing or composition by the name of Milindapañha. That acute commentator may merely refer to some traditional conversations between the sage Nāgasena and King Milinda, much in the same way as the "Proverbs of Alfred" were once quoted, long before, perhaps, there was any written collection of sayings bearing his name.

Dr. Trenckner promises us a supplement to his edition, which will, no doubt, supply the lacking reference. In the meantime it may not be deemed presumptuous on the part of one who has learnt much from the Milindapañha to call attention to a conversation between Nāgasena and Milinda, quoted by Buddhagosa in his commentary on the Brahmāya-sutta (Majjhima-nikāya, ii., 5, i.), and which I identify with the substance of the conversation recorded on pp. 168, 169, of the Milindapañha:—

"Na mahārāja Bhagavā gūyham dasseti chāyam Bhagavā dasseti ti" (Commentary—Turnour, MS., fol. nī, line 6a).

"Na mahārāja Bhagavā gūyham dassesi, iddhiyā pana chāyam dassesi ti" (Milindapañha, p. 169).

Two other similar passages on p. 169 might be quoted, but the identification is complete without them. It is noteworthy that no mention is here made of a work called the Milindapañha; all that Buddhagosa says is "vuttam etam Nāgasena-thārenīya Milindapañhā pūthhena" (fol. nī, line 4a).

The Brahmāya-sutta deals with the thirty-two superior characteristics of a great man. (See Hardy's Manual, pp. 384-87.)

The quotation from the Milindapañha treats only of one of these characteristics. (See Hardy, p. 382; Burnouf's Lotus, p. 572.)

The subject is one that does not admit of any fuller discussion in the pages of the ACADEMY.

RICHARD MORRIS.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, Jan. 17, 5 p.m. London Institution: "The Photographic Spectra of Stars," by Dr. W. Huggins.
 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Anatomy (Demonstration, VII.), by Mr. J. Marshall.
 8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Pliocene Man in America," by Dr. Southall, and Principal J. W. Dawson.
 8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Locke," by Mr. W. H. Dunstan.
 8.30 p.m. Geographical: "On the Arctic Discoveries along the Coasts of Franz Josef Land by Mr. B. Leigh Smith in 1880," by Mr. O. B. Markham.
 TUESDAY, Jan. 18, 7.45 p.m. Statistical: "The Growth of the Human Body," by Mr. J. T. Danson.
 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "On the Birds collected in Socotra by Prof. J. B. Balfour," by Mr. P. L. Selater and Dr. G. Hartland; "On the Land-shells collected in Socotra by Prof. J. B. Balfour," by Col. H. H. Godwin-Austen; "On the Anatomy of the Kosia (Phascogaster cinereus)," by Mr. W. A. Forbes.
 WEDNESDAY, Jan. 19, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Anatomy (Demonstration, VIII.), by Mr. J. Marshall.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Causes of Success and Failure in Modern Gold-mining," by Mr. A. G. Lock.
 8 p.m. British Archaeological Association: "Notes on Some Prehistoric Remains near Feating, Forfarshire," by Mr. J. Romilly Allen.
 8 p.m. Geological.
 THURSDAY, Jan. 20, 4.30 p.m. Royal.
 7 p.m. London Institution: "The Production of Electricity," by Prof. W. E. Ayrton.
 7 p.m. Numismatic.
 8 p.m. Linnean: "On Some Hybrid British Ferns," by Mr. E. J. Lowe; "A Revision of the Genus Vibrisia," by Mr. W. Phillips.
 8 p.m. Chemical.
 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
 FRIDAY, Jan. 21, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: Anatomy (Demonstration, IX.), by Mr. J. Marshall.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Forest Conservancy in India," by Sir Richard Temple, Bart.
 8 p.m. New Shakespeare Society: "On the Shares of Shakespeare and Fletcher in The Two Noble Kinsmen," by Mr. H. Littledale; "On Mr. Spedding's View of the Battle in Leir, Act V.," by Dr. Peter Bayne.
 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Phenomena of the Electric Discharge with 14,400 Chloride of Silver Cells," by Mr. Warren De La Rue.
 SATURDAY, Jan. 22, 3 p.m. Physical: "On the Measurement of Small Resistances," and "On a Method of comparing the Capacities of Two Condensers," by Mr. R. T. Glazebrook.

SCIENCE.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

The Atomic Scientific Theory. By Ad. Wurtz. Translated by E. Cleminshaw. (C. Kegan Paul and Co.) It is satisfactory to find, on turning over the pages of this the latest essay from Prof. Wurtz's pen, that the discoveries of great chemists who did not happen to be Frenchmen are, for the most part, honourably recognised and properly appreciated. This account of the atomic theory from its origin to its present state of development, if marked by no particular signs of a profound grasp of the essential hypotheses of chemical philosophy, is agreeably and carefully written. It is divided into two books, respectively headed "Atoms" and "Atomicity." It would have been wiser to have dropped the latter unmeaning or misleading word, and to have substituted for it such terms as "Valency" or "Vinculance"—terms which express the required idea without involving the necessity for tedious explanations and careful limitations. The first four chapters comprised in the "book" on Atoms discuss in succession the early hypotheses of Proust, Dalton, and Richter; the law of Avogadro (to whom full justice is not done); the work and views of Gay-Lussac, Ampère, Dulong and Petit, Prout and Berzelius. Chap. v. describes the present system of atomic weights, beginning with the reforms inaugurated by Gerhardt, and further developed by Cannizzaro, and proceeding to the subject of Molecular Heats and the laws of Isomorphism. In the sixth chapter, Prof. Wurtz justifies the present system of atomic weights by arguments drawn from the chemical and physical properties and relations of the elements, and then goes on to explain Mendelejeff's system of classification. The last chapter of this "book" gives an account of atomic and molecular volumes, and then we are carried towards the discussion of valency, vinculance, or bonds, by an historical review of the early stages of this question. The four chapters assigned to this subject afford to the chemical student a less clear conception of the doctrine they unfold than would have been the case had the author not used the ambiguous word "Atomicity." It is allowable to apply such a word as "diatomic" to those elements the molecules of which consist of two atoms. And in like manner the term "divalent" may be given to such atoms as are equal in combining power to two atoms of hydrogen. But it is misleading and inconsistent to use the noun substantive "atomicity" as descriptive of the property involved in the adjective "divalent," and not of that involved in "diatomic."

Practical Blowpipe Assaying. By G. Attwood. (Sampson Low and Co.) Taken as a whole, this book is not worthy of general commendation. The author has not consulted the best and latest authorities in the preparation of his manual. He has not introduced some most valuable blowpipe methods now generally adopted. His calculations are not irreproachable. His chemistry belongs, in part, to a bygone stage of the world's history. We search in vain for Ross's aluminium plate, for Griffin's charcoal supports, and the use of hyposulphite as a test for certain metals in the dry way. The terminology of the eight new earths named on p. xviii. is neither English nor Latin. On the previous page we are given some "explanations" which we would advise any chemical beginner not to assimilate. Here we learn that the "combining equivalent," "atomic weight," and "combining proportion" of an element are identical; and we are informed that the atomic weight of oxygen is eight. We were not aware that tungsten, palladium, cerium, and molybdenum were elements of "no commercial value." One of the most curious mistakes in calculation has been made by Mr. Attwood in his elaborate tables for ascertaining the ounces of silver or gold per ton to which the fine metal obtained in an assay corresponds. All the figures in the third column on pp. 117-19 are wrong. Gold and silver are never calculated into avoirdupois ounces of 437½ grains, but into troy ounces of 480 grains. We have been discouraged by the obvious faults of Mr. Attwood's manual from further investigation of its pages. But most of the illustrations, some of the practical directions for assaying, and the majority of the tables for calculation and valuation throughout the volume appear to be of a serviceable kind.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

WITH regard to the late murderous attack made upon Mr. Comber and his companion in the Congo region, we hear that a serious dispute has arisen between the Makuta towns and the principal chief at Banza Makuta on the subject, the natives being afraid that their trade with the coast may be stopped; so that some good may come out of the matter, and the road to Stanley Pool may after all be opened. In the meantime, an influential native has promised to take the missionaries to Zombo, into which region they have hitherto failed to penetrate, though they were allowed to visit the falls of the River Ambriz, over the edge of what is now believed to be a lofty inland plateau, instead of a mountain range as marked on our maps. Mr. Comber and his companion having been rendered unfit by recent events for a long journey, Messrs. Crudginton and Bentley will go in their place, and they may be able to discover a practicable road through the Zombo country, thus avoiding the dangerous Makuta district. The Zombo people are stated to be quite a different nation from both the Congo and the Makuta people; they are clever and industrious, and can give the missionaries valuable assistance, if they choose to do so.

THE International African Association have engaged the services of Herr Otto Lindner, who was a member of Herr Güssfeldt's exploring expedition in Equatorial Africa from 1873 to 1876.

THE California Academy of Sciences has just published, as a brochure, an account of the reception given to the officers of the United States steamer Thomas Corwin and the whaling vessels on their return from the Arctic regions, at which they stated their views and unanimous expression of belief in the Jeannette's safety. A paper is also given which was read before the Academy on December 6 by Mr. C. W. Brooks. It is thought that the Jeannette must have penetrated so far north as to have been beyond communication during the past year, and that her crew are now engaged on sledge work explorations, the second year being always best for such operations. Hopes are also entertained that the missing whalers Vigilant and Mount Wollaston may have communicated with the Jeannette. The brochure is accompanied by a sketch showing Behring Strait and Wrangel Land.

WE may hope to hear of some useful exploring work being done this year on the unknown affluents of the River Purûs, as we hear that Lieut. Jones, R.N., has lately gone out to join the South American Missionary Society's station at São Pedro de Caxoeira.

SCIENCE NOTES.

The Gaulish Tumulus of Apremont.—A paper of unusual interest on La Motte d'Apremont, by M. Eugène Perron, has been published in a recent number of M. Cartailhac's Matériaux pour l'Histoire de l'Homme. "La Motte des Fées" is the name of a tumulus near Apremont, in the Department of Haute Saône, measuring at the base about seventy metres in diameter, but rising to a height of only four feet above the surrounding level. The mound was opened by the author in the autumn of 1879, and the exploration revealed an interment of great importance. Among the relics thus unearthed was a golden crown weighing 232 grammes, with several gold buttons and fragments of fibulæ. A few rings of ivory and of amber were also found; but perhaps the most notable object was a large bronze basin, furnished with iron rings and enclosing a golden cup. Most of these objects appear to have been invested in textile fabrics, the remains of which are still preserved, and form some of the most interesting features of the interment. Regularly placed at the four corners of the sepulchre were the remains of wheels constructed of wood and iron, showing that the corpse had been laid upon a four-wheeled chariot. The body has entirely perished, and the only human relics found in the barrow were some calcined bones, associated with an iron sword much twisted; these bones probably represent a victim who had been immolated at the funeral ceremony. A careful study of the interment leads the author to conclude that this is a Gaulish sepulchre, which may probably be referred to about the fifth century B.C. All the objects have been transferred to the Museum of Prehistoric Antiquities at St.-Germain. It should be added that M. Perron has accompanied his memoir by a number of admirable illustrations, some printed by photography and others by lithography, colour being introduced where necessary.

Mind begins its sixth year with a number which very well represents its original aims. Pure psychology is provided for by Mr. Sully's paper, "Illusions of Introspection," the title of which may look a little alarming to the defenders of the introspective method in psychology, but which turns out to be far less disturbing than it looks. A very curious and interesting article by Mr. Venn, entitled "Our Control of Space and Time," illustrates the interest of the journal in the developments of logic and scientific method. By the power of controlling space and time, the writer means ability "to move about as freely as we may wish in space or time, and power to enlarge space and time to any extent we may need." The meaning of this in reference to space is clear enough, and everybody knows what scientific observation owes to improvements in each kind of control here indicated. The problem is to find an equivalent for this freedom of locomotion and power of enlarging in the case of time. In dealing with this, Mr. Venn shows considerable ingenuity. His suggestion of the means by which a particular section of time might be prolonged—how, for example, a rapid series of visible or audible events might be spread out, so to speak, before the sense—is well worth considering. As he says, we have not completely familiarised ourselves with the nature of "what does happen under present conditions unless we make it embrace also a good deal about what really might happen under conditions which do not exist." The claims of the more abstruse problems of philosophy are met by Mr. Shadworth Hodgson's account of M. Renouvier's philosophy. This writer is said to have most completely developed the "critical strain" in Kant's system in opposition to the diverging developments of the "absolutist strain" by the "thought theory" of Hegel and the "will theory" of Schopenhauer. Mr. Hodgson finds in M. Renouvier a phenomenist with whom he has much in common, though he ably criticises some of the details of his system, and more especially his rather cumbrous scheme of categories. The remaining articles of the number deal with the practical side of philosophy or ethics. Of Mr. Spencer's reply to criticisms on his Data of Ethics it is not necessary to say much. Replies to criticisms are seldom profitable to the general reader, whatever they may be to the critic; and some of Mr. Spencer's hearty admirers often wish that he would reserve the energy he bestows on such replies to the carrying forward of his great philosophic scheme. The other article on "The Summum Bonum" by Mr. D. Greenleaf Thompson is an acute re-examination of the question of the highest good in the light of recent ethical speculation. Mr. Thompson argues from an Epicurean point of view, which he considers to be the only one really tenable, that the good is ultimately the pleasurable. He seems to us to succeed in making some points in defence of egoistic hedonism as against Mr. Sidgwick's attack on "The Methods of Ethics." While allowing much to Mr. Sidgwick, as that we desire objects rather than feelings, the writer contends that a thorough-going analysis of volition shows this to be perfectly consistent with the Epicurean position. As to the reconciliation of egoistic and universalistic hedonism, he sees that the latter, as a body of ethical doctrines, is for the society, and not for the individual. The individual and the social ends coincide only in part, it being even now the interest of the private citizen to aim at the happiness of some others (for to aim consciously at personal pleasure is, as both Mr. Sidgwick and Mr. Spencer have shown, suicidal), though not of the whole community, and much less of mankind in general. Yet even now much turns on individual disposition, since an exceptionally benevolent man will find his pleasure in pursuing a much wider social end, while the whole tendency of progress is to bring the private and public aims into closer agreement.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE Indian Antiquary for November commences with a paper by Mr. West on the "Pahlavi Inscriptions at Kanheri." They record the visit of certain Persian Parsees to the Kanheri caves early in the eleventh century; and, though they are little more than lists of Persian names, are peculiarly valuable from the fact of their being dated. They show, therefore, the form of Pahlavi writing in use at that period, and indicate what kind of names—differing much from those now common—were then in favour. Then follows a further report from Dr. Edward Müller on the "Ancient Inscriptions in the North-Western Province and in the Anurādhapura and Mātale Districts in Ceylon." Like the rest of the Ceylon inscriptions, they are not of much historical value, as they add little to the details preserved in the native chroniclers. But they render more complete the very interesting philological history of the dialect of that island—the only dialect in India which can be traced through all its changes, by contemporary documents, from the earliest times to the present day. Mr. Howorth continues his detailed account of the Tartar legends concerning Chingiz Khan and his successors; and Mr. Raghunathji his curious account of the Bombay Beggars and their various customs and cries. There then follows a fragment of folk-lore by Mrs. Steele, and a long and important paper by M. Senart, translated from the Journal Asiatique, on the Edicts of Asoka. M. Senart points out examples, too numerous to be regarded as mistakes, of the use of a long vowel for the same vowel nasalised, and vice versa. He further proposes to read as thi a character which has hitherto been always read sthi; and to read as pra a character which has hitherto been taken as an inaccurate form of the simple pa. After some other notes of a similar kind, M. Senart gives an improved transliteration and translation of the first three Edicts; and we are glad to see that further instalments are to be given of a paper which is the most important contribution to this department of study since the publication of Prof. Kern's well-known dissertation. The letters which Dr. Morris and Prof. Max Müller contributed to these columns on the division of the Buddhist Scriptures are reprinted; and the number closes with the usual notes and queries and book-notices. The most important of these latter is a review by Dr. West of Darmesteter's Vendidad; and we are glad to find that the important work of reviewing is now being entrusted to scholars whose contributions will add value to this useful periodical.

THE Ninth Annual Address of the President to the Philological Society, delivered last May by Dr. Murray, the editor of the society's English Dictionary, will soon appear in print in the society's Transactions. Besides the president's eloquent advocacy of spelling reform (already noticed in the ACADEMY), the most interesting portion of it is that dealing with the progress of the Dictionary, which appears to be very satisfactory, the number of volunteer readers having increased considerably during the past year. Dr. Murray warmly acknowledges the help he has received in America; he says:—

"I do not hesitate to say that I find in Americans an ideal love for the English language as a glorious heritage, and a pride in being intimate with its grand memories, such as one does find sometimes in a classical scholar in regard to Greek, but which is rare indeed in Englishmen towards their own tongue."

He then goes on to acknowledge the eminent services of Prof. F. A. March, and of the American professors generally, and remarks:—

"We have had no such help from any college or university in Great Britain; only one or two professors of English in this country have thought the matter of sufficient importance to talk to their students about it, and advise them to help us."

One of the most striking results of the thorough examination of earlier authorities has been the enormous extent to which dictionaries and encyclopaedias have gone on copying one another for centuries without verification, misprints, such as adventine for adventive, and fictitious words, such as abalienation, which appear never to have really existed in the language, being thus banded down to the present day. Dr. Murray calls attention to the vagueness of the term "English language," and the difficulty, or rather impossibility, of defining its limits. When we consider that English is surrounded by a vanishing border of French, Spanish, Turkish, Zulu, and of special terms, scientific, slang, dialectal, some of which are English to some Englishmen and undreamt of by others, we may well ask, At what Englishman's speech does English terminate? The same difficulty is caused by such loose compounds as sea-salt, &c., whose number is unlimited. Dr. Murray himself evidently inclines to the practical view of including as many of the outlying words as possible, as being those which ordinary readers are most likely to consult the Dictionary about.

DR. DAVID ASHER's translation of Lazarus Geiger's Contributions to the History of the Development of the Human Race (Trübner) shows very few indications that the translator's native language is that of the author, and not that of the public to whom he wishes to introduce him. As a rule, the English is not only clear, but flowing; and where, as is not uncommonly the case, the writer rises into real eloquence, his translator is fully competent to follow him. But Dr. Asher seems to have formed somewhat too high an opinion of the scientific value of Geiger's posthumous lectures and essays. He may have been called "the greatest of German philologists," but certainly there would be far more found to dispute the title than to concede it. The five lectures which were published after the author's death by his brother were delivered from ten to twelve years ago; and, though often brilliant and suggestive, they stand sadly in need of revision and annotation to bring them up to the present state of knowledge. For example, it is surely unwise to publish in 1880 a lecture delivered in 1867 on "The Colour Sense in Primitive Times and its Development" without a hint of the elaborate enquiries into that subject conducted in different quarters within the last ten years. The appended essay on "The Primitive Home of the Indo-Europeans," in which Dr. Geiger contended that it was to be sought in Southern Germany, is hardly likely to overthrow the commonly accepted hypothesis of an Asiatic origin, weak as the evidence confessedly is on which that hypothesis is based. The book is a pleasant one to read, and well worth reading; but the student will rarely find in it the latest word of science on the questions of which it treats.

FINE ART.

Catalogue général des Monuments d'Abydos.
Par Auguste Mariette. (Paris: Imprimerie Nationale.)

MARIETTE PASHA's Catalogues are as interesting as the books of other savants, and the present splendid volume is no exception to that rule. From a work described by the author as "an impersonal collection of materials," it would be idle to expect the discursive wealth of the famous Handbook to the Boolak Museum; yet these pages are everywhere rich in comment and suggestion, and the old grace of style is never absent from them. Of the value of the collection—which, in truth, is anything but "impersonal"—it is enough to say that the book is a catalogue raisonné of all moveable objects discovered at Abydos during eighteen years of excavation. These objects (last gleanings from a field perpetually ravaged during the last 2,000 years) consist of statues, statuettes, stelae, vases, libation-tables, &c., &c. Of mummies, mummy-cases, and articles of personal adornment the specimens are very few, and not one papyrus appears upon the list. Every article is described more or less minutely, and every inscribed object has its inscription reproduced in whole or in part according to its historical importance. The majority of these objects are funeral stelae, beginning from the Fourth Dynasty and ending with the period of the Lagidae, and they occupy more than half the bulk of the volume. The immense necropolis of Abydos must have contained hundreds of thousands of these precious tablets; but we may rejoice that over 1,300 have escaped the lime-kiln, and that their inscriptions are placed upon permanent record. Many stelae are genealogical, and give complete histories of private families through several generations. Others are interesting from the sidelights which they cast upon contemporaneous history. Others again (as the thanksgiving tablet in which Rameses IV. boasts that he has done more for the glory of Osiris during his brief reign of four years than did Rameses II. in his sixty-seven years of rule) are already celebrated in science. Our old friends the Aperiu, or Aperu, by some identified with the Hebrews, reappear in a stela (No. 766) commemorating the visit of Nefer-hotep I. (Thirteenth Dynasty) to the library of the temple of Osiris at Abydos. Having inspected the sacred rolls, his Majesty declares his intention to restore the building, and directs that "workmen and Aperu" be sent for. It is to be noted that the word Aperu is not here followed by the determinative denoting foreign tribes. This would seem to be the earliest mention of the Aperiu yet discovered. Among the stelae of private individuals may be noted the epitaph of a certain priest and Court official named Pentaur, who died and was buried in the first year of Menephtah. There may have been scores of hieroglyphs of this name, but one's thoughts inevitably turn to the Egyptian Homer; and he who sang Rameses II. at Kadesh might well have died at a ripe age in the first year of his hero's successor. Stela No. 1225 (a fragment of twenty-five lines) contains that inscription of "Nimrod son of Shishak" a translation of which in the second volume of Dr. Brugsch's Geschichte Aegyptens unter den Pharaonen recently attracted so much attention. Mariette Pasha, in his notice of this tablet, describes the deceased warrior as "un Nimrod, roi des Ma (l'Assyrie, selon M. Brugsch) co-partageant du trône avec son père Sheshonk;" so accepting the disputed title "Ur" in the sense of "king," but apparently reserving a doubt as to the identification of "Ma" with Assyria.

The citizens of Abydos were men of peace—priests, proprietors, scribes, architects, and the like. The absence of military titles from these funeral records gives matter for curious speculation. At Abydos, as elsewhere, the Hyksos period is marked by a wide monumental chasm. A flourishing population is apparently stricken with sudden annihilation. For several centuries it leaves not even an epitaph behind. When at length it begins to reappear, the stelae wear a different aspect; the hieroglyphs assume unaccustomed forms; the proper names of individuals are unlike the proper names of old. We see that something strange and terrible has happened. But we know nothing; for the face of history has been ploughed up. It is disappointing to learn that the great tumulus of Kom-es-Sultan has yielded no monuments anterior to the Sixth Dynasty; and that Abydos itself is, after all, by no means one of the oldest of Egyptian cities. It seems not to have even existed at the time of the Pyramid builders. Where, then, are we to look for "ancient This" (Teni), the first Egyptian capital? Does this earliest secret of all indeed lie hidden, as Mariette Pasha once suggested, under the mounds of Girgeh? The probabilities seem to point that way.

Like every production of the French National Press, this Catalogue des Monuments d'Abydos is a model of typography, paper, and general accuracy. It wants only an index to complete its usefulness in the library. The title of the book is, however, a misnomer. It is much more than a Catalogue. It is an invaluable Corpus Inscriptionum; and, like all the archaeological work of its illustrious editor, it is a monument of industry and learning. AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

THE OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY. (Second Notice.)

To leave the first and enter the second room is to step from England to Holland, from the eighteenth to the seventeenth century. But there is another change—that from art comparatively exotic and experimental, full of ambition and the strife after beauty, to art which is comparatively native, matured, and contented. Dutch art, as represented here in some perfect work of its best time, is, if not indigenous, at least a well-acclimatised variety of the original stock, and it is now almost impossible to expect the rise of any other school possessing quite equally unesophisticated national properties. The interchange of ideas is too rapid nowadays between all cultivated nations to admit of any one of them developing art without touch of foreign influence; and, though as long as different nations exist their separate characters will always show themselves strongly in their pictures, art is becoming each day more cosmopolitan. This is one reason that justifies the high value placed nowadays upon the works of the Dutch masters of genre, which, if in some ways unsurpassable, are wanting for the most part in noble inspiration. With them commences an important chapter in the history of the secularisation of art, and a variety of painting as individual as an order of architecture.

When again in Europe will an artist be so completely satisfied with himself and his art, so careless of opinion beyond the frontier of his State, if not beyond that of his own district, as to paint, without thought of shame, himself, coarse as a drayman, smoking his after-dinner pipe, while his wife, filled to repletion, snores with loosened bodice at a table still covered with the disordered remains of a gross meal; or to depict the drinkings and merry-makings of his countrymen with all their low details of sudden brawl and improvised amour, their drunkenness and its physical consequences, without a thought of satire and derision, as did that same Jan Steen and Teniers and Wouwerman, and other deservedly famous artists? What Hogarth painted in scorn they painted in frolic. Though that old English worthy was not over-refined in his pastimes or squeamish with his pencil, he had a sense of his own dignity and that of Art which seems to have been wanting to many Dutch genre painters. This very absence of high motive, however, this content with their ordinary surroundings, contributed to bring to perfection their technical dexterity in representing those beauties which they could feel and those things which they loved. Just as the absence of sources of spiritual emotion and knowledge of perspective and light and shade has developed in Japan an inimitable ability in pure black and white, and in treating flowers and animals in decorative design, and the banishment of human form from Mohammedan art has produced the most exquisite skill in geometrical designs; so these Dutch painters, with light, line, and colour only for beauty and with love for their poor homes, their ungainly fellow-countrymen, and their flat country, with its muddy dykes and dwarf trees, arrived at skill in genre painting which will always stand as an example to the world.

To Jan Steen we owe the fullest and most varied examples of the ordinary social life in Holland in the third quarter of the seventeenth century, and even the present exhibition shows us glimpses, not only of his own home, but of those of his compatriots, rich and poor. Specially fine in colour and finish are two rich interiors (100 and 104), filled with convivial groups, eating and drinking; even the little baby in the cradle in The Christening seems to enter into the spirit of the festivity. The pictures on the walls, the silver flagons, the handsome costumes, give a good idea of the comfort and luxury of a well-to-do Hollander; and both of them (104 is an Oyster Feast) show what important employments were eating and drinking in those days both to artist and sinner. This latter picture is, perhaps, a greater marvel of dexterity than the other, for it is painted so thinly that you can see the canvas through the paint. Hogarth is the only English painter who comes near to Jan Steen in the power of sufficiently indicating the character and appearance of different substances and textures with a few sure touches. Compare this picture with his Lady's Last Stake.

The frank expression of the delights of wine and tobacco is not, indeed, a high motive of art, but when it is combined with a feeling of good fellowship, the pleasure of seeing smiling faces, the enjoyment of exquisite gradation in light and shade, and cunning melodies of simple colour, the surprises of sheeny glass and silver, the faithful rendering of textures, the humours of character, and the love of animals, the want of elevation in the spirit is not felt so much as the physical beauties and human interest of the work. Of poorer merry-makings by Jan Steen there is a spirited example in The Village Fête (124), where the enjoyment of everybody in the music and in the energetic action of the dancers runs through and enlivens the whole of the complicated, but unconfused, composition. Very different was the spirit in which his elder, Adrian van Ostade, worked. To Jan Steen the play, to Ostade the work, of the world. To him belonged a fine sympathy with the labours and sorrows and small pleasures of the poor, a simpler love for the every-day life of man and appearance of things—the one unexhilarated by potations, the latter not selected specially to exhibit his skill. Of his precious pictures, Mrs. Hope lends two (106 and 128), the former the loveliest little picture in the room, and the latter charming in the feeling of friendship between the cheery old woman and the kindly old man who is offering her a very small present of a piece of bread.

In the works of David Teniers the younger, whose human sentiment was not so tender as that of Ostade, but who had more of it than Dow, Metz, or de Hooghe, the gallery is very rich. The large and disgusting Worship of Bacchus (76) is remarkable mainly for its size, and delightful only for its transparent sky and its easy mastery of execution. It appears much damaged, but the sound portions—see especially the grapes and the green glass on the ground—are wonders of swift painting. Beautiful for their silvery tones and bright certainty of touch are the pair of groups of soldiers (66 and 61); but in these and Mr. Howard-Keeling's still-life piece (69) the illusion of distance is imperfectly given. In 61 and 66 there does not appear to be sufficient space for the men between the table and the wall; and in 69 the drippings of the carcass would not fall into the pan which is supposed to stand beneath it. Sombre, but very luminous, is the colour of his Oil Mill (96) belonging to Earl Cowper, and the visitor will find several other good examples of his work.

Of those men who were the representatives of art for art's sake in Holland, and are, as a rule, more remarkable for their extraordinary skill than for the subjects of their pictures—painters of life, but of very "still" life—the examples are also numerous and good. First of these, by right not only of seniority, comes Gerhard Terburg. By him there is a fine portrait of a pompous Burgomaster, belonging to Sir William Ardy (80), with partly shaven lip, dressed entirely in black, only relieved by the colour of his face and hands and that red line along the sole of the shoe, which would tempt one to believe that it was an artist's device but for its frequent appearance, as in the fine Metz (127). Unfortunately, the flesh tints have gone from the hands, and the simple scheme of the colour of the picture is destroyed thereby. Mrs. Hope lends three examples of Terburg, all of them remarkable, but especially 110, for variety and richness of texture. They are not, however, more beautiful than the Interior (with a Lady drinking) by that rare master, Van der Meer (of Delft) (93). Of Gerhard Dow (70 and 97) there are two miracles of minute imitation combined with breadth of effect, a Mieris (121) and four Metz (107, 125, 127, and 130). Of these (127), A Gentleman in a Black Dress, writing, deserves special attention for its wonderfully clever distribution of reds and blacks, its cunning arrangement of line, and exquisite painting of textures. Fine also are the pose and expression of the figure. There are three de Hooghes, all remarkable for his wonderful skill in painting cool light reflected from shining cold surfaces—bricks and marble, glass and paint. The Queen's Card Party (113) has suffered sadly, but it has still left much marvellous painting, especially in the red blinds inside and the red shutter outside the window and the light upon the painted door.

In speaking of the landscape artists of Holland, I must again mention David Teniers the younger, none of whose successors excelled, and few approached, his clear silveriness and unlaboured skill; but he wanted poetry and warmth, both of which were supplied by Albert Cuyp, by whom there are two beautiful landscapes (65 and 117). The latter unites the cool luminosity of Teniers in its river and distance with all Cuyp's richness and warmth of colour in the beautiful group of blunt-nosed cows lying in the sunny grass; the former, with its distance melting towards the setting sun, offers by its position a good opportunity for contrast between his art and that of his great French contemporary, Claude Lorraine, at its finest. Unfortunately, the shady foreground of Cuyp's landscape, as the shaded portions of so many of the Dutch pictures here, has suffered; see the clever group of a man getting a "leg up" on to his horse in Paul Potter's Stable Door (71), and the black cow in the same artist's Landscape with Cattle (82). The loss of light and definition in the former makes the perfectly preserved white horse too brilliant for the tone of the rest of the picture. Of the finely finished and polished work of Potter and Wouwerman there are some fine specimens beside these two of the former. Wouwerman is in especially great force with his comparatively large landscapes (73 and 106), the former of which, belonging to the Hon. H. Baillie Hamilton, is distinguished by the beautiful cool stretch of the river and the soft gray hills and sky beyond, as well as by the vigour and nature of the numerous figures, especially the bathers. Perhaps still more to be admired is the Hon. H. Baillie Hamilton's Landscape and Peasants (85). Examples of Dusart and Wynants, a scene in Italy by Lingelbach, a few pretty little sea-pieces by William van de Velde, two very nice de Heems, a small Berchem, a good example of the Boths, and a flower-piece by Van Os close the list of an unusually fine collection of Dutch cabinet pictures.

Rembrandt—a name which dwarfs the rest of his fellow-countrymen—is represented by some fine works, two of which are very properly hung among the pictures already mentioned. The finest of them is the Portrait of a Lady and Gentleman (75), a powerful and finely finished work in his early style. Far more characteristic is his Portrait of a Man, belonging to Lord Cowper (161), painted when he was thirty-seven. The man is evidently a student who has been disturbed by some thought or message calling for instant action. He is in the act of starting up with knitted brows and reaching out his left hand to take down his red cap from the wall. There is a curious mask or cast of a dead face on the books to the right. This splendid work has received some injury, especially in the cheek, but it is one of those inspired compositions that are long-suffering, and it will bear much more serious disfigurement without losing its strength and beauty. The life-size figure of Marshal Turenne on horseback, from the same collection, is also a splendid example of Rembrandt's skill, though the horse is scarcely so satisfactory as the rider. The early Christ and his Disciples in the Storm (168) has much of Rembrandt in the bold effect of light and the energy and expression of the rude figures, but it is more curious than beautiful. It is in connexion with this great master rather than with the Jan Steens and Metzus that the work of such men as Van der Helst and Frank Hals should be mentioned. A splendid sally (59) from the audacious brush of the latter is contributed by Mr. Bischoffsheim; and the example of the former, The Arrest of the De Witts (87), is a masterpiece.

The work of Lucas of Leiden is so remote from that of the other Dutch artists here represented that it will be convenient to consider the Queen's fine altar-piece, which is attributed to that master, together with the early religious pictures of other schools.

The value of the contributions of Mrs. Hope of Deepdene will be understood when it is stated that she is the possessor of nearly every picture mentioned in this article the name of whose owner is not given.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

GROSVENOR GALLERY WINTER EXHIBITION.

THERE is a most commendable desire to keep up the freshness of the Winter Exhibitions at this gallery, and this year a large proportion of the space is devoted to designs. The number of exhibitors is very small; but many of the works are of great interest. Several of Mr. Burne Jones's cartoons for stained glass appear to us to be among his finest efforts in decorative art. The Two Groups of Angels (354), designed for a window in Salisbury Cathedral, are masterly in drawing and in the management of draperies, as we expect to find all the works of this artist; but the exquisite grace of one of the angelic pilgrims can hardly be described. The Judgment (353), designed for a window at Easthamstead, is admirably composed, and in parts well sustains a comparison with the works of the early Florentine artists on which it is modelled; but this cannot be said of the strange figure in the left panel, who has apparently vaulted up from a grave astride of the top of a wall. In Paradise (355) and in Part of a Window—designed for Brampton—(345) there is wonderful power of expression and skill in drawing. All these cartoons for stained glass are executed in grayish tints; it would be interesting to have placed by them representations of the colours actually used in the windows. The outline Design from the Song of Solomon (339) shows perhaps better than any other work the easy grace of Mr. Burne Jones's pencil; and the grand figure of Elijah (342)—in which the drawing of the hands should be specially observed—and the quaint and charming Cupid's Hunting Ground (327), indicate the wide range of his art. At the same time we must enter a protest against the somewhat monotonous repetition in so many of these designs of the same face. If we are not mistaken, besides appearing frequently among the saints and angels, it figures as St. Matthew in Dies Domini and also in Cupid's Hunting Ground. That the face is singularly attractive is hardly a sufficient reason for this frequent reproduction. Mr. Walter Crane has several designs for wall-papers and needlework. His Cartoon for Wall-paper (348), showing different modes of treatment, is excellent, both in colour and design. Mr. H. Holiday has many works here of varying degrees of merit, from his extremely feeble drawing of Shakspeare supported by Tragedy and Comedy and surrounded by the Principal Characters from his Dramas (321) to his well-drawn and comparatively vigorous cartoon for stained glass of Archbishop Langton (350).

Coming to the other contents of the exhibition, we encounter first a series of water-colours contributed by French artists. If the majority of these are at all fair specimens of this branch of French art, we can only deplore its excessively unsatisfactory condition. Many of the works are feeble and "niggling" in the last degree; full of tricks, and giving one the impression of not having been studied from nature. It would really appear that when a French water-colour painter gets his picture into the state known as "a mess," he does not feel any discouragement or depression; he straightway dabs on some body colour, strengthens his shadows—et voilà!

We decline to characterise further most of these singular works, but M. Dubufe's corpulent female (36), with a dislocated thigh, a deformed foot, and abundant tresses of seaweed, is too remarkable an object to be passed by in silence. M. F. Brissot has two well-painted studies of sheep, Moutons au Repos (23) and La Rentrée du Troupeau (24); and M. E. E. Viollet-le-Duc contributes a fairly truthful representation of glacier ice in Le Soir aux Grands Mulets (20), and an interesting picture of Sommet du Glacier de Scherzemberg (?) (25), apparently one of the glaciers on the route to the Weissthör. The English water-colours we must leave for another occasion.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

PROF. COLVIN is to deliver a course of lectures on "The Amazons: a Chapter in the Study of Greek Mythology and Art," at the Royal Institution, on January 29, and February 5, 9, and 12, at three p.m.

MR. JOHN COLLIER is painting Mr. Edwin Booth in the character of Richelieu.

WE have received from Messrs. Soutter and Sons, of Edinburgh, a little book called Hints on Fine Art Pottery Painting, which contains much information about the processes and materials of the art that will be useful to beginners. It also contains some hints on etching on glass and modelling in terra-cotta.

MESSRS. MAYALL have added to their gallery of distinguished statesmen a very fine portrait of Mr. Gladstone. It is a photograph enlarged to life-size, and finished very cleverly in oils; the modelling and lighting of the face leave little to be desired, and the expression is noble. It is now on view at the new gallery at 164 New Bond Street.

WE hear that Lord Suffolk's famous La Vierge aux Rochers by Leonardo has been secured for the National Gallery for £9,000.

A PICTURE has been exhibited during the last few days in Sedelmeyer's galleries, in the Rue de Larocheboucauld, Paris, which has attracted considerable attention. It belongs to the Grand-Duke Constantine, who was willing to let it be seen by Parisian lovers of art before he took it away. It represents The Dnieper by Moonlight, and is the work of a young Russian painter of remarkable promise, M. Kuindzi.

THE third exhibition of the French Water-Colour Society will open in April, and a specially interesting show of pictures is expected. Among the artists who will contribute are Gustave Doré, Baroness Rothschild, Ferdinand Heilbuth, Leloir, and Mlle. Lemaire. The exhibits will likewise include the last works of Jules Jacquemart.

THE sale of the pictures and miscellaneous works of art belonging to Marcelin Desboutine, the great master of dry-point, which took place at the Hôtel Drouot last week, was attended by a large number of artists—Degas, Manet, Renoir, Forain, de Specke, and the miniature painter Nermarck. The finest picture was sold for something under £40; La Sortie de Bébé, another favourite, fetched £32; while other pictures were sold for £16 and £18. The sale of the entire collection did not reach a higher figure than £640.

THE Luxembourg Museum has just been closed for a month. Considerable changes are to be made, it is said, in the size of the galleries, to the advantage of the Senators, and, consequently, to the disadvantage of the artists.

GUSTAVE DORÉ is said to be still undecided what pictures he will send to the Salon this year. He is troubled, in fact, by the difficulty of selection, for he has pictures in his atelier of all kinds—views in the Alps, the Cheviot Hills, the Balkans, and other places where his travels have led him, beside genre pictures of various kinds. One of these works, described in L'Événement, represents a gipsy woman holding to her breast her young son who has just been seriously hurt by a fall from the trapeze; while the father, a clown, stands by, with a tear running over the paint on his cheeks. It is stated that this picture has been in Gustave Doré's atelier for ten years, but he has never exhibited it.

THE Art Journal makes a very good start for the new year, though there is still discernible in its pages a certain amount of "the old Adam," which, we have no doubt, will be gradually eliminated. An excellent facsimile of a red chalk drawing of Mr. Poynter's—a study for one of his fairest pictures—brings life and improvement into the department of illustration; and indeed, among the minor illustrations, those which illustrate Mr. G. Robinson's pleasantly written chapters on the progress of domestic furniture are both well chosen and well executed. "Hints to Collectors" is begun this month, Mr. J. L. Roget discoursing upon early English drawings. His article is a plain, careful, and business-like account of what the collector of our earlier water-colours may profitably do. It will tell much to many new buyers, and will at least refresh the memories of older ones. The Art Journal—which has always retained some measure of interest—has suddenly become generally readable and thoroughly well done in nearly all of its departments.

ALL lovers of emotional landscape will read with vivid pleasure Mr. Alfred Hunt's eloquent paper on "Turner in Yorkshire," contributed to the same number of the Art Journal. He is himself one of those artists of whom he speaks, over whom "the various aspects of earth, sea, and sky exercise exceptional power, with whom landscape beauty is a passion, and Nature altogether a subject of affectionate study rather for the sake of her freaks and vagaries than her uniformities. The excitement," he adds, "of watching her processes soon passes, as in Shelley's case, beyond the point at which keen interest would probably ripen into scientific zeal in minds of equal observing power, but of a less emotional type. No tracing of laws will satisfy that excitement. The desire to know is surpassed in strength by the desire to yield to, to enjoy, to possess as much as possible of the influence which certain aspects of the external world are capable of exerting over us."

A careful study of Turner's work by a man who is not only able to enter with sympathy into his motives, but has himself been subject to the same influences of temperament urging him to similar efforts at expression in the same medium, is what we have long wanted, and Mr. Hunt's papers appear likely to be a very valuable supplement to Mr. Ruskin's long and noble labours, to the essential truth of which, as well as to that of Turner's work, they will bear eloquent and authoritative witness.

THE new number of the Etcher contains what is perhaps the best etching it has given its subscribers, at all events for a long while. This is La Boucherie—the butcher's shop—by Léon Lhermitte, which is not only technically a success, but which comes to confound those critics—and we confess we were ourselves among them—who had thought M. Lhermitte's talent somewhat closely confined to the adroit arrangement of light and shade. The character in the butcher's shop, it is true, is not very new, but it is very skillfully expressed. Those present—buyer and seller—are both women. It is quite remarkable how, without becoming unnatural, M. Lhermitte has avoided the brutality of his theme. The scene is without coarse or ugly suggestion—a perfectly charming study of light and shade, and the light predominating, which is unusual with M. Lhermitte. Mr. F. Slocombe has a very graceful, if somewhat sentimental, Haymaker, and Dr. Evershed some charming rustic or quaint country houses, delicately studied. These, we perceive, represent certain agreeable old buildings at North End, Hampstead—the scene of many of Dr. Evershed's etchings; but "A. E.," doubtless Dr. Evershed himself, in his interesting note on his contribution, makes a slight mistake concerning one of the principal personages who inhabited the place. He says that William Blake lived there, and that Linnell visited him. It was Linnell who lived there, and Blake who was the visitor. This number of the Etcher is a very remarkable one.

THE current number of the Zeitschrift für bildende Kunst opens with an article by W. Bubeck entitled "Two Churches of the Italian Renaissance." These churches, hitherto but little known, are those of Castel Rigone, by the Trasimenian Lake; and Mongiovino, among the hills approaching Perugia. They are chiefly interesting from the great quantity of fine early sculpture they contain. Otto Gruppe renews the discussion with respect to the terra-cotta statuette which he believes to have been the model for Michelangelo's Moses, and brings forward many forcible arguments in support of his opinion. Martin Schongauer, whose works were recently subjected to strict investigation by Dr. von Wurzbach in a monograph noticed in these pages, is the subject of a short study by W. Lübke, illustrated with several reproductions from his engravings. A clever etching by Kühn, called A Good Drop, forms the frontispiece of the number.

THE STAGE.

"THE COUNTRY GIRL."

IF Wycherley's Country Wife—one of the comedies by which his name is famous—has its source in Molière, Wycherley at least "conveyed" it so cleverly that it is to all intents and purposes his own. It forms one, and one of the most vigorous, of that formidable assemblage of Restoration comedies for which English Literature is indebted to vigorous and ribald men. Of Wycherley especially, "rough vigour" has been said to be the particular characteristic. It was he who brought Prose Comedy—the comedy of manners—into fashion. Ben Jonson's allegiance was divided between prose and verse; and what he wrote in prose illustrated character rather than the passing fashions of society. Wycherley, a couple of generations afterwards—and after the dull régime of the Commonwealth—established on our stage that comedy of manners which has hardly quitted it since. Everyone knows that his plays, like those of his fellows and followers—like those of Congreve, Vanbrugh, and Farquhar—are fitted, as they stand, only for what it used to be the habit to speak of as "the closet;" that is, the study, and not the stage. But Miss Litton, who gave us all she could of Wycherley last Saturday afternoon at the Gaiety, and who proposes to give us more in the like vein, has done very well to open to us the resources of Restoration drama. Restoration drama cannot be presented as it was written. Restoration drama is not poetry. It is not conspicuously rich in noble sentiment or exalted action. It deserves, on the whole, the evil report that Macaulay gave of it; but, as there is now no fear of its being taken seriously, it is well that its store of entertainment should be opened to playgoers. Macaulay's abuse of it would now be fairly compared to the crushing of a butterfly by an unnecessary wheel.

The Country Wife—though it has long lost its hold on the nineteenth-century stage—was successful enough in London in the eighteenth century. In it—in the celebrated character of Peggy—Mrs. Jordan made her first appearance on the London stage. Her qualities (which were those of charm rather than of intellect), her good humour, her smile, her splendid spirits, found in this piece their best opportunity for display. But it was not The Country Wife of Wycherley, pure and unadulterated—or impure and contaminated—that was played then; it was The Country Wife altered into The Country Girl; it was Wycherley rectified by Garrick.

Garrick's version is substantially the same as that now acted at the Gaiety Theatre. It was Garrick who suppressed the character of Horner, and made Peggy out of the "country wife," and Mr. Moody (as we now have him) out of the yet more objectionable personage whom Wycherley had created or had borrowed from Molière. Garrick made all that was necessary in the way of what a quaint critic, almost of his own day, calls a sacrifice of wit "on the altar of decency." The sacrifice was necessary, but the wit did terribly suffer. There remained, however, enough incident, enough of bright characterisation, and enough of repartee to charm audiences on their own account, or to serve at all events as the vehicle for displaying the charm of Mrs. Jordan. And as regards the morality of the play, it became, when Garrick altered it, as inoffensive as that of a drama by Mr. Tom Taylor. The wife who was courted became the maid who was courted. The scene contains no incident more indecent than is contained in As You Like It. Peggy is as pure as Rosalind, as unsophisticated; infinitely lively, but infinitely rough. And, notwithstanding all the reproach that has been levelled at the dialogue of Wycherley, it was found possible by simple curtailment of it so far to abolish its offensiveness that the play, as Garrick re-arranged it, or as Mr. Bannister's retouch now leaves it at the Gaiety, contains no sentence half as indiscreet as many of those that an audience still laughs at most heartily in The School for Scandal.

Unlike Mrs. Jordan, Miss Litton is perhaps fitted quite as well by her intellectual gifts as by her temperament to represent the character of Peggy, whose freshness makes the charm of the piece. She is sometimes even a little wanting in exactly the things which Mrs. Jordan must have had so abundantly—as abundantly as Miss Nesbitt—effervescence and flow. She makes up for this by a perfect intellectual appreciation of the character and its requirements; her representation is full of art and subtlety; it is studied much, yet studied so delicately that the elaboration is quite hidden. Each characteristic of the girl who is brought by her guardian to town from what seem to have been the wilds of Hampshire is admirably presented; no one thing is done with over-emphasis, with over-insistence; the character is thoroughly harmonious. It takes rank, as an artistic creation, beside the Rosalind of the same actress. Of course it has some failings of detail. Emphasis is actually wanted in certain passages in which, in Miss Litton's delivery, it is not present—as, for instance, where Peggy, who is an Ophelia for the nonce, answers to the remonstrance and warning of her guardian, who is a Polonius or a Laertes for the nonce, “If he loves me, why should he ruin me, for I would do him no harm—no, I shouldn't.” But much subtlety is required throughout the whole interpretation, and blame must not be given to occasional shortcoming. It is easy to be fascinating while being refined and gentle, and easy to be rough while being repulsive; but it is difficult—and yet it is the business of the actress of Peggy—to be fascinating and rough, charming and ungainly. She has likewise to show that order of simplicity and ignorance which justifies her title of “the country girl,” and that amount of awakened intelligence and mutinous enjoyment in life which makes her something beyond a country girl—a girl who by no means considers herself as “surfeited with pleasure” because, having been in town a fortnight, she has once walked abroad.

But it does not do to analyse too curiously—to carry one's analysis to the verge of anatomy—when one is concerned with a character thought out in the study, but executed with a view to its effect at the theatre. The character of Peggy, as Wycherley imagined and wrought her, as Garrick amended her, as Mr. Bannister has left her, and as Miss Litton rightly acts her, is not in truth a very consistent whole. She is not quite true to herself. She breaks down under analysis. She is more inconsistent than most of us are. She is the character of a comedian, and not the character of a poet. She is like most of Wycherley's characters in this respect, and like most of the characters of the men of his time, for the creators of these characters lived at the theatre, and it was of the requirements of the theatre that they chiefly thought. Hence, I suppose, their studied brightness of dialogue; their brilliantly polished witticisms, which even Sheridan did but just surpass; their sharply contrasted dramatis personae; their study of the fashions of the day rather than of the attributes of humankind. In some few of the later eighteenth-century dramatists the same tendencies are to be seen; in some cases the dramatist who lives at the theatre is theatrical at one time, and at another more genuinely dramatic. Thus it was, I think, with Goldsmith, with his two comedies of She Stoops to Conquer and The Good Natured Man. The one is the better acting; the other the better reading. She Stoops to Conquer, with Miss Hardcastle playing barmaid, is a success at the theatre whenever it is produced; The Good Natured Man is hardly produced at all, for, though Croaker is effective, the gentle Miss Richland is too true to the lines of actual life to be sharply drawn and fitted for the stage. On the stage—except, perhaps, in our very highest drama—a character must be presented not quite as it is. Il faut être vrai; but, as the French actor's pregnant word has often told us, not vrai as he would be in his home, but vrai in relation to the optique du théâtre.

But this takes us far from The Country Girl.

After Miss Litton's part, which makes by far the greatest demand upon the performer, the best played—and it was played with right uniformity, of gloominess—was that of Mr. Moody by Mr. William Farren. His discontent, his intriguing selfishness, were represented as entirely to be laughed at, and, though the Daily News tells us in its interesting notice that once at least on the French stage this method has been departed from—in representing, as an object of pity and sympathy, this middle-aged lover, whom Wycherley borrowed from Molière—there cannot be a doubt but that the proper method is the one that is more generally adopted. The whole tone of the piece forbids the exercise of our sensibilities on behalf of Mr. Moody or Mr. Moody's French forerunner. Of the remaining players—Mr. Everill, Mr. Edgar, Mr. J. T. Stephens, Miss Helen Cresswell, and Miss Maria Harris—there is not much to be said. They gave useful help, but brought little individuality to the performance of their task. If Miss Harris was the most lively, it must perhaps be remembered that her part is the most telling. There is always approval for that purely stage creation—the venal but attractive waiting-maid. Miss Cresswell was too weighty for Althea. The stage management was excellent, and the most was made of the scene in St. James's Park, where real children are feeding unreal swans. As, by Garrick's alterations, the action of the play is shifted from the period of the Restoration to that of George the Third, there is nothing inappropriate in the Park scene faintly recalling The Mall of Gainsborough.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

SEVERAL changes are announced in the play-bills as forthcoming. At the Haymarket Masks and Faces, by Charles Reade and Tom Taylor, is to be revived. It will be remembered that a revival of this piece took place at the Prince of Wales's Theatre four or five years ago, when Mr. Bancroft successfully sustained the part of Triplet, which Benjamin Webster had created, and Mrs. Bancroft played with brightness and naturalness in the part of Peg Woffington, which had been associated with Mrs. Stirling. Miss Ellen Terry was entirely successful as Mabel Vane. It is to be presumed that Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft will resume the characters they played on that occasion.

MR. EDWIN BOOTH has decided to alternate the performance of Othello with that of Iago at the Princess's Theatre, Mr. Forrester having been engaged to do the same. Miss Gerard, we believe, will be the Desdemona.

MORE than one actor of merit has died very recently. The death of Mrs. Fitzwilliam—who for many years was a most useful member of the old Haymarket company—has followed upon that of Mr. J. D. Stoyte, a useful actor of burlesque and low comedy.

It may be of interest to our readers to know—in confirmation of what was said in this journal last week as to the excellence of the scenic arrangements in Mr. Tennyson's new piece—that Mr. Irving as manager, and Mr. Hawes Craven as scene-painter, had the aid of the designs and the counsels both of Mr. James Knowles and of Mr. A. S. Murray.

THE dangerous illness of Mrs. Bateman, whom Dr. Andrew Clark has, we understand, been attending for inflammation of the lungs, causes, as will readily be believed, anxiety to a large circle.

WE are compelled to defer till next week a notice of Mr. Pinero's new drama, The Money-Spinner, at the St. James's; only saying now that, notwithstanding what appears to be a plentiful lack of virtue on the part of the principal character, the piece is so adroitly constructed by Mr. Pinero, and the principal character so powerfully represented by Mrs. Kendal, that the erring Millicent Boycott is enabled to evoke the sympathy of the house. Mr. Clayton, Mr. Kendal, and Mr. Hare render good service. Mrs. Kendal's performance in A Sheep in Wolf's Clothing is not quite so decidedly successful as is her appearance in The Money-Spinner. We reserve details.

MUSIC.

SATURDAY AND MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE first concert after Christmas took place on January 3. The programme commenced with Anton Dvorak's quartet in E flat (op. 51), first introduced on December 18, 1880. We are still of opinion that the first two movements are the best of the four. Mr. Eugene d'Albert was the pianist, and played Mendelssohn's prelude and fugue in E minor. We cannot say that his performance of this work was altogether satisfactory; his intentions throughout were good, but his playing at times was lacking in delicacy and clearness. He was well received, and played as encore Chopin's Etude in C sharp minor from op. 25. Mme. Norman-Néruda gave a fine rendering of Handel's sonata in D major. The concert concluded with Beethoven's trio (op. 70).

On the following Saturday, Mr. d'Albert was again the pianist, and gave a really good performance of Beethoven's grand sonata in A (op. 101). This is by no means an easy work, but the youthful pianist's reading of it was most intelligent; he particularly distinguished himself in the first two movements. For an encore he played a Lied of Mendelssohn. The programme commenced with this composer's quartet in E flat (op. 12) and concluded with a pianoforte trio by Mozart. Signor Piatti played in his best style a Largo by Boccherini.

Last Monday (January 10) Mdle. Marie Krebs was the pianist, and chose for her solo Beethoven's sonata in C (op. 53). It is impossible to hear this lady play without admiring her firm and powerful touch, and also her excellent mechanism; but we cannot say that we were pleased with her rendering of the sonata. It was played in a somewhat exaggerated and unsatisfactory manner, more especially the rondo. Mdle. Krebs was encored, and gave an Etude of Mendelssohn from op. 104. This piece showed to advantage her fine technique, and she played it with great neatness and brilliancy. We have mentioned the “pianoforte” encores of the last three concerts. Mdle. Janotha always accepted them, and now they seem to have become an established rule. Surely the system of encores ought not for many good reasons to be encouraged, and Mr. Arthur Chappell could well afford to show disapproval of such a bad practice. We would note a very fine performance of Mozart's stringed quintet in G minor, and we would also refer briefly to the very excellent and artistic playing of Mdme. Norman-Néruda at all the concerts mentioned. The programme concluded with Beethoven's serenade trio (op. 8).

Dvorak's quartet is the only real novelty that has been performed this season at the Popular Concerts.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

THEATRES.

D R U R Y L A N E.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Grand Comic Pantomime, written by E. L. BLANCHARD,
MOTHER GOOSE.

Musio by F. Wallerstein.
Misses Kate Sanley, Ada Blanche, Little Adèle Blanche, Emma D'Auban, Agnes Hewitt, Carrie Goss, Marian D'Auban, Brashara, De Vera, Prager, Hagway, Hogarth, Howard, Farquhar, and Louisa Payne; Messrs. Arthur
Roberts, John D'Auban, James Fawc, Mark Kingsford, Charles Ross, Frank Wyatt, John Ridley, W. Waite, Storey, Culley, Abrahams, Bradford, and the celebrated Julian Girard.

F O L L Y T H E A T R E.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
To-night, at 7.30, HESTER PATELY.
At 8.15, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON,
THE UPPER CRUST.
Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Gorden, G. Shelton, and E. D.
Ward; Misses Lillian Cavalier, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorpe.
At 10.15, a new and original Comedy, by HENRY J. BYRON,
THE LIGHT FANTASY.
Mr. SAMUEL SLITHERY, of the Hall of Terpsichore, Old Kent-road—
Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to 5s. 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

G L O B E T H E A T R E.

Under the direction of Mr. ALEX. HENDERSON.
Every evening, at 8.30, a new and original Opera Comique, entitled LES MOUSQUETAIRES.
Composed by LOUIS VARNAY, produced under the direction of Mr. H. B.
FARNIE, with the following company—Messrs. H. Dray, Harry Paulton,
C. Ashford, E. Stepan, Lewis, and F. H. Coll; Madames Alice May, Elsie Moore, Dayle, and M. Taylor. Conductor, Mr. Hillier.
Preceded, at 7.15, by DUTCH METAL.
Box-office open daily from 11 till 5. Doors open at 6.45. Carriages at 11.
Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

L Y C E U M T H E A T R E.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HENRY IRVING.
THE CUR.
THE CORSIAN BROTHERS.
At 7.45, ALFREDO TENNISON'S Tragedy, in two acts,
THE CUR,
Miss ELLEN TERRY—Mr. IRVING—Mr. TERRISS.
At 9.30, THE CORSIAN BROTHERS.
Mr. IRVING as LOUIS and FABIAN DEI FRANCHI.
Doors open at 7.15. Box-office (Mr. HIRST) open from 10 to 5 daily.
Seats booked by letter or telegram.
FIRST MORNING PERFORMANCE OF THE CUR, SATURDAY NEXT,
JANUARY 22ND. Preceded by DAISY'S ESCAPE, at 2.
Stage Manager, Mr. H. J. LOVEDAY. Acting Manager, Mr. BRAM STOKER.

N E W S A D L E R ' S W E L L S.

(200 yards from the Angel).
Proprietor and Manager, Mrs. S. F. HATMAN.
Engagement, for a limited term, of Mr. CHARLES WARNER and Mr.
HIMMANN VEZIN.
To-night, at 8, will be presented SHERIDAN'S Comedy,
THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL,
With the following Cast—
SIR PETER TEAZLE—Mr. HEBMANN VEZIN.
CHARLES SURFACE—Mr. CHARLES WARNER.
JOSEPH SURFACE—Mr. E. H. BROOKE.
LADY TEAZLE—Miss VIRGINIA F. BATEMAN.
Crabtree—Mr. William Farren; Sir Oliver—Mr. Edmund Lyons; Sir Benjamin—Mr. H. Buckstone; Moses—Mr. A. Wood; Trip—Mr. Walter Brooks; Caddy—Mr. Winstone.
Lady Sneerwell—Miss M. Bell; Mrs. Candour—Mrs. W. Sidney; Maria
—Miss Hilda Hilton.
The original Prologue written by GARRICK will be spoken
Prices from 1d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. No fees.

O P E R A C O M I Q U E.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'OLYLL CARTE.
THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.
A new and original Melodramatic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, every evening.
Preceded, at 8, by IN THE SOLDS.
By Messrs. FRANK DESPREZ and ALFRED COLLIER.
Messrs. G. Gossnith, Richard Temple, Richard Barrington, F. Thornton, Durward Lely, Geo. Temple; Madames Marion Hood, Ellen Shirley, Jessie
Bond, Gwynne, Barlow, and Alice Barnett. Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.
The piece produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer.

P R I N C E S S ' S T H E A T R E.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BUCH.
To-night, an English version of P. GLACOMETTI'S great Italian Play, "La Morte Civile," called A NEW TRIAL.
Mr. COGILAN as CORKADO.
Preceded, at 7.45, by IN HONOUR BOUND.
Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

P R I N C E S S ' S T H E A T R E.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOUCH.
NOTICE.—OTHELLO will be produced on MONDAY, JANUARY 17.
Mr. EDWIN BOOTH will alternate the characters of OTHELLO and IAGO. MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, and FRIDAYS—OTHELLO; TUES-DAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS—IAGO.
Mr. HENRY FORESTER has been specially engaged to support Mr.
Edwin Booth.
Seats may now be booked.
RE-ENGAGEMENT of Mr. EDWIN BOOTH to continue his REPRE-SENTATIONS at the PRINCESS'S THEATRE until the 26th of MARCH NEXT. During this new engagement Mr. Booth will appear in a round of his most popular roles, and will be supported by a specially selected company.

R O Y A L T Y T H E A T R E.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.
This evening, at 6.45, THE SECRET.
At 7.30, BOW BELLS.
To conclude, at 9.30, with DUN JUAN JUNIOR.
Madames Kate Lawler, Brennan, Rita, Dora Vivian, Crawford, Lavender, Carlin, Ward, and Annie Lawler; Messrs. Edgerton, Cooper, Kelsey, S. Dallas, and I. P. Haynes. Powerful chorus.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

B I R K B E C K B A N K,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.
Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, an interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.
The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.
The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.
Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
1st March, 1880. FRANCIS RAYNES-CROFT, Manager.

NEW NOVEL.
BOUND BY THE LAW.

BY HELEN WESCHÉ.

"Narrates the slow, but finally successful, struggle undergone by a man who has to win the affections of his wife."—Athenæum.
"Clever and right-hearted."—Daily Telegraph.
"There is both interest and novelty. The author has given us a new moral situation."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"The plot is interesting and well worked out, and several of the scenes are really powerful."—London Figure.
At all Libraries.

London: ELLISSEN & Co., 10, Type-street, Finsbury, E.C.

BOOK AND MAGAZINE PRINTING.—

UNWIN BRO'S., the Printers of six-and-twenty various Serial Publications, furnish estimates on application. They have large premises both in London and Chilworth, Stereotype Foundry, and every Modern Appliance for the production of High-class work in Modern or Old Style.—
Address, 109A, Cannon-street, E.C. Telephonic communication with upwards of 700 Firms.

THE GROSVENOR
GALLERY.

"THE BEST SELECTIONS OF THE BEST GROWTHS."
WILLS' CIGARETTES.

SOLD BY ALL PRINCIPAL DEALERS.
Every Genuine Cigarette bears the name of

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL, ALBERT EMBANKMENT, LONDON, S.E.—The Winter
Session commences on October 1, and the Summer on May 1. Students can enter at either Session. Two open entrance Scholarships of £100 and £80 for 1st Year's Students are awarded in October. In addition to ordinary prizes amounting to £200, the following Scholarships, Medals, &c., are given, viz.:—The "William Pitt" Scholarship, £30; College Scholarship, 40 Guineas a-year for two years; "Musgrave" Scholarship, of same value;
"Solly" Medal and Prize; "Cheselden" Medal; "Mead" Medal; Treasurer's Gold Medal; "Grainger" Prize, &c. Special Classes for Matriculation, Preliminary Scientific, and 1st M.B. of University of London, and Private Classes for other Examinations. There are numerous Hospital appointments open to Students without charge. For Prospectus and particulars apply to Dr. GILLIES, Secretary.

L I T H O G R A P H Y.—GOW, BUTTER-

FIELD, & CO. (late Butterfield & Mason) are prepared to execute first-class WORK in FACSIMILES of Oil Paintings and Water-Colours, Book Illustrations, Show-Cards, and Trade Emblems.—Specimens may be seen at their Works, Bowling Green-lane Buildings, Farringdon-road, E.C.

WINTER EXHIBITION.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY
EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AND
DECORATIVE DESIGNS, BY LIVING ARTISTS,
NOW OPEN DAILY, 10 to 6.

Admission, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

W. D. & H. O. WILLS.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S
COCOA

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."
Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.
"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."
W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.
"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."
CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JANUARY contains—Mr. Pepys the Musician, by Dr. Hueffer—The Father of the Symphony—The Great Composers: Schubert—Musical Changes, by H. C. Lunn—The Leeds Festival—Crystal Palace, Monday Popular, and Brighton Aquarium Concerts—Reviews—Occasional Notes—Foreign and Country News—Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JANUARY

contains—"The Watchword": a New Part-Song, by CRO PINCKET.
Price, separately, 1d.
London: NOVELLO, EWER, & Co., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81,
Queen-street, E.C.

MESSRS. WYMAN & SONS, Printers

and Publishers, invite attention to the facilities offered by their Establishment for the COMPLETE PRODUCTION OF BOOKS of every description, all Departments of the Business being carried on under the immediate Personal Superintendence of the Firm. Inclusive Estimates promptly forwarded, and liberal arrangements made with Authors for the publication of their MSS., whether Scientific, Artistic, or Works of Fiction.
—WYMAN & SONS, 74 and 75, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn, London, W.C.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
Strengthens the Nerves and Arterial System.
Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, crowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPEK, 137, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 6d. and 1s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHURCH CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.
Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.
Insurances effected in all parts of the world.
JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

STEPHENS DRAWING INK.

For Architectural Drawing and Artists' use.
Does not require stirring while in use.
Dries quickly, flows evenly from the pen, and becomes an insoluble colour when dry. Drawings executed with it can be washed without fear of injury. The most delicate Drawing Pens used with this Ink are not impaired by corrosion. On the contrary, instruments left with the ink to dry on them are preserved as with a lacquer.
Sold in Bottles 6d. and 2s. each.
Can be procured through any Stationer.
H. C. STEPHENS, 191, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

FURNISH YOUR HOUSES OR APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal.
Cash prices.
No extra charge for time given.
Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21,
Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from 26 6s. to 50 guineas.
Drawing-room Suites, from 19 6s. to 45 guineas.
Dining-room Suites, from 17 6s. to 40 guineas.
And all other goods in great variety.
F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21,
Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones.
Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache,
Gout, and Indigestion,
And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies,
Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST OF SCHOOL AND COLLEGE BOOKS.

"Such manuals, so admirable in matter, arrangement, and type, were never before given to the world at the same moderate prices."—Spectator.

ENGLISH.

- By O. W. TANCOCK, M.A., Head Master of Norwich School.
An Elementary English Grammar and Exercise Book. 1s. 6d.
An English Grammar and Reading Book, for LOWER FORMS to CLASSICAL SCHOOLS. 3s. 6d.
Marlowe. Edward II. With Introduction, Notes, &c. 2s.
 By JOHN EARLE, M.A., Professor of Anglo-Saxon, Oxford.
A Book for the Beginner in Anglo-Saxon. 2s. 6d.
The Philology of the English Tongue. 7s. 6d.
 Edited by WALTER W. SKEAT, M.A., Professor of Anglo-Saxon, Cambridge.
Specimens of English Literature, from the "Penguinius Credo" to the "Shepherd's Calendar." 7s. 6d.
The Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman, by WILLIAM LANGLAND. 4s. 6d.
Chaucer. The Prioresse's Tale; Sir Thopas; The Monkes Tale; The Clerkes Tale; The Squires Tale, &c. 4s. 6d.
Chaucer. The Tale of the Man of Lawe; The Pardouners Tale; The Second Nonnes Tale; The Chaucers Yeman's Tale. 4s. 6d.
Specimens of Early English. By MORRIS and SKEAT. 7s. 6d.
An Anglo-Saxon Reader. In Prose and Verse. Edited by H. SWEET, M.A. 8s. 6d.
Old English Drama. Marlowe's Tragical History of Dr. Faustus, and Greene's Honourable History of Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay. Edited by A. W. WARD, M.A. 5s. 6d.
Shakespeare. Select Plays. Edited by W. G. CLARK, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; and W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge.
 THE MERCHANT OF VENICE, 1s. RICHARD THE SECOND, 1s. 6d. MACBETH, 1s. 6d. HAMLET, 2s. THE TEMPEST, 1s. 6d. KING LEAR, 1s. 6d. AS YOU LIKE IT, 1s. 6d. A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, 1s. 6d. JULIUS CAESAR, 2s. COMOLANUS, 2s. 6d. RICHARD THE THIRD, 2s. 6d.
Milton. Areopagitica. Edited by J. W. HALES, M.A. 3s.
Milton. Poems. Edited by R. C. BROWNE, M.A. 2 vols. 6s. 6d. Vol. I, 4s.; Vol. II, 3s.
Addison. Selections from. Edited by T. ARNOLD, M.A. 4s. 6d.
Chaucer. The Prologue to the Canterbury Tales; The Knights Tale; The Nonnes Preestes Tale. Edited by R. MORRIS, LL.D. 2s. 6d.
Spencer's Faery Queene. Books I. and II. Edited by J. W. KITCHIN, M.A. Each 2s. 6d.
Hooker. Ecclesiastical Polity. Book I. Edited by DEAN CHURCH, 2s.
Bacon's Advancement of Learning. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A. 4s. 6d.
Dryden. Select Poems. Edited by W. D. CHRISTIE, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Pope. Edited by MARK PATTISON, B.D.
 ESSAY on MAN. 1s. 6d. SATIRES and EPISTLES. 2s.
Johnson. Select Works. Lives of Dryden and Pope, and Rasselas. Edited by A. MILNES, B.A. 4s. 6d.
Cowper. Edited by H. T. GRIFFITH, B.A. 2 vols., Each 3s.
Typical Selections from the Best English Writers. With Introductory Notices and Notes. In 2 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

Edited by E. J. PAYNE, M.A.

- Burke. Four Letters on the Proposals for Peace with the Regicide Directory of France. 5s.
 THOUGHTS on the PRESENT DISCONTENTS: the two Speeches on America. 4s. 6d.
 REFLECTIONS on the FRENCH REVOLUTION. 5s.

LATIN.

- Allen's Latin Grammar. 2s. 6d.
Allen's Latin Exercise Book. 2s. 6d.
Nunn's Latin Reader. 2s.
Caesar. The Commentaries. With Notes, Maps, &c. By C. E. MOHRLEY, M.A. The GALLIC WAR, 4s. 6d. The CIVIL WAR, 3s. 6d. The CIVIL WAR, Book I, 2s.
Cornelius Nepos. With English Notes. By OSCAR BROWNING, M.A. 2s. 6d.

LATIN—continued.

- Cicero.—Selection of Interesting and DESCRIPTIVE PASSAGES. With Notes. By H. WALFORD, M.A. 4s. 6d. Also in Three Parts, 1s. 6d. each.
Selected Letters. With Notes. By C. E. PRICHARD, M.A., and E. R. BERNARD, M.A. 3s.
Select Orations. With Notes. By J. R. KINO, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Select Letters. With Introductions, Notes, and Appendices. By A. WATSON, M.A. 1s.
Select Letters (Text). By the Same Editor. 4s.
Philippic Orations. With English Notes. By J. R. KINO, M.A. 16s. 6d.
Pro Cluentio. With Introduction and English Notes. By W. RAMSAY, M.A. Edited by G. G. RAMSAY, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Pliny. Selected Letters. By PRICHARD and BERNARD. 3s.
Livy. Selections. With Notes and Maps. By H. LEE-WARNER, M.A. In Three Parts, 1s. 6d. each.
Books I.-X. By Prof. SEELEY, M.A. Book I, 6s.
Catulli Veronensis Carmina Selecta, secundum Recognitionem ROBINSON ELLIS, A.M. 3s. 6d.
Horace. With Introductions and Notes. By EDWARD C. WICKHAM, M.A. Vol. I. The ODES, CARMEN SECLARE, and EPODES. 8vo, 12s.
Ovid. Selections. With Introductions and Notes. By W. RAMSAY, M.A. Edited by G. G. RAMSAY, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Persius. The Satires. With a Translation and Commentary. By Prof. CONINGTON. Edited by H. NETTLESHIP, M.A. 7s. 6d.
The Roman Poets of the Augustan Age.—VIRGIL. By Prof. W. Y. SELLAR, M.A. 1s.
Selections from the less known Latin Poets. By NORTH PINDELL, M.A. 15s.
Fragments and Specimens of Early Latin. Edited by J. WORDSWORTH, M.A. 1s.
Passages for Translation into Latin. Selected by I. Y. SARGENT, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Anglice Reddenda; or, Easy Extracts for Unseen Translation. By C. S. JERRAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.
A Manual of Comparative Philology. By T. L. PAIBLON, M.A. 6s.
Cicero de Oratore. Edited by A. S. WILKINS, M.A. Book I. 6s.
Vergil. Suggestions Introductory to a Study of the Aeneid. By H. NETTLESHIP, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Ancient Lives of Vergil. With an Essay. By H. NETTLESHIP, M.A. 2s.
The Roman Satura. By H. NETTLESHIP, M.A. 1s.

GREEK.

- Liddell and Scott's Greek-English Lexicon. 36s. Abridged Edition, 7s. 6d.
Wordsworth's Greek Grammar. 4s.
Wordsworth's Greek Primer in English, for the Use of Beginners. 1s. 6d.
Elements of Greek Accentuation. By H. W. CHANDLER. 2s. 6d.
Greek Verbs, Irregular and Defective: their Forms, Meaning, and Quantity. By W. VEITCH, LL.D. 10s. 6d.
First Greek Reader. By W. G. RUSHBROOKE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Second Greek Reader. By A. J. M. BELL, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Fourth Greek Reader. By W. W. MERRY, M.A. 4s. 6d.
Fifth Greek Reader. Part I. By E. ABBOTT, M.A. 4s. 6d.
Aeschylus. Prometheus Bound. With Introduction and Notes by A. O. PRICKARD, M.A. 2s.
Homer. Odyssey, I.-XII. Edited by W. W. MERRY, M.A., and J. HIBDELL, M.A. 16s.
Iliad. Book I. Edited by D. B. MONRO. 2s.
Iliad. Book XXI. Edited by HERBERT HAILSTONE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

GREEK—continued.

- Sophocles. With English Notes and Introductions. By Prof. L. CAMPBELL. Vol. I. OEDIPUS TYRANNUS, OEDIPUS REX, ANTIGONE. 16s.
The Text of the Seven Plays. By Prof. LEWIS CAMPBELL. 4s. 6d.
In Single Plays, with English Notes, &c. By Prof. CAMPBELL and E. ABBOTT, M.A. OEDIPUS REX, OEDIPUS COLONUM, ANTIGONE, 1s. 9d. each. AJAX, ELECTRA, TRACHINIAE, PHILOCTETES. 2s. each.
Theocritus. With Notes. By H. KYNASTON, M.A. 4s. 6d.
Demosthenes and Aeschines. The Orations on the CROWN. With Introductory Essays and Notes by G. A. SIMCOX, M.A., and W. H. SIMCOX, M.A. 12s.
Xenophon, Easy Selections from. With a Vocabulary, Notes, and Map. By J. S. PHILLIPOTT, B.C.L., and C. S. JERRAM, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Selections. With Notes and Maps. By J. S. PHILLIPOTT. 3s. 6d.
The Golden Treasury of Ancient Greek Poetry. By R. S. WRIGHT, M.A. 8s. 6d.
The Golden Treasury of Greek Prose. By WRIGHT and SHADWELL. 4s. 6d.
 Edited by W. W. MERRY, M.A.
Aristophanes. The Clouds, 2s. The Acharnians, 2s.
Homer. Odyssey, Books I.-XII., 4s. 6d. Book II, separately, 1s. 6d. Books XIII.-XXIV., 5s.
Herodotus. Selections from. 2s. 6d.
Cebes. Tabula. Edited by C. S. JERRAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.
Euripides. Alceis, 2s. 6d.
Lucian. Vera Historia, 1s. 6d.
Xenophon. Anabasis, Book II. 2s.

FRENCH.

- Brachet's Historical Grammar of the FRENCH LANGUAGE. Translated by G. W. KITCHIN, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Brachet's Etymological Dictionary of the FRENCH LANGUAGE, with Preface. Translated by G. W. KITCHIN, M.A. 7s. 6d.
 FRENCH CLASSICS, Edited by GUSTAVE MASSON.
Corneille's Cinna, and Moliere's Les Femmes Savantes. 2s. 6d.
Racine's Andromaque, and Corneille's LE MENTEUR. With Louis Racine's Life of his Father. 2s. 6d.
Moliere's Les Fourberies de Scapin, and Racine's Athalie. With Voltaire's Life of Moliere. 2s. 6d.
Selections from the Correspondence of MADAME de SEVIGNE and her chief CONTEMPORARIES. 3s.
Voyage autour de ma Chambre. By XAVIER DE MAISTRE. "Ourika," by Madame D. Duras; "La Dot de Suzette," by Fleury; "Les Jumeaux de l'Hôtel Corneille," by Edmond About; "Mésaventures d'un Ecclésiastique," by Rodolphe Töpffer. 2s. 6d.
Regnard's Le Joueur, and Bruey's and PALAPRAT'S LE GRONDEUR. 2s. 6d.
Louis XIV. and his Contemporaries. 2s. 6d.

GERMAN.

LANGES GERMAN COURSE.

- The Germans at Home: a Practical Introduction to German Conversation. 2s. 6d.
The German Manual: a German Grammar, a Reading Book, and a Handbook of German Conversation. 7s. 6d.
A Grammar of the German Language. 3s. 6d.
Lessing's Laokoon. Edited, with English Notes, &c., by A. RAMANN, Phil. Doc., M.A. 4s. 6d.
Wilhelm Tell: a Drama. By SCHILLER. Translated into English Verse by E. MASSIE, M.A. 5s.
 Edited by C. A. RECHHEIM, Phil. Doc. Professor in King's College, London.
Goethe's Egmont. With a Life of Goethe, INTRODUCTION, ARGUMENTS, and COMMENTARY. 3s.
Schiller's Wilhelm Tell. With a Life of SCHILLER, INTRODUCTION, ARGUMENTS, and COMMENTARY. 3s. 6d.
Lessing's Minna von Barnhelm. With a LIFE of LESSING, ANALYSIS, COMMENTARY, &c. 3s. 6d.

A complete List of the Clarendon Press Series will be sent on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, 7, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 455.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MESSRS. C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Post 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

PROGRESS and POVERTY: an Enquiry into the Cause of Industrial Depressions and of Increase of Want with Increase of Wealth. The Remedy. By HENRY GEORGE.

"Mr. George's work calls for notice not only on account of its ability, and because it contains internal evidence of being a product of the economic history of California, but because also of the magnitude of the problem it propounds and the nature of the solution it proposes."—Professor T. E. CLIFFE LESLIE, in the Fortnightly Review.
"The chapter describing the manner in which civilisation is exposed to danger through the increase of the inequality of wealth is powerful, graphic, and instructive."—Economist.
"The value of Mr. George's book lies in the presentation of views derived from the peculiar facts of American industrial and social organisation—views which may lead thoughtful European economists to modify the generality of their own conclusions rather than to adopt Mr. George's."—Saturday Review.
[English Edition next week.]

Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE NEW PLAYGROUND; or, Wanderings in Algeria. By ALEXANDER A. KNOX.

"This brilliant and delightful volume. . . . Mr. Knox's pen, we rejoice to find, has not lost its cunning; it has all its old freshness and vigour, and among the multitude of books of travel we know nothing to compare with 'The New Playground' in felicity and charm of style."—Daily News.
"A bright and sunny book about a bright and sunny land. . . . There is hardly a page in the whole volume altogether without interest of one sort or another."—St. James's Gazette.

With Twenty-nine full-page Illustrations and Numerous Sketches, square 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

DECORATION and FURNITURE of TOWN HOUSES: a Series of Cantor Lectures delivered before the Society of Arts, 1880. Amplified and Enlarged. By ROBERT W. EDIS, F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A., Architect.

2 vols., fcap. 4to, cloth, price 50s.

THE BOKE NAMED the GOUVERNEUR. Devised by Sir THOMAS ELYOT, Knight. Edited, from the First Edition of 1531, by HENRY HERBERT STEPHEN CROFT, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. With Portraits of Sir Thomas and Lady Elyot, copied by permission of Her Majesty from Holbein's Original Drawings at Windsor Castle.

"A perfect mine of anecdote, of facts, and of learning. . . . Will be absolutely indispensable to any student who occupies himself with the revival of learning in England."—Daily News.
"A masterpiece of printing and a beautiful book, for which both the editor and the publishers deserve hearty praise. . . . 'The Gouverneur' in its new form will be warmly welcomed by readers who care for the study of English manners, of English learning, and of our language itself, as they existed at the high tide of the revival of letters in 1531."—Pall Mall Gazette.

3 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 42s.

The Ingenious Knight DON QUIXOTE de la MANCHA. Composed by MIGUEL DE CERVANTES SAAVEDRA.

Translated from the Original by A. J. DUFFIELD. With Notes.
"We have no version so careful as Mr. Duffield's."—Daily News.
"I can confidently recommend, as soothing to the nerves and wholesome to the heart and the understanding, the perusal of a few chapters of 'Don Quixote,' either in the incomparable Spanish of the incomparable author, or in the English of Mr. Duffield's excellent new translation."—Truth.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

GENERAL PHYSIOLOGY of MUSCLES and NERVES. By Prof. J. ROSENTHAL. With Seventy-five Illustrations.

 Vol. XXXII. of the INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

THE NATURAL CONDITIONS of EXISTENCE as they AFFECT ANIMAL LIFE. By KARL SEMPER. With 108 Illustrations.

 Vol. XXXI. of the INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

2 vols., with Frontispieces, demy 8vo, cloth, price 24s.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of OGIER GHISELIN de BUSBECQ, Seigneur of Bousbecque, Knight, Imperial Ambassador. By CHARLES THORNTON FORSTER, M.A., and F. H. BLACKBURN DANIELL, M.A.

With Ten Illustrations and Two Maps, demy 8vo, cloth, price 16s.

A POLAR RECONNAISSANCE: being the Voyage of the Isbjörn to Novaya Zemlya in 1879. By Captain A. H. MARKHAM, R.N., Author of "The Great Frozen Sea," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

A YEAR'S MEDITATIONS. By MRS. CRAVEN, Author of "Récit d'une Sœur," "Fleurange," &c.

Translated from the French.

2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, price 25s.

THE PROPHECIES of ISAIAH. Translated, with Critical Notes and Dissertations, by the Rev. T. K. CHEYNE.

NOTICES OF VOLUME I.

"Durchaus selbständig und von wissenschaftlichem Werth."—Dr. GUTH, in Schürer's Literaturzeitung.
"Nowhere does he tread along the beaten tracks. His aim is to open new paths for himself, and it is always interesting to accompany him in his pursuit of truth. . . . I have seldom found myself so attracted by any exegetical work as by the volume at present before me."—Prof. DELITZSCH, in the Academy.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

JEWISH LIFE in the EAST. By SYDNEY MONTAGU SAMUEL.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

ETHELSTONE, EVELINE, and other POEMS; or, Legends of the Castle, and Tales of the Village, &c. By MRS. HORACE DOBELL, Author of "Versus a Woman pro Women, a Man's Thoughts about Men," &c.

Large post 8vo, parchment antique, 6s.

MARY MAGDALENE: a Poem. By MRS. RICHARD GREENOUGH.

"Mrs. Greenough has dealt with a difficult subject well, and has given us some poetry of a high order."—St. James's Gazette.
"Full of tender pathos. . . . It is a succession of word-pictures of rare grace and beauty."—Scotsman.

LONDON: C. KEGAN PAUL & CO., 1, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
REYDS DAVIDS'S BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES, by W. R. S. RALSTON	53
LADY EASTLARK'S MRS. GROTE: A SKETCH, by EDITH SIMCOX	54
GILL'S HISTORICAL SKETCHES OF SAVAGE LIFE IN POLYNESIA, by Prof. A. H. SAYCE	55
STURTEVANT'S ECONOMICS; OR, THE SCIENCE OF WEALTH, by T. E. CLIFFE LESLIE	55
NEW NOVELS, by E. PURCELL	56
CURRENT THEOLOGY	57
NOTES AND NEWS	59
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	60
NEW ITALIAN BOOKS, by M ^{me} . VILLARI	60
SELECTED BOOKS	62
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Roman Wall, by Prof. John W. Hales; Mr. Steinburne's "Studies in Song," by Prof. E. Dowden and F. J. Furnivall; The Buddhist "Noble Path," by Dr. O. Frankfurter; The Origin of the Sonnet, by S. Waddington; "Earn" or "Brue" = to Grieve, by the Rev. Prof. Skeat and T. Bayne
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	63
POLLOCK'S SPINOZA: HIS LIFE AND PHILOSOPHY, by Prof. E. CAIRD	63
NOTES OF TRAVEL	65
SCIENCE NOTES	66
PHILOLOGY NOTES	66
ROBERTSON ON THE CRYPT OF CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL, by C. TRICE MARTIN	67
COLVIN'S EDITION OF WOLTMANN AND WORMANN'S HISTORY OF PAINTING, II., by JOHN W. BEADLEY	68
THE OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY, III., by COSMO MONKHOUSE	69
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	70
THE STAGE: MRS. BATEMAN	70
STAGE NOTES	71
RECENT MUSICAL WORKS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	71

A BINGDON SCHOOL, Berks.—The new buildings give further accommodation. BOYS are prepared in modern subjects as well as for the University, where the School has valuable Scholarships. TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS are now open to Boys entering in January. A Scholar's total expenses average £35 per annum.—Apply to Rev. E. SUMMERS, Head Master.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE.

The NEXT TERM will commence on TUESDAY, 25TH JANUARY, 1881.
F. W. MADDEN, M.A., Secretary.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS. — WARBERRY HOUSE, Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION FOR THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 90 Guineas.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Rev. C. B. DRAKE, M.A., is able to OFFER to CANDIDATES for WOOLVICH the special advantages of Residence at Cambridge. Home life. Numbers strictly limited.—Address, 12, Queen Anne-terrace.

STUDIO, with Ante-Rooms, &c., in Pembroke-place, Bayswater.—Specially built for the purpose. lofty and well lighted. £50 per annum.—Apply to E. & F. SWAIN, 82, High-street, Notting-hill, W. (7,375.)

THE SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION, including a Loan Collection of Works by the late George Dodgson, is NOW OPEN, 6, FILL MALL EAST, from 10 till 5. ALFRED D. FRIST, Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—The Exhibition of Works by the Old Masters, and by Deceased Masters of the British School, including a Collection of Drawings by John Flaxman, R.A., is now open. Open from 9 till 8. One Shilling. Catalogues Sixpence or Bound in Cloth, with pencil, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

LECTURE ARRANGEMENTS NEXT WEEK.

Professor EDWARD A. SCHAFER, F.R.S.—FIRST of TWELVE LECTURES on "THE BLOOD," on TUESDAY NEXT, JANUARY 26, at 8 P.M. One Guinea the Course.
FRANCIS HUEFFER, Esq.—FIRST of FOUR LECTURES on "THE TROUBADOURS," on THURSDAY NEXT, JANUARY 27, at 8 P.M. Half-a-Guinea.

SIR J. COLVIN, Esq., Slade Professor of Fine Art, Cambridge.—FIRST of FOUR LECTURES on "THE AMAZONS: A CHAPTER IN THE STUDY OF GREEK ART AND MYTHOLOGY," on SATURDAY NEXT, JANUARY 29, at 8 P.M. Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription for all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 4TH, at 8 P.M., Dr. ARTHUR SCHUSTER, F.R.S.—"THE TEACHINGS OF MODERN SPECTROSCOPY," at 9 P.M.
To the Friday Evening Meetings Members and their Friends only are admitted.

SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS. CLOSE NEXT WEEK.

WINTER EXHIBITION, OPEN 10 to 5 daily, at the SLITFOLK STREET GALLERIES, FILL MALL EAST. Admission 1s.
THOS. ROBERTS, Secretary.

ROYAL SOCIETY of LITERATURE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 26TH, 8 P.M.
MR. ROBERT N. CUST will read a PAPER "ON A RECENT TOUR IN SPAIN, with NOTICES of the AL-HAMRA and SPANISH CUSTOMS."
W. B. W. VAUX, Sec. R.S.L.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Hawley's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.
Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.
The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection, and is a cheap method of illustration where quantities are required.

* For Terms and Specimens apply to the Manager.
AUTOTYPE is especially adapted for REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART, possessing a wide range of monochrome expression, and reproducing with fidelity the Artist's touch.

JUST PUBLISHED on India, two sizes, 42s. and 31s. "Come unto these Yellow Sands," after the painting by Walter Field, Esq., exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1878, and the Paris Universal Exhibition, 1879. This fine Autotype combines the merits of an engraving with complete fidelity to the artist's touch, Mr. Field having produced a monochrome expressly for Autotype.

Will be ready in January, Autotype Reproductions of Twelve Drawings and Paintings by P. G. Hamerton, Esq.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY
Displays a noble Collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and many interesting examples of MODERN ART. To adorn a Home with permanent Photographic Masterpieces, examples of the greatest Masters, old and new, may be seen, by a visit to the AUTOTYPE GALLERY, to be a matter of trifling cost. Admission free.
Catalogue of the Company's Publications, 138 pages, sixpence, free by post. Gratis to Purchasers.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWTER.

TO PROPRIETORS of NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, Brief the Week's News, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether Illustrated or Plain. Estimates furnished to Projectors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

THE PRINTERS of Society, The Citizen,

Four other Newspapers, Twenty Monthly Periodicals, and other Publications possess unrivalled facilities both at London and Chiswick for the production of this class of work. Estimates furnished.—UNWIN BROTHERS, The Grosvenor Press, 109A, Cannon-street, E.C.

LITHOGRAPHY.—GOW, BUTTER-

FIELD, & CO. (late Butterfield & Mason) are prepared to execute First-class WORK in FACSIMILES of Oil Paintings and Water-Colours, Book Illustrations, Show-Cards, and Trade Emblems. Specimens may be seen at their Works, Bowling Green-lane Buildings, Farringdon-road, E.C.

BY-PATHS of LITERATURE.—CATA-

LOGUE, No. 3, LOCAL COLLECTIONS of Prints and Cuttings, with Works on Topography: including Lives, Histories, Tracts, and other Quaint Literature of the Olden Time, now ready, of A. READER, 6, Orange-street, Red Lion-square, W.C.

THE GROSVENOR
GALLERY.

WINTER EXHIBITION.
THE GROSVENOR GALLERY
EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AND
DECORATIVE DESIGNS, BY LIVING ARTISTS,
NOW OPEN DAILY, 10 to 6.
Admission, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 14s.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT WITHIN HISTORIC TIMES;

With Some Account of British Wild White Cattle.

By J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S.

With Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, and others. A few copies, printed on large paper, can be had at 31s. 6d.

LONDON: TRUBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

Just published. Size, 5 feet 8 inches by 4 feet 6 inches.

PHILIPS' NEW MAP OF MIDDLESEX,

Including large portions of SURREY, KENT, ESSEX, &c., showing clearly the Parliamentary Boroughs, Hundreds, and Parishes; also the Railways, brought down to the present date, with their Stations distinctly marked. Carefully reduced from the Six-inch Ordnance Survey to the Scale of Two Inches to One Mile.

By JOHN BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S.

PRICES—On Four Sheets, 18s.; mounted on Black Rollers and Varnished, or in Case, £1 1s.; mounted on Mahogany Rollers and Varnished, £1 5s.

LONDON: GEORGE PHILIP & SON, 32, FLEET STREET; AND LIVERPOOL.

No. XXII. Price Six Shillings.

THE

CHURCH QUARTERLY REVIEW

For JANUARY, 1881.

CONTENTS.

1. M. RENAN'S LONDON LECTURES.
2. METTERNICH.
3. THE APOCRYPHA.
4. DARNEVELD and GROTIUS—ERASTIANISM.
5. SPENCER'S DATA of ETHICS.
6. MISSION and JURISDICTION: the Primitive Rule and the Roman Usurpation.
7. PARLIAMENTARY OATHS and AFFIRMATIONS.
8. ON THE ANTIQUITY of our HOMER.
9. UODGKIN'S "ITALY and her INVADERS."
10. THE LAW of ECCLESIASTICAL DILAPIDATIONS, its WRONG and REMEDY.
- SHORT NOTICES.
- THE RETROSPECT of 1880.

London: SPOTTISWOODE & CO., New-street-square.

This day is published, in 1 vol., price 4s.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY CALEN-

DAR for 1881. Also, price 4s., DUBLIN EXAMINATION PAPERS being a Supplement to the University Calendar for 1881.
London: LONOMANS & CO. Dublin: HODGES, FROGGS, & CO.

CATES'S BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY.

New Edition, 8vo, pp. 3,492, price 28s., cloth; or price 35s., half-bound in Russia.

A DICTIONARY of GENERAL BIO-
GRAPHY. By WILLIAM L. R. CATES. Third Edition, Revised throughout and Completed to the Present Time; with the Supplement of 1875 incorporated, and now matter equal to One Hundred Pages, comprising nearly Four Hundred Memoirs and Notices of Persons recently deceased.
London: LONOMANS & CO.

Just published, in Monthly Parts, 4to, at 1s. each.

LE ROMAN des FAMILLES (French Family Paper) Containing a choice Collection of the best Modern French Novels. Edited by M. O. VAN MUDEN. Quarterly Subscription, 3s. 6d., post-free.

The three Parts published contain "Le Moulin Frappier," by M. Henri Gréville; and a charming Drawing-room Comedy, by M. E. Legouvé, "L'Agrement d'être Laide;" and the forthcoming Parts will contain entirely New Novels by Ferdinand Fabre, Gabriel Ferry, and Alphonse Daudet.

All the Novels of this Series are here published for the first time.
London: ASHER & CO., 13, Bedford-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

Now ready.

FREE CHURCH SERVICES.

FOR MARRIAGES, BURIALS, BAPTISMS, AND THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Adapted, from the Book of Common Prayer, for Nonconforming Congregations.

Crown 8vo, price 2s.

London: S. BAOSTER & FOX, 15, Paternoster-row.

SELECTIONS FROM EDUCATIONAL WORKS AND STUDENTS' MANUALS

Published by CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO.

PROFESSOR MORLEY'S ENGLISH LITERATURE (A First Sketch of).

By Prof. HENRY MORLEY. 912 pp., crown 8vo, cloth. Seventh and Cheap Edition. 7s. 6d.

"Full of admirable matter carefully and consecutively arranged."—Spectator.

MARLBOROUGH FRENCH GRAMMAR (The). Enlarged and Revised.

Arranged and Compiled by Rev. J. F. BRIGHT, M.A. Fourteenth Edition. 2s. 6d.

MARLBOROUGH FRENCH EXERCISES (The). Enlarged and

Revised. Eighth Edition. By the Rev. G. W. DE LISLE, M.A. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

MARLBOROUGH GERMAN GRAMMAR (The). Third Edition,

Revised. Compiled and Arranged by Rev. J. F. BRIGHT, M.A. 3s. 6d.

FRENCH (CASSELL'S LESSONS in). Entirely New and Revised

Edition. Corrected according to the Seventh Edition (1877) of the Dictionary of the French Academy, and considerably Enlarged by Prof. E. ROUBAUD, B.A., Paris. 101st Thousand. Parts I. and II., cloth, each 2s. 6d.; complete, 4s. 6d.—KEY, 1s. 6d.

FRENCH-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-FRENCH DICTIONARY

(CASSELL'S). Crown 8vo, 956 pp., cloth. 106th Thousand. 3s. 6d.

GERMAN-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-GERMAN PRONOUNCING

DICTIONARY (CASSELL'S). Crown 8vo, 864 pp., cloth. Thirty-Second Thousand. 3s. 6d.

LATIN-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-LATIN DICTIONARY (CASSELL'S).

Crown 8vo, 890 pp., cloth. Thirty-Fourth Thousand. 3s. 6d.

GALBRAITH and HAUGHTON'S SCIENTIFIC MANUALS. By the Rev. Prof. GALBRAITH, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, and the Rev. Prof. HAUGHTON, M.D., D.C.L., F.R.S.

ARITHMETIC. 3s. 6d.
PLANE TRIGONOMETRY. 2s. 6d.
EUCLID. Books I., II., III. 2s. 6d.
EUCLID. Books IV., V., VI. 2s. 6d.
MATHEMATICAL TABLES. 3s. 6d.
MECHANICS. 3s. 6d.
OPTICS. 2s. 6d.

HYDROSTATICS. 3s. 6d.
ASTRONOMY. 5s.
STEAM ENGINE. 3s. 6d.
ALGEBRA. Part I., cloth, 2s. 6d. Complete, 7s. 6d.
TIDES and TIDAL CURRENTS. With Tidal Card. 3s.
NATURAL PHILOSOPHY. By Professor HAUGHTON. 3s. 6d.

SPELLING (A COMPLETE MANUAL of), on the PRINCIPLES of CONTRAST and COMPARISON. Sixty-First Thousand. Price 1s. By J. D. MORELL, LL.D., H.M. Inspector of Schools.

GRAMMAR (ELEMENTS of) TAUGHT in ENGLISH. By the Rev.

EDWARD THRING, Head Master of Uppingham School. New Edition. 3s. 6d.

WATER-COLOUR PAINTING. With Coloured Plates by R. P. Leitch.

Sixth Edition. 5s.

SEPIA PAINTING (A COURSE of). With Plates by R. P. Leitch. 5s.

PAINTING in NEUTRAL TINT (A COURSE of). With Plates by

R. P. LEITCH. 5s.

DECISIVE EVENTS in HISTORY. By Thomas Archer. With Sixteen

Original Illustrations. Fifth Thousand. Extra fcap. 4to, cloth gilt, 5s.

"These events, the turning-points of history, are well told and admirably illustrated."—Educational Times.

BREWER'S DICTIONARY of PHRASE and FABLE. Twelfth and Cheap Edition. Price 3s. 6d. Containing 1,000 pages.

. This New Edition is Revised and Corrected to date, and is enlarged by the addition of a Concise Bibliography of English Literature.

ENGLISH LITERATURE (DICTIONARY of). Being a Comprehensive Guide to English Authors and their Works. By W. DAVENPORT ADAMS. Cheap Edition. 720 pages, extra fcap. 4to, cloth, 10s. 6d.

COMMENTARY for SCHOOLS. Consisting of some separate Books of the New Testament Commentary for English Readers (Edited by the LORD BISHOP of GLOUCESTER and BRISTOL), in small Volumes, Revised by their respective Authors, for School and General Educational purposes. The following Volumes are now ready, each containing a Coloured Map:—

ST. MATTHEW. 4s. 6d.
ST. MARK. 3s. 6d.
ST. LUKE. 4s. 6d.

ST. JOHN. 4s. 6d.
THE ACTS of the APOSTLES. 4s. 6d.
CORINTHIANS I. 2s.

MUSIC (An ELEMENTARY MANUAL of). By Henry Leslie. Sixth

Edition. 1s.

CASSELL'S GRADUATED COPY-BOOKS.

Adapted to the Requirements of the New Code. Printed from Copper-plate Copies, on superior paper, carefully prepared for writing purposes, and containing everything required for the formation of good handwriting.

Complete in Eighteen Books, price 2d. each, as below:—

1. STROKES and STRAIGHT LETTERS.
2. ROUND LETTERS and COMBINATIONS.
3. WORDS. SHORT LETTERS.
4. LONG LETTERS and WORDS.
5. WORDS (TEXT and ROUND) and FIGURES.
6. CAPITALS and COMBINATIONS.
7. TEXT, ROUND, and FIGURES.
8. ROUND HAND.
9. TEXT, ROUND (ADVANCED), FIGURES (SUMS).
10. ELEMENTARY SMALL HAND.
11. CAPITALS, FIGURES (SUMS), and DOUBLE SMALL HAND.
12. DOUBLE SMALL HAND.
13. ADVANCED DOUBLE SMALL HAND.
14. TEXT, ROUND, and SMALL HAND.
15. ADVANCED SMALL HAND (1).
16. ADVANCED SMALL HAND (2).
17. ADVANCED SMALL HAND (3).
18. INVOICES, RECEIPTS, &c.

ENTIRELY NEW SERIES OF

READERS AND READING SHEETS.

THE MODERN SCHOOL READERS. An entirely New Series of Readers for Elementary Schools, embodying novel and useful features, rendering them of great use to the Teacher, and of special interest to the Pupil.

	Paper.	Cloth.
FIRST INFANT READER	2d.	3d.
SECOND	2d.	3d.
THIRD	3d.	4d.
FOURTH	4d.	5d.
FIRST READER—STANDARD I.	8d.
SECOND READER .. II.	10d.
THIRD READER .. III.	1s. 3d.
FOURTH READER .. IV.	1s. 8d.
FIFTH READER .. V. & VI.	2s. 6d.

THE MODERN READING SHEETS, for Use with the Modern School Readers. In Three Series, each containing Twelve Sheets, 2s. each.

. These Readers and Reading Sheets are on the approved list of the London School Board and numerous Provincial School Boards.

LITTLE FOLKS' HISTORY of ENGLAND.

By ISA CRAIG-KNOX. With Thirty Illustrations. Sixth Edition. 1s. 6d.

EUCLID, CASSELL'S. Edited by Prof.

WALLACE, A.M. Stiff Covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

ALGEBRA, The ELEMENTS of. Thirteenth

Thousand. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

VILLAGE SCHOOL SONGS. Collected by AGNES C. WICKHAM. Fifty Selected Pieces, set to Music. Fourth Edition. 6d.

TECHNICAL MANUALS, CASSELL'S.

Illustrated throughout with Drawings and Working Diagrams. Bound in cloth.

- BUILDING CONSTRUCTION. 2s.
LINEAR DRAWING and PRACTICAL GEOMETRY. 2s.
MODEL DRAWING. 3s.
ORTHOGRAPHICAL and ISOMETRICAL PROJECTION. 2s.
PRACTICAL PERSPECTIVE. 3s.
APPLIED MECHANICS. By Prof. R. S. BALL, LL.D. Cloth, 2s.
COLOUR. By Prof. CHURCH, M.A. With Coloured Plates, 2s. 6d.
SYSTEMATIC DRAWING and SHADING. By CHARLES RYAN. 2s.

A CATALOGUE of CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN & CO.'S EDUCATIONAL WORKS will be forwarded post-free on application.

LONDON: CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN, & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S TEXT-BOOKS FOR STUDENTS.

SCIENTIFIC AND MATHEMATICAL.

A TREATISE on COMPARATIVE EMBRY-
OLOGY. By F. M. BALFOUR, M.A., F.R.S. 2 vols., 8vo, with Illustrations. Vol. I., 18s. [Vol. II. in the press.]

A TEXT-BOOK of PHYSIOLOGY. By MICHAEL
FOSTER, M.D., F.R.S. Third Edition, Revised. 8vo, with Illustrations, 21s.

A TEXT-BOOK of the PHYSIOLOGICAL CHEM-ISTRY of the ANIMAL BODY, including an Account of the Chemical Changes occurring in Disease. By A. GAMGEE, M.D., F.R.S., Professor of Physiology, Owens College, Manchester. 2 vols. Vol. I., 8vo, 18s. [Vol. II. in preparation.]

ELEMENTS of COMPARATIVE ANATOMY. By Professor CARL GEGENBAUR. A Translation by F. JEFFREY BELL,
B.A. Revised, with Preface, by Professor E. RAY LANKESTER, F.R.S. 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 21s.

TEXT-BOOK of GEOLOGY. By ARCHIBALD
GEIKIE, F.R.S. 8vo, with numerous Illustrations. [Immediately.]

OUTLINES of FIELD GEOLOGY. By Professor
GEIKIE, F.R.S. 3s. 6d.

THE KINEMATICS of MACHINERY: Outlines of a Theory of Machines. By Professor F. REULEAUX. Translated and Edited by Professor A. B. W. KENNEDY, C.E. Medium 8vo, with 450 Illustrations, 21s.

A TREATISE on CHEMISTRY. By Professor
H. E. ROSCOE, F.R.S., and Professor C. SCHORLEMMER, F.R.S.
With numerous Illustrations. 8vo.

Vols. I. and II.—INORGANIC CHEMISTRY. Vol. I.—The Non-Metallic
Elements. 21s. Vol. II.—Metals. Part I. 18s. Vol. II. Part II—
Metals. 18s. [In the press.]

Vol. III.—ORGANIC CHEMISTRY. [In the press.]

A MANUAL of the CHEMISTRY of the CARBON
COMPOUND: or, Organic Chemistry. By C. SCHORLEMMER,
F.R.S. 8vo, with Illustrations, 14s.

PHYSIOGRAPHY: an Introduction to the Study of Nature. By Professor HUXLEY, F.R.S. New Edition. Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations and Coloured Plates, 6s.

A COURSE of PRACTICAL INSTRUCTION in ELEMENTARY BIOLOGY. By Professor HUXLEY, F.R.S., assisted by H. N. MARTIN, M.B., D.Sc. New Edition, Revised. Crown
8vo, 6s.

THE MORPHOLOGY of the SKULL. By Professor
PARKER and G. T. BETTANY. Crown 8vo, Illustrated, 10s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to the OSTEOLOGY of the MAMMALIA. By Professor W. H. FLOWER, F.R.S., F.R.C.S. New Edition, Enlarged. Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 10s. 6d.

A COURSE of ELEMENTARY PRACTICAL
PHYSIOLOGY. By MICHAEL FOSTER, M.D., F.R.S., and J. N.
LANGLEY, B.A. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A SYSTEM of VOLUMETRIC ANALYSIS.
Translated, with Notes and Additions, from the Second German Edition, by M. M. PATTISON MUIR, F.R.S.E. Crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

PRACTICAL CHEMISTRY for MEDICAL STUD-ENTS. Specially Arranged for the First M.D. Course. By M. M.
PATTISON MUIR, F.R.S.E. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

BLOWPIPE ANALYSIS. By J. LANDAUER.
Authorised English Edition, by J. TAYLOR and W. E. KAY. Fcap., 4s. 6d.

POPULAR ASTRONOMY. By S. NEWCOMB,
LL.D., Professor U.S. Naval Observatory. 8vo, with 112 Illustrations and Five Maps of the Stars, 18s.

A MANUAL of POLITICAL ECONOMY. By Right Hon. HENRY FAWCETT, M.P. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 12s.

STRUCTURAL BOTANY; or, Organography on the Basis of Morphology. To which are added the Principles of Taxonomy and Phytography, and a Glossary of Botanical Terms. By Professor ASA GRAY, LL.D. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE STUDENT'S FLORA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, K.C.S.I., C.B., F.R.S., M.D., D.C.L.
New Edition, Revised. Globe 8vo, 11s. 6d.

EXPERIMENTAL MECHANICS. By R. S. BALL,
A.M. Cheaper Issue. Royal 8vo, 18s. 6d.

MECHANICAL THEORY of HEAT. By R.
CLAUSIUS. Translated by WALTER R. DROVSE, M.A. Crown 8vo,
10s. 4d.

THE ELEMENTS of DYNAMIC. By W. K.
CLIFFORD, F.R.S. Part I.—KINEMATIC. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to the THEORY of ELEC-TRICITY. By LINNEUS CUMMING, M.A. Crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 8s. 6d.

UNITS and PHYSICAL CONSTANTS. By J. D.
EVERETT, F.R.S. 4s. 6d.

GEOMETRICAL TREATISE on CONIC SEC-TIONS. By W. H. DREW, M.A. New Edition, Enlarged. Crown
8vo, 5s.

SOLUTIONS to the PROBLEMS in DREW'S
CONIC SECTIONS. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on CURVE
TRACING. By PERCIVAL FROST, M.A. 8vo, 12s.

SOLID GEOMETRY. A New Edition, Revised and Enlarged, of the Treatise by FROST and WOLSTENHOLME. 2 vols.
Vol. I., 8vo, 18s.

A TREATISE on ASTRONOMY. For the Use of Colleges and Schools. By HUGH GODFRAY, M.A. New Edition, 8vo, 12s. 6d.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on the LUNAR
THEORY; with a Brief Sketch of the Problem up to the Time of Newton. By HUGH GODFRAY, M.A. Second Edition, Revised.
Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d.

By S. PARKINSON, D.D., F.R.S.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on MECHANICS.
For the Use of the Junior Classes at the University and the Higher Classes in Schools. With a Collection of Examples. New Edition,
Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth, 9s. 6d.

A TREATISE on OPTICS. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE THEORY of SOUND. By LORD RAYLEIGH,
M.A., F.R.S. 8vo. Vol. I., 12s. 6d.; Vol. II., 12s. 6d.
[Vol. III. in the press.]

By EDWARD JOHN ROUTH, M.A.,
F.R.S.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on the DY-NAMICS of the SYSTEM of RIGID BODIES. With numerous Examples.
Third and Enlarged Edition. 8vo, 21s.

STABILITY of a GIVEN STATE of MOTION, particularly STEADY MOTION. 8vo, 8s. 6d.

MATHEMATICAL PROBLEMS. Devised and Arranged by JOSEPH WOLSTENHOLME. New Edition, greatly Enlarged. 8vo, 18s.

CLASSICAL.

ARISTOTLE.—AN INTRODUCTION to ARIS-TOTLE'S RHETORIC. With Analysis, Notes, and Appendices. By E. M. COPE. 8vo, 14s.

ARISTOTLE on FALLACIES; or, the Sophistici
Elenchi. With Translation and Notes. By E. POSTE, M.A. 8vo,
8s. 6d.

THE METAPHYSICS. Book I. Translated by a CAMBRIDGE GRADUATE. Demy 8vo. [Immediately.]

ARISTOPHANES.—THE BIRDS. Translated into English Verse. With Introduction, Notes, and Appendices. By R. H.
KENNEDY, D.D. Crown 8vo, 6s. Help-Notes to the same, for the use of Students, 1s. 6d.

CICERO.—THE ACADEMICA. The Text Revised and Explained. By JAMES REID, M.A. New Edition, with Translation. 8vo. [In the press.]

THE ACADEMICS. Translated by JAMES S.
REID, M.A. 8vo, 5s. 6d.

SELECT LETTERS. After the Edition of ALBERT WATSON, M.A. Translated by G. E. JEANS, M.A.
8vo, 10s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—MEDEA. By A. W. VERRALL,
M.A. 8vo. [Shortly.]

JUVENAL.—THIRTEEN SATIRES of JUVENAL; with a Commentary. By JOHN E. B. MAYOR, M.A. Vol. I.
Second Edition, Enlarged, Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. Vol. II., crown 8vo,
10s. 6d.

HOMER.—THE ODYSSEY. Done into English by
S. B. BUTCHER, M.A., and ANDREW LANG, M.A. Second Edition.
Revised and Corrected, with New Introduction, Additional Notes, and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

MARTIAL.—EPIGRAMS. Books I. and II. By Professor J. E. D. MAYOR. 8vo. [In the press.]

PLATO.—THE REPUBLIC of PLATO. Translated into English, with an Analysis and Notes. By J. L. DAVIES, M.A., and D. J. VAUGHAN, M.A. New Edition. 18mo, 4s. 6d.

THE TRIAL and DEATH of SOCRATES: being the Euthyphro, Apology, Crito, and Phaedo of Plato. Translated by F. J. CROUCH. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

TACITUS.—COMPLETE WORKS. Translated by A. J. CHURCH, M.A., and W. J. BRODRIBB, M.A.

THE HISTORY. With Notes and a Map. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE ANNALS. With Notes and Maps. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE AGRICOLA and GERMANY, with the DIALOGUE on ORATORY. With Maps and Notes. New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

PHILOLOGY.—THE JOURNAL of SACRED and CLASSICAL PHILOLOGY. 4 vols., 8vo, each 12s. 6d.

THE JOURNAL of PHILOLOGY. New Series.
Edited by JOHN E. B. MAYOR, M.A., and W. ALDIS WRIGHT,
M.A. 4s. 6d. (Half-yearly.)

THE AMERICAN JOURNAL of PHILOLOGY.
Edited by BASIL A. GILDERSLEEVE. 4s. 6d. (Quarterly.)

By the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE,
M.P.

JUVENTUS MUNDI; or, Gods and Men of the Heroic Age. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE TIME and PLACE of HOMER. Crown 8vo,
6s. 6d.

By R. C. JEBB, M.A.

THE ATTIC ORATORS from ANTIPHON to
ISAEOS. 2 vols., 8vo, 25s.

SELECTIONS from the ATTIC ORATORS,
ANTIPHON, ANDOKIDES, LYSIAS, ISOKRATES, and ISAEOS.
Edited, with Notes. Being a Companion Volume to the preceding Work.
8vo, 12s. 6d.

A GRAMMAR of the LATIN LANGUAGE, from Plautus to Suetonius. By H. J. ROBY, M.A. In 2 parts. Part I., 8s. 6d.; part II., crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

SCHOOL LATIN GRAMMAR. By the SAME AUTHOR. Crown 8vo,

By J. P. MAHAFFY, M.A.

SOCIAL LIFE in GREECE, from HOMER to MENANDER. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 9s.

RAMBLES and STUDIES in GREECE. Second Edition. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to GREEK and LATIN
ETYMOLOGY. By JOHN PELLE, M.A. Third and Revised Edition.
Crown 8vo, 11s. 6d.

A HANDBOOK to MODERN GREEK. By
EDGAR VINCENT and T. G. DICKSON. Extra fcap. 8vo, 5s.

THEOLOGICAL.

By J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D.,
Bishop of Durham.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE to the GALATIANS. A Revised Text, with Introduction, Notes, and Dissertations. Fifth Edition, Revised. 8vo, cloth, 12s.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE to the PHILIPPIANS.
A Revised Text, with Introduction, Notes, and Dissertations. Fourth Edition, Revised. 8vo, 12s.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLES to the COLOSSIANS and to PHILEMON. A Revised Text, with Introduction, Notes, &c.
Third Edition, Revised. 8vo, 12s.

ST. CLEMENT of ROME. An Appendix containing the Newly Discovered Portions of the Two Epistles to the Corinthians, with Introduction and Notes, and a Translation of the Whole. 8vo, 8s. 6d.

ON a FRESH REVISION of the ENGLISH NEW TESTAMENT. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

By R. CHENEVIX TRENCH, D.D.,
Archbishop of Dublin.

NOTES on the PARABLES of our LORD.
Thirteenth Edition. 8vo, 12s.

NOTES on the MIRACLES of our LORD.
Eleventh Edition, Revised. 8vo, 12s.

SYNONYMS of the NEW TESTAMENT. Ninth
Edition, Enlarged. 8vo, cloth, 12s.

ON the AUTHORISED VERSION of the NEW TESTAMENT. Second Edition. 8vo, 7s.

STUDIES in the GOSPELS. Fourth Edition.
Revised. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A HISTORY of the BOOK of COMMON
PRAYER; with a Rationale of its Offices. By FRANCIS PROCTER,
M.A. Fourteenth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

By the Ven. Archdeacon HARDWICK.

CHRIST and OTHER MASTERS: an Historical Enquiry into some of the Chief Parallelisms and Contrasts between Christianity and the Religious Systems of the Ancient World. With a Prefatory Memoir by the Rev. FRANCIS PROCTER, M.A. New Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH.
Middle Age. From Gregory the Great to the Excommunication of Luther. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A. With Four Maps constructed for this work by A. Keith Johnston. New Edition. Crown
8vo, 10s. 6d.

A HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH
during the REFORMATION. New Edition, Revised by Professor STUBBS. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

By BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D.

AN INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of the GOSPELS. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A GENERAL SURVEY of the HISTORY of the CANON of the NEW TESTAMENT during the FIRST FOUR CEN-TURIES. Fourth Edition, Revised, with a Preface on "Supernatural Religion." Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE BIBLE in the CHURCH: a Popular Account of the Collection and Reception of the Holy Scriptures in the Christian Churches. Sixth Edition. 18mo, 4s. 6d.

A GENERAL VIEW of the HISTORY of the ENGLISH BIBLE. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE GOSPEL of the RESURRECTION: Thoughts on its Relation to Reason and History. Fourth Edition, Revised.
Crown 8vo, 8s.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S CATALOGUES of Educational and other Publications may be obtained on application.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

TEXT-BOOKS FOR STUDENTS.

HISTORICAL.

By E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L., LL.D.

HISTORICAL ESSAYS. First Series, 10s. 6d.; Second Series, 10s. 6d.; Third Series, 12s.

THE GROWTH of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION from the EARLIEST TIMES. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

COMPARATIVE POLITICS. To which is added the "UNITY of HISTORY." 8vo, 11s.

HISTORICAL and ARCHITECTURAL SKETCHES; chiefly Italian. Illustrated by the Author. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

OLD ENGLISH HISTORY. New Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, with Five Coloured Maps, half-bound, 6s.

By JOHN RICHARD GREEN, M.A., LL.D.

HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. 4 vols., 8vo. Vol. I. Early England—Foreign Kings—The Charter. The Parliament. 8vo, with Eight Coloured Maps, 16s. Vol. II. The Monarchy, 1481—1510; the Restoration, 1510—1603. 8vo, 16s. Vol. III. Puritan England, 1603—1689; the Revolution, 1689—1688. 8vo, with Four Maps, 16s. Vol. IV. The Revolution, 1683—1769; Modern England, 1769—1815. 8vo, with Maps and Index, 16s.

A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. Seventy-second Thousand. With Coloured Maps, Genealogical Tables, and Chronological Aueals. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

READINGS from ENGLISH HISTORY. Selected and Edited by JOHN RICHARD GREEN. In 3 parts, fcap. 8vo, each 1s. 6d. Part I. From Hengest to Cressy. Part II. From Cressy to Cromwell. Part III. From Cromwell to Dalaklava.

THE ROMAN SYSTEM of PROVINCIAL ADMINISTRATION to the ACCESSION of CONSTANTINE the GREAT. By W. T. ARNOLD, B.A. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A SHORT HISTORY of INDIA and of the FRONTIER STATES of AFGHANISTAN, NEPAUL, and BURMAH. By J. TALBOT'S WHEELER. Crown 8vo, with Maps, 12s.

ENGLISH.

A SHAKESPERIAN GRAMMAR: an Attempt to illustrate Some of the Differences between Elizabethan and Modern English. By the Rev. E. A. ABBOTT, D.D. New and Enlarged Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 8s.

JOHNSON'S LIVES of the POETS. The Six Chief Lives (Milton, Dryden, Swift, Addison, Pope, Gray); with Macaulay's "Life of Johnson." Edited, with Preface, by MATTHEW ARNOLD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ESSAYS PHILOLOGICAL and CRITICAL. Selected from the Papers of JAMES HADLEY, LL.D. 8vo, 16s.

LONGER ENGLISH POEMS. With Notes, Philological and Explanatory, and an Introduction on the Teaching of English. Chiefly for use in Schools. Edited by J. W. MALES. Fifth Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

A COMPARATIVE GRAMMAR of the TEUTONIC LANGUAGES: being at the same time a Historical Grammar of the English Language, and comprising Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, Early English, Modern English, Icelandic (Old Norse), Danish, Swedish, Old High German, Middle High German, Modern German, Old Saxon, Old Frisian, and Dutch. By JAMES HEFFENSTEIN, Ph.D. 8vo, 18s.

THE OLD and MIDDLE ENGLISH. By T. L. KINGTON OLIPHANT, M.A. New Edition, Revised and greatly Enlarged, of "The Sources of Standard English." Extra fcap. 8vo, 9s.

HISTORICAL OUTLINES of ENGLISH ACCIDENCE. Comprising Chapters on the History and Development of the Language, and on Word Formation. By RICHARD MORRIS, LL.D. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

PLUTARCH.—Being a Selection from the Lives which illustrate Shakespeare. North's Translation. Edited, with Introductions, Notes, Index of Names, and Glossarial Index, by the Rev. W. W. SKEAT, M.A. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WORDS and PLACES; or, Etymological Illustrations of History, Ethnology, and Geography. By the Rev. ISAAC TAYLOR. Third Edition, Revised and Compressed. With Maps. Globe 8vo, 6s.

By R. CHENEVIX TRENCH, D.D.,

Archbishop of Dublin.

ON the STUDY of WORDS. Seventeenth Edition, Enlarged. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

ENGLISH PAST and PRESENT. Tenth Edition, Revised and Improved. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

A SELECT GLOSSARY of ENGLISH WORDS USED FORMERLY in SENSES DIFFERENT from their PRESENT. Fifth Edition, Enlarged. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

PROVERBS and their LESSONS. Seventh Edition, Enlarged. Fcap. 8vo, 4s.

NEW BOOKS ON IRELAND.

DISTURBED IRELAND. By Bernard H. Becker, Special Commissioner of the Daily News. With Route Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s."Will be found one of the most trustworthy pictures that is accessible to the public of the sister island as it is. . . . It has, especially at the present moment, high political value. . . . His impartiality is as valuable as his frankness."—Examiner.THE LIFE'S WORK in IRELAND of a LANDLORD who TRIED to DO his DUTY. By W. BENCE JONES, of Lisselan. Crown 8vo, 6s."An interesting and instructive book; but not the least enlightening part of it is the Preface, dated the 12th of December, 1880. He had just been threatened with 'Boycotting,' which he now undergoes."—St. James's Gazette.THE YEAR'S ART: a Concise Epitome of all Matters relating to the Arts of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture which have occurred during the Year 1880, together with Information respecting the Events of the Year 1881. Compiled by MARCUS B. HUIISH. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d."An excellent handbook. It is sold at half-a-crown; we would willingly have given a guinea for it, and only regret that it was not thought of sooner."—Portfolio.LIFE of WILLIAM BLAKE. With Selections from his Poems and other Writings. Illustrated from Blake's own Works. By ALEXANDER GILCHRIST. A New and Enlarged Edition, with Additional Letters and a Memoir of the Author. Printed on hand-made paper, the Illustrations on India paper, mounted in the Text. 2 vols., cloth elegant, gilt, with Designs after Blake by Frederick J. Shields, medium 8vo, 42s."One of the most beautiful and interesting books of the season."—Daily News.". . . . Without reservation, is undoubtedly one of the most tasteful and 'thorough' editions of a fine-art book which we ever remember to have seen."—Notes and Queries.

GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

THE ESSAYS of JOSEPH ADDISON. Chosen and Edited by JOHN RICHARD GREEN, M.A., LL.D. 18mo, 4s. 6d."This is a most welcome addition to a most excellent series."—Examiner.DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSICIANS (A.D. 1450—1878). By Eminent Writers, English and Foreign. Edited by GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L. 3 vols., 8vo, with Illustrations and Woodcuts. Parts I. to XII., 3s. 6d. each. Vols. I. and II., 8vo, 21s. each.

Vol. I. A to IMPROMPTU.

Vol. II. IMPROPERIA to PLAIN SONG.

"The fact of the publication of such a work in itself marks an important and gratifying step in the history of musical culture in England."—Edinburgh Review.ENGLISH POETS: Selections, with Critical Introductions by Various Writers, and a General Introduction by MATTHEW ARNOLD. Edited by T. H. WARD, M.A. 4 vols., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

Vol. I. CHAUCER to DONNE.

Vol. III. ADDISON to BLAKE.

Vol. II. BEN JONSON to DRYDEN.

Vol. IV. WORDSWORTH to SYDNEY DOBELL.

"A work of the very highest excellence, which promises to be a most valuable addition to the standard criticism of English literature."—Academy.

Now ready, No. XVIII., price 4s. 6d.

THE JOURNAL of PHILOLOGY. Edited by W. Aldis Wright, M.A., INGRAM BYWATER, M.A., and HENRY JACKSON, M.A.

CONTENTS.

NOTES on ARISTOPHANES' ACHARNIANS l. 578. W. G. CLARK.

CATULLUS 107, 7. H. A. J. MUNRO.

ON the ANTHOLOGIA LATINA. R. ELLIS.

KORAX and TISIAS. A. W. VERBALL.

HORATIANA. H. A. J. MUNRO.

SYRIAC ACCENTS. GEO. PHILLIPS.

HERACLITUS and ALBERTUS MAGNUS. I. BYWATER.

ON PROPERTIUS. F. P. SIMPSON.

THE TREATY between ROME and CARTHAGE in the FIRST CONSULATE. THOS. H. DYER.

NOTE on PROPERTIUS. F. P. SIMPSON.

TRACES of DIFFERENT DIALECTS in the LANGUAGE of HOMER. D. B. MONRO.

THE ROMAN CURIAE. H. F. FELHAM.

ON the GENUINENESS of TIBULLUS iv. 13. J. P. POSTGATE.

LAST WORDS on LUCILIUS. R. ELLIS and H. A. J. MUNRO.

BENTLEY'S EDITION.

The Works of Jane Austen.

THE ONLY COMPLETE EDITION.

Library Edition in Six Volumes, crown 8vo, well printed and bound in cloth, with a Memoir and Portrait of the Authoress, and Five Illustrations on Steel by Pickering, 36s. Each volume can be had also separately, price 6s.

I.

SENSE AND SENSIBILITY.

"I have now read over again all Miss Austen's novels. Charming they are. There are in the world no compositions which approach nearer to perfection."

Macaulay's Journal.

II.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.

"The perfect type of a novel of common life; the story is so concisely and dramatically told, the language so simple, the shades of human character so clearly presented, and the operation of various motives so delicately traced, attest this gifted woman to have been the perfect mistress of her art."

Arnold's English Literature.
"One of the best of Miss Austen's unequalled works. How perfectly it is written!"—Spectator.

III.

EMMA.

"Shakespeare has neither equal nor second; but among the writers who have approached nearest to the manner of the great master we have no hesitation in placing Jane Austen, a woman of whom England is justly proud."

Macaulay's Essays.

IV.

MANSFIELD PARK

"Miss Austen has a talent for describing the involvements and feelings and characters of ordinary life which is to me the most wonderful I ever met with. Her exquisite touch, which renders commonplace things and character interesting from the truth of the description and sentiment, is denied to me."—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

V.

NORTHANGER ABBEY.

"Read Dickens' 'Hard Times,' and another book of Pliny's 'Letters.' Read 'Northanger Abbey,' worth all Dickens and Pliny together. Yet it was the work of a girl. She was certainly not more than twenty-six. Wonderful creature!"—Macaulay's Journal.

PERSUASION.

"Miss Austen's fame will outlive the generations that did not appreciate her, and her works will be ranked with the English classics as long as the language lasts."—Atlas.

VI.

LADY SUSAN, and THE WATSONS.

With a Memoir and Portrait of the Authoress.

"Miss Austen's life, as well as her talent, seems to us unique among the lives of authoresses of fiction."

Quarterly Review.
"Miss Austen's merits have long been established beyond question; she is emphatically the novelist of home."

Spectator.

The Novels of Mrs. Henry Wood.

Uniform Edition. Each volume in crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. At all Booksellers.

East Lynne. (95th Thousand.)

The Channings. (35th Thousand.)

Anne Hereford.

Bessy Rane.

Dene Hollow.

Edina.

Elster's Folly.

George Canterbury's Will.

Johnny Ludlow. (First Series.)

Lady Adelaide.

Life's Secret, A.

Lord Oakburn's Daughters.

Master of Greylands.

Mildred Arkell.

Mrs. Halliburton's Troubles.

Orville College.

Oswald Cray.

Parkwater.

Pomeroy Abbey.

Red Court Farm.

Roland Yorke.

Shadow of Ashlydyat.

St. Martin's Eve.

Trevlyn Hold.

Verner's Pride.

Within the Maze.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Just ready, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

LOCKE'S CONDUCT of the UN-

DERSTANDING. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, &c., by THOMAS FOWLER, M.A., Professor of Logic in the University of Oxford, Fellow of Lincoln College.

"I cannot think any parent or instructor justified in neglecting to put this little treatise in the hands of a boy about the time when the reasoning faculties become developed."—HALLAM, in his "Introduction to the Literature of Europe."

With an Introductory Essay, Maps and Plans, demy 8vo, cloth, £1 4s.

THE WELLINGTON DE-

SPATCHES, Memoranda, and other Papers (Selections from). Edited by SIDNEY J. OWEN, M.A., Reader in Law and History, and Tutor at Christ Church; Reader in Indian History in the University of Oxford; formerly Professor of History in the Elphinstone College, Bombay.

"Mr. Owen has already earned and deserved a reputation as an Indian Historian. . . . His prefatory essays display great care and a thorough knowledge of his subject. . . . We shall in some measure indicate the value of the editor's labours when we say that Mr. Owen, in addition to a most instructive Introduction, has given us a synopsis by which we may trace, without the least trouble, our great commander's connexion with and views concerning places and events, and that he has added to the collection despatches penned by the Duke long after he left India, and treating of matters of present and permanent interest; and, lastly, that capital maps and military plans accompany the volume."—Times.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

PRIMER of FRENCH LITERA-

TURE. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

"This is a book which is not only indispensable to the beginner in French literature, but most useful to the reader who has wandered at his will, picking and choosing at random in the garden which Mr. Saintsbury has made completely his own. So much recent writing on French literature has been scandalously inaccurate, flippant, and dull, that Mr. Saintsbury and the Clarendon Press confer a really rare benefit on the public in this little introduction to a wide subject."—Daily News.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORY of the NOR-

MAN CONQUEST. By E. A. FREEMAN, M.A., D.C.L. LL.D., Honorary Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford; Corresponding Member of the Imperial Academy of Sciences of St. Petersburg.

"The little book has all the interest of a romance, with, as we believe, all the accuracy of sound history. It will be a delightful school-book, and it will be good reading for many who are not now at school."—Scotsman.

Third Edition, considerably enlarged, crown 8vo, cloth, 9s.

EXERCISES in PRACTICAL

CHEMISTRY. Vol. I. (ELEMENTARY EXERCISES). By A. G. VERNON HARCOURT, M.A., F.R.S., Senior Student of Christ Church, and Lee's Reader in Chemistry, and H. G. MADAN, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

"No pains have been spared to make the work practical in every sense of the word."—English Mechanic.
"A valuable work for those who are beginning to learn practically the beautiful science of Chemistry."—Medical Press and Circular.

2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE QUR'AN. Translated by Professor E. H. PALMER. Being Volumes VI. and IX. of the SACRED BOOKS of the East. Translated by various Oriental Scholars, and Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER.

4to, cloth, £1 11s. 6d.

A LATIN DICTIONARY, Founded on Andrews' Edition of Freund's Latin Dictionary. By CHARLTON T. LEWIS, Ph.D., and CHARLES SHOST, LL.D.

"Must supersede all its rivals for common use."

Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR in Notes and Queries.

"The etymological notes certainly far surpass in accuracy and fullness anything as yet attempted in any dictionary."—Athenaeum.

"The work of Messrs. Lewis and Shost is a real advance on any previous Latin-English Dictionary. The orthography has been corrected throughout, a step which, however obvious, easy, and necessary, is of immense practical benefit to Latin scholarship in England, where we have for some time, in books available for school teaching, been troubled with mere confusion in this matter."—Prof. NETLESHIP in the Academy.

"What would not the scholars of the last century have given for such a Latin Dictionary? The great advances which philological study has made of late years, and the vastly increased knowledge of ancient life and thought, have given to this Dictionary a scholarly completeness which places it in the very first rank among works of reference. It will undoubtedly become a standard authority."—Westminster Review.

Parts I.—III., 4to, 10s. 6d. each.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL DICTIO-

ARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE, arranged on an Historical Basis. By W. W. SKERT, M.A. To be completed in Four Parts. Part IV. in the Press.

"Its merits are those of laborious and conscientiously accurate research, guided by profound learning and never-failing sagacity."

H. SWETE in the Academy.
"A work of enormous and self-denying labour, and quite unusual erudition, which, if it ends as it begins, should be a national possession."—Daily News.

London: HENRY FROWDE,

Clarendon Press Warehouse, 7, Paternoster-row.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S
LIST.

MR. GEORGE MACDONALD'S NEW NOVEL,

MARY MARSTON,

In 3 vols., is now ready. Second Edition.

PHILOSOPHY.

ENGLISH PHILOSOPHERS. Edited by

IWAN MULLER, M.A., New College, Oxford.

To each Philosopher will be assigned a separate volume, giving as comprehensive and detailed a statement of his views and contributions to Philosophy as possible, explanatory rather than critical, opening with a brief biographical sketch, and concluding with a short general summary, and a bibliographical appendix.

Price and Size:—180 to 200 pp. Size, crown 8vo. Price 3s. 6d.

ADAM SMITH. By J. FARRER, M.A., Author of "Primitive Manners and Customs." [Now ready.]

HAMILTON. By Professor MONK; and

HARTLEY and JAMES MILL. By G. S. BOWER, B.A. [Nearly ready.]

 Other volumes in the press.

ART.

ILLUSTRATED BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT ARTISTS.

"Few things in the way of small books upon great subjects, avowedly cheap and necessarily brief, have been hitherto so well done as these biographies of the Great Masters in painting."—Times.

Each Volume is illustrated with from Twelve to Twenty Full-page Engravings, printed in the best manner, and bound in ornamental cloth cover, 3s. 6d.

The New Biographies are—

GAINSBOROUGH and CONSTABLE. By GEORGE BROCK-ARNOLD, M.A. Illustrated with Seventeen Engravings after their most popular works, including "The Duchess of Devonshire" and "The Blue Boy," by Gainsborough, and "The Valley Farm" and "The Cornfield," by Constable. [Ready.]

SIR DAVID WILKIE. By JOHN W. MOLLETT, B.A. Illustrated with numerous Engravings, including Double-page Pictures of "Blindman's Buff," "The Rent Day," "The Penny Wedding," "Duncan Gray," and many other popular works. [Ready.]

 Other volumes are in preparation.

ILLUSTRATED TEXT-BOOKS of ART.

Edited by EDWARD J. POYNTER, R.A., Director for Art, Science and Art Department.

Each Volume will contain from Fifty to Sixty Illustrations large crown 8vo, and will be strongly bound, price 5s.

The First Volumes of the Series of ILLUSTRATED TEXT-BOOKS of ART EDUCATION now ready are—

PAINTING. Classic and Italian. By PERCY R. HEAD. With Fifty Illustrations. 5s. [Ready.]

ARCHITECTURE. Gothic and Renaissance. By T. ROGER SMITH. With Fifty Illustrations. 5s. [Ready.]

 Other Volumes preparing.

MUSIC.

THE GREAT MUSICIANS. Biographies of the Great Musicians. Edited by F. HURFFEE.

1. WAGNER. By the Editor. [Ready.]

2. WEBER. By Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

3. MENDELSSOHN. By JOSEPH BENNETT.

4. SCHUBERT. By H. F. FROST.

5. ROSSINI, and the Modern Italian School. By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. [Ready.]

6. MARCELLO. By ARRIOD BOUTE.

7. PURCELL. By W. H. CUMMINGS.

 Dr. Hiller and other distinguished Writers, both English and Foreign, have promised Contributions. Each Volume will be complete in itself. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. each.

Three Volumes will be issued very shortly.

SPECIAL NOTE.—Her Majesty the Queen has accepted the Dedication of Sir Julius Benedict's Work on Weber.

Now ready, fcap. 8vo, price 1s.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION in SAXONY

By JOHN L. BASHFORD, M.A. (Trinity College, Cambridge).

All interested in education should study the Saxon system.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, 1881.

No. 455, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Buddhist Birth Stories; or, Jātaka Tales. The Oldest Collection of Folk-Lore Extant: being the Jātakatthavannanā. For the first time Edited in the Original Pāli by V. Fausböll, and Translated by T. W. Rhys Davids. (Trübner.)

ALL who are interested in Buddhist literature ought to feel deeply indebted to Mr. Rhys Davids for having so well carried on the work originally undertaken by the late Prof. Childers, but interrupted at an early stage by that lamented scholar's premature death—that of translating the great collection of "Birth Stories," the Pāli text of which is now being edited by Prof. Fausböll. Much yet remains to be accomplished, for the present volume contains only forty of the five hundred and fifty (or more) stories and their accompanying commentaries. But from the instalment of his work which Mr. Rhys Davids has completed it is possible to draw a very favourable conclusion as to the probable merits of the whole. His well-established reputation as a Pāli scholar is a sufficient guarantee for the fidelity of his version, and the style of his translations is deserving of high praise. Only the first thirty-three pages of the translation are from the pen of Prof. Childers, forming part of "The Nidānakathā; or, the Three Epochs," which occupies nearly a third of the volume, containing the narrative of the Bodisat's existence from the time when he formed a resolution to become a Buddha to the termination of his ministry on earth. The rest is due to Mr. Rhys Davids, who has also supplied a very interesting Introduction on the history of the stories and their Westward migrations, and a number of valuable "Supplementary Tables."

The orthodox Buddhist belief with respect to the history of the Book of Birth Stories rests, we are told in the Introduction, on a foundation of quicksand. According to it, a number of the parables in which the Buddha related events which had occurred in his own previous births were formed by his disciples, immediately after his death, into a collection called "The Book of the Five Hundred and Fifty Jātakas or Births," the commentary of which gives an account of the events in Gotama's life which led to his telling each Jātaka or Birth Story. The text and commentary were handed down intact in the Pāli language, in which they were composed, till the middle of the third century B.C., when they were carried to Ceylon. There the commentary was translated into Singalese, and re-translated from it into Pāli in the fifth century of our era, the stories having meanwhile retained their original language. Such is the testimony of tradition. In reality the belief that most of the sacred books of the Buddhists were in existence immediately after the Buddha's death is disproved by the evidence of the books themselves. But there can be no doubt that the Jātaka stories are very old. The best proof of their antiquity seems to be the fact that the very ancient Buddhist carvings on the railings round several Indian shrines, at first supposed merely to represent scenes in Indian life, have turned out to be illustrations of the sacred Birth Stories, the titles of the Jātakas which they illustrate having, in the case of the railing at Bharhut, been found inscribed above the bas-reliefs. Mr. Rhys Davids thinks that the Jātaka Book was most probably due to the religious faith of the Indian Buddhists of the third or fourth century B.C., who were in the habit of repeating a number of parables attributed to the Buddha, identifying the best character in each with the Buddha himself in some previous birth. After a time, such parables became specially known as "Jātakas," and they were, in all probability, collected into a "Jātaka Book" at a very early period. As to the commentary, the work of a later hand, he considers the authorship uncertain, differing on this point from Mr. Childers, who has ascribed the work, in his Dictionary, to Buddhaghosa.

The merits of the forty parables contained in the present volume, considered merely as stories, are not remarkable. But they acquire a great value from the fact that they offer, as the translator says, a nearly complete picture, unmodified by any European influence, "of the social life and customs and popular beliefs of the common people of Aryan tribes closely related to ourselves, just as they were passing through the first stages of civilisation," and that the work in which they are contained may claim to be "the oldest, most complete, and most important collection of folk-lore extant." In the Introduction a few Jātakas are quoted, occurring in portions of the original work not yet reached by the translation, which have been rendered familiar to Western readers by European story-tellers. The best-known is the story of "The Ass in the Lion's Skin." Another is a very ancient specimen of one of the numerous tales in which the hero performs wonders by means of instruments endowed with miraculous powers. Of the different channels through which the stream of Eastern fiction made its way into Europe Mr. Rhys Davids gives a clear account, which he brings to a fitting close by the statement that "Nārāyaṇa Balkrishṇa Godpole, B.A., one of the masters of the Government High School at Ahmadnagar, has lately published a second edition of his translation into Sanskrit of the common English version of the successful spurious compilation of the old monk of Constantinople," that is to say, of the Greek fables which Planudes put forth in the fourteenth century under the name of Aesop.

One of the most striking of the forty tales which the present volume contains is that (No. 6) which defines what it is that really deserves to be styled divine. A certain pond was haunted by a "water sprite," whose privilege it was "to ask all those who went down into the water what were the characteristic signs of divine beings, and, if they did not know, he used to eat them up alive." The Bodisat of that time happened to be wandering about in the neighbourhood with his two brothers, the Sun Prince and the Moon Prince, and one day he sent them to bring water from the pond. The Sun Prince went first, and was seized by the demon as soon as he entered the water. "Do you know what is of divine nature?" asked the sprite. "Oh, yes! they call the sun and the moon gods," replied the prince, whom the demon immediately carried down and secured in his cave. The Moon Prince, having replied in his turn, "The far-spreading sky is called divine," was similarly made a prisoner. Then the Bodisat himself went down to the pond, discovered what had happened, and held converse with the demon, whom he informed that "The pure in heart who fear to sin,

The good, kindly in word and deed—
These are the beings in the world
Whose nature should be called divine."

Whereupon the water sprite was converted, released his captives, and became a good Buddhist. A remarkable legend is contained in the Jātaka (No. 31) which inculcates mercy to animals. At the time when "there were Titans dwelling in the heaven of the Great Thirty Three," the god Sakka, whom Mr. Rhys Davids describes as being "not quite the same as Jupiter," expressed an opinion that a kingdom shared by others was not worth having, so "he had ambrosia given to the Titans to drink, and when they became like drunken men he had them seized by the feet and thrown headlong upon the precipices of Mount Sineru." But they rebelled against this treatment, and attempted to recover their ancient seat. Sakka went down to meet them, but was defeated, and obliged to take to flight in his chariot of glory. As the chariot drove along it destroyed many trees, and with them the nests of birds, which thereupon uttered loud cries. Hearing these, Sakka stopped his chariot, being ready to sacrifice his own life, but not to destroy the lives of young fowls. When the Titans saw him stop, they were terrified, thinking that he must have received reinforcements. So they, in their turn, took to flight.

Among other stories worthy of special notice may be mentioned that (No. 9) of the king who, having lived thrice fourscore and four thousand years, found a gray hair in his jet-black locks, and thereupon laid down his sceptre and retired to a hermitage; the history (No. 4) of the large fortune made by a youth who began with nothing but a dead mouse, which was purchased from him for a farthing "in a certain shop for the use of the cat;" the tale of the goat which had been a Brāhman, and had in that state of existence killed a goat in order to provide a feast for the dead, wherefore it had been subsequently decapitated "in five hundred births, less one," a tale which the teacher told in order to put a stop to the practice of killing animals in order to offer feasts in honour of deceased relatives; the account (No. 20) of the escape of the eighty thousand monkeys who attended their king, the Bodisat of the period, from the demoniacal "blue-bellied, pale-faced, red-handed, red-footed creature" which lay in wait for them in a pond; the description (No. 23) of the heroism shown by the state charger of the King of Benares; the fable (No. 30), which has become naturalised in Europe, of "The Ox who envied the Pig," unaware that the well-fed animal which it envied was being fattened for the table—a fable which the master told for the benefit of a monk who was foolishly "attracted by a fat girl;" the well-known tale (No. 38) of the crab which cut the crane's neck in two with its claws; and the description (No. 40) of the fiery furnace, eighty fathoms deep, which Māra the Wicked One caused to appear in the Bodisat's house, but fruitlessly.

One of the most interesting parts of Mr. Rhys Davids's Introduction is that which deals with "the Barlaam and Josaphat literature." It has for some years been well known that the religious romance of "Barlaam and Josaphat," written in Greek by St. John of Damascus, is really a Christian adaptation of the legendary life of the Buddha, the name Joasaph or Josaphat, as Mr. Rhys Davids remarks, "being simply a corruption of the word Bodisat, the title of the future Buddha, so constantly repeated in the Buddhist Birth Stories." About this there is no doubt, and it is equally certain that the Martyrologium Romanum includes the names of Barlaam and Josaphat, "sanctorum Barlaam et Josaphat, quorum actus mirandos sanctus Joannes Damascenus conscripsit." The names of two fictitious personages, the character of one of whom was an adaptation of that of the legendary Buddha, have therefore found their way into the Martyrologium Romanum as those of holy Christian persons worthy of being commemorated. But it is going too far to say "that Gotama the Buddha, under the name of St. Josaphat, is now officially recognised and honoured and worshipped throughout the whole of Catholic Christendom as a Christian saint." All who are interested in this question may be referred to an excellent essay on "La Légende des Saints Barlaam et Josaphat," by M. Emmanuel Cosquin, which appeared in the Revue des Questions historiques last October, and of which a few copies have been separately printed (Paris: Victor Palmé). M. Cosquin points out clearly that the Martyrologium Romanum, which was compiled in 1583 by the order of Gregory XIII., and which was mainly founded upon an early martyrology, the work of a Benedictine named Usuard, who composed it about the year 875, never had the weight of an infallible authority, and that the existence of a man's name in its columns with the epithet sanctus prefixed is a very different thing from that holy man's "canonisation." Benedict XIV. expressly affirmed (De Servorum Dei beatificatione et canonizatione, lib. iv., pt. ii., c. xvii., n. 9) that the contents of the Martyrologium were not "inconcessae et certissimae veritatis," and that the "canonizationis judicium" was one thing, while the "appositio nominis in Martyrologio Romano" was another; and in support of this statement he mentioned the fact that several errors had been detected and corrected in that work, some arising from misprints, others from mistakes due to the compilers. Thus on the 25th of January there was mentioned, in early editions, a female saint and martyr named Xynoris. No such person had ever existed. St. John Chrysostom had spoken in one of his homilies of a "couple" of martyrs, Juveninus and Maximus, who suffered at Antioch under Julian. And the Greek word for "couple," ἐννοίης, being taken for a proper name, gave rise to the supposed existence of a Saint Xynoris. W. R. S. RALSTON.

Mrs. Grote: a Sketch. By Lady Eastlake. (Murray.)

THIS gracefully written sketch is ushered in by a few discouraging words from Mrs. Grote's own pen. She had lived long enough, she said in a memorandum addressed to her executors,

"to recognise the futility of all attempts to prolong the memory of individuals, even of those who have attracted a large measure of public attention and interest, for more than a few years after their disappearance from the scene," and she reiterates her conviction of the inutility of such an effort in her own case. Lady Eastlake thinks Mrs. Grote's judgment was for once mistaken, and therefore allows herself the pleasure of answering in print the question often asked by those who did not know her, "What kind of a woman was Mrs. Grote?" She was certainly given to peremptory utterances which will bear a good deal of qualification like the one quoted above, for it may surely be both possible and desirable to keep the memory of a distinguished person alive for a generation when no nearer approach to immortality is attainable. In other respects she belonged to a class which is rather the despair of biographers, because of an imagined difficulty in the way of conveying to strangers any adequate impression of a character that contemporaries have valued for what it is, more than for anything it is capable of producing.

Mrs. Grote was born in 1792, and, according to her own account, was a happy, clever, tomboyish girl; she remembered opening a newspaper for her father and reading out the lines which struck her eye in capitals. "The news announced was the naval victory of Trafalgar, and the last sentence was, 'Lord Nelson was killed in the action.'" Even at this early age, she was able to appreciate Beethoven's music, certainly without any encouragement from contemporary taste or fashion. The next we hear of her is from a letter written in Paris after the Restoration; it is addressed to a cousin, and, while perfectly simple and easy in style, shows a good deal of mental independence. She was able to enjoy French society and to bear her part in the fire of compliments and repartee, though the constant tension of the faculties was too fatiguing, she thought, to make such pastime continuously pleasant. She calls le Désiré "a great porpoise of a fellow," and is angry with herself for growing "into a kind of Buonapartist malgré moi" at the sight of the numerous public works and improvements all ascribed to the genius and energy of the Emperor.

In 1820, after a three years' acquaintance (during which Mr. Grote made Harriet write themes and analyses of the books he sent her to read), the two were married, without the consent of Mr. Grote, senior, who wished his eldest son to choose a richer wife in the city. "The marriage was kept secret for a month, after which they took lodgings in Chelsea, and subsequently set up house-keeping at the banking-house, Threadneedle Street, familiarly abbreviated by her as 'Threddle.'" Mrs. Grote has told the story of the rest of their joint life, but it is easier for a third person to describe the relationship in which the characteristics of both were so clearly brought out.

Mrs. Grote was fond of historical parallels, and liked herself to be compared to Madame de Sévigné rather than to Madame de Staël; but Madame de Sévigné had never perilled the perfection of her vivacious style by writing themes for a Benthamite fiancé, nor was she in any respect as masterful a personage as Grota—to borrow Sydney Smith's designation for the wife of "Grotius." If we can imagine something of Mrs. Garth added to the charming Frenchwoman, and then send the product to school with the Mills, we shall get an idea of the power and pleasantness, not without a dash of restrained severity, which gave Mrs. Grote her leading place in the enlightened world. Lady Eastlake very rightly insists on the importance of one trait, which has never received due consideration from psychologists. "Mrs. Grote was never shy." The two sides of an aristocratic temperament were represented respectively in husband and wife. Mrs. Grote was stately, confident, sure of herself and her opinions, and would easily have become overbearing if her pride had not found a safe outlet in magnifying her husband, whom no power on earth could induce to magnify himself. In 1833 she wrote to a friend, "I live with one so much my master, that the true feeling of conceit is effectually stopped out. I am made sensible of my inferiority most days in the week." Mr. Grote, meanwhile, was reticent, fastidious, delicately scrupulous, and unbending; like the incorruptible Roland, too much of an aristocrat at heart to succeed as a popular statesman. Sydney Smith described him as "a slave to a pampered conscience," and his wife delighted in admiring his inconvenient virtues without wishing to infect him with her more practical worldliness.

It is unfortunate that, in the Life of a lady who was famous for calling "a spade a spade," the incident of her ploughing a furrow for amusement should be described as her seizing "the handles of a certain agricultural implement;" but most of the quotations given from letters and conversations are well chosen for their purposes. It would be impossible to imagine anything more characteristic than the following:—Mrs. Grote, writing to Léon Faucher, tells him how often she wishes, as they travel in this enchanting Normandy, that he were with them "to explain everything we do not know the reason of. 'Léon Faucher knows everything, from the make of a ploughshare to the date of a 'Tourelle.' Doesn't he, George?' 'Yes, indeed, he has almost universal knowledge of what concerns material existence, as well as intellectual accomplishment.' " There is something very amusing in the concord of feelings so differently expressed.

Whenever Mrs. Grote was in complete possession of her subject, as in her letters and in conversation, she was original, graphic, quick to discern and happy in characterising minor shades of difference or quality in things and persons. But her published writings were more or less of a disappointment to her admirers—as an essay or dissertation by Madame de Sévigné would probably have been. On minor points, as to which a generalisation could be based on her own personal judgment and observation, Mrs. Grote could generalise wisely and wittily, but the subjects on which she was tempted to write could not be treated altogether in this familiar manner; and whenever she ceases to be individual, whenever she ceases to observe and begins to reason, she drops into all the narrow mannerisms of the earlier Utilitarians. Her brightest inspirations are not reached a priori.

It is surely unreasonable to rebel against the kind of limitation such a fact involves. Mrs. Grote was a social power, because she could generally say something to the point about whatever happened within her ken; but, to feel the point of what she said, we must know what it was about, and passing occurrences cannot be remembered for ever—at least not for their own sake, though the literary art of a Pepys or a Sévigné may lend an adventurous immortality. It is a folly of the kind Mrs. Grote was most ready to scourge to write and speak as if only world-wide and eternal influence were worth the exercising. A book in its tenth thousand acts numerically on more minds than Mrs. Grote's life and conversation, but its action may be feeble in comparison with hers; the life of individuals, moreover, is made up of concrete experiences, comparatively few of which can be brought into relation with world-wide forces or ideas. The miniature Grotas who give life and tone to a narrower and less famous circle are not thrown away because London society never hears of them; and the success of Mrs. Grote's career will not be impaired even though, as she anticipated, the memory of it should soon begin to fade. Each generation must live for itself as well as for the next.

Lady Eastlake gives a chapter to the Grotes' relations with the artist-world, from their unsuccessful attempts to protect Fanny Ellsler to the thoroughly satisfactory relations with Jenny Lind and Felix Mendelssohn. Music, in their case, contributed the poetic element to natures that might else have been called prosaic. The memoir should have appeared in the spring, but was delayed by the publisher "on account of the agitated state of the political atmosphere." The delay might have been utilised in providing a portrait frontispiece. A biographical sketch without one, or, better still, two portraits is like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out. Readers should refuse to accept such incomplete productions of the press.

EDITH SIMCOX.

Historical Sketches of Savage Life in Polynesia. By the Rev. W. W. Gill. (Wellington, N.Z.: George Didsbury.)

MR. GILL needs no introduction. His Myths and Songs from the South Pacific have become as well known to the students of mythology and folk-lore as the legends of our own Teutonic ancestors. What he has now given us forms the complement to them. It deals with the historical traditions of the Polynesians, or rather with the inhabitants of that little island of Mangaia where Mr. Gill laboured for so long. The traditions are mostly embodied in native songs which have been handed down orally, and the composition of which, as described by Mr. Gill, well deserves the attention of those who are interested in the Homeric question.

Two facts force themselves very prominently upon us as we read Mr. Gill's volume. One is the matter-of-fact character of traditional history, and the clear line of division which marks it off from myth and legend. No one can read the greater part of the Mangaian traditions without feeling that they could not have had a greater claim to truthfulness and fullness of detail if they had been preserved in contemporaneous documents. The other fact is the repulsive character of them all. As we read on we become almost wearied of the same monotonous tale of bloodshed, cruelty, and deceit. We look almost in vain for any actions of even ordinary humanity. As Mr. Gill says, the uncivilised Polynesian was truly hating and hated. Let those who decry missionary efforts in the Pacific study the traditions Mr. Gill has set before us, and compare Mangaia as it was in the days of paganism with Mangaia as it is now. Christianity has changed a scene of internecine war and perfidy into one of peace, order, and confidence.

Perhaps the most revolting feature in these legends is the large part played in them by cannibalism. It was, however, a religious cannibalism; human flesh was eaten only under the imperious commands of religion. It is curious that this religious cannibalism so rarely engendered a craving for human flesh. Now and then, no doubt, it did so; but in such cases the individual was hunted down and put to death, his own flesh being not unfrequently eaten afterwards as a civil and religious duty. On one occasion a whole tribe turned cannibals; but this was in order to strike terror into the minds of their enemies, and the tribe was soon extirpated.

One of the most interesting traditions relates to Capt. Cook. Mr. Gill shows how closely it corresponds with the actual facts. He also gives the song composed to celebrate the arrival of the English ships. The English are called Bere, or "Britons," and the refrain comes in more than once, "What gibberish they talk!"

The songs are of considerable importance for Polynesian philology, as some of them are nearly two centuries old and contain obsolete words and forms of words. I hope the book will have as many readers as its predecessor; if that told us what the untrained human mind thinks about the universe and its government, this one shows us what human life and society can be where each man does that which is right in his own eyes.

A. H. SAYCE.

Economics; or, the Science of Wealth. By Julian M. Sturtevant, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Political Economy in Illinois College and ex-President of the same. (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

It is remarkable that in the United States, where abstract political economy has had little influence over national policy, economists who follow the abstract and a priori method express themselves with a confidence which is now displayed by no English adherent to that method. Mr. Perry, for instance, buoyantly states in his latest work that his object is "so to lay the foundations of political economy in their whole circuit that they will never need to be disturbed afterwards, however long and however far persons may pursue their studies." The authors of an American Primer of Political Economy announce that their aim is "to give in simple words the well-settled doctrines of the fascinating science." And Dr. Sturtevant's treatise boldly begins: "The science we are about to expound is the logical development and application to a special group of phenomena of a single law of nature as truly as physical astronomy is the logical development and application to the phenomena of the solar system of the law of gravitation."

The law of nature on which Dr. Sturtevant thus builds the whole science of economics is that "every man owns himself and all which he produces by the voluntary exertion of his own powers." This, according to his view, involves the proposition that no one can by the laws of nature own anything which he has not produced directly or indirectly by his own efforts.

"You cannot convince any human being that another person may properly claim the possession of anything as exclusively his own, unless his claim can be traced back to an origin in the natural law just enunciated. The powers of nature are the free gift of God to all, and cannot be possessed. All those objects whereby man's wants are capable of being supplied by his own superadded efforts are given in impartial liberality alike to all. The air, the water, the land, the spontaneous productions of the earth, are free to all."

The Roman jurists had their own theory of natural ownership, and would have smiled at the notion that property can be acquired only by labour. Nor would Dr. Sturtevant find it easy to solve the questions of ownership which they dealt with under the heads of occupatio, accessio, alluvio. To whom, for example, does the natural ownership of the alluvial deposit formed on the bank of a river accrue, or of an island formed in the middle of the stream? The American mind will for the moment feel itself, as it were, smitten with paralysis in political science when faith in the conception of natural rights gives way, as it soon must. The Constitution of the United States will itself seem to lose its foundation when the assumption of the Declaration of Independence is seen to be untenable, that "all men are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights," including life, liberty, and, as Dr. Sturtevant would add, the ownership of themselves and whatever they produce. It is hard to see on what ground, if this be so, the Government of the United States or any other civilised country has a right to tax private property, or to compel a citizen to perform a public duty at the sacrifice of his time, inclination, pecuniary interest, or, it may be, even of his life. The peculiar stress, it should be observed, laid by American economists on the doctrine of natural rights is closely connected with the theological element, which is conspicuous in most of their treatises; for examples of which we may refer to pp. 2, 25, 46, 118, 198, 221, 266, 274, 314, 317, of Dr. Sturtevant's book before us. The time cannot be remote when it will be universally felt that it is as unscientific to import theology into economics as into physics.

"Another great law of nature, the law of competition," in Dr. Sturtevant's language, follows from the primary law of ownership.

"The law of competition results directly from the fundamental law out of which we said at the outset the whole science should be developed. . . . Competition is that law of nature by which every man who makes an exchange will seek to obtain as much as he can of the wealth of another for a given amount of his own wealth."

From this secondary law Dr. Sturtevant deduces the laws of value, wages, profit, rent, and population, and, in short, the whole science of wealth, according to his conception of its province and method. He treats of wages before profit, although in logical propriety his theory of profit should come first, for his doctrine that wages are determined by competition stands on the doctrine of a natural rate of profit. In his own words,

"it will hereafter be shown that every mode of employing capital has its natural rate of profit, and that capital cannot be retained in any mode of investment when that rate of profit cannot be realised. If, therefore, the wages demanded are such as to reduce the rate of profit on capital employed in that industry below this natural standard, capital will be withdrawn and otherwise invested, the trade will languish, fewer labourers will be employed or demanded, others already employed will be compelled either to withdraw or recede from their demands. Thus wages will decline to the natural standard as determined by competition."

If the rate of profit may be considerably higher in one trade, or in one locality, than in another, or if profits may be so high generally at a given time as to bear a reduction without checking accumulation, Dr. Sturtevant's argument in either case is deprived of its base. It is needless to repeat the proof we have often given, that the doctrine of an equality of profits is a fiction.

Dr. Sturtevant's theory of population ought to be studied in his treatise, but its leading features may be indicated as follows:—Setting aside the doctrine of Malthus as practically worthless, he contends that the safety of the human race in all the changes through which it is to pass in the progressive development of civilisation is to be sought in the full application of the law of competition. Competition acts on both labour and capital. Acting upon labour, it will disseminate, by a regular and necessary process, civilised labour over the whole earth, or at least where there are adequate natural resources. And it will equally tend to diffuse the surplus capital of civilised nations. For the interest and profits of capital decline with the growth of wealth and civilisation in a country. In the pursuit of a higher remuneration, therefore, surplus capital will follow emigrant labour.

But surely the action of the law of competition in the case is very imperfect, since, by Dr. Sturtevant's own admission, "this law of diffusion was not apparent in the ancient world, or until comparatively recent times. Perhaps the first manifestation of the law occurred in the English colonisation of North America." The outlet for both labour and capital, moreover, must at best be a temporary one. It is beginning to be found out that the earth is a small place. Dr. Sturtevant himself grants that "the fundamental principle enunciated by Mr. Malthus would prove true provided the whole world can be brought into such a condition of peace, prosperity, and civilisation as to permit both capital and population to increase till all the resources of our planet are developed." This can hardly be called the most profound theory that has been broached on the subject of population. The present writer must, however, own to have in one respect done Dr. Sturtevant an injustice. In a recent article in the Fortnightly Review, on "Political Economy in the United States," he followed the statement of a distinguished American economist in classing Dr. Sturtevant's treatise (of which he had been unable to procure a copy) among works advocating protection. It contains, on the contrary, a clear and strong argument for the freedom of trade. It starts with the right of free exchange, and follows it out into all its ramifications.

Dr. Sturtevant's treatise is an excellent one of its kind, but the kind, in our judgment, is a wrong one. In England the attempt to deduce the laws of wealth from a single principle may be said to be abandoned by every school; and the notion that Political Economy can be successfully treated by a priori methods is losing ground every day.

T. E. C. LESLIE.

NEW NOVELS.

Jeannette. By Mary C. Rowsell. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Matrimony. By W. E. Norris. In 3 vols. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

Past Hours. By Adelaide Sartoris (Adelaide Kemble). In 2 vols. (R. Bentley & Son.)

The Mysteries of Heron Dyke. By the Author of "In the Dead of Night," &c. In 3 vols. (R. Bentley & Son.)

Is female morality, after all, but empirical and practical that gentlewomen who write more than they read or think so blandly accord to their heroines a licence which they would never permit to themselves or their next-door neighbours? Most certain we are that, in spite of the reverent adulation with which the authoress censures her she-Ritualist, were Mrs. Swithin Glastonbury, née Latour, to be inducted into a neighbouring rectory, Miss Rowsell would think twice before calling upon the creature. Good women know, and should know, nothing of wild passions and boisterous impulses. These unfamiliar paths inevitably lead them into moral morasses from which nothing but a keen sense of the ridiculous can save them. This instinct, alas! Miss Rowsell does not possess, or she would strictly devote her pen to whatsoever things are comely and of good report. Here her plot is perversity itself. Two sisters—Jeannette, all soul, and Isoline, all sense, and both, of course, all beauty and talent—unfortunately hanker for the same baronet; but in vain, until a lucky horse-accident brings him as a patient under their maiden roof. Isoline airs the sheets and stirs the gruel in the kitchen, while, in the dining-room, Jeannette presses the cold aristocratic hand and smooths the raven locks to her soul's hurt, inspected all the time through the keyhole by the lady's maid. Golden days succeed. Jeannette paints retables, Isoline plays sonatas. Sir Morton prefers the sonatas, and proposes. Jeannette then treats her friends and the reader to her vigorous conception of the female Werther. These frantic throes are protracted till the Dowager Baronetess, an Evangelical harridan—of course infernally malicious and, we may add, impossibly vulgar—favours Isoline with the keyhole story. Here the authoress may be said to pass her Rubicon, making Isoline sacrifice her lover and herself to her sister's too apparent infatuation. She effaces herself, going out as a governess and handing over the poor baronet to Jeannette, who greedily accepts his mechanical advances, having rejected her pet vicar, an amorous and saintly celibate. Isoline returns for the wedding, and the night before has a flaming scene with Sir Morton; Jeannette, of course in ambush, witnesses their desperation. The tragic business in the church which crowns the plot is simply broad farce, from the sulky bridegroom, the heart-broken bridesmaid, and the frantic bride, to the amorous officiant, who, at the affecting points in the service (which is quoted and commented upon in full), wipes his eyes with "the loose sleeve of his surplice"—a charming touch showing the utilitarian superiority of the Sarum to the Islington form of that vestment. After many, many pages Jeannette at last shrieks, "I will NOT" (sic), tears off her wreath, and makes a shocking and most protracted brawl in church. "Let her go in peace," solemnly exclaims the Rev. Swithin, by this time more inclined to laugh than cry in his sleeve; and forth from the church and village, over hedge and ditch, rushes the bride, till down she sinks with her ivory satin and lovely old Mechlin in her favourite swamp, the first stage on her pilgrimage to the Continent and perpetual virginity. By which we are only to understand that she delays her union with the Vicar until she can gaze with a less jaundiced eye upon the perfect bliss of Isoline and Sir Morton. Judgment had already overtaken the Dowager. Hiding among the abbey ruins to spy upon the flaming scene, she was crushed by the providential fall of the Priests' Tower. In her last moments the wretched Church Associationist is reduced to auricular confession, but recants before she gets any absolution, and dies in hardened Protestantism. Dead controversialists, however, can hardly expect to have the last word. With a sort of seraphic chuckle Jeannette boasts how she caused the mystic R. I. P. to be inscribed upon the helpless tomb. The book is not without good points. Isoline is a quiet maidenly character, if rather silly, and the half-witted Miss Havering is very well described. The style is florid.

The numerous ladies who will highly approve of Jeannette will no doubt pronounce Matrimony—in spite of its title—very odious, cynical, and stupid. It is, however, a fine book to be read and enjoyed, as it was probably written, slowly and with intention. In his previous story, Mademoiselle de Mersac, the author had already attracted attention less by his telling pictures of Algerian life than by his remarkable gift of presenting quite naturally, and without exaggeration, eccentric and unusual types. But after all it is, we suspect, not so much happy instinct as deliberate continence which preserves Mr. Norris from the ensnaring example of Dickens and the deplorable influence of the American humorists. When he has conceived a character of such quaint angularity as his Mr. Gervis, he does not by over-accentuating it, by contriving droll situations for it, by parading and thrusting it forward, weaken the interest of the other characters and mar the vraisemblance of the whole story. If the novel of real life and manners admits at all of burlesque, at any rate the clown should not assume the title-rôle. This Mr. Gervis, a rich, blasé diplomatist, is but a languid, cynical looker-on at life, and with singular art is, therefore, very rarely brought on the stage. He talks little, avoids emotions and scenes, leaving his neighbours to amuse him with their follies and failings in their own way without his meddling. From the first we were charmed with him—his unruffled politeness, his gnarled experience, his crabbed wisdom, his sardonic pleasantries, the perfect honour and justice which have taken the place of warmer and younger feelings—and as we closed the book we could not repress the vulgar and inconsistent regret that there was not more of him, and that he did not reveal himself at the end as a heavy father, showering blessings unctuous and long-repressed like Mr. Martin Chuzzlewit the elder. The moral of the story—marry in haste and repent at leisure—is not a popular one, but it is worked out with some reserve. Mr. Gervis has a son and daughter, both clever and romantic, who both fall in love with mere earthen vessels, and suffer for it. But though neither Nina nor Freddy is meet to mate with Claude or Geneviève, their clay is differently tempered. Nina is a selfish, self-indulgent cynic, and turns out an indifferent wife. Freddy Croft, an inimitable study of the physically active and mentally paralysed young Janissary of our schools and colleges, is as fond as foolish,—as firm in his principles as his principles are themselves few and narrow. These humanities are not bad substitutes for the others, and so he never has cause to mourn that he married a genius. Among many excellent characters we have a flighty, mendacious, gambling Russian princess, with her confidant, the rigid Miss Potts, and a prosy, flatulent, free-thinking Squire, who “falls foul of the Book of Genesis and Admiral Bagshawe,” the veteran who presides over a knot of Beachborough fogies such as Thackeray loved to draw. That the whole book is a mere imitation of Pendennis will, of course, be obvious to the least if not to the most observant reader. The supposed narrator, Mr. Knowles, is indeed an old bachelor with a weakness for young people and his neighbours' affairs, and in his half-tender, half-crossgrained comments, as of one who, standing by, sees almost too much of the game, and in his dexterous variations upon the old themes of time, age, and death, he does remind us of that happy mixture of kindness and crustiness which Thackeray chose to assume when writing in the first person. This and no more need be admitted, that Mr. Norris regards society from much the same point of view—and what better could he choose?—but in his method, in his flashes of airy wisdom or grave playfulness relieving a style of old-fashioned dignity and fullness, he recalls a still finer model. Indeed, we may safely say that, in beginning each chapter with a page or two of moralising, he was consciously imitating Tom Jones. Nor could anything be more delightful than the way in which, after taking rest as it were between the chapters, the old gentleman seems to grapple for, and regain, his hold upon the threads of the story. Of the plot we will only say that it is simple and probable, while the action goes on from first to last, as the people all talk, naturally and without effort. To elevate to a place beside the great classics of imagination like Silas Marner a work whose great merit is its sober self-restraint and dry keenness would be absurd; but, at the risk of seeming to have our likes as well as our dislikes, we cannot but think that Thackeray's best work has never been approached so nearly both in nature and quality as by the author of Matrimony.

Past Hours consists of a few reprinted verses, musical anecdotes, and reminiscences, together with the first hundred and fifty pages of a novel which the authoress of A Week in a French Country House was not spared to finish. M^{de}. Sartoris was fanatica per la musica, and therefore what sounds like rhapsody to us may be prosaic enough to the illuminated; nay, compared with some of the apostles of sound, she is intelligible enough, even to us, in her laments over the decay of musical taste. The fragment, Judith, would probably have turned out a fine work, but already it contained elements far from pleasing. Of these we will not speak, if only in gratitude for the quaint sketch of the decayed ballet-dancer retaining, as Jacky the faithful motherly old bonne, the florid airs and graces of M^{lle}. de St.-Armand, inventor of the execrating pose called Le rêve de Podalisque.

The Mysteries of Heron Dyke are jealously guarded to the close—it is only fair to confess that all along we suspected that the missing housemaid had fallen down the cellar, and not into the well—but when revealed they are tame to exasperation. The main plot, borrowed from a French source, is a promising one, but feebly and tediously worked out, the supernatural glamour fading out in the fussy description. Only on attaining his seventieth birthday can the old Squire cut out his heir, and leave his estate to his favourite niece.

Finding that he cannot possibly survive so long, he arranges for the concealment of his death with an old servant and a wicked doctor. The niece is sent away, the old man secluded in his chamber, and when dead is coffined, and stowed away in a pantry for two months. When the birthday comes, old Aaron personates him, and is shown to the tenantry and opposition lawyers. The death is then formally given out, and the funeral takes place. This sounds very painful, but it does not read so badly. The idea is, however, too tempting not to be copied, and we must soon expect to read of a heavily pensioned general officer being embalmed and stuffed, and taken out daily in the carriage by his widow for years and years till she has portioned off all her lovely daughters at the expense of the Government.

E. PURCELL.

CURRENT THEOLOGY.

Messianic Prophecies. Lectures by Franz Delitzsch. Translated from the MS. by Samuel Ives Curtiss. (Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark.) An interesting specimen of the theological lectures actually delivered at a German university. Prof. Curtiss, of Chicago, feeling the want of a good handbook to the Messianic prophecies for his own pupils, prevailed upon Delitzsch (so eminent a name can dispense with titles) to permit the publication of a course of his lectures from the Collegienheft of one of his students. The book is in some ways very suitable to be a handbook; it is well arranged, and full of the results of exegetical research. In other ways, it might throw a student back; it is dogmatic, and rather largely based on the personal theories of the author. A dogmatic tone is no demerit in a German professor; he knows that, in order to hold his ground, he must use an emphatic style of speech. Over the way, another lecturer maintains widely different views with equal emphasis; and the students, the more intelligent at least, hear and compare both. We in England are less comparative in our theological studies; we mostly hear one side only, so that a dogmatic tone may do great harm in a text-book. Messrs. Clark, at any rate, have done their best to counteract this one-sidedness of study by publishing, not only Delitzsch, but Riehm and Oehler. The Messianic Prophecy of the one and the Old Testament Theology of the other are both unusually well translated and less dogmatic than this Büchlein of Delitzsch.

DR. BAKHUYZEN, of Utrecht, has published a remarkable essay on conjectural emendation of the text of the New Testament (series of prize essays of Teyler's Society, Haarlem). He begins with the history of the conjectural criticism of the New Testament, which he traces up to Origen and St. Jerome; then argues for its necessity; and finally offers some of the principal results of its application. Among other points, he lays great stress on the evidence of the irregular use of conjecture by the transcribers of the MSS. A really imposing number of New Testament critics appear to have admitted at least the principle of conjectural emendation; Markland and Bentley are among the English authorities.

The History of Esarhaddon, King of Assyria. Translated from the Cuneiform Inscriptions upon Cylinders and Tablets in the British Museum Collection; together with Original Texts, a Grammatical Analysis of each Word, Explanations of the Ideographs by Extracts from the Bilingual Syllabaries, and List of Eponyms, &c. By Ernest A. Budge, M.R.A.S.

(Trübner.) There is much to attract the scholar in this volume. It does not pretend to popularise studies which are yet in their infancy. Its primary object is to translate, but it does not assume to be more than tentative, and it offers both to the professed Assyriologist and to the ordinary non-Assyriological Semitic scholar the means of controlling its results. No one, of course, will suspect us of supposing that a Semitic scholar can in any sense "control" this translation without a preliminary acquaintance with the Assyrian grammar and mode of writing. But it is perfectly possible for a Semitic scholar, in the ordinary sense of the word, to test, up to a certain extent, the work of the professed Assyriologists, provided he has devoted considerable spaces of time to these preparatory studies, and all the more so if he has worked a little, under proper guidance, at the inscriptions himself. There is much in the work of some of the English and French Assyriologists which awakens distrust in the minds of "ordinary Semitic scholars"—much haste, much ill-regulated conjecture, much ill-advised quest of popularity. It is with all the more pleasure that we notice the seriousness and comprehensiveness of Mr. Budge's view of his difficult task, and we hope that he will go on prosecuting the study of the other Semitic languages, and not content himself with the slightly meagre philology represented in the vocabulary. Such a work as Dr. Lotz's recent edition of the inscriptions of Tiglathpileser I. (in which, among other gains to the lexicon, occurs the proof that the Assyrian sāsu is not "the horse" but "the elephant") stands far, very far, above the standard reached by Mr. Budge. The editor has used all the principal historical texts, and compared every line with the original tablets and cylinders in the British Museum, so that, even where the texts have been lithographed before, this edition will remain for the present the standard one. But there are texts in this volume, as in Mr. George Smith's Assurbanipal, which are taken directly and for the first time from the original monuments. Parts of the texts have been translated before by M. Oppert; but one is glad to see the work of a more sober, though far less brilliant, student. Mr. Sayce has revised the proofs with an eye to the Assyrian; we could wish that some experienced corrector had pointed out the tiresome misprints in the English (thus: "Lepsius" for "Lipsius," "Newstadt" for "Neustadt" in the Addenda; "Semetic" for "Semitic," p. 138; "Vau" for "Van," p. 146; "collossi" for "colossi," p. 153).

Commentary on the Psalms. By the late H. v. Ewald. Translated by the Rev. E. Johnson, M.A. Vol. I. (Williams and Norgate.) There is no more sympathetic commentator on the Psalms than Ewald; Nachempfindung, as the Germans expressively call it, is one of his highest gifts. The changes of mood so frequent in the lyric poetry of the Hebrews yield their secret to his "awakened ear;" and Ewald was just as sympathetic, just as illuminative, in his treatment of the old Arabic poetry, as those who attended his lectures will testify. Ewald stands as a critic midway between the extreme traditionalism of Hengstenberg and the extreme scepticism of Kuenen; and his chronological re-arrangement of the Psalms is a great help to their fruitful study. We are too much in the habit of supposing that, if not by one man, they at any rate represent one age and one class of writers. No one who has worked through Ewald (no laborious task in this instance) can remain the victim of such an illusion. The translation is good, considering the difficulties of Ewald's style, though not as free from errors as the surpassingly excellent version in the same series of Ewald's great work on the Prophets. Two mis-prints struck us at once—"conversation" for "consecration" on p. 165, and "Eclessa" for "Edessa" on p. 96.

THE Rev. P. H. Mason, Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, has at length published his long announced Rabbinic Reading-book, under the title of Shemets Davar (Cambridge: J. Hall; London: Simpkin, Marshall and Co.). Section 1 contains selections from the book of "Jashar," with illustrative passages from various Rabbinic writers below the text; section 2 consists of the Commentary on the Song of Songs by Wolfsohn and Bril, in Mendelssohn's Rabbinic Bible, with notes chiefly from Rashi and R. Isaac Arama. There is also a very full Introduction explanatory of the contents.

Die Chronologie der Bibel, des Manetho und Beros. Von Dr. Victor Floigl. (Leipzig: Friedrich.) An ingenious attempt to widen the basis of the controversy between the adherents of the chronology of the Bible on the one hand and those of the chronology of the cuneiform inscriptions on the other, by showing that the system which suits the inscriptions is in equal harmony with Berossus, Menander, and Manetho. To criticise such a work here would be out of place. The suggestion that some of the high numbers in the Old Testament are produced by taking half-years for whole years seems to a lay reader suspicious.

The Evidential Value of the Acts of the Apostles By J. S. Howson, D.D., Dean of Chester. The Bohlen Lectures for 1880. (Isbister.) A worthy Episcopalian citizen of Philadelphia attempted lately to transplant thither the institution of the Bampton Lecture; judging by the present specimen, the attempt has hardly succeeded. Lectures, to be of any permanent value, must be addressed to an audience of students; in the absence of such an audience, apologetic lectures, in particular, will be popularised till they approximate to ordinary sermons, and then they can hardly have any value at all. As Dean Howson says, "Though I am writing evidentially, I am addressing Christians;" a preacher is forced, not only to reject the non-Christian point of view, but to avoid realising it. The Dean has shown before that he knows something about the questions connected with the Acts, whether we rate his contributions to the study of them very highly or not; but in this little book he contributes nothing to the study or criticism of them—only makes a few edifying remarks on what he has a right to think the best results of such study and criticism.

Critical Handbook to the Greek New Testament. By E. C. Mitchell, D.D. (Religious Tract Society.) The plan of this book is one well worth working out; the execution of it is unequal, but on the whole bad. The first part, on the authenticity of the New Testament Scriptures, is worthless as an argument, though it gives a catena of the literature bearing on the Scriptural history that may be convenient in its way. The "History of the Text of the New Testament" is far better—it gives the facts in a brief and telling form, though not so good as Scrivener's lectures, with which the author seems not to be acquainted. The best things in the book are the facsimiles from MSS.; the tables also, and the map, with names of the writers belonging to each country, would be very useful if they were more accurate. The last word in the book is its worst blunder; Zosimus the Pagan historian is confounded with Zosimus the Bishop of Rome.

The Consolations of the Christian Seasons. Part I. By G. E. Jelf, M.A., Canon of Rochester. (Walter Smith; Masters.) This is simply a course (or half-a-course—reaching from Advent to Rogationtide, not, as the title-page says, to Easter) of very good sermons. "Consolation" is to be understood in the general sense of παράκλησις.

A Treasure-Book of Consolation, by B. Orme (Marshall, Japp and Co.), on the other hand, is a collection of extracts in prose and verse of a character supposed to be "consolatory" for each various type of trouble to which human life is liable. It is a much larger book than Dr. Vaughan's or even Mr. Fosbery's similar one; much less classical, but not in bad taste.

Clerical Reminiscences, by "Senex" (Seeley), is a fairly amusing and instructive autobiography by an Evangelical clergyman of the old school who led an active and varied life in England and India. With a very little trouble it would be easy to identify the author (though he thinks otherwise), and the knowledge of him the book gives us would make one think well of him. But there are a few anecdotes, chiefly about his Indian acquaintances, that he had no business to publish.

Triune Life, Divine and Human: a Selection from the Commonplace Books of J. P. Greaves (Elliot Stock), introduces us to a disciple of Jacob Böhm whose personality deserved a record. It is less certain that the record of his thoughts deserves preservation; he hardly contributes any new ideas, even to those who are in sympathy with his method and spirit. And it is almost as great an anachronism for a mystic of our day to ignore Swedenborg as for a physiologist to ignore Darwin.

The Endowments of Man, by Bishop Ullathorne (Burns and Oates) is a very thoughtful and able work, but cast in a form that does not do justice to its merits. It consists of fourteen lectures, originally delivered in a seminary, but "enlarged for a wider audience;" and this enlargement is probably a mistake. The book is not really adapted, in its external form, for "a wider audience" than that of students of Catholic theology; it would scarcely be intelligible to others; and even these will find the book rather heavy, both to the hand and to the attention, though the effort of the attention will be well repaid. And it is most likely in the process of enlargement that there has crept in some uncertainty, or, at least, obscurity, as to the scope and object of the book. To judge it fairly, it should be read as a statement of the Catholic philosophy of human nature, adapted to the present state of knowledge and to present modes of thought—the premises of the Catholic religion, and even of the Thomist philosophy, being taken for granted. But the first lecture gives the impression that it is intended to prove these first principles controversially as against those of Materialism; and it is no discredit to the writer that he has failed to do this. What he was competent to do—what he probably intended to do—he has done very well; the only thing to be regretted is that he has not succeeded in making a solid and useful work more attractive.

The New Truth and the Old Faith, by a Scientific Layman (C. Kegan Paul and Co.), is an avowed attempt at the reconciliation of religion and science—well intentioned, but rather ambitious (not to say conceited) than powerful. The writer knows enough of the physical sciences to see where their doctrines appear either to contradict or to supersede those of the Gospel; and he has faith enough in the Gospel to persist in finding room for its doctrines even where science fails to support them but does not (as he holds) exclude them. But his knowledge of science is that rather of a well-read man than of a first-hand "scientific" student; and his attitude towards received Christianity is somewhat wanting in Christian humility. He assumes that his own frame of mind is a very common one, and finds fault with Christian preachers for not addressing themselves to it; but he refutes his first assumption by the fact that one of the chief faults he finds with them is that their sermons are not longer.

Studies in Genesis, by Prof. Stanley Leathes (Elliot Stock), begins with a clumsy attempt to correlate the cosmogony of modern science with that (or rather with those) of the Bible, and then passes into sermons on the lives of the Patriarchs—that on Joseph, at least, being a tolerably good one.

The New Werther, by Loki (C. Kegan Paul and Co.), contains just one true and sound sentiment—that the book itself is “beneath the notice of the critic.”

NOTES AND NEWS.

A NEW work, entitled Chapters from the History of Old St. Paul's, by Dr. W. Sparrow Simpson, editor of Documents illustrating the History of St. Paul's, published by the Camden Society, is in the press, and will be published shortly by Mr. Elliot Stock.

PROF. SAYCE, whose accident in Cyprus we regretted to report last week, has gone on to Beyrūt. It is unlikely, however, that he will be able to walk or ride for some little time, or that he will return to England before March.

DR. EUGENE OSWALD has undertaken to write a series of short articles on contemporary English authors for J. Meyer's forthcoming Biographical Dictionary of Contemporary Literature, edited by F. Bornmüller, and also to revise and complete a set of articles on the same subject for the new edition of the famous Conversations-Lexikon. He has lately contributed to another German Lexicon a summary of English literature during the last ten years.

MESSRS. W. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN AND ALLEN announce for early issue the first two volumes of their new “Illustrated Library of the Fairy Tales of All Nations,” being translations of the Märchen of W. Hauff and the Cuentos Populares of Fernan Caballero. Other volumes are in preparation, which will include representative fairy collections by authors of other nationalities.

MESSRS. WILSON AND M'CORMICK have been appointed librarians to the Ruskin Society (“the Society of the Rose”) of Glasgow. The collection of books forming the library of the society has been removed to 120 St. Vincent Street, where in future the books will be available for the use of members.

MESSRS. THORIN, of Paris, announce the publication, in parts, of a Registrum of Pope Innocent IV., edited by M. Berger, of the Ecole Française de Rome, which is doing such excellent work in historical investigation. The Registrum will contain 8,600 documents, for the most part unpublished, extracted from the Vatican archives.

PROF. HOFFMANN, of Kiel, has sent a letter to the members of the German Oriental Society to inform them that he has felt obliged to withdraw his name from the society on account of an article written by Prof. Albrecht Weber, of Berlin, in reply to Prof. de Lagarde, an article which Prof. Hoffmann thinks ought never to have been published in a scientific journal. Other members of the German Oriental Society have likewise complained that such articles should be published at their expense.

THE next meeting of Orientalists, which is to take place at Berlin in September, was to have been presided over by Prof. Lepsius. Though the veteran professor is recovering from his illness, he has had to decline the honour of the presidency. Prof. Dillmann, the distinguished Ethiopic scholar, has been elected in his stead, and has accepted the office.

WE have received specimen sheets of a most elaborate treatise on Phonetics by Dr. Techmer. The general title of his work is Introduction to the Science of Language. The first part, “On the Acoustic Motions of Expression,” consists of one column of text and notes, and another column containing eight lithographed tables and 188 wood-cuts.

WE are informed that the Index to the Estates Exchange Register, hitherto published at the Mart, Tokenhouse Yard, which gives the results and notices of all sales by auction, will in future be incorporated in a new high-class weekly journal, entitled Land, which will be published early in February by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.

AMONG the books preparing for early publication by Messrs. Trübner and Co. we notice the following:—A Manual of the Malay Language, with an Introduction, tracing the Influence of Sanskrit on Malay, by W. G. Maxwell, Assistant Resident at Perak; A Grammar of the Frisian Language, by A. H. Cummins; France and the French, translated from the German of Karl Hillebrand; The Science of Beauty: an Analytical Enquiry into the Laws of Aesthetics, by A. W. Holmes-Forbes; Mormonism: its Rise, Growth, and Purposes, by J. A. Macknight, a nephew of the late Brigham Young; The Legend of the Wondrous Hunt, from the Hungarian of John Arany, by E. D. Butler; Education, Scientific and Technical, by Robert Galloway; The History of India, Vol. IV., Part 2, comprising the Muhammedan Period, by J. T. Wheeler; The Coins of the Jews, with about Three Hundred Illustrations, by F. W. Madden; On the Diamonds, Coal, and Gold of India, by J. Ball; Edgar Quinet: his Early Life and Writings, by Richard Heath; The History of Materialism, from the German of F. A. Lange, translated by E. C. Thomas, Vol. III.; a Third Edition of Mr. W. Blades' Enemies of Books; The Imperial Gazetteer of India, published by command of the Government of India, by Dr. W. W. Hunter, in nine volumes; The Religions of India, translated from the French of A. Barth; The Mesnevi of Mevlânâ Jelâlu'd-Din Muhammed er-Rûmî, metrically translated from the Persian, by J. W. Redhouse; The Six Jewels of the Law, with Pali Text and English Translation, by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris; and Pictures of Indian Life, by R. N. Cust.

THE Council of University College, London, have appointed Signor Farinelli, their Professor of Italian, to deliver the Barlow lectures on Dante. The course of twelve lectures will be given in Italian, commencing in May; and the public will be admitted without payment or tickets.

THE Joseph Hume Scholarship in Political Economy at the same college, of the value of £20 per annum for three years, has been awarded to Miss Ada Heather Bigg.

A NEW work of fiction, by A. F. Pisemski, The Freemasons, is included in the series of Russian and foreign novels published by M. Hoppe, of St. Petersburg. The incidents refer to a period when Freemasonry had already been proscribed in Russia, and the lodges closed by order of the Government. Among the characters portrayed or discernible are Spersanski, Prince Golitsyn, and other historical personages.

THE first number of a new weekly Spanish review, La Revista Ilustrada, has appeared. It contains a sonnet by Nuñez de Arce, together with a portrait of that distinguished poet. There are also a poem by Manuel del Palacio, and contributions by Señors Colorado, Gomez Ortiz, and others.

DR. STARK, of the leading girls' college in Kentucky, has lately printed a short account of his linguistic experiences in England. He found that the natives talked the American language, but talked it badly, not nearly as well as it is spoken in America. There were many dialects and vulgarisms about, and a frightful misplacement of the initial h. Even an Anglo-Saxon professor, too, called which “wich,” and another light of Old English pronounced hard “hawd;” the letter r was generally swallowed. The doctor was also terribly persecuted by a conspiracy of malignant folk who would tell him they were “very pleased,” and did not know that very ought not to be applied to participles. But he was comforted by being present at one of the spelling-reform discussions of the Philological Society, and by the sight of the editor of its Dictionary, Dr. Murray, and his Scriptorium or Dictionary-den, where Mr. Herbage and other helpers were hard at work. Dr. Stark was also gratified at finding in the House of Lords that the two speakers he heard—the Duke of Argyll and Lord Granville—were able men as well as lords, while the rest of the Peers who only gabbled were unknown nobodies. His remedy for the reporters not being able to hear the Lords' speeches is simply an American elocutionist to teach the Peers how to use their voices. Dr. Stark's article is lively reading.

AN amusing mistranslation in Vapereau's Dictionnaire des Contemporains has been pointed out by M. Aug. Monod in the Revue Critique. Mr. J. Cordy Jeaffreson's Novels and Novelists from Elizabeth to Victoria is turned into Journaux et Journalistes depuis Elisabeth la Victorieuse!

ON the 28th ult., the university town of Cambridge in America celebrated the 250th anniversary of its foundation, described in the New York Herald as its “quarter millennial.” Cambridge was first called Newtown, and did not receive its present name until Harvard College was built in 1639. The first printing-press in America, and, indeed, the only press existing for forty years, was set up here in the same year. The commemorative proceedings included an historical address by Col. Higginson, a speech from Mr. Longfellow, and the recital of a poem by Dr. O. Wendell Holmes.

MISS BRADDON's new three-volume novel, Asphodel, will be issued next week by Messrs. J. and R. Maxwell, who will also publish an edition in one volume of Miss Braddon's recent work, Just as I am; a new edition of Carleton's Irish Peasantry, illustrated by the late Daniel Maclise, R.A.; and Mr. W. S. Hayward's novel entitled The Woman in Red.

The Bradford Antiquary is the title of a new journal which will shortly be issued by the Bradford Historical and Antiquarian Society. It will consist chiefly of contributions relating to buildings and sites of local interest.

THE French Academy has in the usual course recommended to the Minister of Public Instruction the name of M. Emile Deschanel for the Chair of Modern French Literature in the Collège de France, vacant by the death of M. Paul Albert. Among the other candidates were M. Paul Stapfer, M. Gustavo Merlet, and M. Alfred Assollant.

WITH reference to the death of Gen. Petrosevitch, the eminent Central-Asian explorer, during the fighting at Geok Tepé a few days ago, we are asked to state that his geographical account of Akhal and Merv, and his map of the unknown Turcoman region, will appear next week in Mr. Marvin's new work, Merv, the Queen of the World; and the Scourge of the Man-stealing Turcomans.

WE have received Nigh Unto the End; or, a Passage in Sacred Prophecy (Rev. xvi. 12-15), now in Course of Translation into History, considered, by the Rev. J. C. Boyce, M.A. (R. Bentley and Son); Children's Treasury of Bible Stories, Part III., by Mrs. Herman Gaskoin (Macmillan); Johnston's Bible Atlas (W. and A. K. Johnston); The Inner Life; or, Spiritual Guidance in the Ways of God, adapted from the French of l'Abbé Baudrand (John Hodges); Signs and Wonders, by a Clergyman (Trübner and Co.); The Children of Holy Scripture, by L. Massey (Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.); The Christian in his Relations to the Church, the World, and the Family: a Course of Lectures, by Daniel Moore, M.A. (Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.); Doubts, Difficulties, and Doctrines (William Stevens); &c.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

Journal of the Royal Historical and Archaeological Association of Ireland (October 1879). Mr. O'Gorman discusses the site of the Battle of Clontarf, having noticed that the locality pointed out by tradition could not have been visible from the walls of Dublin, while history tells us that the Danish King of Dublin and his Irish Queen watched the defeat of the foreigners with different feelings, and her imprudent exultation cost her the loss of some of her front teeth. Mr. O'Gorman fixes the centre of the fight at Mountjoy Square and Summer Hill, extending across Granby Row, Great Britain Street, Mary Street, and on to St. Mary's Abbey, assuming the weir of Clontarf, where Turlough, Prince Murchad's son, was found dead, to be near Ballybough Bridge. Mr. W. F. Wakeman reports his examination of an alleged discovery of the skeletons of men who had fallen in one of Cromwell's battles at Toam and Killicarney, in the county of Cavan, which on investigation turned out to be a pre-Christian cemetery, with urns and flint implements, one of which is serrated in the most delicate style. At Ardmore Bay a crannoge has been discovered below high-water mark, which Canon Hayman suggested must have been constructed before the separation of Ireland and England.

THE double number of the Library Journal for September-October contains a very full abstract of the proceedings of the Edinburgh meeting of the Library Association, which is, however, disfigured by the usual misprints. Surely even American librarians might be expected to know what are the initials of the leading librarians in this country. The number also contains a paper on "The Relation of the Public Library to the Public Schools," in which Mr. S. S. Green urges once more his favourite topic that librarians and public-school teachers should work hand in hand to spread the love of books among the scholars, and at the same time to teach them how to use them. The paper is full of information and suggestion. Mr. W. E. Foster writes on "Methods of securing the Interest of a Community;" and elsewhere in the number illustrates one of his "methods" by contributing three of his interesting "Reference Lists on Special Topics"—viz., on "The Founding of Boston," prepared for its 250th anniversary; on "H. W. Longfellow;" and on "Robert Burns," to accompany the recent dedication of the statue in New York. The number includes the usual bibliographical Notes and News; but the editors should not have given without correction the very inaccurate figures as to English libraries, quoted from an Austrian source, on p. 294, where we are gravely told that "Great Britain has two hundred libraries," the true figure being a good deal nearer two thousand.

IN the current number of the Revue Historique M. Tratchevsky ends his paper on "France and Germany under Louis XVI." He summarises the results of the policy of Vergennes, and says that his faults were due to incapacity and feebleness of character. Yet, though he was fiercely attacked, his opponents had the same fundamental ideas of hatred to Austria and indulgence towards Prussia. He concludes that the French Monarchy, before and after the Revolution, was the chief instrument in promoting the integration of Germany; when it changed its policy, Russia took its place. The editor of the Revue appends a note in which, while recognising the novelty of the view thus put forward, he promises a defence of Vergennes in a future number. M. Gazier continues his extremely interesting article on "Henri Grégoire and the French Church" during the Revolution. M. Loiseleur, in reply to the criticisms of M. Bordier, of Geneva, defends the prevalent opinion that the Massacre of St. Bartholomew was not premeditated. On this point the editor of the Revue adds an excellent note, suggesting that the truth lies between the two opinions; probably the idea of a massacre had been frequently discussed, though the particular occasion had not been determined, and so the actual occurrence was not the result of a deliberate scheme.

THE Theologische Tijdschrift for January contains a suggestive article on de Coulanges' La Cité antique by Dr. H. Oort, subjecting the work to a keen criticism from the point of view of researches into the origin of Israelitish society; a survey of the relation of modern theology to Christianity, à propos of the works of Hartmann, the philosopher, and others (ending with a hearty acceptance of Individualism), by Hugenholtz; another "Pauline study" on the Pauline gospel, by Dr. A. H. Blom; a fresh part of Dr. Meyboom's series on the witness of Paul at Jerusalem; and a valuable review of Bühler's critical and historical essay on the Old Catholic movement.

THE current number of the Neue Archiv für Sächsische Geschichte und Alterthumskunde, which concludes the first volume, contains an historical essay of some length on "Giovanna Casanova and the Comici Italiani at the Polish-Saxon Court," by the Royal Chamberlain, F. A. Freiherr v. Byrn, and a contribution on the "History of the Dresden Picture Gallery," by Hermann Freiherr von Friesen. There follow some critical notices of new books relating to Saxon history; and the editorial additions, Index, List of Contents, &c., make up the number. The magazine, in its new shape, has found well-merited consideration in Germany on account of its skilful management by the editor, Dr. H. Ermisch.

IN the Archivio Storico Italiano Signor Saltini publishes from the Medicean archives a Life of the Grand Duke Ferdinand I. of Tuscany, written by his secretary, Piero Usimbardi. Signor Caffi contributes a notice of the Venetian painter, Giacomello del Fiore, whose paintings are little known, the most important being in the Duomo of Ceneda. Baron von Reumont gives a critical account of the recent researches into the history of the two famous navigators, John and Sebastian Cabot.

IN the Revista Contemporanea of December 15 Señor Bonisana, writing on the "Agents of Production in Agriculture," suggests, among other reforms in Spain, that the Positos, or State granaries for lending seed to poor farmers, should be converted into agricultural banks for advancing money on security of stock or crops. Tinajero y Martinez, in "Polystoria," deals with French historians up to the eighteenth century, marking out Bossuet's Histoire universelle for special praise. Diaz Sanchez, in the "Guia de Simancas," catalogues the contents of Sala XII., relating to the latter half of the eighteenth century, those of war and marine from the fifteenth to end of seventeenth century in Salas XXXIV. and XXXVII., and those of war in the eighteenth century in Sala XII. Suaña y Castellet continues his Life of Antonio de Nebrija. From a review we learn that the house of Perez Dubrull, Madrid, is bringing out a new "Coleccion de Escritores castellanos," at four pesetas, or francs, per volume. Tomo 1 is the Romancero Espiritual of I. Valdivieso, from the edition of Toledo, 1612.

NEW ITALIAN BOOKS.

Appressamento della Morte. Cantica inedita di Giacomo Leopardi, con uno Studio illustrativo di Zanino Volta. (Milan: Hoepli.) This publication has been a real event in the literary world, and the poem—its juvenility notwithstanding—has been the most important result of the chase for Leopardian relics. It had long been sought for in vain; the Leopardi correspondence contained frequent references to it, and a fragment of the opening canto, with some slight variations of form and the title of "Cantica della Morte," had been found among the poet's papers, and published in a posthumous volume edited by Signor Viani. Both by this gentleman and by Count Carlo Leopardi (who had read and admired the poem in his youth) diligent but fruitless search had been made for the entire work. It was known to have been written in 1816; sent in the following spring to the Milanese publisher Stella; to have been rejected by him, and then passed on to Pietro Giordani, the well-known writer, in whose judgment the poet had implicit faith. Giordani's opinion was favourable, but not enthusiastic. He advised Leopardi to be in no hurry to publish, suggesting that it would be better to put the poem aside for a few months, and then revise it by pruning its exuberances and clearing away a few obscurities of expression. After a time, Leopardi seems to have forgotten the poem entirely, and it was never heard of again until 1862. Signor Volta disinterred the MS. from among a pile of mouldy books and papers in a lumber-room of Casa Volta at Como. At first, Signor Volta, who is the grandson of the celebrated discoverer of the electric pile, believed the neatly written MS. to be nothing more than a copy of the lost work, but, on comparing it with undoubted autographs of Leopardi, he became convinced that it was in the poet's own handwriting. We glean from Signor Volta's rather prolix account that his long delay in publishing the poem was caused by his wish to incorporate it in a future volume of Signor Viani's collection of Leopardian remains, but that other reasons at last induced him to give it to the world in a separate form. Of its historical and literary importance there can be no doubt, although opinions differ as to its intrinsic merits. Throughout it bears the imprint of the poet's style and mode of thought. It lacks the forcible sobriety and concision of later productions, but has the true poetic ring and many noble thoughts felicitously expressed. It consists of 300 terzine, divided into five cantos; and is not only Dantesque in plan, but plainly moulded on the lines of the Inferno. The poet is wandering over a moonlit plain, his soul filled with dreams of happiness, when a furious storm rises and overwhelms him with terror and despair. At last, the thunders cease; a flood of unearthly light dazzles his eyes, and in the midst of the splendour appears the shining vision of his guardian angel, who reveals to him his doom of early death. To soothe his despair, the angel proceeds to show him a vision of the pain and vanity of the world he is so soon to quit. First, a long procession of the victims of love, and this serves to introduce the love tragedy of "Ugo of Ferrara," narrated by the shade of the murdered lover, and no altogether unworthy pendant to Dante's "Francesca da Rimini." Then comes the monster Avarice, with his followers crushed to the earth by enormous weights fastened to their throats. Afterwards appear the philosophers in the train of the giant Error, who rushes forward at headlong speed—but vanishes very slowly. The next vision represents war and tyranny personified as fearsome, blood-stained monsters, with their respective following of repentant heroes and despotic rulers. Canto iv. opens with a vision of Oblivion and its victims, and this is perhaps the most original, as it is undoubtedly the most characteristic, portion of the work. The gloomy figure of Oblivion on a car drawn by tortoises is followed by a melancholy band of those who vainly hoped for fame.

"desio che pianto e morte frutta;"

"Oh vita trista, oh miseranda cura!
Passa la vita e vien la cura manco,
E'l frutto insiem con lor passa e non dura . . .
Misera gente, ah non vivesti assai
Per trionfar d'Oblio che tutto doma;
Invan per te vivesti e non vivrai."

These lines forcibly depict the passionate despondency of Leopardi at eighteen, and his revolt against the obscurity to which the conditions of his life seemed to irrevocably condemn him. Next in succession is a vision of Heaven; and the poet's heart dilates with joy as he beholds the splendour "that his tongue refuses to describe." He sees the triumphant hosts of redeemed souls, and his angel points out to him the "divine poet" who "del dir nostro pose la gran pietra." Canto v. is an anti-climax, since, notwithstanding the previous pageant of celestial joys, it is occupied with the poet's passionate regrets at being snatched away from life. Nevertheless, it is full of beauties; and the first verse sounds the note of the subdued grief precluding resignation.

"Dunque morir bisogna, e ancor non vidi
Venti volte gravar neve 'l mio tetto,
Venti, rifar le rondinelle i nidi?"

But again, later on, nature revolts against the harsh death decree, and his anguish is expressed in bitter lament that he should be deprived of life "before he has left his footprint upon the earth."

"Morir quand 'anco in terra orma non stampo?
Nè di me lascierò vestigio al mondo
Maggior ch' in acqua soffio, in aria lampo?"

These lines, written in 1816, recall the epitaph dictated a few years later by our dying Keats, "Here lies one whose name was writ in water," with this difference, however, that the despair of the young English poet was genuine and unmitigable, while that of Leopardi, although equally genuine, was born of transient presentiment, and could therefore be alleviated by hope. In fact, we know that even in the closing hours of his suffering life he still had hopes of surviving to an advanced age. The canto closes with the stoical line, and the whole poem, in spite of abundant defects, when considered as a work of art, or compared with maturer fruit of Leopardi's genius, is very remarkable in its intense subjectiveness, as a memorial of one of the dreariest periods of Leopardi's dreary youth, and, above all, as a proof that the future sceptic was at that time in the full fervour of religious belief.

"Mi copra un sasso, e mia memoria pera;"

Studj di Critica e Storia letteraria. Di Prof. Alessandro d'Ancona. (Bologna: Zanichelli.) Italy boasts few scholars of learning equal to that of Prof. d'Ancona, and the four essays composing the present volume furnish new proof of the wealth of the author's resources. The first essay, "Il Concetto dell' Unità politica," traces the thread of national aspiration through the labyrinth of Italian literature from the fourteenth to the nineteenth century, but dwells chiefly on its manifestations in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. It is, however, in the study on the life and works of Cecco Angiolieri da Siena, the little-known humorous poet, who was a contemporary of Dante Alighieri, that Prof. d'Ancona's powers of research and keenness of criticism are best displayed. This very interesting paper affords a vivid picture of the life and manners of pleasure-loving Siena towards the close of the thirteenth century. The out-at-elbows, dissolute Cecco was, in fact, the earliest humorous poet of Italy; and Prof. d'Ancona considers him a perfect embodiment of his fellow-townsmen's most salient characteristics—in the Middle Ages, at all events. Dante speaks of the Siennese as "quella gente vana;" many old authors were fond of comparing them to the French; and our author has to cross the Alps to find a congenial contemporary in the person of Maître Rutebeuf, the starving Trouvere, who, like poor Cecco, sang his domestic woes in lilting rhyme. The paper on the Novellino and its sources is a valuable contribution to the history of that much discussed collection of tales; and "The Leggenda d'Attila" is an exhaustive summary of the different versions of this great legend, and the sources from which they were drawn. Indeed, Prof. d'Ancona's exhaustiveness occasionally becomes almost a defect. He has the whole history of Italian literature so completely at his fingers' ends, has so prodigious an amount of valuable information to give on its every element and item, that he has little space to spare for graces of style. Probably he is content to command the ear of the studious public, and would care little to captivate the passing attention of those who run as they read.

Marco Foscarini e Venezia nel Secolo XVIII. di Emilio Morpurgo. (Florence: Lemonnier.) This is a careful study of Venice in the last century, and in Marco Foscarini, last but three of the Doges, Prof. Morpurgo finds a perfect type of the spirit of the Venetian oligarchy. His portrait of the grave, podantic, learned patrician, the acute, if narrow, thinker, who during his last ten months of life enjoyed the supreme dignity to which he had so long aspired, is interesting rather than attractive. Reading of his studious life, his laborious and Casaubon-like preparations for the great History that he never completed, his carefully planned orations, we cannot help agreeing with Gasparo Gozzi in finding Foscarini a very dull companion. Indeed, the spectacle of Gasparo Gozzi, the witty, laughter-loving satirist, confined in a still country house, "where there was neither play nor amusement," and bound to listen to eternal dissertations on political economy from the earnest lips of his host, would make no bad theme for a picture. No wonder that, in writing to an intimate friend, Gozzi should have said "that, having to be so terribly serious by day, so many ridiculous ideas came to him by night that he would often lie in his bed roaring with laughter for a couple of hours or so." Certainly Gozzi was hardly the man to appreciate the solid qualities of a politician who, as ambassador to the Court of Turin, drew up the Relazione di Savoia, which is one of the most remarkable political documents of the eighteenth century. Foscarini's best-known work is, however, his unfinished History of Venetian Literature. Crammed with erudition, it is a store of information to all students, and will always keep its place as an invaluable book of reference. There is much interesting material in Prof. Morpurgo's chapter on Venetian society towards the end of the last century, but the author's style is somewhat too grave and laboured for so brilliant a topic. Strange to say, the bustling, witty, playful turmoil of Venetian life is seldom handled with due lightness and brilliancy of touch by Italian writers. The volume includes several of Foscarini's orations before the Consiglio Maggiore, never before published, and also some important documents relative to the Ducal elections, &c.

Sessanta Novelle popolari Montalesi, raccolta da Gherardo Nerucci. (Florence: Lemonnier.) Signor Nerucci is a well-known student of folk-lore and the Tuscan dialects. His present volume contains sixty tales gleaned from the peasantry in the neighbourhood of Pistoia, and transcribed verbatim in their characteristic phraseology. Naturally, the majority of these tales are merely Italian versions of popular tales common to all Aryan nations; there are also a few of distinctly literary origin, such as Pipetta Bugiardo, immediately derived from tale lxxv. of the Novellino, and some others that have travelled to Italy from the far East. In the Cento Sporte are clear traces of descent from Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves, with just the variations imposed by Italian surroundings. Le tre Melangole d' Amore is almost identical with the Hungarian version of the Three Pomegranates; while Zelinda e il Mostro is a droll combination of Beauty and the Beast and Jack the Giant-killer, the giant, of course, being replaced by the Southern Orco. The quaint little story of Fanta-ghirò, the princess disguised as a man, who escapes detection of her sex notwithstanding the various tests applied by the King's mother, strikes us as being one of the most thoroughly Italian in spirit, but it is not of popular origin. Signor Nerucci attributes the importation of many of these tales to the numerous pilgrims who, in the Middle Ages, and even down to very recent times, were accustomed to beg their way among the Tuscan mountains on journeys to this or that sanctuary. Down to the last century many hospices for the use of pilgrims still existed in Tuscany. Then, having been diverted from their original purpose, and become haunts of thieves and assassins, they were suppressed by the Grand Ducal Government. One great charm of this volume is the absence of all attempt to give literary form to these old friends in Tuscan dress. They are related exactly as they fall from peasant lips during the long winter evenings when old and young collect together by the light of a lantern in the warm cow-houses and pass their time in eating chestnut-cakes, in spinning, talking, flirting, and listening to these old-world tales.

Ricordi della Vita intima di Enrico Heine. Per sua Nipote Maria Embden Heine (Principessa della Rocca). (Florence: Barbèra.) The lady who has the honour of being Heine's niece and daughter of his favourite sister Lötchen (M^{me}. Embden) has had the idea of giving to the world a few anecdotes of the great poet gleaned from the personal reminiscences of her mother and grandmother. So far so good; and as two or three of these anecdotes have escaped the researches of Heine's biographers, Princess della Rocca has done well to give them to the world. But with this our praise of the book must end. It is badly put together, contains a large proportion of irrelevant padding, and is chiefly eloquent in proclaiming the bitterness of the writer's dislike for her uncle's wife. Nor does it carry out the promise of the title-page as regards rectification of the errors of Heine's biographers. It is true that the lady denies that Heine was ever really in love with his cousin Amalia, who was commonly thought to have inspired some of his most despairing lyrics. But that is a point which no one but the poet himself could have really cleared up, and a man's nearest relatives are not necessarily the confidants of his deepest feelings. Again, the author positively denies the existence of the autobiographical memoirs supposed to have been sold by Gustave Heine to the Imperial Library of Vienna, and asserts that Heine's frequent mention to intimate friends of these memoirs is by no means a proof that he had really written them. In her opinion this pretended autobiography merely consists of a few pages that he consigned to his wife, charging her to threaten their publication in the event of his family's refusal to provide for her support after his death. Now we cannot see why the acknowledged existence of one set of memoirs should be positive proof of the non-existence of a more voluminous work. The question remains open.

LINDA VILLARI.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ALI, Syed Amer. The Personal Law of the Mahomedans (according to all the Schools). W. H. Allen & Co. 15s.
 BASTIAN, A. Die heilige Sage der Polynesier. Kosmogonie u. Theogonie. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 6 M.
 BECKER, B. H. Disturbed Ireland. Macmillan. 6s.
 DUCAMP, Maxime. Exposition des Deux-Siècles: Souvenirs personnels. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
 ELLIS, R. W. Decoration and Furniture of Town Houses. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 12s. 6d.
 ECKMANN-CHATHAN. Les Vieux de la Vieille. Paris: Hetzel. 3 fr.
 JAUBERT, Madame O., Souvenirs de. Paris: Hetzel. 3 fr. 50 c.
 LOISEAU, A. Histoire de la langue française: ses Origines et son Développement jusqu'à la fin du XVII^e Siècle. Paris: Tassin. 7 fr. 50 c.
 LONG, J. Farming in a Small Way. Smith, Elder & Co. 7s. 6d.
 MACQUOIN, K. S. In the Ardennes. Chatto & Windus. 10s. 6d.
 MARINAR, A. H. A Polar Reconnaissance. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 16s.
 MIKLOT, J. Vie de Sainte Catherine d'Alexandrie. Texte revu, etc., par Marins Secret. Paris: Hurel. 30 fr.
 MITCHINSON, A. W. The Expiring Continent: a Narrative of Travel in Selangor. W. H. Allen & Co. 18s.
 NORMAN NEWMAN, C. L. In Zululand with the British, throughout the War of 1879. W. H. Allen & Co. 16s.
 STEDMAN, E. O. Edgar Allan Poe: a Monograph. Sampson Low & Co. 3s. 6d.

HISTORY.

- CALENDAR of State Papers relating to Ireland of the Reign of James I. 1615-25. Ed. C. W. Russell and J. P. Frendergast. Rolls Series. 15s.
 CARON, N. L. Michel Le Tellier: son Administration comme Intendant d'Armée en Piémont (1640-43). Paris: Durand. 7 fr.
 CUSANS, J. E. History of Hertfordshire. Parts XV. and XVI. (completing the work). Chatto & Windus. 42s.
 ELLERBOROUGH, Lord, The Political Diary of. Ed. Lord Colchester. Bentley. 30s.
 FORSTER, C. T., and F. H. B. DANIELL. The Life and Letters of Oskar Ghieselin de Busbecq. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 24s.
 GAUFREY, J. Claude Baduel et la Réforme des Etudes au XVI^e Siècle. Paris: Hachette.
 GERVASE of CANTERBURY, Historical Works of. Vol. II. Ed. W. Stubbs. Rolls Series. 10s.
 GRAUN, O. Essai sur les Origines du Fonds grec de l'Ecurial: Episode de l'Histoire de la Renaissance des Lettres en Espagne. Paris: Vieweg.
 MOULIER, C. L'Inquisition dans le Midi de la France aux XIII^e et XIV^e Siècles. Paris: Fischbacher.
 SCOTT, Sir Sibbald. The British Army: its Origin, Progress, and Equipment. From the Restoration to the Revolution. Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co. 21s.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BISCHOFF, C. Generalregister üb. die ersten 10 Jahrgänge (1808-77) der Berichte der Deutschen chemischen Gesellschaft zu Berlin. Berlin: Friedländer. 30 M.
 BUNGE, A. Untersuchungen zur Entwickelungsgeschichte d. Beckenbühels der Amphibien, Reptilien u. Vögel. Dorpat: Karow. 2 M.
 HARTWIG, E. Beitrag zur Bestimmung der physischen Labration des Mondes aus Beobachtungen am Strassburger Helioaster. Karlsruhe: Braun. 3 M. 50 Pf.
 HELMHOLTZ, H. Popular Lectures on Scientific Subjects. Trans. E. Atkinson. Second Series. Longmans. 7s. 6d.
 MOREAU, E. Histoire naturelle des Poissons de la France. Paris: Masson. 60 fr.
 ROSENTHAL, J. General Physiology of Muscles and Nerves. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 5s.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- CONSTANS, L. La Légende d'Edipe, étudiée dans l'Antiquité, au Moyen-Age et dans les Temps modernes. Paris: Maisonneuve. 10 fr.
 COSYN, P. J. Kurzgefasste Altweitsächsische Grammatik. I. Thl. Die Vocale der Stammsilben. Leiden: Brill. 1s. 6d.
 GELHAUS, S. Rabbi Jehuda Hanassi u. die Redaction der Mischna. Wien: Löwy. 1 M. 80 Pf.
 KUNKEL, G. Der Consonant G in Deklamation u. Gesang. Frankfurt-a-M.: Mohlau. 1 M.
 MÜLLER, F. Max. Selected Essays on Language, Mythology, and Religion. Longmans. 16s.
 REINARDI Phlegitacus. Aditio versione Sch. Brantii. Rec. H. Lemcke. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 ROTHENBERG, J. De subzarum mutatione in lingua franco-gallica. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M.
 TEBERCHI, M. Thesaurus synonymorum linguae hebraicae. Wien: Löwy. 3 M. 40 Pf.
 UEBERSICHT, bibliographische, üb. die griechischen u. latein-ischen Autoren betreffende Litteratur der Jahre 1867-76. 2. Abth. Lateinische Autoren. 1. Hft. A-Hyginus. Göttingen: Dieterich. 4 M.

 WARNCKE, P. De dativo pluralis graeco. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 1 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ROMAN WALL.

King's College, London: Jan. 15, 1881.

Attention has been called to the fact that in the last few weeks the Roman wall has been come upon in two places—near the Minories and near Houndsditch. In the latter place the lower part of one of the old towers has also been discovered. It is of this old tower that I wish now briefly to speak.

The piece of the wall with which it is connected is that which once ran, and still in great part runs unseen, from Aldgate to Bishopgate, parallel to Houndsditch. The houses on the east side (strictly the north-east, as the streets to be mentioned run from south-east to north-west) of Duke Street, Bevis Marks, and Camomile Street—πολλὰν ἀνομάτων μορφή μία—are built upon the old wall. The houses on the west side of Houndsditch, therefore, stand just outside the wall—on the site of the ditch that lay beneath it.

Fitzstephen, it is well known, mentions that the wall of London was well towered. These are his words, which contain several points of interest:—

"Habet ab oriente arcem Palatinam maximam et fortissimam, ejus et area et muri a fundamentis profundissimo exsurgunt, oamento cum sanguine animalium temperato. [There are many other traces of this superstition.] Ab occidente duo castella munitissima [Baynard Castle and Montfichet], muro ubi alto et magno duplatis heptapylae portis intercontinuante, turrito ab Aquilone per intercapedines [at intervals]."

Between Aldgate and Bishopgate there were four towers still standing in Queen Elizabeth's reign, as we see from Aggas' map, which must have been familiar objects to Chaucer, especially during his residence in Aldgate House close by, as well as to certain eminent Elizabethans who also lived in the neighbourhood.

Of these four towers, the first, counting from Aldgate, is described by Maitland as still sound in 1753. It rose to the height of twenty-one feet.

The second, some eighty paces further on, was also existing at that time, though in a rent and decayed condition, but not too bad to be the abode of "a baker." It stood opposite to Gravel Lane. "The door thereof," says Maitland, "is in Shoemaker Row, fronting the passage into Duke's Place."

The third, I think, is that recently uncovered and considerably demolished. This stood in what is now Bevis Marks.

The fourth stood in Camomile Street. This is the tower that was discovered some four years ago, and forms the subject of the admirable work just issued by the London and Middlesex Archaeological Society, written by a distinguished antiquary, Mr. John Edward Price.

The third tower would seem to have resembled the others. In Aggas' map it is just like its neighbours. The basement of it is of about the same dimensions. Unhappily, no such treasures of sculpture have been found in it as in the Camomile Street tower. Just one piece of carved stone—a fragment of a column or something of the sort—has been disinterred, as I was informed by the foreman of the works on the spot. As in the case of the Camomile Street tower and of others (e.g., those at Burgh), this of Bevis Marks was, in its lower stages, built separate from the wall—built with an interval of some inches between it and the wall. One peculiarity is to be mentioned, which perhaps some competent person will explain.

A segment of it, on the south side, was built quite distinct from the rest, with a facing of its own on the side where it joined the main block. Otherwise, the work consisted of solid masonry.

"One of the best illustrations of such a tower," to borrow Mr. Price's words concerning that of Camomile Street,

"is still standing at Rome; it is attached to the great wall of Aurelian, is quite perfect, and is situate between the Porta Pinciana, a work of the Emperor Honorius, and the more modern gateway known as Porta Salaria. Such towers were solid at the base, hollow in the centre, and united to the main wall at the top. They usually contained a room with windows or loopholes for watchers. In the wall of Aurelian a corridor runs from one tower to the other; this was the sentinel's walk constructed within the thickness of the wall."

It may be noted that the neighbourhood of these towers probably explains the name Castle Street in some instances of its occurrence. There is a Castle Street running between Bevis Marks and Houndsditch; a Castle Street not far from the north-west corner of the wall, near St. Giles's, Cripplegate. Castle Baynard was originally one of these towers.

I will just add that Mr. Price is of opinion that our so-called Roman wall is of comparatively late date.

"The extensive and irregular line of wall," he says, "which surrounded our city in the Middle Ages, and the foundations of which were carefully examined and surveyed at the time of the Great Fire of 1666, can hardly be identified with that erected by the Roman Government prior to the close of its occupation in the fifth century. The wall, as we know it, must belong to a later period. It may, indeed, have been erected any time prior to the coming in of the Normans."

Elsewhere he thinks that "it may fairly be assumed that Bishopgate was constructed at the same period as the wall;" and he mentions the tradition that the bishop commemorated in the name Bishopgate was Erkenwald, who died about the year 683. Mr. Price's views are entitled to a respectful hearing; but to most people it will be very difficult to believe that work so thoroughly and characteristically Roman dates from a post-Roman era. To most people such a theory will seem but a brilliant paradox. There is no time just now, however, to discuss it.

JOHN W. HALES.

MR. SWINBURNE'S "STUDIES IN SONG."

Dublin: Jan. 15, 1881.

I regret that in my review of Studies in Song I inadvertently allowed an error to occur in one line of a quotation. The passage I desired to comment on runs thus:—

"Till all have ceased for ever, and the sum
 Be summed of all the aimless curaea told
 Out on his head by all dark seasons rolled
 Over its cursed and crowned existence," &c.

As to Alcilia, Mr. Swinburne and I have no difference. It pleased me that my friend, the English editor, should receive his tribute of graceful verse. And I could not allow the service rendered to literature by my other friend, the German editor, to be forgotten. Almost the last task of Dr. Wagner's life, a labour of love, links my name with his in a way for which I cannot but be grateful. I claimed for him a distinction which is his due.

EDWARD DOWDEN.

3 St. George's Square, N.W.: Jan. 17, 1881.

Your correspondent of last week appears to contend that Alcilia was not revived by my late friend, Prof. Wagner, for the benefit of Englishmen as well as Germans. The contrary is the fact. Prof. Wagner had separate copies of his Alcilia reprint made especially for sale in England. He put these into the hands of his English publishers, Messrs. George Bell and Sons; he sent copies to me and several other Shakspeare and Early-English students; and I mentioned the fact of his Aleilia reprint being on sale here in one of the literary weeklies. The reprint was also advertised. The fact was well known to all literary antiquaries. The book has been continuously on sale for the last six years. It is so still, at 5s. Dr. Grosart's costly reprint, £1 11s. 6d., being only for his fifty subscribers, welcome though it may be to those who can afford it, is not so truly a revival of the Aleilia for us as Prof. Wagner's cheaper edition of 1875, that anyone can buy at a bookseller's.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

THE BUDDHIST "NOBLE PATH."

Oxford: Jan. 10, 1881.

It is well known that the Buddhist Salvation consists of a life in accordance with a system called the "Noble Path," which comprises these eight divisions:—Right Views, Right Aims, Right Speech, Right Conduct, Right Livelihood, Right Exertion, Right Mindfulness, and Right Meditation. Those terms seem wide and general; but Buddhist religious writers have, as is often the case in the progress of a religious system, confined the application of the terms to certain fixed and technical meanings. Thus the first, Right Views, is said to concern the four great truths of Buddhism; the sixth, Right Exertion, is confined to the particular kind of exertion called the four sammappadhānas; and again, the seventh, Right Mindfulness, to the so-called Satipatthānas, and the eighth, Right Meditation, to that particular kind of meditation which the Buddhist writings call Jhāna meditation.

I have just discovered in the Bodleian Library a MS. of one of the so-called Abhidhamma books, the Dhamma-Sangani, not hitherto known to exist there, and I find in it an interpretation of the Noble Path different from the technical one above referred to. Now, the relation of the Abhidhamma-Pitaka to the other books of the Buddhist scriptures is a very interesting question. Some scholars think that the Abhidhamma books are all later than the Suttas and the Vinaya; others think that they are at least as old. The explanation of the Noble Path may throw some light upon this. The Dhamma-Sangani explains Right Views as "investigation through wisdom and knowledge, the acquirement of scholarship, proficiency and cleverness through the faculty of distinguishing and of inference, wisdom conducive to spiritual insight, thoughtfulness, the force and power and substance and brightness and light and lustre and brilliancy and jewel of wisdom, the absence of ignorance." The Dhamma-Sangani explains the other details of the Path in a manner similarly free from the technical limitations above referred to. I may add that the same explanation of the Path occurs also in the Vibhanga, the second of the Abhidhamma books. In comparing the explanation of the Sutta and Abhidhammapitaka we find that they agree only in the explanation of Right Speech, Right Conduct, and Right Livelihood, which constitute, if I may be allowed to say so, the less philosophical parts of the Path. The other explanations seem much simpler, more comprehensive and natural, than those of the Sutta books. They are, therefore, probably older rather than later. It looks as if they were written before the technical limitations came into use. But, of course, this only throws some light on an interesting question, and is not at all decisive. It may be that in neither of the two explanations given have we the genuine one. Wherever the sins of the body and the speech are mentioned, those of the mind also are referred to. Not so in this case.

I hope to enter more fully into this question in an edition of the Dhamma-Sangani, together with parts of Buddhaghosa's Commentary, which I am preparing, and in which I hope to show that at least those Suttas of the Sutta Pitaka which consist merely in an enumeration and explanation of different philosophical terms are later than those of the Abhidhamma books which treat of the same subject.

We, of course, want all these books edited and translated before we can get at a decisive answer; and I hope that Prof. Max Müller will include one or more of the Abhidhamma books in his series of Sacred Books of the East, which has already given so many valuable contributions to the student of religious systems.

OSCAR FRANKFURTER.

THE ORIGIN OF THE SONNET.

47 Connaught Street, W.: Jan. 18, 1881.

The reviewer of English Sonnets by Living Writers in last week's ACADEMY observes that I "seem to lean too much to the theory of the sonnet's Provençal origin." So far, however, from this being the case, there is not one word of mine in the whole of the volume in favour of that theory, and, as a matter of fact, I do not agree with it.

With reference to the supposition that the sonnet was introduced into Europe by the Arabs, it may be mentioned that in the literary history by Hammer-Purgstall we find notices of some ten thousand Arab authors before the year 1258, and a principal feature of their literature was its poetry. The Arabs overran Sicily and other parts of Europe in the ninth and tenth centuries. The earliest Italian poem which has been preserved to this day is by Ciriaco d'Alcamo (Alcamo being an Arab fortress in Sicily), and was written about 1175. Mr. Charles Tomlinson (apparently quoting from Signor Trucchi) states that in the earliest known productions of the Italian troubadours the form, style, and modes of thought of the Arabian poets are to be traced. Unfortunately, all the Italian poetry before 1175 and a large portion of the Arabic poetry are lost to us, and cannot, therefore, be referred to. The influence of Eastern literature can be traced also in the Northern-French writers at a very early date, and their Le Casteioient d'un Père is an early translation from the Arabic; while Thibaut and his followers, the leading Northern-French poets of the thirteenth century, had visited the East, and were probably well acquainted with Oriental poetry.

That the sonnet and other forms of verse were written at a much earlier date than is usually supposed would appear probable when we remember that there is preserved at Milan a Latin treatise upon Italian poetry, written in the year 1332 by M. Antonio di Tempo, in which no fewer than sixteen different species of sonnet are enumerated. It would be interesting to know which was considered the "correct" sonnet in those days; perhaps, the sonetto-in-rondo.

The origin of these forms must remain to a great extent a matter of conjecture, but it is quite possible—nay, even probable—that the sonnet was first written in Italy, and the rondeau, &c., in France.

SAMUEL WADDINGTON.

"EARN" OR "ERNE" = TO GRIEVE.

Cambridge: Jan. 18, 1881.

Mr. Arber kindly sends me the following:—"Ye talke so unreasonably well, it maketh my herto yerne"—John Bon and Mast. Person, p. 20 of Percy Society reprint, 1852 (No. 94); first printed by J. Daye and W. Seres, about 1548.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

Helenburgh, N.B.: Jan. 17, 1881.

Prof. Skeat recently wrote some valuable notes on this verb, particularly as used by Shakspeare. As I am not sure that he took any of his illustrations from Marlowe, I think the following from Edward II., IV. vi. 70, may be welcome to those interested in the subject:—

"Abbot. My heart with pity earns to see this sight,
A king to bear these words and proud commands."

The text is that of Mr. Fleay's annotated edition (Collins), where the note given on "earns" is simply that it is the "old spelling of yearns." Either there should have been no note at all, or the editor should have pointed out how the word in its "old spelling" was applicable to the sentiment of the passage.

THOMAS BAYNE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, Jan. 24, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Problems in the History of Civilisation," by Dr. E. B. Tylor.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "On the Last Roman, Byzantine, and Romanesque Periods of Art," by Mr. E. Armitage.

TUESDAY, Jan. 25, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schöber.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion on "Deep Winning of Coal in South Wales."

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "The Future of Canada," by Sir Alexander Gale.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 26, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Suggestions for preventing London Smoke," by W. D. Scott-Moncrieff.

8 p.m. Telegraph Engineers and Electricians: President's Inaugural Address; "Some Experiments on Induction with the Telephone," by Mr. A. W. Heaviside.

8 p.m. Literature: "On a Recent Tour in Spain, with Notices of the Al-Hamra and of Spanish Customs," by Mr. K. N. Cast.

THURSDAY, Jan. 27, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Troubadours," by Mr. F. Hueffer.

4.30 p.m. Royal.

7 p.m. London Institution: "The Manufacture of Indigo from Coal," by Prof. H. E. Armstrong.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Early Italian Masters of the Fourteenth Century," by Mr. E. Armitage.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "A New Mechanical Furnace, and a Continuous System of manufacturing Sulphate of Soda," by Mr. J. Macfarlane.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, Jan. 28, 8 p.m. Quaker: "On Sponges," by Mr. B. W. Priest; "On Filarias," by Dr. T. S. Cobbold.

8 p.m. Philological: Final Spelling Reform Meeting, Mr. H. Sweet.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Modern Spectroscopy," by Dr. Schuster.

SATURDAY, Jan. 29, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Amazons," by Prof. Colvile.

SCIENCE.

Spinoza: his Life and Philosophy. By Frederick Pollock, Barrister-at-Law, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

MR. POLLOCK'S book on Spinoza is undoubtedly the fullest and ablest account of the great philosopher which has yet been given in English. It is evidently based on thorough and careful study, and, in spite of certain tendencies in the critic which are somewhat alien to the author, it often shows remarkable insight into the bearing and consequences of Spinoza's thought. I am not sure that a reader unacquainted with Spinoza's own works would carry away a perfectly true impression of him from the account given by Mr. Pollock. The points which by Spinoza himself are most strongly emphasised are often, as it seems to me, thrown into the shadow; while other points to which he assigns less relative importance are brought into greater prominence. Still, I do not think that Mr. Pollock has anywhere directly misstated Spinoza, or has even given any false impression of him which may not be corrected from the words of Mr. Pollock himself. And even the one-sidedness of his view of Spinoza to which I shall have to refer has its value, as it is the opposite one-sidedness to that of which Spinoza's critics have generally been guilty, and brings to light that aspect of his doctrine which has been least attended to. No one, I think, however well he may be acquainted with Spinoza's writings, can study Mr. Pollock's book without gaining some fresh insight into the manifold bearings of the Spinozistic philosophy. In the following criticism, however, I must confine myself to one or two of the cardinal points upon which a difference in the interpretation of Spinoza must turn.

Philosophers of an earlier age often contain, in a kind of implicit unity, different aspects or elements of truth which, in a subsequent time, become distinguished from, and opposed to, each other as separate philosophies; and which, only after they have thus been distinguished and opposed, become capable of a final and satisfactory reconciliation. In no case is this truer than in that of the great writers of the first period of modern philosophy; Descartes and Spinoza hold together, and as it were in solution, many thoughts and tendencies which we usually regard as natural enemies. As a Pantheist, and even in some sense a Mystic—for his great logical principle, "determinatio est negatio," is the very principle of Mysticism—Spinoza contains much that is utterly opposed to the secular and individualistic tendencies of the eighteenth century; yet, in his assertion that the individual is the real, in his condemnation of asceticism, in his attempt to separate the affirmative from the negative element in thought, and in his aversion from teleology, he has much that connects him very closely with Locke and Hume. His full bearing cannot, I think, be appreciated either from the point of view of the eighteenth century or from that of the reaction against its secularism and individualism, but only from that peculiarly modern point of view which is the one thing common to the philosophies of Kant, of Comte, of Hegel, and of many others, and from which the Universal and the Individual are not any longer regarded as reciprocally exclusive, but rather as in necessary correlation with each other. Now, as it seems to me, Mr. Pollock looks at Spinoza from a point of view which, though partially changed, like that of Mr. Spencer, by the spirit of the time, is still essentially that of the Individualism of the eighteenth century. And this leads him, while recognising the presence of another element in Spinoza, to treat it as a remnant of Scholasticism clinging to him by reason of the intellectual traditions of his time, rather than as a vital element of his thought. Some critics have seen in the Deus sive natura of Spinoza the natural expression of a consciousness for which nature was lost in God, and have therefore called him an Akosmist. Mr. Pollock sees in it the first utterance of the spirit which, in the next century, omitted the Deus, and spoke of nature alone. "Spinoza does not ignore Theology, but provides a Euthanasia for it" (p. 166). In this view the essence of Spinoza's work was to pour the new wine of science into the old bottles of a theological philosophy until the bottles were burst. In the same spirit, Mr. Pollock at times even objects to the application of the name of Pantheist to Spinoza, because it tends to confuse him with theorists like "the Hindu philosophers of the orthodox Brahmanical schools," who held "that all finite existence is an illusion, and life a mere vexation and mistake, a blunder and sorry plot of the Absolute" (p. 355). Now, without questioning this representation of Brahmanism, it may be remarked that there is nothing more certain than that Spinoza does hold that the finite, qua finite, is an illusion, and that the moral life begins in the rejection of finite objects as ends in themselves (cf. De Emend., chap. i.). All Pantheistic systems begin with the negation of the finite as an independent existence; or, as Spinoza calls it, a res completa; and all, even Brahmanism, proceed, in some way, to the re-assertion of the finite as real in and through God. Spinoza, in like manner, lays it down as his first logical principle that "determination or limitation is negation," and argues from it that it is only imagination that gives to the modes—that is, to particular things—a fictitious independence and substantiality. It is, therefore, by removal of this limitation, by negation of this negative, that we arrive at the truth of things. On this principle it is that Spinoza asserts the unity and continuity of space or matter against the idea of its being an aggregate of discrete parts, and treats number and measure, which involve such discretion, as mere auxilia imaginationis. If he had yielded entirely to this tendency, he would soon have merged all determinate existence in the gulf of the Absolute Substance. Fortunately—and it is here that Mr. Pollock's protest receives some measure of justification—Spinoza regards extension and thought as not limited by each other, notwithstanding their distinction, and thus is enabled to assert the reality of a duality of attributes. And again, in dealing with the modes, he supposes that the negative element by which they are distinguished from God can be taken away without affecting the affirmative element—the conatus in suo esse perseverandi—which is really the self-affirmation of God in them. And by this imperfection of logic—which we may also recognise as an anticipation of a better logic—he substitutes a higher unity of affirmation and negation for their absolute separation. His partial admission of this idea lifts him above other Pantheists, and enables him to turn against the asceticism with which Pantheism was often connected, as a "tristis et torva superstitio;" and a clear recognition and conscious acceptance of it would no doubt have raised him above the one-sidedness of Pantheism altogether, or enabled him to reconcile the relative truth in it with a recognition of the relative truth of Individualism. But such a recognition would necessarily have transformed the character of his philosophy in almost every respect.

Again, Mr. Pollock says, and often repeats, that "Spinoza was a thorough-going Nominalist" (p. 146). In reality, Spinoza was as far from being a Nominalist, in the ordinary sense of the word, as he was from being a Realist. Nominalism conceives the world as a collection of individual substances; Realism, on the other hand, loses the individuals in a unity which is merely an abstraction. Now, Spinoza undoubtedly asserts that "the individual is the real;" but he reduces all finite individuals to modes, and declares that, as to their essence or definite character, they are to be explained, not from each other, but only "from the eternal things which, though singular, yet, on account of their omnipresence and far-reaching power, take for us the place of universals in the definition of mutable (or finite) individual things" (De Emend., chap. xiv.). And the whole scope of Spinoza's theory of method is that an experience which starts from finite individual things must be illusive; and that all knowledge, still more the highest kind of knowledge, the scientia intuitiva, must rest on, and start from, that unity of knowing and being which is the presupposition of all things. Spinoza's denunciations of abstraction, in fact, are quite as much directed against those who, in the spirit of Nominalism, would separate the individual from other individuals and a modo qui a rebus aeternis fluit, as against those who would exalt general terms into real essences. Mr. Pollock partly recognises the truth of this when he declares that "the idea of the most perfect being includes, if it is not equivalent to, the belief that the whole nature of things is one and uniform," and that this "is the first principle of all science" (p. 136). He also explains in another place how it is that Spinoza comes to regard the unity of all things, not as an aggregate reached by combining individual things, but as prior to them, both in thought and in being (pp. 141, 180). But the imperfection of his general view of Spinozism seems to be due mainly to his defective appreciation of the consequences which Spinoza draws from this principle. Thus Mr. Pollock finds the idea of a knowledge sub specie aeternitatis inadmissible, because the "act of knowing and feeling involves change, and change involves time" (p. 185). Spinoza would probably have asked his critic in what way the fact that it takes time to perform the acts of knowing involved in the recognition that the angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles affects the truth or certainty of the proposition. In truth, the knowledge of time and change, like every other knowledge, presupposes a consciousness which is not itself determined by time.

The most important criticism which Mr. Pollock makes upon the Ethics as a whole is closely connected with this. In Spinoza's language the mind is said to be idea corporis, but this Mr. Pollock maintains to be an ambiguous expression, which is sometimes used by Spinoza to signify the "conception of the body," sometimes to signify the mental states corresponding to certain bodily states. "Now a man may easily think of his own body, but he is not always doing so, and when he does his thought will not be accurate, unless he has learned something of physiology; and even if every human being were an accomplished physiologist, the constant relation of the mind as a whole to the body as a whole would be something different from the relation of the knowing to the known. The organic sensations which furnish the ground-work for a large part of our conscious life are not knowledge or concepts" (p. 132).

To this confusion Mr. Pollock traces what he thinks the most important error of Spinoza. Now, I think it may be shown that this charge is due, in part at least, to Mr. Pollock's forgetfulness of the distinction which Spinoza makes, and of the relation which he establishes, between the individual's first imperfect consciousness of himself and of his body and that consciousness to which science or philosophy has to bring him. To make this intelligible we must first indeed admit that Spinoza, though he speaks of the life of animals as similar to the life of man, yet does not find room in his philosophy for any mere feeling which is not the consciousness of an object. "None of the modes of thought," he declares, "be it love, desire, or whatever you please, can exist, unless there be in the individual an idea of the object loved, desired," &c. (Eth. ii., axiom 3). The idea which constitutes the mind is therefore always an idea or consciousness of something, and that something is, primarily the body, secondarily the mind, or idea of the body. But the body can present itself as an object only when it is affected by other objects. Hence our first consciousness is a consciousness of the body in relation to many other objects around it. It is not the physiologist's knowledge of the body, as Spinoza distinctly tells us, any more than it is the physicist's knowledge of external things (Eth. iii., props. 23-28). It is a knowledge in which the consciousness of our body is confused with our consciousness of other things, and our consciousness of other things is confused with the consciousness of our body; and again, it is a knowledge in which the consciousness of the mind itself, the idea corporis, is confused with the consciousness of other ideas, and the consciousness of other ideas with the consciousness of the mind (props. 28, 29). In a word, it is an individually determined consciousness of an external world as "referred to" our own bodies, and an individually determined consciousness of other minds as "referred to" our own mind. But this confused conception of our bodies and of the external world, which is dependent upon the associations of the individual, is capable of being corrected if we look to the communia, the things presupposed and implied in all bodies, and ultimately to the unity of space and extension itself. And, in like manner, this confused and imperfect conception of our minds and of the mental world is capable of being corrected and made clear if we refer it to the thought or consciousness of which all particular thought or consciousness is a limitation. In this way, according to Spinoza, we rise from a view of the world sub specie temporis—i.e., from a knowledge which is a collection of particulars, accidentally associated because of the way in which they have presented themselves together in individual experience—to a view of the world sub specie aeternitatis—i.e., to a knowledge in which things are referred to the unity which is presupposed in all-being and all consciousness alike. Now, if we consider what this view of knowledge involves, we may see that the ambiguity which Mr. Pollock finds in the idea corporis is due simply to the fact that he does not distinguish between what the body and the mind or idea of the body are to the scientific, and what they are to the unscientific, consciousness (according to Spinoza's conception of them both). According to Spinoza, the corpus and the idea corporis correspond to each other, but we must not correlate the corpus as it is in itself or for science with the idea corporis as it is for opinion or imagination. When Mr. Pollock points out that the body, as object of consciousness, is not identical with the body as it is the condition of consciousness, Spinoza would answer that in the former case the critic is speaking of the body as it is to opinion, and, in the latter case, of the body as it is to science, or, what is the same thing, as it is in itself (for of the body except as object of some consciousness we can, of course, say nothing). It is scarcely necessary to observe that in neither case is the body an object by itself, or apart from other objects in the external world.

When these things are taken into account, the only difficulty that remains in the language of Spinoza is that which is caused by his imperfect idealism—i.e., by the fact that, while he maintains that extension or matter is the necessary object of thought, and that it is in reality as it is in thought, he still treats it as having an esse formale out of thought, or different from its existence for thought. Mr. Pollock seems to think that this gulf was transcended by Kant when he referred both inner and outer experience to a common "thing in itself" which possibly may be a mind (p. 176); or that it may be transcended in the method of Berkeley by declaring all objects to be resolvable into feelings—in other words, that "feeling, or something commensurable with feeling, is the only unit and measure of reality." But Kant's real solution of the dualism in question is to be found not in his idea of the noumenon but in his conception of the phenomenal world, as the unity of an inner and an outer experience which are known in necessary correlation to each other and to the thinking self. Spinoza's parallelism of extension and thought has no doubt a certain similarity, as Mr. Pollock observes, to the theories of modern psychologists like Lewes; but the substitution of feeling for thought in such theories necessarily excludes Spinoza's conception of body as the object of mind, and thereby eliminates that idea which connects the Spinozistic with the critical solution of the difficulty. Why Mr. Pollock should call such theories as that of Lewes "scientific" and not "metaphysical" I am unable to see, unless the metaphysics of scientific men is always entitled to be called scientific.

In the above remarks, I have confined myself to a criticism of Mr. Pollock's treatment of a few of the leading ideas of Spinoza. It would, however, be unfair to leave Mr. Pollock's book without saying that it contains a well-written Life of Spinoza, and a full and thorough exposition and criticism of all his works on theology and politics as well as on logic and ethics. It also contains a good account of all the sources from which Spinoza can be supposed to have drawn any important suggestions, and a chapter on the influence of Spinoza upon later philosophy—which, however, gives comparatively but little indication of the greatness of that influence in the case of the later German philosophy.

EDWARD CAIRD.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

THE Geographische Mittheilungen commence the new year in the most promising manner, for the first number contains papers and maps by Dr. Emin-Bey, Clemens Denhardt, and Prof. H. Hoffmann of more than usual value and interest. Emin-Bey describes a journey into the country of the Luri, who live along the western shore of Lake Albert, and whom, together with the Shuli and Wachopi, he considers to be an outlying branch of the Shiluk, seven degrees farther to the north. Several districts which Baker places to the east of the Upper Nile actually lie to the west of that river. It also appears, from itineraries collected, that the distance which separates Dr. Junker's Lubar from the Upper Nile is much greater than shown on existing maps. Lake Albert must therefore be shifted to the eastward, or Junker's route inflected in an opposite direction. Even more valuable is Clemens Denhardt's report on the countries explored by him during 1878 and 1879, which is accompanied by a most valuable map embracing the whole of the country between the coast and Victoria Nyanza, which supplements to an appreciable extent the information published by Wakefield and New. Herr Denhardt ascended the River Tana as far as Masea, which lies 170 miles from the coast in a direct line, and within eighty miles of the snow-clad Kenia. Concerning the latter, the explorer gathered a considerable amount of information, but could obtain no sight of it. The river, as far as explored and surveyed, takes its winding course through a vast plain of red loam, which affords pasturage to the herds of the Somali, who have recently driven the Gallas to the south of the river, and only ceased the war of extermination they waged against them on the interference of the Mohammedan coast population. The Tana, when in flood, inundates the adjoining country, but its ravages are in some measure checked by embankments thrown up by the agricultural Wapokomo. The river, as far as explored, and for a considerable distance beyond, is described as being navigable for vessels drawing three feet of water; and, as European travellers meet with a kindly reception among the riparian tribes, it appears to present peculiar facilities to explorers and commercial adventurers. Native boats ascend the river as far as Hameys, at the foot of the mountains, in thirty days. Prof. Hoffmann's "Phenological Map of Central Europe" exhibits, by a variety of tints, the difference in time between the flowering of plants around Giessen (his place of residence) and in the remainder of the area delineated. The map, as might have been expected, almost resembles a hypsographical one, for the Alps and other mountain regions, no less than the valley of the Rhine and the plains of Lombardy and Hungary, form very conspicuous features upon it. There are, however, several districts, exceptionally favoured by nature, which stand out like oases in the midst of the darker tint that surrounds them. One of these is Berlin, which, as regards the development of its vegetation in April, is only one day behind Vienna, and is four days ahead of Dresden. Far more striking, however, are the Italian lakes, Botzau, Gorizia, Trieste, and Fiume, where plants flower between twenty and forty-three (?) days earlier than at Giessen. In the paper accompanying his map, the author furnishes the data upon which it is founded, and explains the method of its construction.

SIGNOR C. DE AMEZAGA's paper on Asab Bay fills nearly the whole of a recent number of the Bollettino of the Italian Geographical Society. It is accompanied by views and elaborate maps. To judge from one of these latter, the Italian factory and settlement is intended to grow into a town, for, in addition to the stores of the well-known Genoese firm of Rubattino, there have been built, or are in progress, an hotel, an engineering shop, a club house, a bakery, barracks, and other structures. A port also is being constructed. Whether the development of commerce will ever compensate this vast outlay remains to be seen. The French, who have acquired a strip of land in the same neighbourhood, appear to be less sanguine than their neighbours. Obok has never been utilised by them, and the reply recently given by Government to a Marseilles firm, which applied for permission to establish a factory, was anything but encouraging.

By last accounts Col. Flatters had not yet started from Wargla to commence his second surveying expedition for the proposed Trans-Sahara railway, and this unexpected delay in his movements is believed to be due to reported disturbances among the border tribes of the Sudan. On leaving Wargla he intends to strike south-west until he arrives at about 4° E. long., and he will then follow this meridian in his southward march, reaching the Amadghor saline by the Upper Igharghar. If the Tuaregs prove to be as well disposed as he is led to believe, Col. Flatters proposes to explore several lines of country with a lightly equipped party, while the main caravan proceeds by one route. In order to make his examination of the region more complete, he intends to make two flank surveys, one of which will connect his route with El-Goleah on the west by way of Messeguin, while the other will extend to the eastward as far as the routes explored in his former journey.

It is said to be owing to the assistance given him by Signor Geesi, one of Col. Gordon's old lieutenants, that Dr. Junker has succeeded in penetrating into the heart of the Niam-Niam country, where no traveller has been before. On reaching Dem-Bekir, near the southern borders of Dar-Fertit, he ascertained that the chief Ndoruma was in the neighbourhood and desired to learn the objects of his journey and the number of men he had with him. He succeeded in making a favourable impression on him, and this powerful chief returned home to prepare a house for Dr. Junker. The latter afterwards moved on from Dem-Bekir to Solongo, where he found a large body of porters sent by Ndoruma to accompany him to his town.

THE French Government are about to send Comte d'Hérissou to Tunis on a journey of archaeological exploration. In order to facilitate his labours, he will there be joined by Baron de Billing, formerly French diplomatic agent in that country.

IN order to obtain news respecting Capt. Gallieni's party, another expedition started from St. Louis on October 30 for the Upper Senegal, accompanied by a body of armed men. They will push on as far as Bamaku.

It does not appear probable that M. Paul Soleillet will, after all, return to France at present. A friend of his in Algiers has lately received a letter from him, notifying his departure for the interior with his caravan on November 13, and stating that his line of march would take him between Matam and Fort Bakel on the Senegal. The messengers sent by the Governor of Senegal had returned to St. Louis, having failed to overtake M. Soleillet, so that he would appear not to have received the official intimation of the intention to recal him.

THERE is no truth, we are glad to learn, in the rumour of the loss of the Oscar Dickson, with M. Sibiriakoff on board, on her voyage to the rivers of Northern Siberia. The vessel is now safely laid up in winter quarters in one of the rivers which flow into the estuary of the River Obi.

AT a meeting of the ethnographical section of the Russian Geographical Society on the 4th inst., M. Potanin, who has lately returned from an expedition into North-western Mongolia and the Altai, exhibited photographic views of the Shaman costume and its appendages, and also a collection of angons, or objects connected with the religious beliefs and customs of the native races. M. Potanin at the same time gave an account of some curious legends current among them regarding wild animals and the constellations Ursa Major and Orion. In the legends of wild animals the bear plays a prominent part. To Ursa Major are ascribed the creation of the world and of man, and even the foundation of human society. Regarding the Deluge, they have a tradition, the origin of which seems doubtful, that only one man and his three sons were saved, and that one of these sons, Ham, was the progenitor of the Shamans.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Geology in Japan.—A welcome illustration of the interest which is now taken by Japanese in the study of geology and the cognate branches of science is afforded by the recent publication of a Catalogue of the minerals, rocks, and fossils in the Geological Department of the Kobu-dai-gakko, or Imperial College of Engineering at Tokyo. We believe that this Catalogue—which forms a volume of 180 pages, and contains, in addition to the inventories, much useful descriptive matter—is mainly the work of Prof. Milne, who is well known as an enthusiastic geologist and seismologist. By far the most interesting portion of the Catalogue is that which refers to the collection of Japanese minerals—a collection including about 1,700 specimens, mostly representing minerals of economic value. Japan is peculiarly rich in coal, beds of one kind of fossil fuel or another being found in almost every province; but the coal appears to occur in rocks which are not of the same age as our carboniferous system. Of metallic minerals the most important probably are the copper ores. In the year 1877 there were 729 private mines in active operation, yielding about 3,354 tons of copper; to which amount must be added upwards of three hundred tons obtained from the Government mines at Ani and Sado.

THE Rev. Humphrey Lloyd, D.D., Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, died on the 17th inst., in his eighty-second year. His father, the Rev. Bartholomew Lloyd, had filled the same office. Dr. Lloyd obtained his fellowship in 1824, and in 1831 was appointed Professor of Natural Philosophy. He was the author of a Treatise on Light (1831); Elements of Optics (1849); Elementary Treatise on the Wave Theory of Light (third edition, 1874); Account of the Magnetical Observatory of Dublin, and of the Instruments and Methods of Observation employed there (1842); Treatise on Magnetism, General and Terrestrial (1874); Miscellaneous Papers connected with Physical Science, reprinted from the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, the Reports of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, &c. (1877). He edited Dublin Magnetical and Meteorological Observations (2 vols., 1865-69). As the head of a great institution Dr. Lloyd was honoured for his largeness of views, his fine balance of temper, his impartiality and disinterestedness.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE first part of the thirteenth volume of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society contains a number of articles, each of them adding some new and curious facts to our knowledge of the East. Mr. Dowson's article on the "Invention of the Indian Alphabet" is valuable, though leading to a negative rather than a positive result. It shows why the Devanāgarī alphabet could not have had a Dravidian origin, but does not go beyond the statement that the idea of an alphabet probably reached India from without, while the practical application of the idea was her own. Dr. Eddins gives some interesting extracts from Northern Buddhist literature, showing how the conception of Nirvāna varied from extreme sceptical nihilism to very realistic dreams of paradisiacal bliss. Mr. Maxwell's account of the Malay "Chiri" is very curious. It shows that an old Sanskrit formula has been preserved among various tribes of Malays, being read or repeated by heart at the installation of chiefs in Perak and elsewhere, without a word of it being understood. The Sanskrit is so disguised that a few words only can be made out or guessed at here and there, such as Sri-mangala-mantra, parākrama, śrī bhuvana or Tribhuvana, siddha siddha, Maharāja, Rājādhirāja, dharma-saṅgha-sarana (?), śrīdharma-rājādhirāja paramēśvara, &c. It is a subject that requires further investigation, as it may throw light on a very early influence exercised by India on the Malay islands. Dr. van der Tunk's "Notes on the Kawi Language and Literature" are rather fragmentary, but they excite a wish for a more systematic treatment of the language and literature of Bali, for which Dr. van der Tunk is evidently well qualified. Here, too, as in the case of the Chiri, we see clear traces both of Brahmanic and Buddhist influences among the Malays; and the mention of Amitābha, Amoghasiddha, and other Buddhas indicates the source from which these influences were derived. We are glad to find that the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society has opened its pages to articles of a purely popular character also. Prof. Monier Williams, in his lecture on "Indian Theistic Reformers," gives a very useful and readable résumé of the information contained in Miss S. D. Collet's Brahmo-Year-book and Miss Carpenter's and Mr. Macdonald's publications on Rammohun Roy. We do not know whether Miss Collet is responsible for several blunders which occur in the Sanskrit quotations. Surely Brāhma-sabhā or Brahmiya-samāj is not "the assembly or society of God," but the society of the Brāhmas or believers in Brahman; nor is brāhma derived from brāhmā. There is no such word as brāhmā, except in composition; the base from which brāhma is derived is brahman. Why is muktikārana translated by "the Giver of Salvation," and Nir-avayava by "Formless"? This occurs twice; but niravayava has the technical meaning of "without parts." Tattva-bodhinī sabbā does not mean the "Truth-knowing," but the "Truth-teaching," or, according to Boehtlingk, the "Truth-rousing Society." We do not wish to point out any more of these slips, nor should we have blamed Miss Collet or Miss Carpenter for them, but they should hardly have been repeated in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society.

THE eighth edition of Engelmann's Bibliotheca Scriptorum Classicorum (Leipzig: Engelmann) appears under the care of Dr. E. Preuss. The portion now issued (vol. i., pp. 1-400) embraces the literature of the Greek writers down to Homer. A careful examination of several articles has resulted in the discovery of only one slight error in the price of an English book, and no omissions. It appears that this edition has been brought up to date with all the scrupulous completeness and accuracy which distinguished earlier issues, and made the work so indispensable to students.

THE edition of the Querolus issued by M. L. Havet (Paris: Vieweg) is a very elaborate and painstaking attempt to restore this interesting anonymous comedy to its primitive metrical form. M. Havet is not the first scholar who has attempted the task; for the last two centuries the opinion has steadily gained ground that the play had a certain metrical character; and, although most critics have been content to consider it, in the form in which it has come down to us, as written in a very free metre, some have maintained that the numerous irregularities, which for centuries concealed its metrical character from the eyes of readers, are due, not to the carelessness or ignorance of the writer, but to a recasting of the whole into the form of prose. This is the view which M. Havet has adopted. He adduces some forcible a priori arguments for his position, and quotes striking analogies from early French literature for the rewriting which he assumes. The text is submitted to a most exhaustive analysis. Numerous lists are given of the various metrical peculiarities noted. Assuming, as M. Havet does, that the original metre was trochaic tetrameter catalectic, he gives first a list of the verses which have remained unaltered in the prose rendering—these amount to about one-sixth of the whole; then follow lists of verses where a very slight change of inflection or an easy transposition restores the metre; then instances of a more complete change. The reconstruction of the drama which is based upon this analysis is accompanied by a translation into French. A well-written Introduction gives the reader all necessary information as to the character of the piece, its literary history, the MSS., and the previous editions, but this naturally does not contain much that will be new to the student of Roman literature. The distinguishing and original merit of M. Havet's work is in the restoration of the original form of the drama. It would be too much to say that his suggestions are all equally convincing; the editor himself acknowledges the tentative character of much of his work. But there can be little doubt that he has found the true solution of a problem which has perplexed several generations of scholars; and that future criticism of the text of the Querolus must follow the lines which he has marked out in his exhaustive edition.

This forms the forty-first fascicule of the Bibliothèque de l'Ecole des Hautes Etudes, and is a handsome octavo volume of 360 pages. The forty-third volume of the same series is a treatise of more than five hundred pages by the same industrious scholar, De Saturnio Latinorum Versu (Paris: Vieweg). In this work the laws of Saturnian metre are stated with the greatest fullness, and established by all the attainable examples. M. Havet's method is a somewhat extravagant one as regards paper and printers' ink—every one of the two hundred or so extant Saturnian verses is printed again and again, often eighteen or twenty times, as it serves to illustrate a rule—but it undoubtedly has its advantages for the reader. In metrical questions M. Havet follows too closely C. F. W. Mueller to be entirely in harmony with what may be considered the most orthodox school; but his collection of facts is extremely useful, and his acquaintance with the literature of his subject very complete, so that the work is one of real value to the student.

The Letter H, Past, Present, and Future. By Alfred Leach. (Griffith and Farran.) Mr. Leach tells us in his Preface that the publication of this short sketch was suggested by an examination of the contradictory rules current for the pronunciation of h. He wishes to promote a uniform pronunciation, and, at the same time, to correct various popular errors as to the nature of aspiration. His treatment of the subject is confessedly purely popular, and his book must be judged from a popular standard. With this limitation we must say that Mr. Leach has produced a very readable and instructive essay. His range of reading is wide; he has studied Ellis's Early English Pronunciation to considerable advantage; has corresponded with Prof. Skeat, whose views on silent h he sums up in an Appendix; and has evidently given thought to the problems of phonetics. The section on Silent h shows independent investigation, and is a genuine contribution to the history of English pronunciation. The author gives first a tabulation of the conflicting opinions of orthoepists, from Walker downwards, on the pronunciation of the h in honour, herb, &c., and then the results of his own observations of educated usage, and of accounts of their own pronunciation furnished by various eminent literary men, of whom he gives a list. The following are the rules he deduces:—(1) h is silent in heir, honest, honour, hour, and in their formatives, inclusive of honorarium and honorary; (2) in humour the h may be either silent or not, in humor = fluid the h is sounded; (3) h is aspirated in all other words, including, herb, hotel, hospital, humble, humility.

FINE ART.

The Crypt of Canterbury Cathedral. By W. A. Scott Robertson, Honorary Canon of Canterbury. (London: Mitchell & Hughes.)

THIS is a most careful and thorough account (and none the less thorough because temptations to digress on historical and other matters suggested by the subject have been resolutely resisted) of a part of Canterbury Cathedral which is not much known, though it contains a good deal that is of special interest, both historically and artistically.

This, the largest specimen of English crypts, was built by Ernulf, a monk of Bec, who came to Canterbury with Lanfranc, and in 1096 was promoted to be Prior of Christ Church, from which he was removed to the Abbey of Peterborough in 1107. While at Canterbury he rebuilt the choir of the cathedral on a larger scale, making it thirteen feet wider than before, an alteration which necessitated the reconstruction of the crypt beneath. His building shows, by the width of the vaulting spans and the boldness of the design, how rapid had been the progress in architectural skill since the previous crypt had been designed in the time of Lanfranc.

The historical associations alone of this portion of the cathedral would render it an object of great interest. Here Becket's body was secretly deposited on the day after his murder, without any funeral service, in a new stone coffin which, by some strange chance, happened to be lying there. Here Henry II. submitted his back to the blows of the eighty monks of Christ Church, and spent the following night in prayer and fasting as a sign of his contrition for having suggested the violent death of the Archbishop. Here also his son, Richard I., offered public thanks for his escape from a foreign prison. In the Lady Chapel, in the centre of the crypt, the Black Prince directed his body to be buried, and perhaps it was so for a time, until he was removed to the more honourable station in the Trinity Chapel where he now lies. The beautiful screen and reredos in the Lady Chapel were evidently executed during the Prince's life; and Canon Robertson suggests that the work was a spontaneous thanksgiving for the dispensation which permitted him to marry the Fair Maid of Kent, and a memorial of his love for her. His chantry on the south side of the crypt, founded at the Pope's desire as an acknowledgment of the dispensation, and a portion of the body of the building were given in the time of Queen Elizabeth to a congregation of French Protestants, who fled hither to escape the persecutions in their native country, and their descendants continue to perform divine service there on Sunday afternoons.

The general architectural features of the crypt are clearly described and discussed, and plans and drawings added to illustrate them. The pillars which support the vault are decorated in a very unusual style. Alternately they have decorated shafts and plain capitals, and vice versa, the ornamentation becoming richer as it approaches the east end, according to a common rule. All the flutings and spirals on the shafts are beautiful; but the finest example occurs on a pillar in the Chapel of the Holy Innocents, of which the shaft is covered with leaves or perhaps feathers, for it is difficult to say from the illustration which is intended, all overlapping and sloping downwards.

The capitals exhibit some most extraordinary grotesques. One is a sort of nightmare travesty of Bellerophon's chimera with two human heads; while another recalls Hercules and the Nemean lion, but the hero is transformed into a monkey. Some of the animals' heads rather remind one of Assyrian sculptures, especially in the arrangement of the muscles round the mouth and the manes, though the work is, of course, executed in a different spirit. Perhaps some of the strange figures and groups produced by mediæval artists may have been suggested by antique Greek and Roman gems, which, as we know by the monastic treatises on their magical virtues, were by no means rare. This may account also for the impossibility of attaching any meaning to some of these curious productions.

But the most valuable of the artistic treasures of the crypt are the paintings in the apse of St. Gabriel's Chapel, which has long been built up. From the complete silence of Gervase about it in his description of the cathedral written in 1199 it was presumably shut up before his time and unknown to him. Canon Robertson suggests, and with reason, that it was most likely done to conceal the corpse of Archbishop Becket, or some of the treasures of the cathedral, during the troubles which beset the monks after his murder.

The scheme of the paintings is as follows:—In the centre of the roof is Christ in Majesty, surrounded by scenes representing the Annunciation by Gabriel of the births of John the Baptist and of Christ, and by figures of the Angels of the Seven Churches and of Seraphim. The work was, beyond dispute, executed in the twelfth century, and resembles in character the paintings on the chancel roof of the little church of Kempley, in Gloucestershire, which are described by Mr. Micklethwaite in Archæologia, xlv. They are, however, very superior both in design and in execution, as an obscure parish church could hardly obtain the services of as skilful an artist as would be employed in the metropolitan cathedral.

A coloured illustration of the naming of John the Baptist is given, and the other paintings are reproduced in black and white. In the former, the artist's expedient for representing Zachariah's dumbness should be noticed. There are no lips between his gray moustache and beard. The angels at the head of the Majesty possess the apparent power of flight and lightness in which mediæval angels have so much the advantage over their successors of the Renaissance.

It is very curious to compare these photographs with the illustrations in Dart's History of the Cathedral, which was made in 1726, as showing how impossible it is for a man to copy, or even really to see, what he does not understand or feel. No doubt the artist thought his copy was perfectly faithful, but no one could guess that the chubby-faced Seraphim in the engraving were mediæval. Rather they are like members of the angelic host in some seventeenth-century Breviary. At the present time, whatever complaints may be made about the inability of the nineteenth century to produce original architecture or architectural decoration, we can at all events reverence and preserve and copy accurately those remains of our masters in the art which a superstitious hatred of superstition has neglected to destroy.

C. TRICE MARTIN.

History of Painting, Ancient, Early Christian, and Mediæval. From the German of Woltmann and Woermann. Edited by Prof. Sidney Colvin. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

(Second Notice.)

FROM the profusion with which works on art issue from the presses of Germany it would seem as if German readers possessed a very enviable advantage over the rest of Europe. Whether it is that English scholars do not possess the minute and voluminous knowledge, or the faculty for appropriating the knowledge of others, or the courage to undertake extensive literary labours, certain it is that we possess no work which can compare in any of these particulars with those of Germany.

It is somewhat of a reproach to the knowledge and industry of English art-writers to have to rely upon the labours of German scholars in this department as they have so notoriously relied in the department of philology. And such is our insular contentment and lack of enthusiasm that, had an exceptional fellow-countryman—the Gibbon or Buckle of art-history—accomplished a grand work comprising architecture, sculpture, and painting, and extending to seven closely printed and unsparingly annotated volumes like those of Dr. Carl Schnaase, we should be quite satisfied to let well alone; we should not dare to intrude upon the ground made sacred by such protracted labour. Not so the indefatigable savants who lecture on art and archaeology in the Imperial Academies of the Fatherland. They no sacred reverence, no fears of profane intrusion, are able to dismay. If they see an opening they “make for it.” They search archives, take notes of every scrap of evidence, and religiously peruse every item of information which falls in their way. This is the kind of labour which English writers are fond of calling “original research.” The practice of it, which formerly was island-born, is only just now returning to our shores. The other quality which goes to augment these German books is the tremendous faculty possessed by their writers for accumulating material from sources already accessible, but widely scattered and sometimes liable to be overlooked. If a library exists, a German writer is sure to know something about it; if a book is extant, the chances are he knows its table of contents.

To those who merely give a passing glance at a work like that of Schnaase, it might be a question what room could possibly be found for another minute and searching history of art. Those whose pursuits have drawn them to its more intimate examination will see why the late learned art-professor at Strassburg thought it needful to attempt yet another. Woltmann's idea was, by limiting the area of his labours to painting and expanding its details, to produce a history that should be perfectly intelligible to the unlearned reader, yet available as a work of reference for the student.

Schnaase's History of the Structural, Plastic, and Pictorial Arts is not strictly a popular work. In the first place, except in the architectural portion, it is almost without illustrations. A popular book about pictures is seriously incomplete without them. The next objection is that it is too subjective, too abstract, and given to philosophic explorations into the inner consciousness of different art-epochs for the popular taste. Lastly, it is too bookish—a work largely made from other books, even in its illustrations selecting from those already given to the public rather than from inedited examples among existing remains of art. Nevertheless, it is a noble monument of the author's industry, erudition, and capacity for analysis.

But in a work aiming at popularity something more than literary industry is required. To be a work that shall be considered a permanent and accessible standard of authority it should deal rather with works of art than with works on art. The monuments of past ages should be the materials par excellence of such a book, and not shelves of books about them. The latter, of course, are often invaluable aids in suggesting lines of enquiry, or in directing the student to the objects on which, rather than on other men's ideas, his own opinions should be formed. They are the means, not the end. It cannot fail to be noticed, as some explanation of this bookish tendency in German literary efforts, how many of the writers on art have attained the academic rank of Doctor. For art to be made the subject of profound and scholarly research is immensely to its advantage and to the advantage of the student. But we can all see that this is not unattended with danger. The Herr Professor, before he can truly appreciate his duties, must be an artist as well as a scholar; and, when he has attained the qualification of scholarship, he should decidedly and entirely devote himself to the acquisition of that practical and technical knowledge without which book-learning is but a vain, sterile, and pretentious delusion. Now, every German art-professor knows this. But, being a German, he is instinctively a helluo librorum, and when he attempts to write a book the inevitable result is a large disgorging of other men's ideas. The watchfulness of the literary class in every department is very remarkable. It is a sleepless qui vive! Hence, to say that writers “make for an opening” is not altogether an intemperate assertion. Of course, in the domain of art they are professors, or, at least, doctors. The number is legion. Best known of all, perhaps, is Dr. Kugler, whose modestly termed Handbook is, however, bulky enough to be more than sufficient for ordinary requirements. Dr. Lübke, again, hastily goes over the general ground, but lingers more minutely on Church architecture, in two voluminous treatises. Dr. Sighart deals carefully and attractively with the arts of that most art-loving of countries—Bavaria. Dr. Woermann has his eagle eye on antiquity. Dr. Rahn reconnoitres the Carolingians and the arts under the Saxon Emperors, but more particularly their progress in his own picturesque Alpine valleys. Dr. Woltmann takes up the art of the Rhineland and Elsass, and at length, aided by the investigations of the specialists who had assisted Dr. Schnaase, begins the history of painting generally apart from the other branches. This is the work now before us. As the English editor observes, it prefixes to the usual commencement—the story of Christian painting—a notice of the art as practised in ancient Egypt, the Asiatic empires, Greece, and Rome; and treats of the various European schools of miniature painting and mosaic in the Early Christian and through the Middle Ages, down to the advent of Cimabue in Italy and the Van Eycks in the Netherlands. It then takes up the story of painting as usually understood, and will, when complete, trace its development in the various schools of Europe. The portion now published goes down to the Early Italian masters of the fourteenth century. Its intention, therefore, is to stand as the most complete and trustworthy popular history yet offered.

The old writers and so-called connoisseurs, whose classical travels used to entertain our grandfathers, systematically, studiously, and copiously neglected all old painting that was not done either on wall or panel. For a picture to be worthy of their distinguished regard it had to be at least a fresco—all the better if a “quadro.” But between the sixth and the thirteenth century whitewash and other contrivances had rendered these varieties of painting exceedingly scarce as remains; while wars, invasions, barbarian ravage, and general attention to other matters made their production excessively rare. The virtuosi never condescended to consider mere monkish picture-books as having any relation to the lost art of Zeuxis and Parrhasius or the new-found art of Giotto. Accordingly, it became the rule to skip the whole period, and to teach the unsuspecting public that a vast hiatus—a chasm of outer darkness—separated the fading light of classicism from the dawn of the mediæval Renaissance. Mosaic work almost shared the fate of the Gospel-book; imperfectly examined and contemptuously passed by as the uncouth efforts of illiterate barbarians. The possibility never occurred to the critics that the art stream, dried up, as it were, above ground by the fierce heat of social conflict, had sunk beneath the surface, and was running, turbidly it might be, but still running, for half-a-dozen centuries hidden away from the turmoil and strife of the upper world, and destined, when the conditions of existence should be favourable, to reappear.

If, as sometimes happened, a more than usually beautiful volume momentarily attracted attention, the wonder was looked upon as a sort of knickknack for a cabinet, but by no means as forming any organic portion of the long, though often feeble, course of pictorial art. As some indication of the contempt into which miniature art had fallen at the time of the French Revolution—and the story could be repeated of other periods—we may translate a passage from the Preface to the Douay Catalogue (in Catal. des MSS. des bibl. publ., t. vi., p. ix.).

“During the Revolution were destroyed vast numbers of MSS. and books which on the establishment of the literary depôt were taken and placed there, and conveyed afterwards in huge chests to the old convent of the Carthusians, where they were made up into cartridges for musketry and cannon. The paper served for the former, the parchment and vellum for the latter. Young girls to the number of 160 who were then employed in the Chartreuse used daily to sell at two sous each the vignettes and drawings which they cut from the leaves of the MSS. They sold so great a number of them that every house of the Quarter St.-Albin possessed some, nailed to the chimney-piece or to the walls of their rooms.”

One of the earliest writers to insist on the true value of these remains, and to assign their place in the history of art, was the industrious, plodding, yet, it must regretfully be added, untrustworthy German art-critic, Dr. Waagen. In his fifth letter from Paris, in 1835, he alludes to an opinion formerly expressed respecting the “high importance of miniatures towards the History of Painting in every country of Europe.” Had his life been spared it is probable that he would have corrected many of his own hasty judgments—perhaps have repudiated the opinions of his earlier writings. He had intended to make miniature painting the subject of a great and exhaustive work. It suffices at present to know that such neglect is no longer tolerated. After two hundred pages of discourse on early Byzantine art Schnaase says, “by far the most important sources for every epoch are the Miniatures of the Manuscripts.” In regard to this observation he evidently considered himself in the light of a pioneer, for by-and-by (vol. iii., p. 235) he says that for the first time it is necessary to fix the place of miniature art and to remark upon its origin. Dr. Woltmann has fully appreciated these suggestions. How he has fulfilled his complete intention in the present work, or rather in its original, will depend greatly on the requirements of his readers. To the general reader it is deeply interesting and attractive, for it is written in an enthusiastic—even, it may be said, in a poetic—vein. His descriptions at times are themselves glowing pictures in words. Of course this enthusiasm somewhat evaporates in the translation. Indeed, few translators would be conceited enough, or pedantic enough, to ape the style of their authors. It is sufficient for a translator of prose if he conveys without error the meaning of his original. Nor is this the easiest of all possible tasks. On the whole—and in so extensive a work this is no little praise—the present translation is ably and faithfully performed. Little blemishes, of course, there are which a captious critic might be swift to single out, as on p. 202, where the cathedral library at Trieste is put for that of Trèves. There is a little vacillation also between two names for the same place or person. Liège in some passages becomes Lüttich in others. So we have both Regensburg and Ratisben, Otto and Otho. But these are trifling matters, simply little worries to the eye. The student will occasionally find small inaccuracies of reference in the notes and in the translation of technical terms. But, on the other hand, he will meet with valuable editorial interpolations and improvements. A slight rearrangement of chapters and paragraphs, for instance, adds considerably to the lucidity of the text, without injury to the general plan of the work.

Dr. Woltmann, it must be said, is not quite free from the faults which have been observed in other art-writers. He copies somewhat too readily from other books, and relies too easily upon the statements of those who have been found so often in error as to require careful examination. Perhaps the extent of his work has necessitated this frequent taking upon trust. At the same time, it derogates somewhat from the critical value of the result. Yet, with all faults, this new History of Painting may be honestly and truthfully recommended to the reader as substantially fulfilling the hope and promise of its lamented author, and in its English form as reflecting deserved honour for sustained and conscientious labour on the part both of editor and translator.

JOHN W. BRADLEY.

THE OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

(Third Notice.)*

THE large gallery at Burlington House is well fitted to display to advantage such grand compositions as Rembrandt's portrait of Marshal Turenne already mentioned, and the stately portrait-group of John Count of Nassau, his Wife, Son, and Three Daughters (13), by Van Dyck; and the hangers have rightly allowed no historical considerations to interfere with the important duty of selecting the most suitable positions to show off the valuable works of art sent to them for exhibition. It would indeed be difficult to find any fault with the admirable arrangements this year, and, on leaving Room Two for Room Three, the distinction between the “cabinet” and the “gallery” is at once felt. Of largeness of style, as well as canvas, there are, indeed, a few overflows from the greater to the lesser room, as in Van Dyck's portraits of Thomas Wentworth, First Earl of Cleveland, his Wife and Daughter (90), belonging to the Earl of Stafford, and Philip, Fourth Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, K.G. (112), belonging to the Earl of Carnarvon. These, with Miss Clara Montalba's powerful Fluteplayer, ascribed to Velasquez, not to mention Franz Hals' Merry Comrade and a finely modelled head by an unknown artist of the Spanish school (79), lent by Mr. G. A. Burn, are a preparation for the change.

It is a distinguished and courtly society into whose presence one is suddenly ushered. Was it in the painter's or the sitters, this stately elegance of demeanour, this personal pride which is carried so gracefully by all Van Dyck's lords and ladies, so distinct from the solid stiffness of the preceding and the loose insouciance of the next generation, and each so unlike the natural bearing of the eighteenth century? In both, no doubt; for the painter echoes the time, and is not able to impart to it anything higher than is in him. Yet it is strange that a man so alive to the beauty of his generation should not be able to conceive a Madonna of a more refined type than that in his Assumption of the Virgin (132). Here, however, he followed his master, Rubens, but, refining upon him at all events, and with something of a Guido sentiment, made his Virgin thick-throated but well bred, earthly but not gross, while his angels became the most complete hybrid between a Cupid and a cherub that has ever been imagined. This picture, though now a little sickly in colour, is one of the best specimens of Van Dyck's religious art. We wish we could give similar praise to the only example here of his classical imagination—his Nymph and Satyrs (67)—which is like a copy of Rubens at his coarsest.

It is, however, as a portrait painter that Van Dyck is great, and his greatness is very visible here. The figure of the Earl of Cleveland in 90 would be a magnificent figure by itself, but in this composition seems isolated from his wife and daughters, who are by no means so satisfactory as examples of humanity. Fine, also, is the Earl of Pembroke (112), and bravo in attire, the character of the man being scarcely separable from the dignity of his office. Neither of these works can compare with the superb 137, where the dignity of the Count of Nassau and his wife is beautifully relieved by the grace of their children, especially of the son, who, with gently curved figure, dressed in red, stands between his stately parents and sweet-faced, but dignified, young sisters. Finer still in expression and character is the grand figure of Christian Countess of Devonshire (143), with her kindly, but shrewd, face. The portraits of Sir John and Lady Borlase (134 and 139) are of little interest, except in their technical qualities, and for showing that even the art of Van Dyck failed at times to raise his sitters up to the pitch required by his standard of dignity, and to accommodate itself to types of human nature which required a condescension from its fastidious ideal.

Grand was the air of Van Dyck, not stooping to sympathy, but demanding admiration, and giving to the human beings he represented the stamp of their true and social position at the sacrifice of that common feeling of humanity which touches us in pictures of a far earlier period. Such are those of Andrea del Sarto and Moroni in this same gallery, and of Holbein's portrait of Sir Thomas More in the Fourth Room; such also are the portrait of Andrea del Sarto, by himself, and that of Pope Julius II., by Raphael, in the National Gallery. These artists at the beginning of the sixteenth century are more modern in spirit than Van Dyck, giving to their sitters the natural expression which they wore in every-day life, when they were unconscious of observation. However little likely we are to forget that man is the same in all ages, it is yet somewhat startling to see looking at you across three centuries and a-half faces like those of the Moroni (153) and the Andrea del Sartos (150 and 153), which, but for their costume, might be reflections of visitors at the Royal Academy in 1881. The "modernness" of 158 and 153 consists in the total absence of artistic or other affectation, but that of 150 lies deeper. Whoever may be the person here represented, whether the painter himself as stated in the Catalogue, whether his friend Domenico Conti as suggested by Crowe and Cavalcaselle, or someone else (as seems, on the whole, most probable), it is a face with a history, and what is more to the present purpose, a face whose soul is looking inwards while his eyes are looking outwards—a face that dumbly appeals for sympathy and finds it as much now as ever. Modern also in this sense, that no difference of costume or age, no aristocratic air or strange idiosyncrasy, interferes in the least with the sympathy between man and man, is that perfect portrait of Sir Thomas More by Hans Holbein (414) of which Mr. Henry Huth is now the fortunate possessor. Were the face but an ordinary one, its modelling, colour, and executive skill would ensure its recognition as a masterpiece of art; but all these are but appropriate incidents of the main motive of the picture—the expression of a great intellect and noble character brooding thoughtfully. The other Holbein here—Mr. Herbert Blackburne's Portrait of a Lady (201)—though simple in its humanity, brings back to us the stiffness of character and costume of the age of Elizabeth. Modern also in its unsophisticated natural grace is Earl Cowper's Portrait of a Warrior (209), by an artist whose name is not given. There is nothing to wonder at in the hesitation to ascribe the picture to a known name. Though so natural, it has yet a studied elegance of air which is not characteristic of Moroni, whose name at once suggests itself in connexion with the picture. The dark, pale face of Lord Wimborne's Portrait of a Man (162), ascribed to Moroni, seems due either to some dark blood in its subject or to a sinking in colour. It is a fine work, the vivid semblance of a man who, according to the motto on the picture, duritiem mollitie frangit. It is not thus that a contemporary would wish to be painted, wearing his claim to respect on his sleeve; but not very remote modern paintings of virtuosos show that gentlemen such as that represented in the fine work of Parmigiano (145) now, as in the sixteenth century, pride themselves on their aesthetic tastes. This is a fine work both technically and in character, the face showing the serious air which comes of weighing those small distinctions which make all the difference between first-rate and second-rate in matters of art and value. The picture is remarkable for the dimly lighted eyes. The Catalogue is surely wrong in imagining that the landscape behind him is a natural one; whence, if so, comes the light upon his face? Not a glimpse of country through an open window, but a picture, is surely that luminous view.

* Two misprints which I have overlooked may be as well corrected here. For “George Fox” in the First Notice read “Charles James Fox;” and for “de Heems” in the Second read “Van der Heyles.”

The Portrait of a Lady, another of the Andrea del Sartos, from Earl Cowper's collection, is not in such good condition as the rest. Whatever other objections there may be to the theory that it is a portrait of Petrarch's Laura, there is surely none with regard to the face, which is refined and beautiful, and even winning, despite the somewhat cold and removed look in the eyes: a far different type—and one much more suited to a poet's dream—from the grand and massive beauty by Giorgione belonging to the Earl of Strafford. The face of this, with its rich pink and white, its golden bands of hair, and its full lips, reminds one of Paris Bordone; but, with all its fleshly attributes, it has more dignity of character and less voluptuousness than the later master.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

A SERIES of "Art Essays," contributed by Mr. P. G. Hamerton to the International Review, has just appeared in volume form in the United States.

MR. MILLAIS has completed the portrait of the Bishop of Manchester which is to be presented by the "Testimonial Committee" to Mrs. Fraser. It will be sent to the Royal Academy exhibition in May next.

THE erection of a statue to Nicéphore Niepce, the inventor of photography, has been long under consideration, but it has at length been decided that M. Guillaume, of the Institute, should be charged with its execution. Certainly, among the numerous statues that are bestowed in France on distinguished men of all kinds, the humble worker whose brilliant idea has led to such wonderful results in modern photography may well be admitted as worthy of one. It is to be erected next May at Châlons-sur-Seine, the place of his birth.

MESSRS. CASSELL, PETER, GALPIN AND CO. have made arrangements to publish shortly, in monthly parts, Picturesque America, illustrated with steel plates and original wood-engravings. It will be uniform with Picturesque Europe, issued by the same publishers.

ALGERIA is beginning to develop a taste for the fine arts. Not long ago the success of the exhibition at Algiers took everyone by surprise, and now another, which has been organised at Oran, is equally successful. "The pictures sold," says an enthusiastic correspondent, "as if by enchantment."

THE Louvre has just acquired two important Italian bas-reliefs of the end of the fifteenth century, of marble and terra-cotta respectively, representing the Virgin and Child.

M. ROBERT DE LASTEYRIE has been nominated to succeed M. Quicherat as Professor of Mediaeval Archaeology at the Ecole des Chartes; and M. Ch. Clermont-Ganneau, now French vice-consul at Jaffa, has been elected correspondent by the Academy of Inscriptions.

M. DOSNE, according to the Chronique des Arts, is having accurate photographs taken of M. Thiers' study in his house in the Place Saint-Georges, with a view to the precise reproduction of the arrangement of the furniture, books, and works of art in their new home at the Louvre.

THE first number of the Gazette des Beaux-Arts for 1881 is not of great interest, but it contains a very soft and brilliant etching by Boilvin of Rubens' Vierge aux Innocents in the Louvre, with its clouds of babies encircling the Mother and Child. The manner of the master is well preserved, both in the modelling of the flesh and the brilliant lightness of touch. It illustrates the first of a series of papers by M. Paul Mantz on Rubens, which begins well. The same writer also contributes an amusing article on the excellent teacher but mediocre painter, Léon Cogniet, recently deceased at the good old age of eighty-six. This article is illustrated with an effective etching by L. Bonnat, after his characteristic portrait of Cogniet. M. Alfred Darcel descants on the Retrospective Exhibition at Düsseldorf, and M. Camille Lemonnier on the Historic Exhibition at Brussels, and M. Paul Gout gives the second and last of his interesting papers on the Helmet. An illustrated account of recent art publications of the houses of Hachette, Mame, Rothschild, and Charpentier, and a not too favourable notice of Dr. von Wurzbach's monograph on Martin Schongauer, close the number.

THE STAGE.

MRS. BATEMAN.

THE dangerous illness of Mrs. Bateman, regretfully recorded in these columns last week, ended in her death even before the lines which were written had passed into the hands of our readers. Mrs. Sydney Frances Bateman died on Thursday afternoon in last week, and was buried on Monday in the still almost rural churchyard of Hendon, under the grayest and most inclement of winter skies. To the public and to the members of the profession, as well as to her personal friends, Mrs. Bateman's death is a real loss, and her absence from the world of the theatre leaves a blank which will not be filled. The daily papers have chronicled such few outward facts of her life as seemed the most salient—her birth, in Maryland, fifty-seven years ago; her marriage to Mr. Bateman; her literary efforts; her literary sympathies; her theatrical enterprise, first of all with her two elder children, one of them the now long-accepted and widely famous artist, Mrs. Crowe; her assistance given daily and nightly to her husband in the management of the Lyceum; her still later work in raising Sadler's Wells from a position of obscure indigence to a very high place indeed in the ranks of intellectual entertainment. Some of these facts are of themselves sufficient to testify to Mrs. Bateman's possession of qualities remarkable in anybody, but most of all remarkable in a woman. But it needed some personal knowledge of Mrs. Bateman for the strength and charm of her character to be properly appreciated. It is no secret that more than once her work was up-hill work, in which success could only be obtained by an extraordinary attention to the minutest details, as well as by a sagacious judgment exercised upon the larger questions that presented themselves. It is no figure of speech to say that her energy was inexhaustible, and that her courage was never found wanting. Her mind had acquired the aptitude that comes generally only to men—perhaps principally to lawyers and doctors and heads of public departments—the aptitude for immediately transferring a perfectly engrossed attention from one subject to another. Her whole mind was instantly brought to bear upon each subject as it arose, and no variety or superfluity of subjects seemed to weary her or to cause her to slacken her grasp. Thus much for her intellectual capacity, which found ample occupation in the varied business of a theatre, but which could just as readily and effectively have been exercised upon tasks of which the extent and importance are more commonly known. Her taste in literary matters was not only healthy—as, of course, was to be expected from an educated gentlewoman; it was also fine and delicately discriminating. There are, however, few persons of such fine taste and of such high aims in the artistic departments of the theatrical business who would not have been continually betrayed into error of judgment in deciding upon what pieces should be presented to the public. Mrs. Bateman—almost before the playgoing public began to be intellectual—knew how to make a very fair compromise between what her taste inclined her to and what the public wanted. In this way she was able to do a real work of education which would never have been done had she forced the purely intellectual drama into a place not ready for it. Thus it was at the Lyceum, when Mr. Irving appeared in the Bells before he appeared in Hamlet; and thus at Sadler's Wells, when the racy comic melodrama of The Danites was followed in due course by those Shaksperian revivals which were destined—and which we are happy to believe are still destined—to make it clear that Sadler's Wells has most fully resumed the position it held twenty years ago under Mr. Phelps. Of the more private qualities of Mrs. Bateman little need be said. They were of the kind most appreciated in the happiest of English society, and they are therefore more fittingly testified to by her family in quietness than by writers who address themselves to the public. To her influence upon the contemporary stage the best tribute is paid when it is said, as it may be very truthfully, that it is not yet ended.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. EDWIN BOOTH's performance of Othello, given on Monday night at the Princess's Theatre, will not increase, though it may probably sustain, his reputation. His performance of Iago, on Tuesday, we were unable to see, but much was to be hoped from it, for the obviously deliberate art of the actor—his capacity for touching the intellect more than the heart—would appear to be particularly fitted for one of the subtlest and certainly the least sympathetic character in the Shaksperian repertory. In America we believe the reputation of Mr. Booth's Iago to exceed that of his Othello; and the relative position held by the two performances in England is likely to be the same as it is in the States. To those who do not demand to be moved strongly at the theatre, Mr. Booth's Othello cannot be unsatisfactory; but the majority of playgoers do demand to be moved, and the demand is a reasonable one, and it will hardly be satisfied by Mr. Booth's performance of the Moor. Othello, it is evident, is nothing if not passionate; Mr. Booth's passion has too little of suddenness and abandonment. He goes with sometimes too complete a deliberation through the business of the scene; the fire and majesty of such an actor as Signor Salvini in this character, and the intensity of such an actor as Mr. Irving, seem wanting to Mr. Booth in Othello. But the American actor is far too accomplished to approach failure; he fails only to rouse us to the necessary enthusiasm. On the whole, he is well supported. If Mr. Forrester does not fully repeat the success of his Iago at the Lyceum, it is only because the success was a surprise when it was first achieved and has now become comparatively familiar. It would, however, at any time have been a mistake to have considered it a performance pointing to Mr. Forrester's speedy attainment of exceptional rank in his profession. Mr. Ryder in Brabantio is extremely well placed. It is for parts like these—the characters of persons of dignity whose most sudden sorrows do not move them to the point of extreme excitement—that Mr. Ryder was born. The well-graced actor, adept in dignified bearing and courtly elocution, has not often been seen to greater advantage. Mrs. Hermann Vezio, as Emilia, is equally well fitted. She is entirely the mistress of every requirement of the character. Miss Maud Milton, who has never been wanting in simplicity and taste, shows, as Desdemona, that she has the gift of earnest and passionate expression. On the whole, Othello is very creditably cast. Pains have not been spared to give us a performance good in many directions, and not only noticeable for the appearance of one "star" actor.

MR. FRANK MARSHALL, one of the few stage writers equally able to be grave and bright, has of course had no opportunity for displaying his more serious qualities in the comic opera called Lola, produced a few nights ago at the Olympic Theatre. The play deals in what is admittedly an entertaining fashion with the adventures of a society journalist and a lady who is ambitious of promotion to the ranks of professional beauties. The music by Signor Orsini is of as high a class as can fairly be looked for in light comic opera. It is not strikingly original, it is continually melodious, and never vulgar. The piece is well played, the chief successes being made by Mr. Walsham and by Miss Elinor Loveday, one of the most agreeable of the many young singers who have appeared in the most popular piece ever written by Mr. Sullivan.

MISS ISABEL BATEMAN will, we are glad to say, assume the management of Sadler's Wells Theatre, and the theatre will re-open this evening with the successful performance of The School for Scandal which was interrupted by the sad event which we have mentioned above. Mr. Hermann Vezio, Mr. Charles Warner, and Miss Virginia Bateman appear in Sheridan's comedy, which for the next few nights will be preceded by The Spitalfields Weaver. The welcome performance of the last-named piece is occasioned by the characteristic offer made by Mr. Toole to appear at this theatre at a time when his generous services will naturally be the most appreciated. The programme is thus one of altogether exceptional attractiveness, and Miss Isabel Bateman's management begins most hopefully.

MUSIC.

RECENT MUSICAL WORKS.

Organs and Organ Building. By C. A. Edwards. (Bazaar Office.) This is an excellent book, and will doubtless find many readers. It is intended for organists and amateurs who have neither time nor inclination to study lengthy text-books, and who avoid mere pamphlets as "too shallow to afford any lasting benefit or satisfaction." It is a treatise on the history and construction of the organ from its origin to the present day, and the author has managed to crowd into a comparatively short space much valuable information and many useful and practical hints. There is one chapter entitled "Minor Casualties in Organs" specially useful to amateurs and country organists. The historical portion is very brief. The account given of the celebrated organ erected in Winchester Cathedral in the tenth century is not altogether satisfactory, nor is the much-debated term "pair of organs" quite fairly discussed. In the first chapter there is an interesting copy of a drawing (a representation of an organ) from the Utrecht Psalter. This MS. has been ascribed by able authorities to the sixth or even fifth century. A similar drawing has been given in other works, but copied from the Canterbury Psalter written in the eleventh century, and only an inaccurate copy of the Utrecht MS. The chapter on "Distinction in Keys" is somewhat fanciful. The author gives what he considers to be a fair résumé of the chief character of various keys. The key of C minor, he tells us, is plaintive. It is, however, associated with Beethoven's C minor symphony and his sonata for piano and violin in that key. Again, he tells us that A minor is most delicate, and that Mendelssohn wrote some of his best Lieder in this key. He quotes Mendelssohn several times. Why did he not mention Mozart's fine sonata, or Schubert's three sonatas in A minor, or at any rate Mendelssohn's Scotch symphony? Once again, he says that some of the best of our great works are in the key of E flat, and, for example, gives "If with all your hearts" from Elijah. Why not have given a symphony or a quartet or a sonata by Haydn, Mozart, or Beethoven, or have stated that they all wrote very great works in that key, especially symphonies? Lastly, he tells us that B flat major has nothing particular save its dulness to recommend it. Beethoven, however, chose that key for one of his finest and brightest symphonies (op. 60), one of his grandest trios (op. 97), one of his greatest sonatas (op. 106), and one of his most wonderful quartets (op. 130).

Dictionary of Music and Musicians. Edited by George Grove, D.C.L. Part XII. (Macmillan.) This part contains a most valuable article on the history of the pianoforte signed "A. J. H." There are two articles on Pianoforte. Music and Pianoforte Playing about which we would say a few words. The observations on the followers and disciples of Liszt are somewhat unkind and not altogether true; it is not quite correct to accuse them of want of respect for the old classical school, and there are some followers of Liszt whose playing is not "thumping, jerky, and incoherent." Mention is made of Hans von Bülow's prodigious memory, yet not "always faithful to the original text of the composer." Why single out Hans von Bülow? the same might be said of Rubenstein. The article on Pianoforte Music contains several inaccuracies, and we think it was unnecessary to mention all the works of the well-known composers, especially as a complete catalogue is given under each name in the Dictionary. The article contains, however, much valuable and interesting information.

Music Primers. Composition, by Dr. Stainer. (Novello, Ewer and Co.) This work forms a valuable addition to the series of primers issued by Messrs. Novello. It will help those who have "something to say" how to express and develop their ideas, and will help others at any rate to analyse and enjoy the works of the great masters. Eminently practical are some of the first rules in the book. For example, a short tune is to be played over, and the pupil, if possible, to determine the key of the tonic. Again, the pupil is recommended to write out from memory any short melodies which he may hear from time to time. The chapters on Melody, Rhythm, and Sections are very interesting; the author is correct when he states in his short Preface that he has attempted to work out his scheme without following or imitating any previous writer. Dr. Stainer uses his own technical terms for the various divisions of melody, and one cannot but regret the absence of uniformity displayed by different writers. The author professes to write for beginners, and we think he might have given a few simple rules to show when notes of a tune naturally suggest the same or a different chord, although capable of being treated either way. The chapter on Rhythm is full of practical details, and the exercises at the close are most useful. Why did Dr. Stainer quote the melody from the choral symphony in A major? We do not quite agree with the author in his remarks on inequality of sections and other irregularities generally. Rich seems to us to have often aimed at rhythmical irregularity both to excite interest and avoid monotony. The chapter on Development is very well written, and concludes with interesting analyses of various movements. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186 Strand, and Messrs. CURTICE & Co., Catherine Street, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can also be obtained every Saturday Morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. W. H. SMITH and SONS; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

PARIS.

Copies can be obtained in Paris every Saturday morning of M. FOTHERINGHAM, 8 Rue Neuve des Capucines.

THEATRES.

CONNAUGHT THEATRE.

Sole Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.
Entirely redecorated and upholstered by J. S. Lyon & Son. New stage, new scenery, &c.

To-night, at 8, OFFENBACH'S Comic Opera, in three acts,
LA FILLE DU TAMBOUR MAJOR.

The waltz, tarantella, and minuet, composed in 1859, will be danced by a selected corps de ballet.

Principal artists:—Misses Jennie Lee, Fanny Edwards, Edith Inceann, and Amy Grundy; Messrs. W. H. Woodfield, A. Colliat, H. St. Maur, and Aynsley Cook.

New and elegant dresses by Mrs. May; scenery by Albert Calcott; efficient chorus and ballet. Military and orchestral bands.

Musical Director, M. GOOSEMAN.

DURRY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

MOTHER GOOSE.
The success of the season.
Misses Kate Santley, Ada Blancha, Addie Blancha, D'Auban, Hewitt, De Vere, Howard, Parquhar, Hogarth, Ridgway, Brahm, and Payne; the children of the School of Dancing; Messrs. Arthur Roberts, John D'Auban, James Fawc, Klinghorn, Ross, Wyatt, Bidley, Abrahams, and Girard; Mesdames Paladino, Percival, Fisher, Evans, Rowella, and Coote.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.

At 8.15, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CREST.

Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Misses Lillian Cawler, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.

At 10.15, a new and utter Absurdity, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE LIGHT FANTASTIC.

Mr. SAMUEL SLITHERY, of the Hall of Terpsichors, Old Kent-road—Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to £3 3s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. ALEX. HENDERSON.

Every evening, a new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, entitled LA BELLE NORMANDE.

Composed by MM. VASSEUR et GREVE, the libretto by Messrs. A. MALTEY and R. MANSELL.

Supported by the following powerful company:—Messrs. F. H. Celli, Furcuz Cook, A. Maltby, C. Ashford, F. Clifton, Forrest, Ryde, Hunt, and Harry Paulton; Mesdames Amade, M. Davis, Kate Lee, Clara Graham, Byron, Compton, and Kate Munroe.

Preceded, at 7.30, by a new Comedietta, by H. WILLIAMSON, entitled THE GENIES.

Box-office open daily from 11 till 5. Acting Manager, Mr. W. A. BURT.

LYCEUM THEATRE

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HENRY IRVING.

THE CUP.

THE CORSIKAN BROTHERS.

At 7.45, ALFRED TENNYSON'S Tragedy, in two acts,

THE CUP.

Miss ELLEN TERRY—Mr. IRVING—Mr. TERRISS.

At 9.30, THE CORSIKAN BROTHERS.

Mr. IRVING as LOUIS and FABIEN DEL FRANCHI.

Doors open at 7.15. Box-office (Mr. HURST) open from 10 to 5 daily.

Seats booked by letter or telegram.

MORNING PERFORMANCES OF THE CUP TO-DAY, SATURDAY, and SATURDAYS, JANUARY 29TH, and FEBRUARY 5TH and 12TH. Preceded by BYGONES.

Doors open at 1.30; commence at 2.

Stage Manager, Mr. H. J. LOVEDAY. Acting Manager, Mr. BRAM STOKER.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

TO-NIGHT, Mr. TOOLE for SIX NIGHTS ONLY, at 7, as SIMMONS in THE SPLIT-ALE LIDS WHEELER.

Mr. Billington and Miss Ellen Meyrick assist Mr. Toole.

Mr. CHARLES WARNER and Mr. HERMANN VEZIN.

To-night, for six nights only,

THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL.

SIR PETER TEAZLE—Mr. HERMANN VEZIN.

CHARLES SURFACE—Mr. CHARLES WARNER.

JOSEPH SURFACE—Mr. E. H. BROOKE.

LADY TEAZLE—Miss VIRGINIA F. BATEMAN.

Crabtree—Mr. William Farrer, Jun.; Sir Oliver—Mr. E. Lyons; Sir Benjamin—Mr. R. Buckton; Lady—Miss M. Bell; Mrs. Candour—Mrs. W. Sidney; Maria—Miss Hilda Hilton.

Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. No fees.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. E. D'OLY CARTE.

THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.

A new and original Meccranitic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN, every evening.

Preceded, at 8, by IN THE SULKS.

By Messrs. FRANK DESPREZ and ALFRED CELLIER.

Messrs. G. Grossmith, Richard Temple, Rutland Barrington, F. Thornton, Burward Lely, Geo. Temple; Mesdames Marian Hood, Ellen Shirley, Jessie Bond, Gwynne, Barlow, and Alice Barne. Conductor, Mr. F. Collier. The piece produced under the personal direction of the Author and Composer.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

To-night, an English version of P. GIACOMETTI'S great Italian Play, "La Mort Civile," called A NEW TRIAL.

Mr. COUGHLAN as COHRADO.

Preceded, at 7.45, by IN HONOUR BOUND.

Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOOCH.

Mr. EDWIN BOOTH.

To-night, Shakespeare's Tragedy, OTHELLO.

Mr. EDWIN BOOTH will alternate the characters of OTHELLO and IAGO. MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, and FRIDAYS—OTHELLO; TUESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS—IAGO.

Mr. HENRY FORKESTER has been specially engaged to support Mr. Booth.

Specially selected Company. Preceded, at 7.15, by the laughable Farce, THAT BLESSED BABY.

Open at 6.45; commence at 7.15. Box-office open daily.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

This evening, at 6.45, THE SECRET.

At 7.30, HOW BELLS.

To conclude, at 9.30, with DON LUIS JUNIOR.

Mesdames Kate Lawler, Brennan, Rita, Dora Vivian, Crawford, Lavender, Carlin, Ward, and Annie Lawler; Messrs. Righton, Cooper, Kelsay, S. Dalles, and T. P. Haynes. Powerful chorus.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE
LEGAL PROFESSION.

Vol. XXV.—Established 1857. Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.

Discussions of the legal events of the week.

LEADING ARTICLES.

Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

RECENT DECISIONS.

Explanatory and critical disquisitions on all the cases of importance decided in the Courts of Common Law and Equity, pointing out their relations to the previous law. A reference to the Index to the Volume just completed, under the head "Cases Discussed," will show the extent to which the decisions of the year have been treated of in the JOURNAL.

CASES OF THE WEEK.

Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS.

Special reports, furnished by a Barrister.

SOLICITORS' CASES.

Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

PENDING LEGISLATION.

All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR.

Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

REVIEWS.

New legal works are elaborately noticed in this department.

NEW ORDERS, &c.

In this department are given all new Rules and Orders; in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

COURTS.

Special Reports of Cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION.

A complete record of the progress of legislation during each session.

APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.

Pains are taken to render these accurate and complete.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

Full reports of the proceedings of the law societies.

A careful summary is given of all the legal news of the week, and special attention is bestowed on furnishing early copies of all Court Papers.

The FIRST NUMBER of Volume XXV. Published November 6th, 1880.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s.; when paid in advance. Single number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

* * The JOURNAL and REPORTER can be ordered from any date, and a proportionate reduction will be made in the Subscription up to the end of the current volume.

Cheques and Post-Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 52, CAREY STREET, LINCOLN'S INN.

CANTERBURY in the OLDEN TIME.

Second Edition. Price 12s. 6d.
 "The visitors to the old city would find Mr. Brent's book an entertaining and profitable companion."—Daily News.
 "Numerous and well-executed illustrations are given."—Builder.
 "Learned and popular and full of information."—Western Morning News.
 "The volume forms a complete repertory of the antiquities of Canterbury—Roman, Saxon, and Mediaeval—and should be in the hands of all who visit our Metropolitan Cathedral."—Academy.
 "The book is full of amusement for those who are fond of the social history of Old England."—Examiner.
 "To say that Mr. Brent's volume is the best guide to Canterbury is but scant praise. It may be read with pleasure and studied with profit."
 C. R. SMITH, F.S.A.: "Collectanea Antiqua," part iii., vol. vii.

JUSTINE: a Martyr; and other Poems.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & CO.

THE EDINBURGH ETCHING CLUB

PORTFOLIO: a Collection of Twelve Original Etchings.

Edinburgh: ADAM SMILEY, Bruntisfield.

NEW NOVEL.

BOUND BY THE LAW.

BY HELEN WESCHÉ.

"Narrates the slow, but finally successful, struggle undergone by a man who has to win anew the affections of his wife."—Athenaeum.
 "Clever and right-hearted."—Justice Telegraph.
 "There is both interest and novelty. The author has given us a new moral situation."—Pall Mall Gazette.
 "The plot is interesting and well worked out, and several of the scenes are really powerful."—London Figaro.
 At all Libraries.

London: ELLISSEN & Co., 10, Type-street, Finsbury, E.C.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JANUARY

contains—Mr. Pepys the Musician, by Dr. Haeffer—The Father of the Symphony—The Great Composers: Schubert—Musical Changes, by H. C. Lunn—The Leeds Festival Surplus—Crystal Palace, Monday Popular, and Brighton Aquarium Concerts—Reviews—Notes—Foreign and Country News—Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for JANUARY

contains—"The Watchword," a New Part-Song, by CRO PINSON. Price, separately, 1d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & Co., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

Second Edition, with Maps, price 10s. 6d., pp. 447.

EPIDEMIOLOGY; or, the Cause of Epidemic Disease, of Murrains, of Illight, of Horticaneas, and of Abnormal Atmospheric Vicissitudes. With a History of Epidemic Diseases, and of the Phenomena that accompanied them. BY JOHN PARKIN, M.D.

London: DAVID BOOKE, St. Martin's-place, W.C.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 91,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £6; Life Membership, £20.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application.

ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s., post-free.

STUDIES in PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

The Sun; Transit of Venus; Spectrum Analysis; the Moon; the Stars and Planets; Comets and Meteors; Atmospheric Electricity; Whirlwinds; Glaciers; the Telephone. By W. J. MILLAR, C.E., Secretary to the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland; Author of "Principles of Mechanics," &c.

"We can confidently recommend Mr. Millar's volume to the attention both of teachers in schools of elementary text-book, and to private students, as well as to the general reader. It unites the utmost lucidity with strict scientific accuracy, and deals with ascertained facts rather than with vague theories."—Greenock Daily Telegraph.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

Fcap. 8vo, 128 pp., price 1s. 6d.

A MEDLEY of NOTABLES: What they said and What others said of them. By G. F. S.

"This little book contains on one side of each page a quotation from some well-known author, and on the other side a brief notice of this author by other authors. If we turn to Shakespeare, for instance, we find quoted Dame Quickly's description of Falstaff's death, which there are given notices of Shakespeare by Keats, Ben Jonson, Browning, Barnfield, and by some anonymous writer who likely enough is the editor. From him we learn that 'Shakespeare went before all men, and stands in the array of human intellect like the sun in the system, single and unsurpassed.'"—Saturday Review.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

YATES & ALEXANDER,

PRINTERS OF

Books, Pamphlets, Magazines, Newspapers, and Periodicals.

Catalogues, Posters, Price Currents, Circulars, Notices, and all General Commercial Work.

Parliamentary, Law, and General Printing.

Contracts entered into with Public Companies, Bankers, Insurance Offices, Auctioneers, Manufacturers, Merchants and Traders, &c.

PRINTING WORKS:

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE (OPPOSITE THE CHANCERY LANE POST-OFFICE).

"THREE CASTLES.""THREE CASTLES" TOBACCO.

"There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better Brand than the 'THREE CASTLES.'"—Vide "The Virginians." Only in Packets and Cigarettes, protected by the Name and Trade Mark.

W. D. & H. O. WILLS.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa." Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way." W. W. STODDART, F.L.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted." CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA. A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THREEDNEEDLE STREET

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHANCERY CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Life Assurances of all descriptions. Specially low rates for young lives, and for non-participating Policies. Prompt settlement of Claims. A new and greatly simplified form of Proposal, also the Society's newly revised Prospectus, will be forwarded on application. J. G. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS!

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £230,000.

Moderate Premiums Bounties allowed to Insured after Five Years. £1,630,000 has been paid as Compensation Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64, COINMILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1783.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

STEPHENS DRAWING INK.

For Architectural Drawing and Artists' use.

Does not require stirring while in use.

Dries quickly, flows evenly from the pen, and becomes an insoluble colour when dry. Drawings executed with it can be washed without fear of injury. The most delicate Drawing Pens used with this Ink are not impaired by corrosion. On the contrary, instruments left with the ink to dry on them are preserved as with a lacquer.

Sold in Bottles 6d. and 2s. each.

Can be procured through any Stationer.

H. C. STEPHENS, 191, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.

The original, best, and most liberal.

No extra charges for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free. F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £5 6s. to 50 guineas. Drawing-room suites, from 19 9s. to 45 guineas. Dining-room Suites, from 27 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety. F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

WILLS'"THREE CASTLES" TOBACCO.

"There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better Brand than the 'THREE CASTLES.'"—Vide "The Virginians." Only in Packets and Cigarettes, protected by the Name and Trade Mark.

W. D. & H. O. WILLS.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa." Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way." W. W. STODDART, F.L.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted." CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA. A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes Issued. A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application. FRANCIS HAVESGROFT, Manager.

DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.

"Your Wafers are invaluable for the Voice, Throat, and Chest. All persons suffering from Hoarseness, Hacking Cough, and Deprivation of Rest should take them." From Mr. FARRER, M.R.S., 22, Market-place, Hull.

They taste pleasantly. Price 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d. per box.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.

Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.

Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, growling feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PETER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s. 9d. and 1s. 6d. each. sold by all Chemists.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS.

Are free from SMELL.

Are manufactured Without Phosphorus.

Are perfectly harmless.

To the Operatives employed.

Are very DAMP PROOF.

LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

GEORGE BELL & SONS' EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

New revised Catalogues, containing upwards of 500 Educational Books of all sorts, sent post-free on application.

CAMBRIDGE TEXTS, WITH NOTES.

Select Portions of the Greek and Latin Authors, with Introduction and Notes for Young Students. The Texts are those of the "Bibliotheca Classica" and the "Grammar-School Classics." In fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d. each (except the "Ion," price 2s.).

ÆSCHYLUS.—PROMETHEUS VINCTUS, AGAMEMNON, SEPTEM CONTRA THEBAS, PERSÆ, EUMENIDES. By F. A. PALEY, M.A.

EURIPIDES.—ALCESTIS, MEDEA, HIPPOLYTUS, HECUBA, BACCHÆ, ION, ORESTES, PHOENISSÆ. By F. A. PALEY, M.A.

CICERO.—DE AMICITIA, DE SENECTUTE, EPISTOLÆ SELECTÆ. By G. LONG, M.A.

HOMER.—Book I. By F. A. PALEY, M.A.

SOPHOCLES.—OEDIPUS TYRANNUS. By F. A. PALEY, M.A.

OVID.—SELECTIONS from the AMORES, TRISTIA, HEROIDES, and METAMORPHOSES. By A. J. MACLEANE, M.A.

* Others in preparation.

(London: WHITTAKER & Co.)

LATIN AND GREEK CLASS-BOOKS.

AUXILIA LATINA: a Series of Progressive Latin Exercises. By M. J. R. RADDELEY, M.A., Second Master at the Grammar School, Sheffield; late Scholar of Clare College, Cambridge. Fcap. 8vo. Part I, ACCIDENCE, 1s. 6d. Part II, SYNTAX and EXERCISES, Revised Edition, 2s. — KEY to Part II, 2s. 6d.

LATIN PROSE LESSONS. By ALFRED J. CHURCH, M.A., Professor of Latin at University College, London. Third Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

LATIN EXERCISES, GRAMMAR PAPERS, and HINTS for JUNIOR CLASSES. By T. COLLINS, M.A., Head Master of the Latin School, Newport, Salop. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"UNSEEN PAPERS" in LATIN PROSE and VERSE, with Examination Questions. By T. COLLINS, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

SCALA GRÆCA: a Series of Elementary Greek Exercises. By the Rev. J. W. DAVIS, M.A., Head Master of Tamworth Grammar School, and the late R. W. RADDELEY, M.A. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

ANALYTICAL LATIN EXERCISES; Accidence and Simple Sentences, Composition, and Derivation of Words and Compound Sentences. By C. P. MASON, B.A., Fellow of University College, London. Second Edition. Post 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE ANALYSIS of SENTENCES applied to Latin. 1s. 6d.

By the late Rev. P. FROST, M.A., St. John's College, Cambridge.

ECLOGÆ LATINÆ; or, First Latin Reading-Book. With English Notes and a Dictionary. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

LATIN PROSE COMPOSITION, MATERIALS for. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.—KEY, 4s.

LATIN VERSE BOOK. An Introductory Work on Hexameters and Pentameters. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 3s.—KEY, 5s.

ANALYCTA GRÆCA MINORA. With Introductory Sentences, English Notes, and a Dictionary. New Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GREEK PROSE COMPOSITION, MATERIALS for. Constructed on the same Plan as the "Materials for Latin Prose Composition." Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.—KEY, 5s.

FLORILEGIUM POETICUM. A Selection of Elegiac Extracts from Ovid and Tibullus. New Edition, greatly Enlarged. With English Notes. By the late Rev. P. FROST, M.A., formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Fcap. 8vo, 3s.

Edited by HUBERT A. HOLDEN, LL.D., late Fellow of Trinity College, Head Master of Queen Elizabeth's Schools, Ipswich.

FOLIORUM SILVULA. Part I. Being Passages for Translation into Latin Elegiac and Heroic Verse. Ninth Edition. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

FOLIORUM SILVULA. Part II. Passages for Translation into Latin Lyric and Comic Iambic Verse. Third Edition. 5s.

FOLIORUM SILVULA. Part III. Passages for Translation into Greek Verse. Third Edition. 5s.

FOLIA SILVULÆ, sive Eclogæ Poetarum Anglicorum in Latinum et Græcum conversas quas disposuit H. A. HOLDEN. Volumen Primum continens Fasciculos I., II., III., IV. 10s. 6d. Volumen Alterum continens Fasciculos V., VI., VII., VIII., IX., X. 12s.

FOLIORUM CENTURIAE. Selections for Translation into Latin and Greek Prose, chiefly from the University and College Examination Papers. Seventh Edition. Post 8vo, 8s.

CAMBRIDGE MATHEMATICAL SERIES.

WHITWORTH'S CHOICE and CHANCE. An Elementary Treatise on Permutations, Combinations, and Probability; with 300 Exercises. By W. A. WHITWORTH, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 6s.

McDOWELL'S EXERCISES on EUCLID and in MODERN GEOMETRY, containing Applications of the Principles and Processes of Modern Pure Geometry. By J. McDOWELL, B.A., Pembroke College. Second Edition, Revised. 6s.

TAYLOR'S THE GEOMETRY of CONICS. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. By C. TAYLOR, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

ALDIS'S SOLID GEOMETRY, An ELEMENTARY TREATISE on. By W. S. ALDIS, M.A. Third Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GARNETT'S ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS, for the Use of Colleges and Schools. By WILLIAM GARNETT, M.A. (late Whitworth Scholar), Fellow of St. John's College, and Demonstrator of Physics in the University of Cambridge. Second Edition, Revised. 6s.

GARNETT'S HEAT, An ELEMENTARY TREATISE on. By WILLIAM GARNETT, M.A. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WALTON'S ELEMENTARY MECHANICS, A COLLECTION of PROBLEMS in. By W. WALTON, M.A. Second Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 6s.

CAMBRIDGE SCHOOL AND COLLEGE TEXT-BOOKS.

A Series of Elementary Treatises, adapted for the Use of Students in the Universities, Schools, and Candidates for the Public Examinations. Uniformly printed in fcap. 8vo.

ARITHMETIC. By Rev. C. ELSEE, M.A., Mathematical Master at Rugby. Ninth Edition. 3s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA. By the Rev. C. ELSEE. Fifth Edition. 4s.

ALGEBRA. A Progressive Course of Examples. By the Rev. W. F. MACMICHAEL and R. PROWDE SMITH. 3s. 6d.; with ANSWERS, 4s. 6d.

ARITHMETIC. For the Use of Colleges and Schools. By A. WRIGLEY, M.A. 3s. 6d.

ARITHMETIC. A Progressive Course of Examples, with ANSWERS. By J. WATSON, M.A. Fourth Edition. 2s. 6d.

PLANE ASTRONOMY. By P. T. MAIN, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College. Third Edition. 4s.

CONIC SECTIONS treated GEOMETRICALLY. By W. H. BESANT, M.A., Lecturer and late Fellow of St. John's College. Third Edition. 4s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY STATICS. By the Rev. H. GOODWIN, D.D. Second Edition. 3s.

ELEMENTARY HYDROSTATICS. By W. H. BESANT, M.A., late Fellow of St. John's College. Ninth Edition. 4s.

ANALYTICAL GEOMETRY. By T. G. VVYAN, Mathematical Master at Charterhouse. Third Edition, Revised. 4s. 6d.

MENSURATION. By B. T. MOORE, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College. With numerous Examples. 5s.

THE FIRST THREE SECTIONS of NEWTON'S PRINCIPIA. With an Appendix, and the Ninth and Eleventh Sections. By JOHN H. EVANS, M.A. Fifth Edition. Edited by P. T. MAIN, M.A. 4s.

TRIGONOMETRY. With Examples. By T. P. HUDSON, M.A. 3s. 6d.

GEOMETRICAL OPTICS. By W. S. ALDIS, M.A., Trinity College. 3s. 6d.

COMPANION to the GREEK TESTAMENT. By A. C. BARRETT, A.M., Caius College. Fourth Edition, Revised. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

AN HISTORICAL and EXPLANATORY TREATISE on the BOOK of COMMON PRAYER. By W. G. HUMPHRY, B.D. Fifth Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

TEXT-BOOK of MUSIC. By H. C. BANISTER. Eighth Edition. 5s.

CONCISE HISTORY of MUSIC. By Rev. H. G. B. HUNT. Fourth Edition. 3s. 6d.

"I have been trying my best to induce schools generally to study Mr. Mason's Grammars. . . . Their superiority over most of the Grammars in ordinary use is, to my mind, most striking and undeniable, especially as regards the analysis of sentences."—Report, for 1876, of E. H. R. Rice-Wiggin, Esq., H.M. Inspector of Schools.

POPULAR GRAMMARS.

By C. P. MASON,
Fellow of University College, London.

Eighth Thousand, cloth, 8d.

FIRST NOTIONS of GRAMMAR for YOUNG LEARNERS.

"For a foundation in Grammar I know of no better book than Mason's 'First Notions of Grammar.' A thorough acquaintance with this little elementary book alone would have enabled many a pupil-teacher to pass a better examination than has been the result of an imperfect study of much more advanced books."—Address to the Managers and Teachers of Schools in the North Staffordshire District, by E. H. R. Rice-Wiggin, Esq., H.M. Inspector of Schools.

Twenty-first Thousand, crown 8vo, 2s.

OUTLINES of ENGLISH GRAMMAR for the USE of JUNIOR CLASSES.

Including the Sale in Canada, where it is used under the authority of the Dominion Government, about 80,000 Copies of the following Grammar have now been sold.

ENGLISH GRAMMAR; including the Principles of Grammatical Analysis.

Revised. Crown 8vo, green cloth, 3s. 6d. [Ready shortly.]
By the exclusion of such portions of the previous edition as have found a more appropriate place in the Author's Elementary Grammars, and of various controversial notes on points long since settled, room has been found for the introduction of a great deal of new and interesting matter illustrating the structure, history, and affinities of the English language.

Copies of the Twenty-third Edition may still be had, if desired.

"This Grammar and Analysis is one of the most practical, exact, and exhaustive in existence, and, as such, is especially suitable for examination purposes as well as ordinary school work."—J. S. LAURIE, Esq., formerly H.M. Inspector of Schools, Director-General of Public Instruction, Ceylon, &c.

Eighth Thousand, crown 8vo, brown cloth, 3s. 6d.

A SHORTER ENGLISH GRAMMAR, with copious and carefully graduated Exercises, based upon the Author's English Grammar.

"This is really a very complete Grammar, with numerous well-chosen exercises for practice in 'Analysis.' Certainly any schoolboy who has made good use of this book ought to be able to analyse any sentence however involved, to the satisfaction of the most critical examiner; for Mr. Mason leaves no difficulty unexplained, and his explanations are thorough and scientific. Another good point about the book is the introduction of the old English forms of the several parts of speech in appropriate places, the only means of accounting for many so-called irregularities of English grammar."—Saturday Review.

ENGLISH GRAMMAR PRACTICE, consisting of the Exercises of the Shorter English Grammar, published in a separate form.

Crown 8vo, 1s.
These Exercises are arranged in progressive lessons in such a manner as to be available with almost any text-book of English Grammar, and take the learner by easy stages from the simplest English work to the most difficult constructions in the language.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, 4, York-street, Covent-garden. Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL, & CO.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 456.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

NEW BOOKS PUBLISHED BY SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON.

A THIRD EDITION is READY of MR. GEORGE MAC DONALD'S NEW NOVEL, MARY MARSTON. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

Now ready, in 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

A NEW NOVEL by C. R. COLERIDGE, Author of "Lady Betty," "Hanbury Mills," &c., entitled AN ENGLISH SQUIRE.

PROFESSOR SAYCE'S EDITION of GEORGE SMITH'S The CHALDEAN ACCOUNT of GENESIS. Revised and Corrected. [Now ready.]

Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 18s.

Now ready, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

THE HISTORY of ANCIENT ART. By John Winckelmann. Translated from the German by George Lodge, M.D. With a Life of Winckelmann. Fully and finely Illustrated.

THROUGH AMERICA; or, Nine Months in the United States. By W. G. Marshall, M.A. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 21s. [Now ready.]

This Work is embellished with nearly One Hundred Woodcuts illustrative of Scenes in the Utah country and the famous Yosemite Valley; the Giant Trees, New York, Niagara, San Francisco, &c.; and contains a Full Account of Mormon Life, as noted by the Author during his Visits to Salt Lake City in 1878 and 1879.

EXTRACT FROM THE WORK.—"Mormonism has now become so firmly established in the United States that it is important, at the present time, when so many of our poor and ignorant countrymen are yearly decoyed to Salt Lake City, to call attention to some of the evils to which Mormon emigrants to Utah are exposed."

PHILOSOPHY.

ENGLISH PHILOSOPHERS. Edited by Iwan Muller, M.A., New College, Oxford.

To each Philosopher will be assigned a separate volume, giving as comprehensive and detailed a statement of his views and contributions to Philosophy as possible, explanatory rather than critical, opening with a brief biographical sketch, and concluding with a short general summary, and a bibliographical appendix.

Price and size: 180 to 200 pages. Size, crown 8vo. Price, 3s. 6d.

ADAM SMITH. By J. FARRER, M.A., Author of "Primitive Manners and Customs." [Now ready.]

HAMILTON. By Professor MONK; and HARTLEY and JAMES MILL. By G. S. BOWER, B.A. [Ready.]

BACON. By Professor FOWLER.
BERKELEY. By Professor T. H. GREEN.
J. S. MILL. By Miss HELEN TAYLOR.
MANSEL. By the Rev. H. J. HUCKIN, D.D.

BENTHAM. By Mr. G. E. BECKLE.
AUSTIN. By Mr. HARRY JOHNSON.
SHAFTESBURY and HUTCHESON. By Professor FOWLER.

INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of PHILOSOPHY. By Professor H. SIDGWICK.
HOBBES. By A. H. GOSSET, B.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford.

Arrangements are in progress for volumes on LOCKE, HUME, PALEY, REID, &c., and will shortly be announced.

ART.

ILLUSTRATED BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT ARTISTS.

"Few things in the way of small books upon great subjects, avowedly cheap and necessarily brief, have been hitherto so well done as these biographies of the Great Masters in painting."—Times.

Each Volume is Illustrated with from Twelve to Twenty Full-page Engravings, printed in the best manner, and bound in ornamental cloth cover, 3s. 6d.

GAINSBOROUGH and CONSTABLE. By GEORGE BROCK-ARNOLD, M.A. SIR DAVID WILKIE. By JOHN W. MOLLETT, B.A. Illustrated with numerous Engravings, including Double-page Pictures of "Blindman's Buff," "The Rent Day," "The Penny Wedding," "Duncan Gray," and many other popular works.

* * Other volumes are in preparation.

ILLUSTRATED TEXT-BOOKS of ART. Edited by Edward J. Poynter, R.A., Director for Art, Science and Art Department.

Each Volume will contain from Fifty to Sixty Illustrations, large crown 8vo, and will be strongly bound, price 5s.

The First Volumes of the Series of ILLUSTRATED TEXT-BOOKS of ART now ready are—PAINTING. Classic and Italian. By PERCY R. HEAD. With Eighty Illustrations. 5s.

ARCHITECTURE. Gothic and Renaissance. By T. ROGER SMITH. With Fifty Illustrations. 5s.

* * Other volumes preparing.

MUSIC.

THE GREAT MUSICIANS. Biographies of the Great Musicians. Edited by F. Hueffer.

1. WAGNER. By the Editor. [Ready.]
2. WEBER. By Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.
3. MENDELSSOHN. By JOSEPH BENNETT.
4. SCHUBERT. By H. F. FROST.

5. ROSSINI, and the Modern Italian School. By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. [Ready.]
6. MARCELLO. By ARTHUR BOITO.
7. PURCELL. By W. H. CUMMINGS.

* * Dr. Hiller and other distinguished Writers, both English and Foreign, have promised Contributions. Each Volume will be complete in itself. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. each.

Other Volumes will be issued very shortly.

SPECIAL NOTE.—Her Majesty the Queen has accepted the Dedication of Sir Julius Benedict's Work on Weber.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES and BRITISH COLONIES. Edited by F. S. Pulling, M.A., Exeter College, Oxford, and formerly

Professor at the Yorkshire College, Leeds.

The object of this Series is to furnish those who would like information about Foreign Countries and British Colonies with all that the general reader will care to know. The volumes average 180 crown 8vo pages, and contain a few typical Illustrations. The price of the volumes is 3s. 6d. each.

GREECE. By Mr. L. SERGEANT, B.A., Knight of the Hellenic Order of the Saviour, Author of "New Greece."
AUSTRIA. By Mr. D. KAY, F.R.G.S.

The following Volumes are ready:—
RUSSIA. By Mr. W. R. MORFILL, M.A., Oriel College, Oxford, Lecturer on the Heister Foundation, &c.
PERSIA. By Major-Gen. Sir F. J. GOLDSMID, K.C.S.I., Author of "Telegraph and Travel," &c.

JAPAN. By Mr. S. MOSSMAN, Author of "New Japan," &c.
PERU. By Mr. CLEMENTS R. MARKHAM, M.A., C.B.
THE WEST INDIES. By Mr. C. H. EDEN, F.R.G.S., Author of "Frozen Asia," &c.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION in SAXONY. By John L. Bashford, M.A. Fcap. 8vo., 1s.

All who are interested in Elementary Education should understand the Saxon System.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE FOR FEBRUARY.

Fully Illustrated. 160 pages.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON, CROWN BUILDINGS, 188, FLEET STREET, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S NEW WORKS.

Now ready, Price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE. CONTENTS FOR FEBRUARY, 1881.

- I. KITH and KIN. By JESSIE FOTHERGILL. (Continued.)
 - II. BALLOONING FOR ARCTIC OBJECTS.
 - III. PIERRE-AUGUSTIN CARON de BEAUMARCHAIS.
 - IV. POOR MISS BRACKENTHORPE.
 - V. SHELLEY.
 - VI. A PEEP at the MOGHREBINS.
 - VII. AT MUNICH in 1880.
 - VIII. FAT-BEHIND-THE EYE.
 - IX. THE FRERES. By MRS. ALEXANDER. (Continued.)
- * * Cases for binding the volumes of "Temple Bar" can be obtained at all Booksellers, price One Shilling each.

NOW READY.

THE POLITICAL DIARY of LORD ELLENBOROUGH, 1828—1830.

Edited by LORD COLCHESTER.

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, £1 10s.

ROUND ABOUT NORWAY. By

CHARLES W. WOOD, Author of "Through Holland," &c. With numerous illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s.

"Mr. Wood's book is as lively a narrative as any we have met with for a long time. His descriptions are so clear that, reading him, we fancy we can hear the Lapps with their shrill voices, smell the Lofoden oil works, and see the glorious sunsets."—Graphic.

"Round About Norway" should prove a welcome addition to many a bookshelf. The author has accomplished his task exceedingly well."—Daily Telegraph.

UNKNOWN HUNGARY. By

VICTOR TISSOT. Translated by Mrs. OSWALD BRODIE. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"The book is full of good stories, old and new, sparkling with anecdote, rich in descriptions of scenery, and, withal, instructively suggestive in regard to social and political questions."—Graphic.

"This is a book which was thoroughly worth the labour of translating, and the translation is almost as clever as the original. M. Tisset takes us entirely out of the beaten track."—World.

"A book which at once challenges attention."—Daily Telegraph.

DEAN HOOK: his Life and Letters.

Edited by the Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS. THE SIXTH EDITION. In crown 8vo, with a New Portrait, 6s.

PAST HOURS. By the late Mrs.

SAROTIS (Adelaide Kemble). Edited by her Daughter, Mrs. GORDON. In 2 vols., post 8vo, 12s.

"The book abounds in fine thoughts, beautifully expressed; and the sentiment and touch of the true artist are apparent on every page."—St. James's Gazette.

"The reader is struck to find wit, insight, and a sense of the ridiculous at once robust and refined, combined with the most straightforward simplicity and sense of justice."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The passionate warmth, the ready wit, the many picturesque and humorous touches, scattered freely over these pages, reveal the artistic nature and the emotional temperament."—Daily Telegraph.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NELLIE'S MEMORIES."

QUEENIE'S WHIM. By Rosa

NOTCHETTE CAREY, Author of "Wood and Married," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

MR. CROWTHER HIRST'S NEW NOVEL.

HIRAM GREG. By J. Crowther

HIRST. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"This capital novel is absolutely true to nature throughout."—Standard.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER LOCK AND KEY."

THE MYSTERIES of HERON

DYKE. By the Author of "In the Dead of Night," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

MR. BARRETT'S NEW NOVEL.

FOLLY MORRISON. By Frank

BARRETT. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Written with exceptional trenchancy and power."—Graphic.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,

NEW BURLINGTON STREET,

Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

SMITH, ELDER, & CO'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. BRANDRAM'S SHAKESPEARE FOR THE YOUNG.

SHAKESPEARE:

Certain Selected Plays abridged for the Use of the Young. By SAMUEL BRANDRAM, M.A. Oxon.

1 vol., large crown 8vo.

[In April.]

NEW VOLUME BY MISS THACKERAY (MRS. RICHMOND RITCHIE).

MISS WILLIAMSON'S DIVAGATIONS.

By Miss THACKERAY (MRS. RICHMOND RITCHIE). With Four Illustrations. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

[In April.]

RENAISSANCE in ITALY: Italian Literature.

By JOHN ADAMSON STOKES, M.A. Author of "Studies of Greek Poetry," "Sketches in Italy and Greece," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, being Vols. IV. and V. of "Renaissance in Italy," and concluding the Work, price 32s.

[In the press.]

OUTLINES of NAVAL HYGIENE. By JOHN D. MACDONALD, M.D. F.R.S., Inspector-General R.N., Professor of Naval Hygiene, Army Medical School, Netley. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

[In the press.]

THE POWER of SOUND. By Edmund

GURNEY, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Royal 8vo, 2s.

"There needs no reservation in the welcome which we give to the book as a whole. Psychologically and aesthetically—and, we would add, physiologically also—it is a book which makes a distinct forward step."—Spectator.

THE POETRY of ASTRONOMY. By

RICHARD A. PROCTOR, Author of "The Border of Science," "Science byways," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Will do much to supply valuable information in a popular form concerning some of the chief results and speculations of modern astronomical science. The book contains most valuable reading, and is in such a clear and pleasant style that it deserves to be very popular."—Quaker.

THE ATLAS of HISTOLOGY. By E. Klein,

M.D., and E. NOBLE SMITH, F.R.C.S. Edin. With Forty-eight Coloured Plates. The Illustrations are done by Mr. Noble Smith, from Preparations by Dr. Klein. The Text is by Dr. KLEIN. Royal 4to, bound in half-leather, £4 4s.; or in Thirteen Parts, price 6s. each.

* * Cases for binding may be had, price 4s. each.

THE DESCRIPTIVE ATLAS of ANAT-

OMY: a Representation of the Anatomy of the Human Body. In Ninety-two royal 4to Plates, containing 550 Illustrations. Introducing Hiertmann's Figures, considerably modified, and with many Original Drawings from Nature. By E. NOBLE SMITH, F.R.C.S. Edin. Price 25s.

FARMING in a SMALL WAY. By James

LONG, Author of "Poultry for Prizes and Profit," "The Goat," &c. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

NEW EDITIONS.

SECOND EDITION, Revised, and with an additional Map.

LIFE of LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR

JAMES OUTRAM. By Major-General Sir FREDERIC J. GOLDSMID, C.B., K.C.S.I. With Illustrations and Maps. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 22s.

SECOND EDITION, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

A HISTORY of ENGLISH THOUGHT in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By LESLIE STEPHEN.

NEW NOVELS.

MATRIMONY. By W. E. Norris, Author of "Mademoiselle de Morsac," &c. 3 vols., post 8vo.

MEHALAH: a Story of the Salt Marshes.

2 vols., post 8vo.

THE TRUMPET-MAJOR. By Thomas

HARDY, Author of "Far from the Madding Crowd," &c. 3 vols., post 8vo.

HAROLD SAXON: a Story of the Church and the World. By ALAN MUIR, Author of "Children's Children: a Story of Two Generations." 3 vols., post 8vo.

[Just published.]

Now ready (One Shilling), No. 254.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For FEBRUARY.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DU MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS:

LOVE the DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. IV.—Mabel—Childhood. V.—Girlhood. VI.—Squire.

GEORGE ELIOT.

THE ORIGIN of LONDON.

OXFORD HONOURS.

ET TU in ARCADIA VIXISTI. By R. L. STEVENSON.

HOLIDAY CUSTOMS in ITALY.

VOLTAIRE and SHAKESPEARE.

A PERSIAN APOLOGUE. (To E. H. P.) By AUSTIN DORSON.

A GRAPE from a THORN. By JAMES PAYN. (With an Illustration.) Chap. VI.—A Hazardous Descent. VII.—When the Cat's away. VIII.

—Two Methods of Teasing. IX.—Mrs. and Miss Jennyngo.

London: SMITH, ELDER & Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

REMINGTON'S NEW BOOKS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE GLEN of SILVER BIRCHES:

a Novel. By E. OWENS BLACKBURNE, Author of "Illustrious Irishwomen," &c. 2 vols., 21s.

"At the present time, when half the English public are aroused to sympathy with Irish distress, and the other half thrilled with indignation at Irish crime, so well told a story as that of Miss Blackburne has a special claim to attention."—Athenaeum.

STEADFAST unto DEATH: a

Tale of the Irish Famine of To-day. By Mrs. BEEZES. 1 vol., 7s.

"A tale that has in it much true, quiet pathos. The reader of her work will lay it down with a truer and sadder realisation of the starvation days in Ireland than is to be gathered from reports of commissioners and special correspondents."—World.

'TWIXT FRIEND and FOE: a

Novel. By M. A. WACKERDARTH, Author of "Looking Back." 2 vols., 21s.

"A tale that has in it much true, quiet pathos. The reader of her work will lay it down with a truer and sadder realisation of the starvation days in Ireland than is to be gathered from reports of commissioners and special correspondents."—World.

MADAME de MAINTENON: a

Memoir. By WALTER BENNETT. 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"A memoir of considerable value, conceived in a spirit of fairness, and written with power and picturesque effect."—Court Journal.

IN FAIR BRUGES: a Romance of the Present Day. By C. BEESTON. 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"The book is pleasantly written and distinctly readable. It contains some effective studies of Flemish characters among the lower classes, and two picturesque and pleasing, if slightly idealised, portraits of English 'girls of the period' of the best kind."—Scotsman.

NOT MANY YEARS AGO.

Memoirs of my Life. By an ELDERLY BACHELOR. 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"This is a volume that will delight many readers. In a manner so natural as to be beyond praise, the author tells us all the incidents of his early days, and with so much simplicity that anyone who had not been brought up under tender parents in a loving family himself, might feel as if the writer had endowed him with a happy childhood."—St. James's Gazette.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF

"MARRIAGE A LA MODE"

DUMDUMINGTON RECTORY and the ADVENTURES of TWO CURATES: THOMAS LORENZO DAWE, B.A., of St. Drone's, and CHARLES DIAMOND, of Mandulin. 1 vol., 7s. 6d. [Just out.]

SYBARITE and SPARTAN: a

Novel. By Mrs. LORENZO DAWE, Author of "The Militia Major," &c. 3 vols., 31s. 6d. [Just out.]

IN THE PRESS, FOR EARLY PUBLICATION.

A STORY of AUTUMN. By Mrs.

COMYNS CARR, Author of "North Italian Folk." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

SONG-BLOOM: a Volume of Poems. By GEORGE BARLOW, Author of "Love Songs," "Time's Whisperings," &c. 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

GRAND TOURS in MANY LANDS.

By JOHN MCCOSH, M.D. Edin., F.R.G.S., H.E.I.C.S., Author of "Nuova Italia." 1 vol., 7s. 6d.

LONDON:

REMINGTON & CO., 133, NEW BOND STREET, W.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 29, 1881.

No. 456, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The English Poets: Selections, with Critical Introductions, &c., &c. Edited by T. H. Ward, M.A. Oxford. Vol. III.—“The Eighteenth Century: Addison to Blake.” (Macmillan.)

At this day, when the pressure of life, the vast amount to be known, and the little time to know it in, render it necessary for all subjects—history, philosophy, science—to be epitomised and condensed, poetry could not escape the common lot. Indeed, poetry lends itself to this process more readily than many other subjects. For while even the greatest poets have written many things that may without loss be forgotten, the lesser poets have, many of them, written only a few things that deserve to be remembered. Of recent attempts to epitomise, and yet to present a fair general view of, the poetry of England, that of Mr. Ward is by far the most notable—one every way worthy of the university to which so many of its contributors belong. The first two volumes of this work were noticed in this journal in June last. To-day we shall find more than enough to engage our attention in the third volume, which contains selections from the poets of the eighteenth century, beginning with Addison and ending with Blake. In a volume which includes extracts from forty-four separate poets, not to mention Scottish minor song-writers, it would be easy to ask why certain poets are included while certain others are omitted—why, for instance, a place should have been found for Whitehead and none for Michael Bruce, the boy-poet of Loch Leven, reputed author of the “Ode to the Cuckoo,” an ode worthy of being placed beside Wordsworth’s on the same subject; and why no piece of Logan, Bruce’s college friend, and, as some say, his plagiarist, should be noticed. Or it may raise our wonder that, when Lady Nairn’s pathos is illustrated by that most touching of songs, “The Land o’ the Leal,” her humour also should not have been exhibited by “The Laird of Cockpen,” and her blending of pathos and humour by “Wha’ll buy caller herring?” These, however, are but minor matters. The great distinctive excellence of the work lies in the, for the most part, admirable essays by which the selections from each poet are introduced. The editor has been fortunate in securing the assistance of so many able men for this part of his work. The Rector of Lincoln College, the Dean of Westminster, Mr. Matthew Arnold, Prof. Dowden, Mr. Swinburne, not to mention many younger names, are enough to confer distinction on any work to which they lend their aid. The essays of these and other contributors are not only valuable in themselves, but will have an additional value, as historical records, for future time. To those who know the several poets, and have already formed some judgment for themselves regarding them, the critical estimates of this work are not only full of interest, but of instruction also. One can, however, imagine a drawback to their usefulness. Such ready-made criticisms, lying at hand in a popular work, may easily minister to an evil mental habit of our day, by supplying the young too easily with ready-made opinions about literature, while they neglect to study the poets’ works, and to allow their minds to be steeped in the poetry itself. Turning to the estimates here given of the greater poets—for it is to some of these only we have space to advert—the first prominent essay is that by Mr. Pattison on Pope. Nothing could be more necessary in a work of this kind than to seize and express truly the power and the weakness of a poet who is the representative man of a style which dominated English poetry for more than a century. Mr. Pattison shows, in his clear, incisive way, that Pope was not the originator of the style in which he wrought, but the master who perfected it. That style set in soon after the Restoration, and continued more or less till the French Revolution. Its aim was perfection of form, literary finish, the neatest, most epigrammatic expression. The thought that was conveyed was of small account compared with the style which conveyed it. It was the age when English prose was forming itself, and the verse then written was not far removed from prose. “It is by courtesy,” says Mr. Pattison,

“that the versifiers from Dryden to Churchill are styled poets, seeing that the literature they have bequeathed us wants just that element of inspired feeling which is present in the feeblest of the Elizabethans. . . . But, if not poets, they were literary artists. They showed that a couplet can do the work of a page, and a single line produce effects which in the infancy of writing would require sentences.”

The material in which Pope worked—in which he was perfectly at home—was the manners, prejudices, passions, sentiments of his own day—the atmosphere he breathed was that of the cultivated man about town. Beyond this he had little knowledge and less interest. Mr. Pattison regards as the best of Pope’s works, because containing most of his true self, the “Essay on Man” and the “Moral Essays.” Yet it is in these last that Pope satirises and libels Addison. On the whole it would be impossible, in the same space, to convey a more direct or just estimate of Pope than that which the Rector of Lincoln has given. What Pope bequeathed to his country’s literature was a pointed perfection of expression and a finish of style which not even those who most loudly revolted from him have been able to neglect.

The poet most unlike to Pope of his contemporaries, James Thomson, is well and discriminatingly introduced by Mr. Saintsbury, who points to the popularity of Thomson’s poetry, which has outlived so many revolutions in taste, as a sure proof of its worth. Of this popularity he finds the reason in the admirable choice of a subject which appeals to, and is comprehensible by, everybody; and in a treatment which, while it succeeds in making the common uncommon, does not make it too uncommon for the general taste. An eye for the truth of nature, a blending of literal fact with poetic grace—this is the gift which Mr. Saintsbury rightly attributes to Thomson. We cannot but demur when he so highly commends Thomson’s blank verse as to put it beside that of Milton and that of the present Laureate, as one of the three best models of the metre in our language. It is too cumbrous, often Latinised both in its structure and in its diction. The Spenserian versification of the “Castle of Indolence” approaches much nearer to perfection.

The high and, for his age, unique quality of Collins’ lyric poetry is brought out with that peculiar emphasis which characterises Mr. Swinburne’s panegyric. “There was but one man in the time of Collins who had in him a note of pure lyric song—a pulse of inborn music—irresistible and indubitable,” and that man was Collins. “The Muse gave birth to Collins; she did but give suck to Gray.” All of positive praise that is here given to Collins one accepts gladly; but why should it be set off by disparaging another poet of high, though different, quality? There is no essay in the volume which contains more suggestive thought than that on Gray by Mr. M. Arnold. Quoting an expression of Gray’s friend, the then Master of Pembroke Hall—“He never spoke out”—Mr. Arnold makes it the key-note of his reflections on Gray. He asks why it was that he never spoke out; how his scantiness, his sterility of poetic production, is to be explained. Mr. Arnold finds the cause of it, not in Gray’s shrinking and fastidious disposition, not in his long weakness of health and consequent depression, but in the chilling temperament of the age he lived in—an age when the powers of understanding, wit, and smartness, not the deeper emotions of the soul, were in the ascendant—an age whose work was to write prose, not poetry. This is a view which Mr. Arnold has ably advocated before in the essay with which he prefaces his reprint of some of Johnson’s “Lives of the Poets.” But it may be doubted whether Gray’s lack of poetic fertility may not be traced more truly to his own peculiar nature—a temperament powerfully affected by his long residence in college rooms—than to general circumstances of his time. Few things are more repressive of poetic impulse than prolonged academic habits. The fountain of inspiration must be strong indeed which cannot be frozen up by such seclusion.

In his essay on John and Charles Wesley it is interesting to hear Dean Stanley discourse on the reasons why out of the multitude of hymns most are such entire failures. Of the modern translations from the Roman Breviary, he thinks that Cardinal Newman’s alone have “a distinct poetical glow and artistic finish. All the rest are couched in the uniform pedestrian style which is unfortunately familiar to English Churchmen in the vast mass of the verses contained in Hymns Ancient and Modern.” The three reasons which the Dean assigns for the failure of most hymns I cannot stay to give, but I would refer those who care for such things to the Dean's suggestive essay. Charles Wesley's beautiful, but little-known, hymn on "Catholic Love" is included among the extracts, and for this the Dean will secure the thanks of many whose hearts instinctively echo to its two opening stanzas.

The editor discourses, if not tenderly yet, on the whole, appreciatingly, of Cowper. But at the close of his remarks he gives it as his opinion that Cowper is "a favourite with the middle, but not with the cultivated, classes." As an offset to this it may be mentioned that the man of greatest genius whom Oxford has in this century produced has expressed his special admiration and fondness for Cowper, although holding theological opinions most opposite to his.

It is hard to say the right word about Burns. To Englishmen, not to speak of foreigners, he is, if not a sealed book, yet in a great part inaccessible, by reason of his dialect and his strong local colouring and allusions. He is then most powerful when he is most vernacular. When Scotchmen, on the other hand, begin to speak of him, their national fervour is apt to run away with their critical judgment. Even Dr. Service, in the able and appreciative essay with which he here introduces the selections from Burns, seems not wholly to have escaped the national bias. All readers of this work will remember the somewhat caustic banter with which Mr. Arnold in his general Introduction plies Scotchmen for their tenderness to that which is not best in Burns' work. This is how it strikes an impartial critic viewing it from without. What is to be desired is a purely catholic estimate of Burns from the hand of some Sainte-Beuve, enabled by knowledge and sympathy fully to understand Burns and his whole situation, yet far enough removed from him to estimate his works in the pure light of catholic criticism. But in default of this, the next best thing is a large-hearted tribute from "a brither Scot," and this we have well rendered in the essay of Dr. Service.

In looking over the contents of this third volume one is sometimes tempted to grudge the space that has been given to the very lesser lights, and to wish it had been devoted to longer extracts and fuller comments on the greater ones. But this would be to change the aim of the work, and to make it, perhaps not more entertaining, but less instructive. I could have wished that space had allowed me to dwell on some more of the critical essays in this volume. The few I have alluded to are but samples of the general quality of nearly all of them. Nowhere within the same compass will a student of English literature find guides to the English poetry of the eighteenth century so well equipped with knowledge, so candid, yet so sympathetic. M. Taine's work contains more elaborate treatment of the greater poets, but the dashing verdicts, often spiced with paradox, of the brilliant Frenchman stand in marked contrast to the wise insight and tempered judgment with which the English essayists appraise these poets of their country. Whatever other function this volume may fulfil, it will remain a lasting record to tell what judgment the best thought of England in the later nineteenth century formed of the poets of the eighteenth.

J. C. SHAIRP.

Calendar of State Papers, Domestic Series.
1640. Edited by W. D. Hamilton, F.S.A.
Rolls Series. (Longmans.)

THE recent instalment of Mr. Hamilton's Calendar covers only the short period of the five months which passed between the beginning of April and the end of August in the eventful year which witnessed the last struggles of the system of government bequeathed by Elizabeth to the Stuart kings. As might, therefore, be expected, the volume is replete with information, probably surpassing in this respect any of its predecessors, as unfortunately it will be found to surpass any of those which will follow it. After the breach between the King and the Parliament, State papers are to be looked for elsewhere than in the Record Office. Mr. Hamilton will have some gleanings to give us, notably in that interesting correspondence addressed to Pennington of which Mr. Forster made so much use. But he will never again be able to fill a single volume with the papers of five months, or of twice that period.

Mr. Hamilton has done his work carefully and well, as was to be expected of him. No real historian will ever trust to the best of Calendars as long as the original MSS. are accessible to him; but those who wish not to write but to read history will do well to seek it here. The abstracts of all important documents are fully given—so fully that those who are acquainted with the originals are sometimes tempted to wish that Mr. Hamilton had, at the expense of a very few additional lines, given the actual words of the letters of which he often alters the form so slightly.

In turning from the body of the work to the Preface the reader is met by the old difficulty of determining what the nature of such a Preface ought to be. The historian would probably wish to have an indication of the localities where information in print or MS. is to be found which would supplement that disclosed in the volume which the Preface introduces. To do this, however, in any satisfactory way would require an acquaintance with the contents of the libraries of Europe which can scarcely be expected from those who are hard at work on a special set of documents from one year's end to another, and it seems to be precluded by the rules of the office in which they are employed. Mr. Hamilton has preferred to follow Mr. Bruce's system of giving a slight sketch of the period to which his papers refer, interweaving with it quotations from the more prominent documents, especially when they were previously unknown. It cannot be denied that in this way Mr. Hamilton has produced an interesting Preface. On one point, indeed, he has made a discovery of no slight importance. The paper which tells how the Short Parliament was dissolved on account of the intention of the leaders to take up the cause of the Scots, and not on account of Vane's refusal to accept a vote of less than twenty subsidies, is a most valuable contribution to the history of the time, and deserves mention the more because Mr. Hamilton is modestly disposed to hide his light under a bushel, and does not sufficiently impress upon his readers the revolution which he has brought about in the received account of one of the great crises in our history.

In other respects, however, the Preface is sadly defective. It is, perhaps, rather ungracious to look upon work of this kind with a critical eye. To a calendarer the work of writing a Preface must be something like a holiday in Switzerland to an over-worked lawyer. When he is compiling his calendar he cannot pick out the nuggets like the student who uses his work afterwards. He has to spend time upon a large quantity of documents which have not the slightest interest for him, and which, in many instances, will never be of the slightest interest to anyone, when they are often the very papers the arrangement of which in chronological sequence gives him the greatest trouble. In his Preface he can skip about and disport himself at pleasure, absolutely ignoring dry legal documents or undated petitions by miserable hangers-on of the Court for the payment of their arrears. Yet this very freedom has its hidden dangers. The calendarer is obliged to spend his days in a certain office. He is obliged, by the rules of that office, to confine his remarks to the papers before him, and it is perhaps not to be wondered at if he tends, in the exuberance of his self-confidence, to forget that there are fresh fields and pastures new outside the walls of the building in Fetter Lane.

Into this error Mr. Hamilton has fallen. His account of the Short Parliament, superior as it is to any which has preceded it, shows a want of acquaintance with MSS. in the British Museum which is fatal to its completeness, as his omission to refer to the agitation on the subject of the military burdens prevents the reader from grasping the whole situation as it stood.

More serious complaint may be made of the pages referring to the celebrated proposal to bring over the Irish army which has been attributed to Strafford. In the first place Mr. Hamilton says that the words were spoken in the Council, whereas, as appears beyond doubt from the evidence given at the trial, they were spoken in the Junta or committee of eight, though contemporary pamphleteers sometimes make the same mistake as Mr. Hamilton has fallen into. No doubt this mistake is of no great historical importance; but it is really too bad to be told that when Strafford said, "You have an army in Ireland you may employ here to reduce this kingdom," he certainly referred to Scotland. Other enquirers have not been usually so positive; and, if Mr. Hamilton had merely left this statement unsupported by argument, his large acquaintance with the documents in his office might have given weight to this ex cathedra decision. Fortunately, however, he has given the reason which led him to the conclusion. "This kingdom," he says, "certainly refers to Scotland, the war with that country being then under consideration." The same kind of logic would lead to the conclusion that no verb in Lord Macaulay's great work could possibly have had France for its nominative because the subject was the history of England. The very question at issue is whether Strafford did or did not think that a previous subjugation of England was necessary to the conquest of Scotland. It is no blame to Mr. Hamilton that he is not aware that a despatch of the French agent Montreuil, dated early in May, mentions a proposal for bringing the Irish army to England as having been made. This effectually disposes of the notion that the interpretation given by the Parliamentary leaders to Vane's notes on this matter was invented by them some months subsequently.

Another observation of Mr. Hamilton's is entitled to some weight. "It is noticeable," he says, "that the minutes of Council business which so frequently occur among the State papers are either in the writing of Secretary Windebank or of Edward Nicholas, but not of Vane." A priori arguments, however, must not be taken for more than they are worth; and the statement made in the Long Parliament that the notes were Vane's, and that the King sent for them and had them burnt, is given by D'Ewes, the last part of the statement being in cypher, happily easily legible. As this was never contradicted by Charles we may take it for granted that it was true.

SAMUEL R. GARDINER.

Young Ireland: a Fragment of Irish History, 1840-1850. By Sir Charles Gavan Duffy, K.C.M.G. (Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co.)

THE large volume which Sir C. G. Duffy has issued, doubtless as a political pamphlet—if the term may be allowed—in view of fresh legislation on the state of Ireland, is but a fragment of that fragment which is all it professes to be. For while he does more than his title-page promises, in that he gives a retrospect or "bird's-eye view" of Irish history from the legendary invasion of Milesius, fourteen centuries before the Christian era, here set down as an ascertained fact; on the other hand, he stops short with the death of Thomas Davis in 1845, not very long after the release of O'Connell, so that the story of the famine of 1845-47, of the abortive rising of 1848, and of the settling down in the two following years, has yet to appear in order to fulfil the author's pledge. The work has a double object, for it is literary as well as political, and aims at describing the personal characteristics of the group of remarkable young men who aided Sir Charles Duffy in establishing the Nation newspaper, and in copiously producing other literature intended to bring about the same changes in public opinion by different means. It is probable that English readers will for the most part be more in sympathy with the generous zeal which the writer displays in thus gracing the memory of his former colleagues, than with the powerfully drafted indictment against the government of Ireland ever since the invasion of Henry II. They will say, and not unreasonably, that the extreme darkness of the picture can hardly be reconciled with the writer's personal history, as having combined the experiences of a "treason-felon," escaping conviction by the skin of his teeth, with those of a responsible Minister of the British Crown in an important colony, and with a title and decoration bestowed only for loyal public services. If, on the one hand, Sir C. G. Duffy had ever laid himself open to the suspicion of having been seduced, as many before him have been, by offers from those in power; or if, on the other, any revolution had taken place in the relations between Great Britain and Ireland like that in modern Austria which made powerful Ministers of Deák and other Hungarian patriots whose heads were proclaimed in 1849, of course there would be no incompatibility between the two pictures; but neither theory has the support of facts. And, consequently, the difficulty is still unsolved, how a man of indisputable integrity could accept office from a Power founded merely on tyranny and abuse. We know that all the blandishments of the Tuileries failed to rally the Republican patriots of France to Napoleon III., because they could never forget how he made his way to the Crown, and they would no more have served him in Algiers or in New Caledonia than in Paris or Marseilles. That Sir C. G. Duffy could act in unlike fashion in Australia, as Thomas D'Arcy M'Gee did also in Canada, inevitably weakens the force of his accusations, and necessitates the substitution of such counts as misadventure and chance-medley in many places where he would have us read malice prepense. Without doubt, practical responsibility has told upon him, and he has besides honestly striven to moderate his statements; and yet, after the fullest admission of many painful and shameful truths in his narrative, the dispassionate reader cannot fail to recognise the ex parte ring of a brief as distinguished from the impartial summing-up of a judge. One example will suffice to illustrate this defect. When naturally and reasonably complaining of the selfish eagerness with which the English Parliament headed off every attempt of Ireland to earn bread in any manner save agriculture, by crushing all its manufactures and export trade with prohibitive tariffs, there is no word to tell the reader that this was no exceptional malignity of politicians, but the simple carrying out of the erroneous views of political economy then prevalent everywhere, and rampant still in the United States and Victoria. The English manufacturers and traders sincerely believed that Irish competition would ruin them, and saw no safety except in protectionism. And, what is perhaps more serious, we are told nothing about the very large part played by reckless strikes in destroying such native industries as were not touched by English statutes, although the fact is familiar to all students of political economy. In both respects, sheer stupidity, believing itself to be the instinct of self-preservation, was the real factor at work, and not aimless malignity of purpose. It is obvious that it does not lie within the province of a purely literary journal like the ACADEMY to discuss the political questions with which Sir C. G. Duffy's volume is mainly concerned; and so much must suffice as a caution to readers who may be carried away by the graphic and effective presentment of the author's views. There are, however, two other aspects of his work which are open to treatment here—namely, its contributions to the history of the present reign; and, still more, its literary reminiscences of the remarkable group of young men who aided in the establishment of the Nation newspaper.

Of the former of these two, the most valuable seems to us the light thrown on the character and career of O'Connell, resulting in a portrait almost as far removed from the indiscriminate eulogy which has been most usual among that famous man's admirers, as from the ungenerous depreciation and caricature of the Greville Memoirs and of Punch. For good or ill, Daniel O'Connell played an important part in British history, and no adequate account of it can be written which fails to estimate his personality aright. This Sir Charles Duffy helps us to do by a few bold descriptive strokes, illustrated by the details of incidents which brought into relief the peculiarities he drafts for us. It seems a mistake, however, whether the political or the literary view be taken of his work, to occupy so much of its space in narrating the whole story of O'Connell's trial and imprisonment in 1844, and the subsequent quashing of the proceedings on appeal in England. It ought, of course, to appear prominently in any biography of O'Connell himself, but its bearing on "Young Ireland" (a party as distinct from O'Connell's as the Peelites of that day were from the older Tories) is very indirect; and its only apparent value here is as a fresh count in the indictment against the administration of English law in Ireland down to a still recent date.

The literary portraits are more germane to these columns, and they are drawn not only with considerable vigour, but with a hearty affectionateness which, while it may perhaps cause the likenesses to be somewhat idealised, at any rate conciliates the good-will of readers for an author who shows how strong is his own good-will.

It would be difficult to find an exact parallel to the aspect of the group. Something like it, of course, might be found in sketches of the ardent young men who prepared the Italy of 1815 to become the Italy of 1860, and still more like in the young Frenchmen whose literary activity kept France in a ferment during the later years of Louis Philippe; but the resemblances are only partial and superficial. A critic who looked at the picture from the outside only might complain that Sir C. G. Duffy has not made quite clear what it was exactly that the Young Irelanders wanted to do, despite much careful and vivid narrative of their theories and endeavours. But, in truth, this very vagueness is the most correct representation, for they themselves, seeing all things through a golden haze, were the last people to have formed clear and definite plans, capable of being practically wrought out into political or social action. The only idea which comes out into anything like clear relief is unquestionably a noble one—that of infusing a sentiment of self-respect into a large section of the Irish people, which had so long been treated as a mere proletariat as to have almost learnt to despise itself. Beyond this, nothing is definite, and that for a reason which can hardly be unknown to Sir C. G. Duffy—the absence of any great historic past such as fired the imagination and nerved the arm of Young Italy. English history under the Heptarchy is very hard reading, and it is not till the Bretwalda begins to be sole monarch, instead of mere dean of a college of kinglets, that the sense of national unity and dignity strikes the student's mind. But in Ireland the Ardriagh never united the country, and the tribal wars and feuds split up the land into mere jarring fragments. The one bright spot in that history of Ireland which Sir Hercules Langrishe, in a brilliant epigram, described as the "Continuation of Rapine" is the Celtic scholarship of the seventh, eighth, and ninth centuries, spreading over Western Europe through the agency of Irish missionaries. But this one true glory, whose modern equivalent we may assume to be the improvement of national education in its widest sense, including secondary and tertiary grades as well as primary, was just the one thing about which Young Ireland does not seem to have concerned itself. What it did, however, was done with zeal, with fervour, and with no little ability and literary aptitude. In one instance, at least, there was yet more. Thomas Davis had a spark of that indefinable quality which is called genius, and his poetry shows it as much as the verses of Kingsley and Hawker do in modern English literature. It is there, it is genuine and unquestionable, but there is not quite enough of it to achieve great things. Sir Charles Duffy's warm affection and admiration lead him to believe that Davis's early death prevented him from showing what was really in him, and that he would have won very high rank had he survived even a few years. To our mind, the only singer of modern times of whom so much can be safely asserted is Keats; but Keats, dying at five-and-twenty, had already gone far higher than Davis at thirty-one. The probability is that we have got Davis's best, and that longer life, though it might have produced much equally good, would not have given us anything of his better in literature, and we cannot here discuss his political promise. One of the most interesting facts, by-the-by, about Davis himself, eagerly Nationalist as he was, is his genealogy, which felicitously illustrates the assimilative power of Ireland over alien settlers, for his father was of a Buckinghamshire family of Welsh descent, and his mother came of a Yorkshire stock, crossed with the Cumbrian Howards. Already, the verve and occasional raciness of Sir Charles G. Duffy's work have carried it, in spite of its size, into a second edition, and he will find the public ready to welcome its promised sequel, which must, of necessity, be more definitely political in treatment, for there is little to add from the literary side.

RICHARD F. LITLEDAL.

DON QUIXOTE.

The Ingenious Knight, Don Quixote de la Mancha. Composed by Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra. A New Translation from the Originals of 1605 and 1608. By Alexander James Duffield. With Notes. In 3 vols. (C. Kegan Paul & Co.)

Cervantes. By Mrs. Oliphant. ("Foreign Classics.") (Blackwood & Sons.)

La Verdad sobre el Quijote. Por Don Nicolas Diaz de Benjumea. (Madrid.)

In the Introduction to her well-written sketch,

Mrs. Oliphant, speaking of the Don Quixote, says:—"A new translation by Mr. Duffield, as to which great expectations are entertained, and which we regret not to have had access to, is, we believe, in the press." Mr. Duffield himself, after telling of his pilgrimages to Spain, and of his study of Cervantes' other works, adds: "I have read his Don Quixote more than twenty times, and have translated it into English better than it has ever been done before, nor have I allowed one graceless or unchaste word of mine to intrude itself." Rarely, we think, in the history of literature have great expectations been more signally disappointed (excepting in two particulars); and rarely has any workman formed a more mistaken estimate of his labours.

The style of Cervantes is the manly, straightforward style of a soldier and man of the world; and, notwithstanding his constant allusions to a literature and to a state of society that has long since passed away, it is still in the main singularly clear. Mr. Duffield's style is affected and involved, and his vocabulary presents a jumble of archaisms peculiar to himself. In reading these volumes we have constantly been obliged to turn to the Spanish to understand the English. Notwithstanding that the Cervantistas of Spain have a special organ of their own, that almost every Spanish periodical has, from time to time, articles on Cervantes or his works, and that, as the Preface of the third book on our list states, "muchos é interesantes son los nuevos datos adquiridos por diligentes investigadores," not one of these recent discoveries is utilised by Mr. Duffield. His authorities are Clemencin, Pellicer, Bowle, Navarrete, Hartzenbusch; anything later than these seems utterly unknown to him. Hence his notes are sometimes as useless for explanation as his text is wide of the spirit of the original.

We mentioned two exceptions to our censure. These are: (1) the very valuable bibliographical list "of the Books of Chivalry," furnished by Señor Gayangos; and (2) the poetical translations of Mr. J. Young Gibson, which form so great a contrast to the prose of Mr. Duffield. These versions could hardly be improved; and, if set to fitting music, some of them, such as Don Luis' Serenade (ii. 280), might become favourite songs in English drawing-rooms.

We must now substantiate our charges as briefly as possible. The unpardonable sin of Mr. Duffield is that he is continually drawing attention to himself and trying to improve upon his author. He cannot be content with the manly simplicity of Cervantes, but tortures his words into affected archaisms. Rozinante is a "rouncy," a village is a "thorp," Sancho's pack-saddle is a "pannell," a child is "asered," thieves are "padders," &c., &c. Though boasting of his purity, Mr. Duffield manages to emphasise an objectionable Spanish expression by translating it "giglot." Cervantes in his Prologue purposely assigns to Cato a verse from Ovid: "Donec cris felix," &c. Mr. Duffield in a note gives the reference to Ovid, but does not allude to the distich of Cato i. 18, "Cum fueris felix," &c., which Cervantes had in his mind; and afterwards, when Sancho cites "Caton Zonzorino romano," "Cato the dreary [or stupid] Roman," Mr. Duffield translates (i. 215): "Cato the Roman incensor"!—foisting on Cervantes a blunder he never made. The little Cato, "Lou Catounet" (Cato de Moribus), was not only the favourite school-book of the Renaissance, but was translated into nearly every Southern dialect, and became almost the Bible of the poor. Its last echoes in English literature are heard in the Church Poreh of George Herbert. When Sancho is vainly trying to persuade his master that he is not a victim to enchantment, but has only lost his senses—"sino trañstornado el juicio"—Mr. Duffield writes, "but only with your head turned arsie varsie" (ii. 360). To save space we will give, side by side, a few specimens of these improvements on the simplest phrases of the original, taken at hazard:—

ii. 183.
The craft with which they had fished to draw him from the rock Dolorous.	Del artificio que habían usado para sacarle de la Peña pobre.
184.
Possessed of his partisan or trunk.	Arrimado á su tronco ó lanzon.
His face . . . withered and saffroned.	Su rostro . . . seco y amarillo.
Martial stalk.	Mesurado continents.
I am prewarned.	Estoy informado.
185.
With much tact and serious artifice.	Con mucho donaire y gravedad.
187.
God's sonties.	Vive Dios.
Thou givest not the peace on her face.	No le des paz en el rostro [paz is here the kiss of welcome].
The daughter of the land-lady began to throw S's with her lips.	Le comenzo á cecear.
Your worship [applied to a lady].	Tu merced.
Rash-murmuring, back-biting peascod.	Murmurador y maldiciente.

When Doña Clara in her childish way is sobbing out her confession to Dorotéa, she says, "No sé que diablos ha sido esto," and when Mr. Duffield translates, "Nor do I know how the devil this happened," we are forced to the reflection that Cervantes knew at least how a lady speaks. When Sancho slyly says, "Ay, master, master, and as there is more mischief in the hamlet than is dreamt of—if one may say so, asking pardon of the honourable gossips"—"Ay, señor, señor, y como hay mas mal en el aldehuela que se suena; con perdon sea dicho de las tocas honradas" (the toca is a headdress worn by widows, dueñas, and sometimes by nuns)—Mr. Duffield gives (as prose), "Ah, master, master! In the village which is vile, they go cheating all the while, with forgiveness, be it said, to those with kerchiefs on their head" (ii. 326). Mr. Duffield vaunts his pilgrimages to the homes of Cervantes, yet in these three volumes we find scarcely one note explaining a Spanish custom, while many such customs are totally mistaken. Thus the "reja," the iron bars or grating of the ground-floor windows and of the garden, is confounded with the "celosia," or lattice of the upper and ladies' rooms, and we have (i. 273) "the lattice windows of a garden." No note is given on the "rubrica;" riding "Jennet-wise," "á la gineeta," is unexplained; "Moorish fashion" would almost convey the idea to English readers. He makes no mention of the nursery tale "El Garbancito" to which Sancho alludes (i. 196). To judge by his note, he has never seen the "Frailecillos" made from beans and chestnuts by Spanish children. These instances might be multiplied almost indefinitely, but those given will perhaps suffice to show that we have not blamed without cause.

We have little room for the last two works. Mrs. Oliphant's is most pleasant reading, but bears marks of undue haste; p. 123 must surely have been returned uncorrected to the printer. Both authors are alike in this, that they construct the biography of Cervantes mainly from his own writings, considering himself as his own chief hero. Señor Benjumea's book is to the full as interesting as Mrs. Oliphant's. He cites also original documents, and admits us more intimately into the society among which Cervantes lived; but some of his conclusions on Cervantes are stoutly combated by his fellow-critics in Spain. As to one point in discussion, we may mention that an essay on the travels of Cervantes, illustrated by a map, appeared in the Boletín de la Sociedad Geográfica de Madrid, June 1880; but into this we cannot now enter.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

The Poet and the Muse: being a Version of A. de Musset's "La Nuit de Mai," "La Nuit d'Août," and "La Nuit d'Octobre." With an Introduction. By Walter Herries Pollock. (R. Bentley & Son.)

MR. POLLOCK'S "version" of three of the Nuits of Alfred de Musset is not an easy work to criticise, especially if the reviewer has himself been busy with the unthankful task of translation. Mr. Pollock's style is fluent, his expressions are often most felicitous, and perhaps only the diu majores of modern English poetry are as skilled as this writer in the use of blank verse. But for this very blank verse Mr. Pollock offers a kind of apology. The poems of de Musset are cast in rhyming alexandrines and lyric stanzas. It is quite true that these forms of verse are novel, as vehicles of dramatic poetry, in English. Thus Mr. Pollock was perhaps obliged to adopt the usual blank verse of English tragedy. His work pretends to be no more than a kind of adaptation. Now de Musset's Nuits require a very great deal of adapting before they could be recited to an English audience. They are often very plain spoken, and Mr. Pollock has softened and altered their free speech. To take an example from the second page (La Nuit de Mai), the French Muse says:—

"l'immortelle nature
Se remplit de parfums, d'amour, et de murmure,
Comme le lit joyeux de deux jeunes époux."

Here Mr. Pollock has—

"To-night immortal nature brings again
Her dearest perfumes for the whispered love,
That waits upon the bridals of the spring"— lines in which we confess that the meaning is not altogether clear to us. Other passages are of necessity altered, where the French poet writes with the bitterness of a wounded heart and a nature soured for the moment. We see the necessity of these alterations if The Poet and the Muse is to be a dramatic composition, suitable for recitation in English, as the Nuits are in French. Again, in the Nuit de Mai, Mr. Pollock is, in one way, justified in omitting the lines in which de Musset numbers the Homeric towns—

"Argos, et Pélée, ville des hécatombes, Et Messa, la divine, agréable aux colombes."

Here there is a longueur, doubtless, in the original, but, as the puzzled French critic said of Mr. Swinburne's Erechtheus, it is a longueur délicieux. It is pleasant to see the young poet doing homage to "the Ionian father of the rest." There was something Greek in de Musset. He might have been a child of "Ios or Smyrna, two sweet cities, the first named of the Violet, the latter of the Myrrhe." He might have been a poet among the later poets of the Anthology, vexed somewhat by the shadow of Christianity, and not wholly happy in his Pagan pleasures. His memory of Homer is one of the Greek touches in his nature, and we miss the lines in Mr. Pollock's version, though the reason for dropping them is obvious and admissible. But all this time one is finding fault with Mr. Pollock for not having done something which he never promised or pretended to do—for not giving us a translation in place of a free version. Indeed, I cannot but think that the Nuits, poems strictly personal in their motive, should be reproduced with scrupulous exactitude. An account in prose, after Paul de Musset, of the circumstances in which each poem was written, a complete translation, if possible in the original metres (though perhaps this is scarcely practicable), make an ideal rendering of the Nuits. Only this version would be absolutely useless for the purpose for which Mr. Pollock's poem is readily available. A closer version could not be recited; a version less close must fail to give us, in English, the real de Musset. There is no reason why Mr. Pollock, if he is not weary of the task, should not give the English reader a close translation, as he has given English reciters a graceful, often melodious, and thoroughly serviceable adaptation of the French poet's masterpiece. By-the-way, there is a possible error in the rendering of

"la Nuit sur la pelouse Balance le zéphyr dans son voile odorant."

Mr. Pollock writes:—

"Night upon the lawn
Rocks in its perfumed veil the zephyr's breath."
Night could rock a zephyr, conceived of as the aerial form of a young wind-god; but could she rock in her veil a zephyr's breath?

A. LANG.

NEW NOVELS.

Queen Cophetua. By R. E. Francillon. (Chatto & Windus.)

Folly Morrison. By Frank Barrett. (R. Bentley & Son.)

My Imperialist Neighbour, and other Stories. By Henrietta A. Duff. (Marcus Ward & Co.)

Herbert Manners, and other Stories. By Florence Montgomery. (R. Bentley & Son.)

Der Kaiser. Von George Ebers. (Stuttgart und Leipzig: Hallberger.)

MR. FRANCILLON has produced in Queen

Cophetua a very fair example of his peculiar and remarkable, if somewhat unequal, talent. The book is a great advance on some of his earlier work, because the last vestige of the only imitation with which Mr. Francillon could ever fairly be charged—an imitation of the later books of the late Lord Lytton—has entirely disappeared. If Queen Cophetua is not wholly satisfactory, it is only because the central figure—a remarkably original and well-conceived character—comes just a little, and only a little, short of being thoroughly worked out. Now this character is almost the only one (with the possible exception of the heroine, who is also very original and well executed, but against whom perhaps the same charge may be brought) on which the interest of the book depends. The other figures, though amusing and well drawn in their way, come like shadows and so depart. In particular the hero en titre, though not the real hero of the book, is a very shadowy young man indeed, besides being much of a milksop and something of a fool. Mr. Francillon has sinned, in company with Virgil and Sir Walter Scott, in making his successful man, or rather his two successful men, colourless and uninteresting lay figures, and in enlisting the sympathies of the reader for the villain. This would not much matter if he had enlisted them just a little more strongly. It is rather ungrateful to do anything with Queen Cophetua except praise it; but then Mr. Francillon is not a person to be denied the compliment of serious criticism. His book is a very interesting one—indeed, as far as actual interest is concerned it is better than anything we have lately read. Gideon Skull, the villain above alluded to, plays for very high stakes throughout the book; and the point in which Mr. Francillon has artfully distinguished him from other villains is that the stakes are not wholly mercenary or vile. Although as unmoral a person as could be found on a summer's day, Gideon Skull is capable of a sincere friendship of a curious kind until he is still more curiously disappointed in his friend, and of a love so much more sincere that the collapse of it practically kills him. Yet he is on the ordinary schemes of calculation an awful scoundrel, and Mr. Francillon does not palliate his scoundrelism in the least. To follow him on his winding way which leads to fortune only to disappoint him at last is a pleasing process, and may be recommended to all novel-readers. Whether Mr. Francillon does not go a little beyond probability in the matter of the conduct which he ascribes to the mother of his heroine is a matter of doubt to us; but here, too, a little more working out might have removed the difficulty. We ought not to omit to mention that Mr. Francillon has very happily hit off in some of his minor characters the weaknesses of a certain type of American character. He cannot be accused of partiality in doing this, for his good hero is an American too.

In Folly Morrison Mr. Barrett has succeeded in writing a book which has considerable merits. The author, indeed, appears to us to have been unfortunate in thinking that the mission of a novelist is to reform the world, and not too fortunate in selecting the agricultural labourer question as the particular reform to be tackled. His sentiments about the Paris Commune are also of a pleasingly unhistorical kind; and he seems to have swallowed unquestioningly the silly nonsense about the Second Empire which, since the Second Empire fell, many people who had good words enough for it in the days of its prosperity have thought it the proper thing to repeat parrot-fashion after each other. It is all the greater pity that Mr. Barrett should venture upon expressions of crude political opinion, because he really has very little business with them even on his own showing. His heroine might have been brought into her present straits by many other things besides the iniquities of game laws. Indeed, as her father had thought fit to surround himself with a family of thirteen or fourteen children to support on a labourer's wages, she must have had to make her own living sooner or later. Nor is it at all obvious why the model parson, Richard Vane, disgusted at the Thirty-nine Articles and the bad conduct of his patron's son to his own sister, should have gone wool-gathering to Paris, where, according to the laws of Nature, he was duly shorn. The goodness of the book lies wholly outside these debated and debateable points. Folly Morrison, a burlesque actress, very young, wholly uneducated, and of generous but violent impulses, is thrown into contact with a weak and well-intentioned young fellow respecting whom she soon learns that he is the son of the man who, as she thinks, did her father a great injury. So she determines (deliberately, so far as such a young person can be said to do anything deliberately) to ruin him—first by tempting him to extravagance and drunkenness, then by marrying him. There are certain improbabilities about all this, but the character of Folly is a rather attractive one, and is in some ways powerfully drawn, while many of the detached scenes of the book are excellent. It is an immense advance on Maggie, which we presume to have been the work of the same author; and if Mr. Barrett will let politics and social problems alone he ought to do very well as a novelist. The novelist should take for his motto a certain very well-known couplet altered by the necessity of the case from decasyllables to alexandrines:

"For forms of government let brainless noodles fight:
He can't be wrong whose plots and characters are right."

Mr. Barrett's plots and characters are very nearly right, but not entirely so, and he had much better occupy himself with perfecting them than with politico-arithmetical puzzles as to how labourers with a dozen children are to be kept in comfort.

The late Miss Duff's vein of tender sentiment comes out much better in these stories than in her recently published poems. Even here the sentiment is sometimes carried to a point bordering perilously on mawkishness. But on the other hand it not infrequently transcends mere sentiment and becomes real pathos. The author, too, has made very good use of her memories of various picturesque Continental districts, especially the Pyrenean region, for setting and framing her stories. "In Sight of the Mountains," "Ralph Cameron's Model," and the tale which gives the book its title are, perhaps, the best of the collection. In "Dulcis Brand" there is more sentiment than sense. Pretty scenery, broken or troubled love, and a "good cry" for finish, beginning, or middle—these were apparently Miss Duff's favourite ingredients for a story, and they are harmless ingredients enough. Certainly it would be well if some of her sister-novelists knew no other seasoning. Miss Duff's work is always and emphatically the work of a lady.

The little volumes which Mr. Bentley calls his Empire Library, and which bear an elegant crown and V.R. on their covers, have not hitherto, as far as we have noticed, devoted themselves to the amusement of that portion of her Majesty's subjects which is yet of tender years. All the three stories, however, which Miss Florence Montgomery has here collected are of the class of children's stories, and very good examples of their class they are too. The most particular person will find their morals unexceptionable, and they have fully developed ones which do not bite at all or prevent them from being capitally told stories. The only thing that we are inclined to think questionable is the method of punishment applied in the first tale to a passionate and self-willed boy. Practical jokes intended to frighten children are things of very doubtful wisdom, and have more than once had very ugly results. Therefore, we fear, "Uncle Claud's" conduct in dressing up as a policeman and pretending to arrest his nephew—or rather his nephew's double—was not that of a wise uncle.

Some English readers may be a little prejudiced against Herr Ebers by the affected misuse of the terms "Dichtung," "poetisch," and so forth with which he describes his own writings. For with all his constructive and narrative power—neither of which is inconsiderable—a more positive and prosaic writer hardly exists. The affectation, however, is one which Herr Ebers shares with a good many of his countrymen, so that it is perhaps unfair to blame him individually for it. Der Kaiser, he tells us, completes the series of historical romances in which he has embodied his studies of Egyptian history and sociology from the earliest time to the advent, or almost the advent, of Islam. The hero, as may perhaps be guessed, is Hadrian, who of all Roman emperors has most associations with Egypt; and Antinous, it is also hardly necessary to say, plays a prominent part. As usual, the author has been lavish of his special knowledge in equipping his tale.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

CURRENT THEOLOGY.

The Life of David as reflected in the Psalms. By Alexander Maclaren, D.D. (Edinburgh: Macniven and Wallace.) The uncertainty that attaches to the authentic character of the superscriptions of the Hebrew Psalter, though it cannot fail to lessen the confidence with which the results of any work of this kind can be regarded, only enhances the value of such sagacity as is possessed by Dr. Maclaren. With much sobriety of judgment Dr. Maclaren writes:—

"In some cases they [the ancient editorial notes] are obviously erroneous, but in the greater number there is nothing inconsistent with their correctness in the Psalms to which they are appended; while very frequently they throw a flood of light upon these, and all but prove their trustworthiness by their appropriateness."

This is the author's attitude in approaching the main problem. In a task such as that here attempted spiritual insight is not less needed than intellectual acumen, and we consider Dr. Maclaren to possess in good measure both qualifications.

The Parables of our Lord interpreted in View of their Relations to Each Other. By Henry Calderwood, LL.D. (Macmillan.) The idea which it is sought to illustrate in this work is that the parables of the New Testament "have been constructed and set in position upon a definite plan, such as may fairly warrant us in seeking here a systematic revelation of Gospel truth, even apart from other portions of Holy Scripture." Not many scientific students of the Gospels are at the present day likely to assent to this proposition, but those who are able to do so will find suggestive thoughts in Dr. Calderwood's comments. The work is of a popular character.

The Ethical and Social Aspect of Habitual Confession to a Priest. By Thomas Thornely, B.A., LL.M. (Macmillan.) This thin volume—thin in its intellectual as well as its material aspect—does no more than touch the upper surface of the proposed subject. It is a prize-essay by a law-student, and we are willing to hope that the writer's special pleading is rather the result of an early developed professional habit of mind than of any inherent incapacity to see more than one side of a disputed question.

The History of the Passion and Resurrection of our Lord, considered in the Light of Modern Criticism. By Dr. F. L. Steinmeyer, Professor of Theology in Berlin. New Edition, specially Revised for English Readers. Translated by the Rev. Thomas Crerar, M.A., and the Rev. Alex. Cusin, M.A. (Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark.) We are pleased to see Steinmeyer's well-known work in English. Although written originally with a special reference to D. Strauss, it contains an independent study of the Gospel history that gives it, apart from temporary and controversial purposes, a real and permanent value.

Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans. By F. Godet, D.D., Professor of Theology, Neuchâtel. Translated from the French by the Rev. A. Cusin, M.A. Vol. I. (Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark.) The vigour of what Mr. Ruskin calls "the penetrative imagination," so absolutely essential to the literary interpretation of ancient documents, has placed Dr. Godet in the front rank of living exegetes. Possibly in the present case some little allowance must be made here and there for dogmatic bias; but, taken as a whole, this work can scarcely be said to fall far short of the writer's admirable Commentaries on St. Luke and St. John.

The Expositor. Edited by the Rev. Samuel Cox. Vol. X. (Hodder and Stoughton.) This work continues steadily on its useful, though unambitious, course. We note as entertaining the characteristic article by Canon F. W. Farrar on the Rhetoric of St. Paul. Grimm's remark, cited by Canon Farrar, may be quite just: "It is better to have the style of genius than the genius of style." Canon Farrar himself too often makes us feel that there is a species of fine writing which has neither of the two.

Six Addresses on the Being of God. By C. J. Ellicott, D.D., Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. (S. P. C. K.) Bishop Ellicott wisely keeps clear of "the high priori road," and contents himself with putting forcibly the arguments for Theism that appeal to the ordinary understanding.

Die Edessische Abgar-Sage: kritisch untersucht von Richard Adelbert Lipsius. (Braunschweig.) In his critical examination of the Edessene legend of Abgar, Lipsius investigates, in a very full and searching way, the sources and dates of the various forms and ramifications of the story which has connected the names of Christ and Abgar. This story has been most familiarly known through the account of Eusebius (i. 13); but in 1876 new interest in it was aroused by the publication of The Doctrine of Addai, the Apostle, in a complete form from a Syriac MS. Fragments of this work had already been given to the world by Dr. Cureton, and an Armenian version of it had been translated into French by Dr. Alishan. Dr. Phillips, who edited and translated the Syriac MS., maintained in his Preface the substantial genuineness of the document, which professes to have been written by Labubna, the king's scribe. As the document, however, contains obvious references to later events, he had to admit the existence of considerable interpolations. He reached this conclusion in opposition to "a strong prejudice" which he entertained at the beginning of his investigations. Nevertheless, the arguments which induced him to change his opinion were not universally convincing, and his position is now assailed with German thoroughness and with great critical power. The conclusion advocated by Lipsius is that the story arose in its earliest form in the time of Abgar VIII. (A.D. 176-213), who was really the first Christian king, and that it grew up in the Catholic interest in order to derive the succession of bishops from the apostles. After this time it received successive additions. In comparing Eusebius' translation from the Syriac with The Doctrine of Addai, he assigns the priority to the former, while, on the other hand, he believes that Moses of Khorene drew from the latter, and he thus obtains as the limits of date for the extant Syriac work 324 and about 470 A.D. Another argument gives him a yet narrower limit. From the relation of the Doctrine of Addai to the Acts of Sharbil and Barshamia, and from the indications of date presented by these Acts, he infers that the former cannot be earlier than 360 A.D. Besides the Abgar-legend, the connected legends of the true portrait of Christ, and of the finding of the cross, in their different forms, are fully examined. For the careful arguments by which Lipsius endeavours to establish his conclusions we must refer the reader to the pamphlet itself. It may be useful to possessors of the Dictionary of Christian Biography to mention here corrections which Lipsius desires to make of two of his statements in that work. In vol. i., p. 31, he identified with "The Doctrine of Addai" the "Doctrina Addaei," published by Lagarde in the Reliquiae Juris Ecclesiastici Antiquissimi; but it is really the same as the "Doctrina Apostolorum," published by Dr. Cureton in Ancient Syriac Documents. On the same page of the Dictionary he says that the Acta Thaddaei were written before the middle of the fourth century; he is now of opinion that the work cannot have arisen before the fifth century. In conclusion, we must raise a probably fruitless protest against the want of every clue by which the reader may be helped in his studies. There is no table of contents, no index, no division into sections with proper titles, no headings to the pages; and this, even in a pamphlet limited to ninety-two pages, is a serious defect.

The Waldensian Church in the Valleys of Piedmont, from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Jane Louisa Wiliams; Edited by Mrs. Matheson. (The Religious Tract Society.) This is a partisan book, and, as such, cannot claim for itself a high place in literature. It is, however, one of the best of its order, calmly written, and without any of those offensive sneers and still more offensive dabs of "word painting" which disfigure most of its kindred; and the last two chapters are really valuable, as furnishing what seems to be a trustworthy account of the present condition of the churches of the valleys. There are some pretty woodcuts.

Intimations of Holy Scripture as to the State of Man after Death. By the Rev. W. H. Karslake. (Skeffington.) Mr. Karslake has written a scholar-like and useful book. His position is that of an orthodox English Churchman, and his conclusion is that, "if we affirm the ending of punishment, we fall short of Scripture; if we affirm its endlessness, we go beyond Scripture." All, or nearly all, the texts in the New Testament that bear on the subject are quoted, and an endeavour made to harmonise them. We think Mr. Karslake takes a somewhat too gloomy view of the spiritual culture of the heathen world. Whatever may have been the belief of the Jews as to immortality (a question by no means settled as yet), it is certain, or all but certain, that nearly all their neighbours, near and far off, felt they had grounds for this opinion. Mr. Karslake's book cannot but be of use to those who have hitherto thought that the promises in the New Testament had relation to only a narrow circle of the elect.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE February number of Blackwood's Magazine will contain an account of the early literary career of George Eliot, with extracts from the correspondence which passed between her and the editor while the Scenes of Clerical Life were passing through Blackwood.

German Culture and Christianity: their Controversy in the Time 1770-1880, is the title of a work by Mr. Joseph Gostwick which will shortly be published. The work will trace somewhat fully the rise and progress of German speculation during the period indicated in opposition to certain Christian tenets.

THE next volume of Messrs. Blackwood's series of "Philosophical Classics," edited by Prof. Knight, will be on Butler, by Canon Collins. This will be immediately followed by a volume on Berkeley, by Prof. Fraser, of Edinburgh University, who has already edited the bishop's works for the Clarendon Press. We understand that it will contain a good deal that is now, both philosophical and biographical, based on the Percival MSS., giving a view of Berkeley's life and thought as a whole that has not been presented hitherto.

THE latest Chaucer find is by Mr. Walter Rye, a solicitor in Golden Square. He has not trusted, as Mr. Furnivall did, to Sir Harris Nicolas having exhausted the old printed indexes in the Record Office, but has turned to the Index Nominum in the Abbreviatio Placitorum, found there the names Richard, Robert, Mary, and John le Chaucer, p. 354, looked up the reference, and had out the document they noted, the Coram Rege Roll of 19 Edw. II., A.D. 1325-26. This discloses the fact that John Chaucer—no doubt John, the poet's father—was the son of Robert Chaucer, and not of Richard Chaucer, who married Robert's widow. Also that this Robert Chaucer had a house in Ipswich, so that, with Chaucers at Norwich, and Gerard le Chaucer at Colchester, of which he was a burgess in 24 Edw. I., A.D. 1296, the poet's family probably belonged to the Eastern Counties, and not to Kent. The Roll contains the record of the proceedings in an action tried at York in 1 Edw. III., A.D. 1327, in which Richard Chaucer and Mary his wife—the widow of Robert Chaucer, and mother of his son John—claim damages, and get them in the large sum, then, of £250, against Agnes the wife of Walter de Westhale, Thomas Staco, Geoffrey Stace, and Lawrence "Geffreyesman" Stace, because these folk, early in December 1324, forcibly carried off (rapuerunt et abduxerunt) the young John Chaucer, whom they found in the Ward of Cordwainer Street, London—where Baldwin le Chaucer lived in 1307, and Nicholas Chaucer in 1356—in the care of the said Richard and Mary Chaucer, he (John) being under the age of fourteen. The plaintiffs also charge the defendants with having married the boy John Chaucer to Joan daughter of Walter de Esthale; but the jury find that he was not so married. We hope that Mr. Rye and some other antiquaries will make further searches as to Chaucer's pedigree and connexions. More light is wanted as to his wife Philippa Chaucer, and as to his supposed son Thomas. His grandmother Mary must have married a Heyroun as well as two Chaucers, for Richard Chaucer mentions her son Thomas Heyroun. This Thomas appoints his brother John Chaucer his exocutor; and, as such executor of his brother Thomas Heyroun, John Chaucer executes a deed on July 13, 1349. The word "rapuerunt" in the abduction of Chaucer's boy-father confirms the view of those who look on the poet's "raptus" of Cecilia Champaigne as one of the ordinary carryings-off of heiresses, though the lady must have been over twenty-one.

WE are informed by Lord Acton that the article on George Eliot in the Home and Foreign Review mentioned in a recent number was written by the late Mr. Richard Simpson, author of The School of Shakespeare.

A NEW novel, entitled Her Deserts, from the pen of Mrs. Alexander Fraser, author of Guardian and Lover, &c., will shortly be published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett in three volumes.

THE long-promised concluding series of the Cancionero Basco, by Don José Manterola, of San Sebastian, has just appeared. It contains also a most useful trilingual vocabulary in Basque, Spanish, and French. In the three volumes Basque students have now sufficient materials wherewith to form a definite judgment on the merits of Basque poetry, and, in a less degree, of Basque music also. To philologists the work will be of value from the specimens given of the various dialects. We congratulate Señor Manterola on the completion of his arduous task. The work is published simultaneously in Madrid, Paris, Havanna, and by Messrs. Williams and Norgate in London.

A COLLECTION of Gaelic proverbs, by Sheriff Nicholson, Kirkcudbright, will be issued immediately. The collection represents the labour of many years.

SOME time ago it was rightly suggested that a material addition should be made to the number of tablets inserted in the front of such London houses as have been the dwelling-places of the great in letters and the arts. The appearance of such tablets as one walks the streets is but very infrequent—ininitely rarer than are the just occasions for their display. It has been pointed out, we believe, that in connexion with Charles Dickens no such memorial exists; or possibly one residence only may be so marked out of the three or four in which, at one time or another, Dickens lived while in London. He was long at Devonshire Terrace, and long at Tavistock House, Tavistock Square; but perhaps the place most worthy to be recorded as his residence is the set of chambers which he occupied at Furnival's Inn—on the west side, it has been stated, very near to the hotel of which in his latest work he makes mention as that from which the wealthy conveyancer, Mr. Groggious, received, by the hands of "the flying waiter," the dinner which Edwin Drood and Bazzard were invited to.

The earliest part of Dickens's married life was spent within Furnival's Inn, then newly rebuilt by the contractor whose statue stands in the middle of its gray and sober little square. There he wrote Pickwick. There he established his fame. Another point is suggested to us. It is likely that someone who is still more familiar with Charles Dickens's places of abode in early life than even the public is now able to be—thanks to Mr. Forster's Life, and Miss Hogarth's and Miss Dickens's collection of Letters—may be able to throw some light on a possible place of residence not mentioned in either of those volumes. The writer of these lines possesses an early note written by Mr. Dickens to Mr. Edward Chapman, beginning most characteristically "Furnival's Inn, I mean Upper Norton Street, Tuesday morning." Where was "Upper Norton Street," and had Dickens just quitted Furnival's Inn for temporary residence there, as the words "I mean Upper Norton Street" following upon "Furnival's Inn" would seem to suggest? The letter is not dated. In early days Dickens rarely dated his letters. But the Whatman paper upon which this note is written bears date in its water-mark, "1837," and the note must have been written either in that year or very shortly after it.

PROF. KOLDE, of Marburg, whose History of the Augustine Congregation we reviewed some time ago, has been appointed Professor of Church History in the University of Erlangen.

THE St. Petersburg Herald states that Dr. Jagich has obtained the consent of the Russian Academy of Science to the publication, under his editorship, of a comparative dictionary of the Slavonic languages. It is expected that this great work will occupy from six to ten years in completion. It will be published both in Latin and Russian. The editor reckons on the co-operation of German as well as Russian specialists in this undertaking, and proposes to invite the assistance of Serbian scholars in the South Slavonic department.

WE understand that the two new editors of the Antiquary are Mr. Henry B. Wheatley and Mr. G. Lawrence Gomme.

MESSRS. NEWMAN AND CO. have in the press a new work by the author of The Doom of the Great City, entitled Three Hundred Years Hence; or, a Voice from Posterity.

THE last Monthly Notes of the Library Association of the United Kingdom contains an interesting paper on the Gray's Inn Library by its librarian, Mr. W. R. Douthwaite.

THE Theologische Literaturzeitung will for the future be edited by Dr. E. Schürer and Dr. Harnack.

THE Vienna papers announce the forthcoming publication of a newly discovered and important work by the Austrian Emperor, Maximilian I., bearing the title of Freytal. It is edited by Quirin Leitner from the unique MS. preserved in the Vienna Hof-Bibliothek. Its subject is a poetical description and glorification of tournaments and subsequent festal gatherings. Like Theuerdank, whose hero, if not its author, is the same gallant Emperor, the poem relates the perils and contests which Maximilian had to encounter when he undertook his wedding journey to obtain the fair Mary of Burgundy. All the knights and princes defeated by the Emperor in various tournaments and contests have been enumerated and recorded in this work, which thus acquires a peculiar genealogical value. Both German history and literature will have to deal, henceforth, with Maximilian's Freytal, in addition to his other autobiographical works, Theuerdank and Weisskunig.

AN admirable account of the French provincial town of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries has, says the Revue Critique, just been put forth by M. Albert Babeau. It is worthy to take place beside the works of de Tocqueville and Taine on the old régime. It covers the whole of France, whereas M. Babeau's former excellent book on the Old Village in France was confined to the North-eastern district. These books would make a good subject for a writer in one of our quarterlies.

THE indefatigable Mr. Joseph Foster has just sent out a prospectus announcing his intention of publishing many important genealogical works. Six volumes will relate to the kings of England and their descendants. The first volume is already in the press, and the second is being compiled. Mr. Foster proposes to issue every month a privately printed magazine of 128 pages containing an alphabetical collection of the deaths from 1730 to 1800 recorded in the Gentleman's Magazine and other journals, Sims' Index to the pedigrees in the various Historical Visitations arranged in one alphabet, the arms of the nobility and gentry of Scotland, with a large quantity of miscellaneous matter. The list of the deaths from 1730 to 1800, generally known as Musgrave's Obituary, will be the most useful of all these suggested publications; it will be warmly welcomed by antiquaries and other students.

THE annual Report of the Free Library of Dundee has just been distributed. During the past year more than 170,000 volumes were issued in the lending department, and over 70,000 in the reference department. The library contains rather more than 34,000 works, of which nearly a fourth are contained in the reference department. A large number of valuable works, principally of an historical character, have been added during the year, and about £1,500 has been expended in the alteration and improvement of the buildings.

DR. PETER BAYNE is writing a series of criticisms on George Eliot's works in the Literary World, a happy change from Lord Lytton's novels, which he discussed at such terrible length.

PROF. MOMMSEN writes to the Oxford donors of books after the late fire in his library:—

"The University of Oxford, represented by a great number of its most distinguished members, has had the kindness to furnish my library with the flower and the marrow of English historical and archaeological literature. What I have lost has been replaced, and a great many valuable works have been added which I formerly did not possess. It is one of the best results, perhaps, of our labours that international assistance and international friendship are fomented by them; and, if this is no new thing to the editor of the Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum, I count myself happy to make the experience of it in a more personal way on a most unhappy occasion. As the multitude of the contributors to this splendid gift forbids individual thanks, I beg permission to express them generally to all."

IN the last number of the ACADEMY, at p. 59, col. b, lines 6 and 7, for "column" read "volume;" and at p. 64, col. c, line 18, for "a modo qui" read "a modo quo."

DR. ASHER requests us to mention that he is responsible for the translation only of Lazarus Geiger's Contributions to the History of the Development of the Human Race.

WE have received The Journal and Proceedings of the Royal Society of New South Wales, 1879, and a Report upon Certain Museums for Technology, Science, and Art, &c., by A. Liveridge (Sydney: Richards); Sanskrit and its Kindred Literatures, by Laura E. Poor (Boston: Roberts Bros.); Otto: Trauerspiel von F. M. Klinger (Heilbronn: Henninger); Tuning and Repairing Pianofortes, by C. Babbington, Fancy

Pigeons, by J. C. Lyell, Part IX., The Book of the Rabbit, Part VI., and The Practical Fisherman, Part XIV. (Bazaar Office); Why there is an Irish Land Question and an Irish Land League, by T. M. Healy (Dublin: Gill); Idea cristiana della politica Ragione ed il Clero Cattolico Sostenitore del Popolo, per Mons. Giambattista Savarese (Napoli: Furchheim); Die Grabstätte Immanuel Kants, von F. Bessel Hagen (Königsberg); Calendar of the University College of Wales, 1880-81 (Manchester: Cornish); Introduction to the Study of Indian Languages, with Words, Phrases, and Sentences to be Collected, second edition (Washington: Government Printing Office); The Justice of the Land League, by the Rev. D. Humphreys (C. Kegan Paul and Co.); The House of Joseph in England, by a Watcher (Rivingtons); First Principles of Euclid, by T. S. Taylor (Relfe Bros.); Murby's Scripture Manuals—Joshua, new edition (Murby); The Publishers' Trade List Annual, 1880 (New York: Leypoldt; London: Triebner); Was Man Created? by Henry A. Mott, jun. (New York: Griswold); &c.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

IN the Modern Review there is a lively article on "Graecia Rediviva," by Mr. Geldart. The first instalment of a review of Mr. Cheyne's Isaiah, by J. E. Carpenter, would be good but for the strange way in which he ignores the evidence of the contemporary prophets as to the social corruption and misery veiled by the glories of Jeroboam II. The Review consists too largely, as seems to be its wont, of mere expositions by religious liberals of their personal "views" and feelings.

THE Church Quarterly Review opens with an examination of "M. Renan's London Lectures," and has the courage to say that they are little more than an inferior réchauffé of his Origines, and that they bristle with self-contradictions as well as inaccuracies. Whether justice be done to the merits which the larger work at least possesses is another question. The review of Herbert Spencer's Data of Ethics is a still better example of criticism which, though of course unsympathetic, is not unintelligent. And in "Barneveld and Grotius—Erastianism" we have a fair estimate of an interesting historical episode, without undue yielding to the temptation to point a moral for our own time.

THE two freshest articles in the Quarterly Review are the descriptions of society in California and of the weary years which Bolingbroke passed in exile. The former deals with a subject which has been unduly neglected by English litterateurs, and is carefully written. Perhaps the most interesting part of the article is the glimpse which it affords of Mr. Bancroft in his literary workshop engaged in elaborating, with the aid of his trained assistants, his volumes on the native races of the Pacific States. The article on Bolingbroke brings out with considerable effect the influence which that disappointed philosopher had on the teaching of Voltaire. In his château of La Source, near Orleans—a pleasant country-house, frequently visited by travellers from England, which derives its name from the fact that the waters of the River Loire bubble up in its grounds—the exile from the shores of England gathered around him many witty and congenial spirits. There is a vein of exaggeration, which the reader will easily pardon, in the pages devoted to the share which Bolingbroke had in the preparation for the rebellion of 1715. The opening article favours the reader with a foretaste of the pleasure to be drawn from a perusal of the Memoirs of Lord Campbell. If there are as good things left in the volumes as have been taken from them, the narrative of the struggles and success of "plain John Campbell" will take very high rank in the book-world of 1881. There is an article which professes to contain some account of Endymion, but there is very little about the novel of the great Conservative leader in it, and the general reflections on the career of the novelist in high life are neither very original nor well expressed. The criticism of Mr. McCarthy's History of our own Times is somewhat lacking in generosity, and fails to do justice to an author who has evidently striven—and for the most part has succeeded in his design—to accomplish his task with strict impartiality. On the whole, it must be confessed that the latest number of the Quarterly Review hardly maintains the reputation of its predecessors.

La Revue de Droit international et de Législation comparée. The fifth number for 1880 commences with an article on "Les Congrès internationaux de la Poste et du Télégraphe," by Dr. von Kirhenheim, of Breslau, in which the learned author traces the growth of the International Postal Union from its first idea, which originated in Germany in 1868, to its realisation by the Treaty of Berne in 1874, to which treaty twenty-two States were parties. A still further extension has been given to the Union by the Treaty of Paris of 1878, by which it has been declared to be an institution of the law of nations under the title of the Universal Postal Union, in the benefits of which eight hundred millions of men participate at the present time. The next article, by Prof. Alois d'Orelli, of the University of Zürich, gives an account of the development of Swiss legislation since 1879. Prof. Charles Brocher, of the University of Geneva, continues his article on the unification of the civil procedure of Germany and of Switzerland, of which the present part is chiefly concerned with a critical exposition of the civil procedure of the German empire. Prof. F. Martens, of the University of St. Petersburg, contributes the first part of an interesting article on the conflict between Russia and China, its origin, its development, and its general bearing, in which he traces the international relations between the two countries since the earliest diplomatic mission of the Russians to China in 1653. The article will be continued, and promises to supply, from a Russian point of view, a most complete account of the relations between Russia and the so-called "Empire du Milieu," and Prof. Martens vouches his sources of information to be both exceptional and most authentic. A necrology of eminent jurists and a bibliography of important juridical treatises, under the supervision of the editor, Prof. Rivier, of the University of Brussels, completes the number.

THE current number of the China Review opens with a valuable article on the Foochow syllabary by Mr. Parker. The attention which has lately been bestowed on the Chinese dialects marks a true advance in the scientific study of the language, and Mr. Parker's syllabary places another weapon in the hand of the philologist. The appended table of tones in the Peking, Hankow, Hakka, Foochow, and Canton dialects is of special importance, and, when supplemented by those of other dialects, will put us in possession of an important chapter in the history of the phonetic changes which the language has undergone. Mr. Parker finds that there are 786 separate sounds in the dialect spoken at Foochow, whereas in the poverty-stricken dialect of Peking there are but 420. In another article the same writer exemplifies the growth of the dialects by giving us a long list of words which exist only colloquially, and are without written characters to express them on paper. Mr. MacIntyre continues his notes on the Sinico-Corean language, and Mr. Oxenham his chips from Chinese history. Among the "Notes and Queries" is a short article on Chaldaean grammamancy, in which the writer suggests an identification of Fu-hi's eight tetragrams with some mystic signs found on an Akkadian tablet, which, though only four in number, he supposes to be half of the complete set. Unfortunately for this theory, several more than eight have since been discovered. Nor is his suggestion of the identity of the Svasika with the Chaldaean eight-pointed star a more fortunate one. A far more probable equivalent in Chinese to the eight-pointed star is the character Ti, God, as will be readily seen by a comparison of its archaic form with the Chaldaean character.

THE Marquis de Mendigorrea publishes, in the Revista Contemporanea of December 30, an article on the Armies of Europe, in which he considers the problem of keeping on foot the greatest armed force at the lowest possible cost, and takes as his basis the Prussian system of 1807. Señor de Vera y Lopez has a very interesting paper on the rainfall of Spain, explaining the causes of its variation in different localities. In the "Guía de Simancas," Diaz Sanchez catalogues the contents of Sala XLI., the Secretariat of War; we notice documents on the expulsion of the English in 1724-27; on Gibraltar and the conquest of Minorca, 1730-87. In 1781 Robert Dean, an English prisoner, is transferred from Lugo to Valladolid; there are also papers referring to English prisoners from 1793-99. Suaña Castellet, continuing his Life of Antonio de Nebrija, defends him from all taint of heresy, whether of the semi-paganism or the protestantism of the Renaissance.

OBITUARY.

MR. JOHN MURRAY GRAHAM, of Murray's Hall, Perthshire, a country gentleman with a warm liking for literary pursuits, died suddenly on the 18th inst. His first publication was a little volume describing a Month's Tour in Spain in 1866. It was followed by a more ambitious work on Literature and Art in Great Britain, from the accession of the House of Hanover to the commencement of the present reign. The first edition was published in 1871, and a second in the following year. His volumes on the Annals and Correspondence of the Viscount and First and Second Earls of Stair appeared in 1875. They contained much historical matter of considerable value in connexion with the history of Scotland, and were very cordially received by students of Scottish literature. Mr. Murray Graham was a descendant of Lord Lynedoch, and at the death of the old hero of the Peninsular Wars succeeded to some part of his property. He compiled a little memoir of Lord Lynedoch, which passed into a second edition in 1877.

WITHIN the last three months three of the heads of houses at Cambridge have passed away. The loss of Dr. Power and of Dr. Guest has been quickly followed by the decease of Dr. Cartmell, the Master of Christ's College. He died on the evening of Sunday last, after having attended divine service on that day. Dr. Cartmell matriculated at Emmanuel College, and attained to the distinction of seventh wrangler in 1833. He was subsequently elected a Fellow of Christ's, and has held the mastership of that college since 1849. On three different occasions he held with credit the post of Vice-Chancellor of the university.

THE GREY LIBRARIANSHIP AT THE CAPE.

THE vacancy in the librarianship of the Grey Library at the Cape, occasioned by the death of Dr. Bleek, has at last been filled. Sir Bartle Frere, in the midst of his many occupations, found time to persuade the Cape Parliament to endow a colonial philologist, and requested

Prof. Max Müller and Prof. Sayce to select a scholar to hold both appointments. To judge from testimonials, there was, both in England and on the Continent, a unanimous opinion in favour of Dr. Theophilus Hahn. He was born and educated in Africa, and speaks several of the South African dialects fluently, both with and without clicks. He received a philological education in several German universities, and Prof. Pott in particular spoke of him as one of his best pupils. Some ten years ago Dr. Hahn returned to Africa, travelling through many unexplored places, and making himself thoroughly acquainted with the languages, the customs, traditions, and religions of the natives. He was recommended to Sir B. Frere as facile princeps among all competitors, and, though Sir Bartle had not the satisfaction of appointing Dr. Hahn himself, all who are interested in African philology ought to be grateful to him for the encouragement of philological studies in Africa due to his enlightened views on the government of native races. It should be remembered that, as Governor of Bombay also, Sir Bartle Frere favoured the appointment of several distinguished scholars as Professors of Sanskrit in the colleges of Bombay and Poona, and that the important work achieved in India by such men as Profs. Bühler, Kern, Kielhorn, Thibaut, and others is due to the initiative taken by that illustrious statesman and scholar.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CATALOGUE des Manuscrits français de la Bibliothèque Nationale. T. 3. Ancien Fonds. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 25 fr.
CUNBALL, J. Bookbindings: Ancient, Mediaeval, and Modern. Bell. 31s. 6d.
COLLINS, W. Lucas. Butler. Blackwood. 3s. 6d.
FERRAZZI, G. J. Torquato Tasso. Studi biografici-critici-bibliografici. Milano: Hoepli. 7 fr.
KOEHLIN-SCHWARTZ. Un Touriste au Caucase. Paris: Hetzel. 3 fr.
MOLLETT, J. W. Sir David Wilkie. Sampson Low & Co. 3s. 6d.

HISTORY, ETC.

- CARTAULT, A. La Trêve athénienne: Etude d'Archéologie navale. Paris: Thorin. 12 fr.
DESCHAMPS DE PAS, L. Histoire de la Ville de Saint-Omer depuis son Origine jusqu'en 1870. Arras: Sueur-Charmey.
GIORGIO, J., e U. BALZANI. Il Regesto di Farfa di Gregorio di Catino. Vol. II. Milano: Hoepli. 40 fr.
GUILLERY, J. Comptes des Bâtimens du Roi sous le Règne de Louis XIV. T. 1. Colbert (1661-80). Paris: Firmin-Didot. 12 fr.
HARDY, E. Origines de la Tactique française. T. II. De Louis XI. à Henri IV. Paris: Baudoin. 15 fr.
METTERNICH, Prince R. Memoirs of Prince Metternich, from the Battle of Waterloo to the Eastern War of 1829. Bentley. 36s.
NOEL, O. Etude historique sur l'Organisation financière de la France. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
SEINGUELET, E. Strasbourg pendant la Révolution. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 6 fr.
STILLERIEB, R. Graf, u. S. HAEHNLE. Das Buch vom Schwanorden. Ein Beitrag zu den Hohenzollerischen Forschungen. Berlin: Moeser. 50 M.
WALLON, H. Histoire du Tribunal révolutionnaire de Paris avec le Journal de ses Actes. T. 2. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERT, Paul. Leçons, Discours et Conférences. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
CLELAND, J. Evolution, Expression, and Sensation. MacLehose. 5s.
HASSELBERG, B. Ueb. die Spectra der Cometen u. ihre Beziehung zu denjenigen gewisser Kohlenverbindungen. St. Petersburg. 2s. 6d.
PIERRE, E. Flore forestière de la Cochinchine. Fasc. 1. Paris: Doct. 25 fr.
REICH, E. Das Leben d. Menschen als Individuum. Berlin: Hempel. 7 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ANDELT, H. d'. Trouvère normand du XIII^e Siècle, Œuvres de p. A. Héron. Rouen: Imp. Cagniard.
BRANDL, V. Libri citationum et sententiarum. Tomi 3 Pars 2. Brilco: Winkler. 4 M.
COLLIEREUX, E. La Couleur locale dans l'Enéide. Paris: Delagrave. 3 fr.
HAGEMANN, G. De Græcorum prytaneis capitis tria. Breslau: Koebner. 1 M. 50 Pf.
LIERIS, H. De actate et scriptore libri qui fertur Demetrii Phaleri epitaphias. Breslau: Koebner. 1 M.
PUAUX, F. Les Précurseurs français de la Tolérance au XVII^e Siècle. Paris: Fischbacher. 4 fr.
RUBIO Y LUCAS, A. Estudio crítico-bibliográfico sobre Azaconete y la Colección Anacronística. Barcelona. 5 fr.
SCHREINER, A. Ueb. das Bonpo-Sutra: "das weisse Naga-Hunderttausend." St. Petersburg. 2s. 3d.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JAMES HOWELL AS A SPELLING REFORMER.

King's College, London: Jan. 22, 1881.

At a time when the iniquities of our English spelling seem to be attracting special attention—a keener and more earnest attention than ever before—and the English Spelling Reform Association has been founded in order to collect, arrange, and distribute information on the subject, and there really seems a hope of a considerable reformation—I do not refer to the phonetic system and its advocates, but to the more practical and possible improvements entertained and discussed by the Philological Society under the excellent leadership of such scholars as Messrs. Ellis, Sweet, Murray—every intelligent protest against the current orthography so called or an orthography differing but slightly from it may be of some value in further awakening and stimulating the public mind; and so the following remarks of Howell, the well-known letter-writer, are worth reprinting, as they are scarcely known except to special students of heterography. They are not perhaps all equally wise, but taken together they contain much wisdom and, to say nothing else, are interesting as the views of a cultivated and accomplished gentleman some two centuries ago.

"Among other reasons which make the English language of so small extent, and put strangers out of conceit to learn it, one is, That we do not pronounce as we write; which proceeds from divers superfluous Letters that occur in many of our Words, which add to the difficulty of the Language. Therefore the author hath taken pains to retrench such redundant unnecessary Letters in this Work (tho' the Printer hath not been so careful as he should have been) as among multitudes of other words may appear in these few, done, come, come; which tho' we, to whom the speech is connatural, pronounce as monosyllables, yet when strangers come to read them, they are apt to make them dissyllables, as do-me, so-me, co-me; therefore such an e is superfluous.

"Moreover, those words that have the Latin for their original, the Author prefers that Orthography rather than the French, whereby divers letters are spared, as Physic, Logic, Afric, not Physique, Logique, Afrique; Favor, Honor, Labor, not Favour, Honour, Labour, and very many more; as also he omits the Dutch k in most words; here you shall read people, not pee-ple, treasure not treasure, tongue not tongue, &c. Parliament not Parliament, business, witness, sickness, not business, witness, sickness; star, war, far, not starre, warre, farre, and multitudes of such words, wherein the two last Letters may well be spar'd. Here you shall also read pity, piety, witty, not piti-e, pietie, witti-e, as strangers at first sight pronounce them, and abundance of such-like words.

"The new Academy of Wits called 'l'Academie de beaux esprits,' which the late Cardinal Richelieu founded in Paris, is now in hand to reform the French Language in this particular, and to weed it of all superfluous Letters; which makes the Tongue differ so much from the Pen, that they have exposed themselves to this centumelious Proverb, The Frenchman doth neither pronounce as he writes, nor speak as he thinks, nor sing as he pricks.

"Aristotle hath a topic Axiom, that Frustra fit per plura, quod fieri potest per pauciora: When fewer may serve the turn, more is vain. And this rule holds in all things else, so it may be very well observ'd in Orthography."

JOHN W. HALES.

THE ROMAN INSCRIPTION FROM BROUGH-BY-STANEMORE.

Berlin: Jan. 15, 1881.

The main object of my notice of the above-named inscription (in No. 448, 1880) was to prevent your readers from accepting what I believe to be an erroneous, or at least a very uncertain, reading of the last line of it, whereby the name of the Usurper Clodius Albinus was introduced into it; for his name, by the side of that of Severus, and not cancelled afterwards, would have been an epigraphical rarity, which would, not to say more, have been hardly credible. Now, in No. 453 of the ACADEMY, Mr. Watson writes that he does not state (the italics are his) these to be absolutely the names (viz., the names of the consuls in the last line of the inscription, on which the mention of Albinus exclusively rests). This is sufficient; the other points of difference as to the reading and interpretation of the inscription between your correspondent and myself are of a very subordinate nature, and can be settled only by a fresh inspection of the original by an experienced epigraphist, for which I am waiting.

E. HÜBNER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, Jan. 31, 5 p.m. London Institution: "The Thing that Might Be," by the Rev. Mark Pattison.

7 p.m. Actuaries: "The Construction and Use of a Series of Select Mortality Tables to be used in Connexion with the Institute Hm (5) Table, Parts II. and III.," by Mr. T. B. Sprague.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Italian Schools of the Fifteenth Century," I., by Mr. E. Armitage.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Leibnitz," by Mr. S. Oliver.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "A Journey to Semiretchia and Kuldja in 1880," by Mr. E. Delmar Morgan.

TUESDAY, Feb. 1, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schäfer.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Industrial Products of South Africa," by Sir H. Bartle E. Frere.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion on Deep "Winning of Coal in South Wales;" "Portsmouth Dockyard Extension Works," by Mr. C. Colson.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "On the Evolution of the Placenta and its Application to the Classification of the Mammalia," by Mr. F. M. Balfour; "Remarks upon the Habits of the Dartar," by Mr. A. D. Bartlett; "On Some Birds collected by Mr. E. F. in Thurn in British Guiana," by Mr. P. L. Scholer.

8.30 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "On an Egyptian Tablet in the British Museum on Two Architects of the Nineteenth Dynasty," by Dr. Birch.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 2, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Trade Prospects," by Mr. Stephen Bourne.

8 p.m. Geological.

8 p.m. British Archaeological Association: "Exploration of the Roman Villa, Bromham," by Mr. W. H. Butecher; "Recent Excavations in the Mounds of the Troad, &c.," by Dr. Phéné.

THURSDAY, Feb. 3, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Troubadours," by Mr. F. Hueffer.

4.30 p.m. Royal.

7 p.m. London Institution: "Three Years of Daily Weather-Forecasting," by Mr. R. H. Scott.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Italian Schools of the Fifteenth Century," II., by Mr. R. H. Scott.

8 p.m. Linnean: "Notes on Cyperaceae," by Mr. G. Bentham; "Observations on Some British Fishes," by Dr. F. Day; "Remarks on the Coffee Leaf Disease in India," by Mr. W. Biddle; "Coffee Disease in South America," by Dr. M. C. Cooke.

8 p.m. Chemical.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, Feb. 4, 8 p.m. Philological: "On the Pronunciation, Grammar, and Non-Literary Vocabulary of Welsh; with Collections of Dialogues, Proverbs, &c." I., by Mr. H. Sweet.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Colonial Organisms," by Dr. A. Wilson.

SATURDAY, Feb. 5, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Amazon," by Prof. Colvin.

SCIENCE.

A Theoretical and Practical Treatise on the Manufacture of Sulphuric Acid and Alkali, with the Collateral Branches. By G. Lunge. Vol. III. (Van Voorst.)

WITH commendable rapidity this final portion of Dr. Lunge's admirable treatise has followed the appearance of the second volume. It consists of over four hundred pages, and is illustrated by 135 first-rate wood-cuts, and complete tables for the reduction of gaseous volumes to normal temperature and pressure. An Index (of eleven pages) to the several volumes completes the work. On former occasions I have dwelt so fully upon the distinguishing merits of Dr. Lunge's method of handling his subject that there is no need now for an elaborate discussion of the characteristics of the volume just published. But it will be serviceable to some of the readers of the ACADEMY if a brief synopsis of the Table of Contents prefixed to this volume be given here. I would first, however, direct the attention of everybody to whom the scientific and commercial position of Great Britain is a matter of serious interest to these weighty words in Dr. Lunge's Preface (p. v.):—

"The manufacture of chemicals has made enormous strides forward, both in quantity and in quality, in France, and even more so in Germany. Many of the chemicals of these countries outstrip those of English works in purity; and their plant and their processes are frequently superior to those used in the majority of English works. Everybody knows how this has come about. The foreign chemists and manufacturers have looked all round, not merely in their own countries, but wherever they could find improved methods and apparatus; and upon the practical knowledge thus gained they have brought to bear the scientific training that they had received at their universities and technical schools. Thus they have already, in many fields formerly remunerative to British manufacturers, distanced the latter, immensely aided though these be by their long occupation of the ground and by permanent natural advantages, such as cheapness of coal and freight, superior command of capital, &c.; and this is likely to go on to an increasing extent if many British chemical manufacturers decline to profit from a scientific study of their respective branches. This is all the less excusable as England, from of old, has been a stronghold of scientific chemistry, and can maintain its own against the whole world in that respect."

These authoritative statements, for they are more than mere views or opinions, demand attention, and, coming from a chemist of Dr. Lunge's position, should secure it. No man ever united, in his own special domain of knowledge and labour, a more complete acquaintance with the practical conduct of chemical works both in this country and on the Continent with so intimate and comprehensive a grasp of the scientific elements of this branch of chemistry. His words of warning should not be disregarded. The authorities of the few schools of technology which have as yet been established in Great Britain need a more intelligent appreciation and a more influential support of their aims and labours than has hitherto been accorded them by cultured persons, by corporations, and by the State. And I may add that Dr. Lunge's statements concerning chemical works admit of application to many other industries of this country beside those about which he writes.

And now I must give a brief epitome of the Table of Contents of the volume which completes the best treatise on acid and alkali-making which has been written anywhere. The first three chapters, occupying together seventy-eight pages, are devoted to the "ammoniacal soda-process," to the manufacture of soda from cryolite, and to soda statistics. Chlorine, bleaching powder, chloride of potash, and allied products are very fully discussed in ten chapters; and then we reach a series of Appendices. In these may be studied calculations of the cost of erecting an alkali works, and records of all the new inventions, improvements, and suggestions which the author has been able to gather together since his two previous volumes were published, and even during the time that the pages of the present volume were being printed. He has set down foolish and seemingly impracticable suggestions as well as those which promise well, thus endeavouring to make his treatise as exhaustive as possible. Those who know something of alkali and acid manufacture will appreciate this feature of Dr. Lunge's book, for they are well aware of the strange history of many successful processes once scorned as futile, and of the multitude of undeveloped suggestions and incomplete experiments to which it is desirable that every improver and inventor should have the opportunity of referring. A. H. CHURCH.

M. Tullii Ciceronis de Natura Deorum Libri Tres. With Introduction and Commentary by Joseph B. Mayor, M.A. Vol. I. (Cambridge: University Press.)

IN undertaking a new edition of the De Natura Deorum, Prof. Mayor was certainly not entering on a needless task. The English student has, until recently, been singularly destitute of help for his study of Cicero's philosophical works. Dr. Holden has issued an edition of what is perhaps the easiest and the most popular, the De Officiis, which, especially in the form which it has now assumed after two most thorough revisions, leaves little or nothing to be desired in the fullness and accuracy of its treatment alike of the matter and the language. Mr. Reid, six years ago, in his small edition of the Academics, furnished the first-fruits of that thorough familiarity with Cicero's diction and that masterly grasp of the history of the later Greek philosophy from which so much is still expected. But for treatises like the De Divinatione, the De Legibus, or the De Republica, the reader was left to extract what help he might from the confused prolixity of the variorum notes in Moser and Creuzer; Madvig's Commentary on the De Finibus, with all its stores of learning and power of insight, had far more terrors for the ordinary undergraduate than the text itself; and for the De Natura Deorum the only refuge from the bewildering variorum was in Schoemann's somewhat meagre German notes. Partly, perhaps, from this deficiency of helpful commentaries; partly, doubtless, from an impression that these books were "easy to construe," and that their matter did not much concern the classical scholar; or partly, it may be, from an undue depreciation of their literary value, which finds its most contemptuous expression in the language of Mommsen, they have been much neglected in one at least of our universities, rarely studied with any care, at all events by undergraduates, and more rarely still taken as the subject for college lectures, except when chosen as the "set books" for the classical tripos.

Such editions as that of which Prof. Mayor has given us the first instalment will doubtless do much to remedy this undeserved neglect. It is one on which great pains and much learning have evidently been expended, and is in every way admirably suited to meet the needs of the student.

The Introduction contains an historical sketch of Greek philosophy from Thales to Cicero, which, though comprised within less than thirty pages, is so clear and good that we could wish it issued separately, with perhaps some slight expansion, for the use of those readers of the classical authors who have not time for the study of larger treatises. It would be well, probably, to give a fuller treatment of the ethical views of Plato, and to add to the Greek technical terms of the Stoic philosophy their Latin equivalents. The language with which Mr. Mayor introduces the four lines preserved to us by Epictetus—ἀγὼν δέ μ' ὁ Ζεὺς, κ.τ.λ., "as Cleanthes says in his noble hymn"—would, we fear, certainly mislead the unwary reader into supposing them to be an extract from the famous hymn to Zeus, which we happily have complete.

In the sketch of the dramatis personae, Mr. Mayor is again somewhat misleading where he says: "In this dialogue, as in the De Republica and De Oratore, Cicero himself merely appears as a κοφὸν πρόσωπον." He represents himself as present, but taking no part in this dialogue; whereas that narrated in the De Oratore is said to have been only known to him from the account given by Cotta; while the assumed date of that in the De Republica is much anterior to his birth.

Mr. Mayor's discussion of the Greek sources of the first book is admirably clear and thorough. He points out that the resemblance between this and the Herculanean fragments of Philodemus are far too close to be ascribed to chance, and with great probability considers that Cicero and Philodemus drew from a common source, very possibly Zeno the Epicurean. In his statement of the principles on which he has settled the text, the most noteworthy point is the evidence which he has accumulated to show that the inferior MSS. cannot be safely neglected. Unfortunately, nothing seems to have been done as yet to determine the filiation of the somewhat numerous MSS. which are extant. It would be satisfactory if Mr. Mayor could supply us with any conclusions to which his very careful critical studies may have led him on this point.

On the question of orthography Mr. Mayor's practice is happily better than his theory, though on one point he confesses that his practice "can only be viewed in the light of a mortal sin by philologists of the modern school." His theory is that, "for practical purposes, the best spelling is that which obtrudes itself least, and least diverts the attention of the reader from the thoughts of the writer." But then follows at once the question, what reader is to be had in view? Is it the reader who has been accustomed to good texts or to bad ones; who has read his Horace with the spelling of Munro or of Anthon? The discomfort of the former in coming upon coelum will be at least as great as that of the latter when he is met by caelum. The only difference will be that the one has been set upon the right track, the other upon the wrong one, in studying the relations of Latin to Greek. It may be that the old doctrine, found in books published within the last decade, that Latin was a kind of off-shoot of Aeolic Greek, was not one which hindered men very seriously from "entering into the life and thought of the ancient world, and learning the laws which regulate the expression of thought." But the history of a language is as well worth scientific study as the history of a nation, and any stumbling-block to its proper apprehension ought unquestionably to be put out of the way. For young students this is best done silently; for the more advanced it is surely not improper to state in passing the reasons why one form is right, another wrong. The inconvenience of a scientific etymology will at the worst be but temporary; our school-books are improving so rapidly that most boys are probably already more familiar with the innovating sumpsimus than with the traditional mumpsimus; and, if editors will only do their plain, simple duty, the true spelling will be "that which obtrudes itself the least." Mr. Mayor himself gives us forms like fuelis and belua. Are these the less obtrusive spellings? Surely not; but, what is more important, they are the right ones. Prof. Mayor says further, "In books which are printed for ordinary reading, we should not seek to reproduce the spelling of a particular age or of a particular author." Two propositions are here blended which ought to be kept perfectly distinct. The latter is a sound one. But has any editor of name forgotten it? Has Mr. Mayor ever seen or heard of an edition of Plautus, for instance, which professed to reproduce the author's own spelling? The former is in flat contradiction not only to the teaching of scholars like Ritschl, but to Mr. Mayor's own acceptance of Ritschl's canon: "We should use the undoubted spelling of the latter half of the first century A.D." Unfortunately, he adds to this a second rule, which is far more doubtful: "Where the spelling itself was variable, we should select one mode and adhere steadily to that." Against this rises in protest the one line of Latin as yet recovered from Herculaneum: "utraque sollemniter itum revocaverit orbes." Are we really to train our students to stand in baffled wonder before a line like this, which finds dozens of parallels in every decent MS.? And now we come to Mr. Mayor's admitted violation of his own rule. It is a delicate matter for a layman to draw the line between mortal and venial sin; but if abicio were a typical example of Mr. Mayor's orthography, instead of a happily rare exception, the kindest charity could only pronounce him in "a parlous state." What are the facts of the case? Lachmann tells us that it would be hard to find any such form in any MS. earlier than the twelfth century. Prof. J. E. B. Mayor marks on abicit (Juv. xv. 17), "the universal spelling in good MSS." And what is the meaning of the facts? That ab-yikit was almost unpronounceable to a Roman tongue, and by a physical necessity passed into abikit (sometimes abyikit). Why are we, in defiance of all authority, to sweep away this interesting piece of evidence for the true pronunciation of the i (j) and the e? The theorising of Gellius, which our limits do not allow us to discuss, is but the weakest of excuses.

The acceptance of Prof. Mayor's challenge upon this point has left but little room for any remarks upon his explanatory comment.

ary; but these are the less necessary, for they could only take the form of a thankful acknowledgment of its helpful thoroughness. The notes of the editor are all that could be expected from his well-known learning and scholarship; and any slight slips, "quas aut incuria fudit, aut humana parum cavit natura," have been removed by the revision of two of the most eminent living Latinists, Mr. H. J. Roby and Mr. J. S. Reid. It is needless, therefore, to say that all points of syntax or of Ciceronian usage which present themselves have been treated with full mastery. In the settlement of the text Mr. Mayor has usually held to a middle course between the conservative views defended by Mr. Roby and the somewhat bold but always ingenious suggestions for emendation put forward by Mr. Reid. In more than one instance Mr. Mayor has successfully maintained the soundness of the traditional text, tampered with by almost all previous editors; notably in § 111, where the intruded non simply ruins the passage. It is doubtless by a slip of the pen that in § 13 he ends his restored trochaic line with a spondee; for non rult he probably meant to write nevolt. The reading of the text in § 107 is not that accepted in the note.

The thanks of many students will doubtless be given to Prof. Mayor for the amount of historical and biographical information afforded in the commentary, which is, as it should be, supplemented and not replaced by references to the usual authorities.

A. S. WILKINS.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

News has just reached Alexandria from Jerusalem that the well-known German traveller, Dr. Fr. Mook, who accompanied Dr. Ribbeck on his expedition to Palestine and Syria, has been drowned in crossing the River Jordan, which was at the time swollen by heavy rains. The party had had a very successful tour through the Danubian regions, South Russia, and the Caucasus, and were travelling from Syria through the country east of the Jordan to Jerusalem. To save time, the expedition had constructed a wooden raft, on which they were to pass the swollen river. Dr. Mook, indeed, had twice crossed, but, in trying to effect a passage for the third time, he slipped from the raft, got under it, was entangled in its ropes, and thus disappeared beneath the waves. Dr. Ribbeck and the other members of the expedition have, after a long search, recovered the body, which was buried at Jericho.

COL. PREJEVALSKY arrived in St. Petersburg last week, and was announced to give an account of his Central-Asian explorations at a special meeting of the Geographical Society there on January 27. It is also stated that he is about to prepare for publication a detailed account of his journey, which will no doubt include much valuable cartographical matter.

As we expected would be the case, the Council of the Royal Geographical Society at their last meeting did not appoint a committee to consider the subject of Arctic exploration, and there does not appear to be much likelihood of their taking action in the matter at present, as they could hardly expect to receive substantial support from the Government under existing circumstances.

MR. FELKIN, who has just returned to England from Mombasa, East Africa, has received a letter, via the Nile, from Mr. Pearson in Uganda, dated June 1, which is three months later than previous advices. King Mtesa was then in bad health, and on friendly terms with neither Mr. Pearson nor the Algerian missionaries; the latter are said to be anxious to leave Uganda. The Church Missionary Society's agents on the Victoria Nyanza would seem to be placed in a very difficult position, as Mr. Pearson reports that he has not a bead or a yard of cloth, and was subsisting on what he could get from selling clothes, &c.; none of the natives are now allowed to learn to read. Mr. Felkin, it will be remembered, came to England last summer, by way of the Nile, with the Rev. C. T. Wilson and the Waganda envoys, and accompanied the latter as far as Zanzibar on their return journey. The Waganda envoys, with the Rev. P. O'Flaherty and Mr. C. Stokes, left Mpwapwa for Uyui on October 21, after some delay, owing to the illness of Mr. O'Flaherty and the difficulty of obtaining porters.

SENHOR A. F. NOGUEIRA, a member of the Lisbon Geographical Society's committee for the exploration and civilisation of Africa, has just published (Lisboa: Typographia Nova Minerva) a volume on the negro race from the point of view of the civilisation of Africa, in which he furnishes an account of the manners and customs of some of the heathen tribes of the interior of Mossamedes and the Portuguese colonies in Africa.

An expedition, composed of picked men, under the command of Lieut. Carlos Mayana, of the Argentine Navy, is now engaged in crossing Patagonia from the Santa Cruz River (50° S. lat.) to the colony of Ciubut. The object of the expedition is to ascertain the practicability of settling Patagonia as far south as the Strait of Magellan.

MR. B. F. DE COSTA has published as a pamphlet (New York: Thos. Whittaker), accompanied by an outline map, his paper on Cabo de Baxos, or the place of Cape Cod in the old cartology, with notes on the neighbouring coasts, which has been revised from the New England Historical and Genealogical Register for January 1881.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Crania of the Fiji Islanders.—By far the most noteworthy paper in the current number of the Journal of the Anthropological Institute is one by Prof. W. H. Flower "On the Cranial Characters of the Natives of the Fiji Islands." The Fiji, or Viti, Archipelago has a peculiarly interesting ethnographical position, being situated near the line which separates the Melanesians on the west from the Polynesians on the east. Placed thus near the meeting-point of two Oceanic peoples, the Fijians have often been described as a mixed race, but it appears that such description can apply only to the inhabitants of the coasts or of the smaller islands. Little or nothing has hitherto been known about the inhabitants of the interior of the principal isles, and Prof. Flower has therefore been fortunate in securing a collection of crania of both sexes and of various ages from the mountainous regions of the large island of Viti Levu. This collection was obtained in 1876 by Baron von Hügel, and purchased by Mr. Erasmus Wilson for presentation to the College of Surgeons. With these skulls Prof. Flower has compared other Fijian crania, chiefly presented to the college museum by Mr. Luther Holden or obtained from the collection of Dr. Barnard Davis. Prof. Flower's studies show that the inhabitants of the interior of the Fiji Islands are typically Melanesian. Their crania are large, the average capacity of the males being 1,504 cubic centimetres and of the females 1,327 c.c. The mean cephalic index is as low as 66, and thus the Fijians are remarkable as the most dolichocephalic people in the world, so far, at least, as anthropological enquiry has yet extended. The skulls are eminently hypsiptenocephalic, to use Dr. B. Davis's term; that is to say, they are long, high, and laterally compressed. Prof. Flower's memoir is one of great solidity and worth, and the lithographs with which it is illustrated have been executed with singular fidelity and care.

THE second and concluding volume of the Botany of California, by Mr. Sereno Watson, has just appeared. The complete work is said by the Nation to be the finest Flora yet published in the United States.

ON behalf of the Ladies' Sanitary Association (22 Berners Street, W.), Dr. B. W. Richardson will give a course of nine lectures at the Society of Arts, in the Adelphi, beginning February 12, at 5.30 p.m., on food and digestion; the healthy circulation of the blood, and the means for keeping the organs of the circulation in a healthy state; respiration, and the allied subject of ventilation. Tickets for the course, reserved seats, are a guinea each; unreserved seats, one shilling a lecture; to be had of Miss Rose Adams at the office of the Association. If this first course succeeds, it will be followed by others of nine lectures each, till the programme sketched by Dr. Richardson at the Exeter meeting last year is completed.

A HISTORY of the Jetties at the mouth of the Mississippí River has just been published by Mr. E. L. Corthell, C.E., chief assistant and resident engineer during their construction. It is from the press of Messrs. John Wiley and Sons, of New York.

At the annual meeting of the Anthropological Institute held on Tuesday evening, the 25th inst., Dr. E. B. Tylor resigned the presidency and delivered his retiring address. He is succeeded in the presidential chair by Gen. Lane-Fox Pitt-Rivers.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

NEW SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Friday, Jan. 21.)

F. J. FURNIVALL, ESQ., Director, in the Chair.—The paper read was by Mr. Harold Littledale, of Baroda, Bombay, "On the Shares of Shakspeare and Fletcher in the Two Noble Kinsmen," and will form the Introduction to his old-spelling edition of the play for the New Shakspeare Society. Mr. Littledale's thesis was "that Shakspeare, having decided on dramatising Chaucer's story, wrote act I. (except, perhaps, parts of scene i., lines 1-37, parts of scene ii., and all scene v.); wrote act II., scene i. (i.e., the prose scene); perhaps supplied a few additional notes for this act, including some indications for the underplot, which Fletcher expanded into scene iv. and scene vi.; wrote most of act III., scene i.; wrote scene ii. (though it was probably touched here and there by Fletcher); wrote nearly all of act IV., scene iii.; wrote all except lines 1-17 of act V., scene i.; wrote part of scene iii., and all except lines 86-98 of scene iv." (The line-numbers refer to Mr. Littledale's finally revised text of the play in The Leopold Shakspeare, as well as the society's edition.) The writer established his positions by showing that the external evidence was wholly in favour of the double authorship of the play, and so was the internal evidence. The latter was threefold; metrical similarities, artistic handling (regardful of character and motives rather than situations and scenic effects), and style of thought and imagery. The three metrical tests of light and weak endings, stopt and run-on lines, and double-endings all agreed in confirming the aesthetic criticism of every verse-scene; they all clearly separated Shakspeare's work from Fletcher's. The characterisation and style of thought and imagery in the several acts and scenes did so too. And here Mr. Littledale for the first time produced a series of striking parallels of thought and expression from Shakspeare's unquestionably genuine later plays, matching others in his part of the Two Noble Kinsmen. In a less degree he did the like from Fletcher for the Fletcher parts. He then showed that the metrical evidence put Shakspeare's part of the play about the year 1609 or 1610, while Fletcher's allusion to the Players' osseæ—no doubt the burning of the Globe Theatre on June 29, 1613—his curious plagiarism from his Honest Man's Fortune, acted in 1613, and his imitation of part of his Masque of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn, February 20, 1613, made it highly probable that the Two Noble Kinsmen was acted in July or August 1613. A synopsis of the history of critics' opinions on the authorship of the play concluded Mr. Littledale's able and exhaustive paper. To it Mr. Furnivall added a sketch of Sir William Davenant's Rivals, 1668, a play founded on the Two Noble Kinsmen, though mainly on Fletcher's part of it, but with a new ending, in which the rivals strove who should say the most generous things of one another when vilified by third parties, till the strife was settled by the Jailer's Daughter claiming the representative of Palamon, thus leaving the new Arcite to wed the new Emilia.

FINE ART.

Raphael: sa Vie, son Œuvre et son Temps.
Par Eugène Müntz, Bibliothécaire de l'Ecole Nationale des Beaux-Arts, etc., etc. (Paris: Hachette.)

THE title of M. Müntz's book exactly describes its contents; his volume is not a biography of Raphael, but a comprehensive series of studies on every point of interest attached to Raphael's name, wanting only an index to make the vast labour and knowledge which is embodied in them yield their full fruit to his readers. The personality of Raphael himself is necessarily effaced to a certain extent by the extraordinary variety and importance of the other subjects with which the canvas is filled in; unfortunately, in the present instance, no simpler method of treatment is possible; the facts known to us concerning Raphael's life are so few that it is impossible for anyone to write an account of him and of his works in which such a desirable proportion of things may be maintained as may set before us a picture of the man forming the central point of interest in the vast network of his own activity. The conscientious writer who rejects baseless traditions, however romantic, and will not lend himself to the play of hypotheses no matter how ingenious, is deprived of the very materials which would be the making of his book by giving to his researches dramatic unity and movement; he is forced to dwell almost exclusively on Raphael's works, and to replace our missing knowledge of their author by describing the surroundings in which he lived and laboured. To do this adequately, in the case of Raphael, requires powers of no mean order; and at every page of M. Müntz's book we have occasion to admire the extensive knowledge, extreme prudence, and admirable good sense which he has brought to his task.

The authentic facts of Raphael's life may be told in a dozen lines. Born at Urbino on March 28, 1483, he was left an orphan at eleven years of age, and grew up under the care of his uncles Bartolommeo Santi, the priest, and Simone Ciarla, his mother's brother. He quitted Urbino, and became the pupil of Perugino, about 1499—a date which was for the first time correctly established, as M. Müntz tells us, by Prof.

Springer's investigations (Zeitschrift für bildende Kunst, 1873), and worked much with or for him up to 1502, when Perugino left Perugia for Florence. During the six years following Raphael seems to have been by times at Perugia, at Citta di Castello, at Siena, at Urbino, at Florence, perhaps at Bologna, then again at Perugia and Urbino, marking his presence, in each instance, by some lovely work, although in no case can any precise date be fixed for his visits, until, in 1508, having again returned to Florence, he started for Rome. From Rome, in September of the same year, Raphael wrote the memorable letter to Francesco Francia in which he says, "You, too, must have known what it is to lose your liberty, and to live in dependence on patrons;" and it is supposed that he had been called at this date to enter the service of Pope Julius II. For the next twelve years Raphael lived and laboured in the Eternal City. In a letter written to his beloved uncle Simone, in 1514, he himself tells us that to dwell elsewhere is, to him, henceforth impossible, on account of the building of St. Peter's, "for I have replaced Bramante;" and so great was the number of his assistants and pupils—whom, in accordance with custom, he was obliged to feed and lodge—that the house which he himself inhabited in the Borgo Nuovo, together with several others which he rented, did not afford sufficient accommodation. When he died, on April 6, 1520, he was about to build for himself another and more spacious dwelling.

This interesting fact is established by a hitherto unpublished document, dated March 24, 1520, recently found by M. Müntz himself at Rome—a deed of sale to Raphael, confirmed by the Canons of St. Peter's, of the rights of one Leonard Bartolini to a piece of ground on which Raphael bound himself to build within the space of five years, and which must have been of considerable extent, since he agreed to pay an annual ground-rent of eighty ducats of gold, representing a capital of between 1,500 to 2,000 ducats (p. 635). Nor is this the only point on which M. Müntz has added to previous knowledge or corrected previous errors by his researches. Passavant and other authors have been, we are told, mistaken in supposing that it was Francis I. who commissioned and presented to the Pope the tapestries executed from Raphael's designs of scenes from the Life of Christ, for documents exist to prove that they were ordered by Leo X. himself (p. 498). In the still more important matter of the great cartoons of the Acts of the Apostles, we not only owe to M. Müntz various documents concerning them which he has already printed in his Histoire de la Tapisserie italienne, but we now hear from him for the first time that the tapestry worker to whom their execution was entrusted was no less a personage than Pierre van Aelst, prince of the tapestry workers of Brussels and valet de chambre to the Archduke Philippe le Beau.

It is with a feeling of relief that we find, on p. 128, the celebrated letter of Joanna della Rovere, recommending Raphael to the Gonfalonier Soderini, restored to that place in his biography which it had lost for a while through the scepticism of Prof. Hermann Grimm, whose ingenuity has produced endless confusion in the accepted chronology of Raphael's life, and all but deprived him of the honour due to his Report on the antiquities of Rome which he addressed to Leo X. (see p. 604). Happily, the letter of the Duchess is, we learn from M. Müntz, still extant, with its original seal attached, and triumphantly stands the test of comparison with other papers written by her hand, so that on this one point, at least, we may henceforth be at rest. We cannot, indeed, afford to part lightly with any of the little we know of Raphael; the bare mention of his name is a thing to be treasured; and no apology is needed for printing in the present volume the curious description given by the envoy of the Duke of Ferrara (first published by M. Müntz in the Gazette des Beaux-Arts, 1873) of Leo X. assisting at a representation of Ariosto's Suppositi, and putting on his spectacles to look at the scene, which was "very beautiful, and painted by the hand of Raphael." Nor is even any chance notice of Raphael's works to be despised, seeing how important it may some day become as a link in the chain of evidence which establishes the authenticity of a picture. M. Müntz is therefore to be congratulated on having turned up a reference to the condition of the Saint Margaret in 1625—that is, fifteen years earlier than the mention made by the Père Dan in his description of Fontainebleau—from which it appears that the picture was, at that date, already in a very bad condition, looking, says Cassiano del Pozzo, in a letter preserved in the library at Naples, as if it had suffered from fire. The same appearance, as we know from a letter of Sebastian del Piombo addressed to Michelangelo on July 2, 1518, characterised the St. Michael at the very moment of its execution. Of this interesting letter M. Müntz quotes only a part, and he has therefore no occasion to go into the curious criticism, recently published by Dr. Moritz Thausing, of a doubtful passage contained in it. "Duolmi nel animo," says Sebastian, "non sette stato in Roma a veder dua quadri, che son iti in Franza del principe del Sinagoga." "Prince of the Synagogue." That, said Gotti, who first printed the letter, "was his nickname for Raphael." But first, let us ask, what do the words mean? Surely they designate not the painter, but the picture. They are not a sarcasm pointed at Raphael, but the strictly correct epithet describing a spiritual office of the Archangel, who, in the first place, as Dr. Thausing observes, was "princeps gloriosissimæ militiæ caelestis," and secondly, "princeps Synagogæ;" that office being extended to the Church under the new dispensation, as we read in the Legenda aurea of Jacobus a Voragine for September 29: "Ipse fuit princeps Synagogæ sed nunc constitutus est a Domino in principem ecclesiæ." And thus another cobweb of misplaced ingenuity has been cleared away.

Limits of space forbid the dwelling any further on the innumerable questions of interest raised in this colossal volume, or the doing more than calling attention to the scrupulous rectitude with which the author appreciates the labours of his predecessors and the pains which he has taken to embody in the text all the results obtained up to the latest date. Mr. Robinson's admirable Catalogue of the drawings at Oxford (the merits of which have never been properly understood by those for whom it was produced), and all the recent publications on the subject in France, Italy, and Germany, have been carefully sifted for information. In dealing with vexed questions of criticism, M. Müntz shows also the most scrupulous exactitude—teste his remarks on the portrait of Julius II.—coupled with a caution which induces great and laudable reserve except as to points on which he is fully justified in speaking with authority.

The literary reader will turn with especial interest to his distinct characterisation of the earlier Renaissance, of the different sets of social influences under which Raphael successively fell at the Court of Urbino, at Perugia, at Florence, and finally at Rome. The chapter in which M. Müntz describes the Courts of Julius II. and Leo X. is perhaps the most striking in the book, for his previous studies here enable him to add to our knowledge with every word. Lastly, the illustrations will attract everybody, for they are all they ought to be fitly to accompany such a work.

E. F. S. PATTISON.

THE OLD MASTERS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

(Fourth Notice.)

Of that later phase of religious sentiment which gave sweetness to pain and luxury to rapture, there are few examples in the large gallery besides the Van Dyck already mentioned. There is a good but theatrical Guido (144), and a not very interesting Sassoferrato (131) belonging to Lord Bateman; and in the fourth room are two Carlo Dolcis. Among the Van Dycks, and somewhat startling by the contrast between its feeling and that of the aristocratic world with which it is surrounded, is Earl Cowper's very fine Ecce Homo, by Correggio. Soft and polished and graceful as it is, making wonder at the execution the first thought, its sentiment is not weak, it has an awful look, majesty of presence, and agony not sweetened away. The other Correggio in the same room (147) is not remarkable, but Col. Alexander's replica of the Holy Family at St. Petersburg (216) has the master's peculiar charm. Though more attractive to the eye, it has not, however, the same spiritual beauty as Fra Bartolommeo's Holy Family (135); the elaboration of its expression, beautiful and refined though it is, misses the higher effect of the simple sincerity of the almost homely holiness of Bartolommeo, who in this picture has represented the Infant and St. John playing with the natural merriment—it might almost be said the gentle riot—of children. It is only from the hushed and thoughtful expression of the Virgin and St. Anne, the latter of whom is whispering to the other, that one is aware that these unconscious children have no ordinary destiny. The laughing expression and freedom of movement in the Infant as he sits on the Virgin's lap bear witness to the influence which this painter is said to have exercised on Raphael, as may be seen even in this room by a comparison with the later of the two well-known Raphaels from Panshanger. This sacred domesticity, which realises so fully the idea of a Holy Family, is equally visible in the more celebrated work of Bartolommeo, also belonging to Earl Cowper (207), the condition of which, especially in the faces of the Virgin and St. Joseph, is greatly to be regretted. Here the children are older, and not so unconscious. The expression of the mother's face is still very lovely, and the landscape and sky behind are beautiful. The palm branches seem to have been carefully studied from nature. The influence of Perugino is still distinctly traceable in the sweet formality and child-like gentleness of the earlier of the two Raphaels, with its pure bright colour and clearly defined little landscape. Nothing can exceed the tenderness with which the Child's foot rests on his mother's hand, or the exquisite harmony of feeling between them. The other work is in Raphael's latest Florentine manner, nobler in type and larger in style, freer in conception; yet there is a loveableness about his earlier work which, like the innocence of youth, is replaced by something perhaps better, but which one misses nevertheless. If Titian did not attempt intensity of religious expression he was utterly free from any poor sentiment; and, besides his great gifts of composition and colour, his figures are always raised to such a noble level by their grand physique and native dignity that the result, if not divine, is as an apotheosis of humanity. Though it appears to be doubted whether the grand Holy Family (149) belonging to the Earl of Strafford is really by his hand, it is at least certain that it would never have existed but for his inspiration. Its composition and its colour, as far as one can tell through the brown varnish, are magnificent; the types of the heads are fine throughout; and it has that grandeur tempered with grace which is characteristic of the master, as is also the fine, bold landscape behind. Little doubt, however, attaches to the perfect little Holy Family from Panshanger (141). It is the pomp and pride both of art and religion rather than their more spiritual qualities that are reflected in the Altar-Piece (160), a replica of that by Paolo Veronese now in the Academy at Venice. Showing more unmistakeable evidence of the artist's own hand is Murillo's St. Joseph and the Boy Christ, belonging to the Earl of Strafford (170), a picture which introduces us to quite a different phase of art and religious sentiment. The Child is frankly human, of no select type, but stands not without dignity in his purple robe, his whole little hand tenderly enclosed by the large rough fingers of St. Joseph, who, from his action and the expression of his swarthy but noble face, seems to be exhibiting his little son to the world as its Saviour. On the right hand at the top of the picture are boy-angels in the clouds. The peculiar colouring aids the solemn impressiveness of this thoroughly Spanish work, which, in its preference for sombre rich tints, its carelessness of physical charm, its earnest but unfeigned sentiment, affords the strongest contrast possible to the religious art of Italy. The Marriage Feast at Cana (154) shows only too clearly the limits of his imaginative faculty. Its anachronisms, which would count for nothing if redeemed by beauty and refinement, force themselves to the front rank. The bride, who is of ordinary unlovely Spanish type, the bridegroom in his Saracenic turban, the table covered with miracles of Spanish pastry are extravagantly unconsonant with probability. In this picture, Mohammedanism, through the Moors, has completely coloured the representation of a scene taken from the Christian Scriptures. The nearest approach which Murillo could attain to a Jew was one of those very infidels whom all Christian chivalry united to oust from the Holy Land; and even the rich cloth or carpet with which the table on the left is covered is distinctly Mohammedan in design, bearing a bird without a head, a clear sign of the Shiite sect, which prohibited the representation of perfect animal forms. But Murillo lived before Mr. Alma Tadema. It is, however, a very interesting picture, and of wonderful technical power. The other picture assigned to this master is a powerful Ecce Homo belonging to the Hon. R. Baillie Hamilton (218).

Of the few old pictures which are neither portraits nor religious the most interesting is a beautiful little morality of the Venetian school, ascribed to Giorgione, and called Malatesta di Rimini and his Mistress receiving the Pope's Legate (206). Without the name of any painter or the aid of history this little picture, with its beautiful landscape, expressive and well-drawn figures, and its gem-like colour, would be sufficiently delightful. The moral of the painted tale is very obvious. A rich libertine and his mistress, in their lovely retreat in the country, are disturbed in the enjoyment of every earthly luxury by a messenger from heaven, who bears the Pope's triple tiara and keys on his sleeve, and is warning them to live as they would die. The very reverse of a morality is Paolo Veronese's very fleshly representation of Mars and Venus, a very rich and masterly work much injured in parts. Mars is very much like the Alexander in the National Gallery. Veronese's genius for large decorative design, and the grand sweep of his certain brush, are also plainly visible in the two allegorical figures (104 and 106) belonging to the Hon. R. Baillie Hamilton.

Before passing to the religious art in the fourth room, it will be convenient to mention a few of the most remarkable of the many interesting portraits which it contains. First in artistic interest would be the supposed portraits of Masaccio and Francia by themselves, but, like that of Andrea del Sarto, the evidence is not sufficient for full credit. The supposed portrait of Masaccio from Panshanger has at least this claim to credence, that it is not in the least like the supposed portraits of him in the Uffizi and the National Gallery, both of which are considered unauthentic, and also it may be asserted without fear that it is not the work either of Filippo Lippi or Sandro Botticelli, to one of whom the others are ascribed by Crowe and Cavalcaselle. It is a fine, strong face, well painted. The supposed portrait of Francia, which is owned by Sir William N. Ardy, has this against its authenticity, that it has no trace of sensitiveness or gentleness, qualities which it is difficult to dissociate from our idea of Francia. Moreover, its background of rocky bay and ship suggests a merchant—a suggestion which is supported by the firm, unsentimental face, so like to Solario in its exquisite finish and uncompromising fidelity. Whomever it may represent, and whoever may be the painter, it is a marvellous and interesting piece of work; and similar praise may be given to its companion (200), which is, if possible, even more life-like and characteristic, and is certainly far more intellectual—the face of a man who has had to pilot his way through dangerous times. Specially interesting for different reasons is Titian's undoubted portrait of the Children of King Ferdinand of Austria (213). There is absolutely nothing but the skill of this picture to remind one of the great master. For once he seems to have succumbed to the influence of "every-day," and to have painted children with less regard to art than to nature. The result of this self-denial of creative faculty was a new and, unfortunately (so far as I know), a unique revelation of his genius. So originality often arises from content with the ordinary. There is nothing in any of these children which is specially beautiful or interesting; they are simply natural, quaint, and delightful. They may be princesses or subjects, and belong to any country or century; it is all one. It is not art interpreting or art beautifying; it is only art imitating; but it is enough. Most of Titian's successes he made; this he found. This unique example of the master hangs by the side of a fine Zuccero (212), a Portrait of Lady Apsley and Child, belonging to Earl Bathurst; and, beside it, Portraits of Two Daughters of Philip II. of Spain (210), a fair example of Sir Antonio Moro, from Buckingham Palace. The fourth room also contains fine portraits by the Flemish Francis Pourbus the elder, Sebastiano del Piombo, Tintoretto, and Dosso Dossi, and an artist of the school of Perugino, which call for no special remark.

Though distinguished by its fine portraits, the forte of the fourth room is early religious art, the most important example of which is undoubtedly the Queen's magnificent Adoration of the Magi, by that rare Dutch master, Lucas van Leyden (196). Though, of course, conventional in composition and unselect in the human types, it is a work of remarkable richness of colouring and full of patient skilful labour. There is little to distinguish it from early Flemish work, and it is particularly like the fine altar-piece of the same subject by Ma buse at Castle Howard. Near it hangs a Head of the Saviour, ascribed to their elder contemporary Quentin Matsys, but it is scarcely representative of that great genius. The Italian work in this room is carried, by the very interesting contributions from the Liverpool Royal Institution (Roscoe collection), to the day-spring of the Renaissance. Not only have we some well-preserved and very interesting fragments of frescoes by Giotto (223 and 226), but a wonderful little work by his eminent Siennese contemporary, Simone Memmi, who must share with him the merit of releasing art from the long bondage of Byzantine tradition. This true "Preraphaelite" painted this Virgin and St. Joseph remonstrating with the Youthful Saviour on His Return from the Temple (225) no doubt in a thoroughly reverential, but also in what Oliver Wendell Holmes would call a "dopolarised," spirit. Saints though they be, Mary and Joseph are also father and mother, and are reproaching their truant son with very human gesture and expression, while he bears their flood of parental remonstrance with meekness and dignity. Mr. Charles Butler and Mr. Andrew Taylor contribute interesting works by later Siennese artists. The former also sends four very beautiful and highly finished single figures of saints of the early Flemish school (193). There are also very fine specimens of early German art in three singularly brilliant and carefully executed pictures. Two of these are by Wohlgemuth (228 and 231) from the Liverpool Royal Institution, and the other by somebody not Albrecht Dürer, lent by the Hon. Mrs. Meynell Ingram (229). The latter is remarkable even in its place between the Wohlgemuths for its wonderful preservation and the brilliance of its gemlike colouring; it is also remarkable for its variety of agonised expression, its spider-like fingers, and precise but faulty drawing. Far higher and more varied power is shown in the work of Wohlgemuth, whose misfortune rather than fault it was that he was more easily able to select from his neighbours individuals suitable to the character of truculent ruffians than those of Pilate and Christ. Nevertheless, the Pilate, though, like the rest, probably a literal copy of a man's face, has very suitable expression, and the Christ has dignity and meekness. Behind Pilate is a head so evidently "introduced" that it suggests a portrait of the artist. We have no space to mention the numerous points of beauty and interest in these marvellous pictures. German religious art is further represented by a very beautiful Virgin and Child (203), by Lucas Cranach, lent by Sir William N. Ardy. The fine Madonna and Child (232) by the early Venetian, Bartolomeo Vivarini, lent by Sir Frederick Leighton, is not without Teutonic influence. The child is Düreresque. Another Academician contributes a still more interesting and earlier work of this school, one of two which exhibit strong religious feeling of the terrible, ascetic kind (222). The painful exhibition of anatomy and the elaborate ornament of the canopy and throne show a forerunner of Carlo Crivelli. The other, belonging to Mr. Charles Butler, is apparently a later work, and is more like Melozzo da Forlì (199). Both of the pictures are signed. The name of Antonius of Ancona is not known, but there is a Johannes Antonius, the name of the painter of Mr. Butler's picture, mentioned in a note of Crowe and Cavalcaselle as a painter of Forlì. Sir William N. Ardy, who seems to have been singularly fortunate in his acquisitions, exhibits no more interesting work than his Mantegna, called a Pietà (188), but really something different, and more than what is usually meant by this name. It also is eloquent of the terrible, and not the joyful, side of Christianity. It has little of the master's classicism, but is inspired by a weird imagination, and represents the dead body of Christ seated on a marble throne decorated with carving, but the back a shattered tablet, perhaps the tables of the law, with characters, apparently meant for Hebrew, carved thereon. On either side of him are Isaiah and St. Jerome—both powerfully conceived figures. The background is an elaborate landscape, divided into two portions—that on the left, rugged mountains, with deer and other wild animals; that on the right, a pleasant inhabited country. To Mr. Charles Butler belongs a Ghirlandaio (190), a Pinturicchio (184), a Garofalo (189), an Androa da Salerno (233), and a Piero della Francesca (182), all interesting, but none so beautiful as the last. The Child is stretching out his hands to caress the Virgin, who is inclining her head to kiss him. The expression may seem a little strained, but the sense of yearning love is beautifully given. Both figures are perfectly tuned to the same spiritual tension, and the picture, if affected, has an affectation which is exquisite.

I must pass over reluctantly with but a word many other very beautiful and interesting works in this room—the remarkable series of scenes from the history of Joseph by Andrea del Sarto (219 to 221), from Panshanger; Mr. Butler's flower-like Cimas (227 and 234) and Baldassarre Peruzzi (183), and his very fine Bonifazio (202); and the very interesting Pesellino from Liverpool.

In the fifth and last room are gathered together several hundred drawings by Flaxman, and it is to be hoped that this unique opportunity of studying the designs of his severe, sweet genius will not be disregarded by those who "do not understand" sculpture. Even they cannot study these beautiful and very varied sketches without pleasure; and an hour or two bestowed upon them, especially after seeing the pictures, is perhaps the best and quickest way now available to an Englishman of acquiring a true sense of the fundamental distinctions of the two arts.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

OBITUARY.

MARIETTE-PASHA.

EGYPT and science sustain a heavy loss in the death of Mariette-Pasha, whose lingering malady terminated fatally on the 19th inst. That it would so terminate had been long foreseen by everyone but himself. Rest, change, medical treatment, had alike proved unavailing. The mineral baths of La Bourboule, near Mont Dore, were tried last autumn, and tried in vain. His physicians then urged Mariette Pasha to winter in the South of France; but he refused to listen to them, and left Marseilles for Alexandria on November 11. Arrived at Cairo, he became rapidly worse; yet, unconscious of the gravity of his condition, he still talked of resuming the active duties of his appointment, of carrying out new schemes of excavation. His friends and family knew but too well that the end was not far off; but it came suddenly at the last, and we record his death with a shock of painful surprise. It is some sad satisfaction to know that he passed away surrounded by his children, and in the old room adjoining that museum which is the creation of his unparalleled energy, learning, and devotion.

Auguste-Ferdinand-François Mariette was born at Boulogne-sur-Mer on February 11, 1821. His father—a Parisian advocate settled in Boulogne—was a man of considerable ability, and for many years filled the office of town clerk at that place. His grandfather and great-grandfather were also men of mark; the former a naval officer under Louis XV., and the latter (known as "l'Avocat Mariette") being cited by Félice in his Histoire des Protestants de France as one of the four most famous juriconsults of his time. It may, therefore, be taken for granted that Mariette-Pasha's talent was hereditary; but his tastes were not those of his forefathers, and the earliest bent of his genius was towards literature and art. While yet a very young man, he was entrusted with the task of arranging the papers of his deceased cousin, Nestor l'Hôte; and Nestor l'Hôte, it will be remembered, was the companion of Champollion in Egypt in 1827-29. Thenceforth Auguste Mariette became inspired with an eager interest in Egyptian archaeology, and devoted his attention to the study of hieroglyphic and Coptic literature. In 1849 he was appointed to a post in the Egyptian department of the Louvre, and, at his own suggestion, was shortly afterwards despatched to Egypt for the purpose of seeking and purchasing Coptic MSS. among the monasteries of that community. How, soon after his arrival in Cairo, he made his great discovery of the long-lost Serapeum, or burial-place of the sacred bulls; how, abandoning the search for MSS., he pursued that discovery to the exclusion of all other projects; how, while conducting his excavations, he lived for four years amid the sands and tombs of the Libyan desert; and how his labours were rewarded with a long series of most brilliant results, are facts too well known to need recapitulation. The history of this undertaking, its trials and its triumphs, is best read in Mariette-Pasha's own narrative, Le Serapeum de Memphis (Paris, 1857). He had not long returned to France after these four years of absence when he was offered, and accepted, the appointment of Conservator of Monuments to the Egyptian Government. Thanks to the liberality of the ex-Khedive and his own unwearied exertions, a long series of important excavations were then carried out in various parts of Egypt. The magnificent temples of Denderah and Edfoo were completely disinterred, and hundreds of thousands of invaluable inscriptions were brought to light. The Sphinx was laid bare; the mysterious building known as the Temple of the Sphinx was discovered; extensive works were proceeded with at Karnak, Deir-el-Bahari, Medinet Haboo, and Abydos. The pyramid fields of Memphis and Sakkarah were ransacked for precious antiquities; and the unsuspected treasures of the necropolis of Meydoom were restored to the light of day after a long repose of six or seven thousand years. But to catalogue the archaeological achievements of Mariette-Pasha would occupy many columns. The Boolak Museum, and the many magnificent volumes in which he has recorded the results of his labours, are, after all, the noblest monuments to his memory. His Denderah (1873-75) in five folios; his Monuments divers (1872); his Abydos (1870), of which we lately reviewed the concluding instalment; his magnificent Karnak (1875); Deir-el-Bahari (1877); Liste géographique des Pyloees de Karnak (1876); and a dozen or more of smaller, but scarcely less important, works bear witness to his extraordinary industry, and would alone be enough work and honour for any one man. Of the exquisite grace of his literary style; of the rare taste with which he arranged the Boolak collection; of the lucidity, integrity, and wise caution which characterised his scientific judgment, those who know Cairo and his works will not need to be reminded. The French Government, the rulers of his adopted country, the learned societies of Europe, vied with each other to do him honour. Decorations, distinctions, titles, were showered upon him; but could add nothing to the permanent fame which he achieved for himself.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

MR. AUGUSTUS BOUVIER, the artist, died at the end of last week at his house in Alexandra Road, St. John's Wood. He was fifty-five years of age, and had for some time been suffering from painful illness. Mr. Bouvier was a very well-known member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours; he was one of a few artists exhibiting in the gallery of that society devoted entirely to figure drawing, and he was most conspicuous for the production of designs semi-classical in character, though often with some suggestion of a sentimental beauty. Mr. Bouvier was, perhaps, not a strong draughtsman nor a powerful colourist, but he had some feeling for grace, and his drawings were decidedly popular among those who love the presentation of the female figure in agreeable, if not in perfectly correct, form. His figures were nearly always loosely draped, or only partially undraped.

MR. ELI JOHNSON, the sculptor, died at Northampton on the 14th inst., in the thirty-first year of his age. The deceased artist, although so young, had already completed several important works. In 1878 he was commissioned by the inhabitants of his native town of Northampton to execute a marble bust of their late representative, Charles Gilpin, M.P., which gave great satisfaction. Among other successful busts from his chisel were those of Dr. Moffat, Henry Vincent, George Palmer, M.P., exhibited in the Royal Academy last year, and more recently a posthumous bust of George Grosmith. He was one of the twelve sculptors invited to compete for the Sir Rowland Hill Memorial. Mr. Johnson was formerly a pupil of Mr. J. E. Boehm, A.R.A.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHÆOLOGY.

MR. FRANK DICKSEE, painter, and Mr. Hamo Thornycroft, sculptor, have been elected Associates of the Royal Academy.

WE hear from Egypt that a kind of paved road has just been discovered, leading from the granite tomb near the Sphinx to the temple before the second pyramid. Antiques are said to be very scarce and dear this year.

WITH respect to the marble statue of Athena Nikephoros which was discovered at Athens last December, the Rev. S. S. Lewis, who has just now returned from Greece, reports that the free treatment of the drapery seems to point to early Roman Imperial work—perhaps during the reign of Nero; the archaic stiffness of the head is faithfully reproduced from some pre-Phidias original. The statue, with all the fragments hitherto discovered, is exhibited in the house of the Demarch, and will be photographed as soon as the missing head of Nike is recovered. Careful search has been stimulated by the offer of five hundred drachmae.

MR. J. D. LINTON is very far advanced with one of the series of large oil pictures to which we called attention nearly a year ago. The execution of the series has not been proceeding in the order which the pictures will eventually take in the house for which they are destined, for the picture which we described when we last wrote represented one of the later occurrences in the life of a soldier chosen for illustration—a scene of presentation to the King and Queen when victory has attended his flag; while the picture now on the easel represents a prior movement, when, before starting for the wars, the soldier claims and receives the benediction of the Church. Well studied as was the composition in the picture we have already referred to, it had in it, in this particular, little of what was novel; and when displayed, as it was afterwards, at the Grosvenor Gallery, an undue darkness, which is perhaps the only notable defect in Mr. Linton's schemes of colour or in his execution of those schemes, was apparent. The new picture is of more novel composition—more novel, and, at the same time, better balanced—and its colour is not in any way open to be reproached with the fault we have indicated. Its hues are indeed both rich and harmonious, and the church studied for a background to the present stage of the story—the church of St. Mark's, Venice—naturally affords occasion for even an unusual exercise of the artist's skill in the suggestion of architecture. The scene passes in front of the high altar, which is glowing variously with its many-coloured marbles. The charm and mystery of this rich interior have been conveyed with an excellent union of suggestive and strictly imitative skill.

A SET of pastel drawings of Venice, executed by Mr. Whistler during the past year, will be on exhibition at the rooms of the Fine Art Society on and after Monday next.

A TELEGRAM has been received in Berlin from Cairo to the effect that two pyramids have been opened in the neighbourhood of Sakkarah, to the north of Memphis, which were erected by two kings of the Sixth Dynasty. Thousands of inscriptions cover the rooms and passages of the monuments, and thus make the discovery of the highest importance for the study of the Egyptian language and history.

AN exhibition of the works of the late Jules Jacquemart will be opened on February 1 at the rooms of the Society of Water-Colours in Paris, and it is hoped that M. Roux, who possesses twenty water-colour drawings by Jacquemart intended to illustrate La Fontaine's Fables, will lend them to the promoters.

A UNIVERSAL exhibition of fine arts is to be held at Lille this year from August 15 to October 15. Lille has had no exhibition since 1866.

AN interesting addition has been made, through the munificence of the Duc de la Trémoille, to the treasures of the Print Room of the Bibliothèque Nationale in the shape of one of the miniatures painted by Jean Fouquet for the Livre d'Heures of Etienne Chevalier, representing St. Anne with her three daughters and their posterity. No less than forty of these magnificent illuminations are in the collection of M. Brentano at Frankfurt; one is in the possession of M. Feuillet de Conches, and another changed hands at Samuel Rogers's sale in 1856.

THE very noble colossal statue of Savonarola executed by the Chevalier Pazzi, one of the leading sculptors of Florence, which has been for years an object of admiration to all judges of art, has at last been purchased, and is to be placed in the great hall of the Cinquecento built in the Municipal Palace by the famous Benedictine preacher. The windows look out on the place of his execution, and at last the time has come when, in the scene of his labours and sufferings, a monument is erected to his memory which, as a work of art, is worthy of its purpose.

THE whole of the casts of the original models of the great sculptor Bartolini are to be sold by his descendants. The sum asked for them does not exceed in amount the price charged for a single marble statue. It is greatly to be desired that these works should be acquired by Florence in memory of one of the greatest of her modern artists. Bartolini said to the writer of these lines: "The greatest artist who has lived since the time of the Greeks was your Flaxman."

THE German Emperor has appointed Mr. L. Alma Tadema a Foreign Knight of the Ordre pour le Mérite (Arts and Sciences division).

THE STAGE.

MR. SOTHERN.

THE death of Mr. Sothern, which occurred at the end of last week at his rooms in Vere Street, was, of course, in one sense premature, since the actor had but lately passed his fiftieth year. But probably Mr. Sothern did not die too soon for his fame, for even putting out of the question the last year or so of his career, when his achievements were obviously limited by failing health, it is certain that for many years past he had not added to his artistic reputation, though his social successes, which sometimes bestow substance on an artistic reputation otherwise shadowy, have been prominently mentioned. Judging from the past, it is fair to say that in the future he would have found it increasingly difficult to maintain his stage position. He had never been able quite to overcome the disadvantage of being associated with what was not so much a success as a craze. His Dundreary was a most brilliant performance, but it was yet one which it was possible to overrate; and to compel Mr. Sothern to go through it more than a couple of thousand times in England and America was certainly to overrate it. A writer in a Sunday contemporary is far more amiable than critical when he says that both in David Garrick and in less familiar assumptions "the easy decision of Mr. Sothern's manner, the quiet naturalness of his bearing, and the polish of his humour proved how surely he would have distinguished himself in a wider and more ambitious range of light comedy." If Mr. Sothern would so have distinguished himself, his judgment must surely have been wanting when he continually abstained from appearing in great legitimate comedy after his success with Dundreary was well made. But we are inclined to believe that his judgment was not really lacking as regards this abstention, though it is true that it was not, as the event proved, very conspicuously displayed by the choice of parts which he did make as alternatives to the Dundreary. Had Mr. Sothern's success with Lord Dundreary—which was, after all, a creation, and must have the credit due to a creation—been less immediate and less immense, it is possible that he would have been able to assume other parts—we mean recognised parts in the legitimate drama—with sufficient success. But, as it was, he could not do so, though in his earliest days, before Dundreary was dreamt of, he had tried to do so. We are told that his first appearance in America, which took place several years before he became known in England, was in the character of Dr. Pangloss in The Heir-at-Law, in which the mere personality of Mr. Compton sufficed to ensure the actor against failure. The interests of the art of acting are not served by the good-natured endeavour to believe that Mr. Sothern made a great mark in other parts than Dundreary. It is often said that his David Garrick was a great performance and of extreme popularity. It was in reality a clever, well-studied, well-judged performance, and it succeeded in interesting where it could not fascinate. But its artistic merits have been, we consider, very much exceeded by Mr. Hermann Vezin in the kindred or almost identical part of Doctor Davey—in a piece which was only another version of the Sullivan on which Mr. Robertson's Garrick, acted in by Sothern, was founded. Mr. Hermann Vezin played the part more warmly, with more of glow and of apparent impulse, and with quite as much of intellectual discrimination. But Mr. Sothorn played it extremely well, and his enormous popularity in an earlier part contributed a substantial aid towards its professional and commercial success. David Garrick was much spoken of, and it was worth seeing. Next to his Garrick, in success, came undoubtedly The Favourite of Fortune—Dr. Westland Marston's elegant and adroit adaptation of Le Roman d'un jeune Homme pauvre—one of those novels in which the discretion of M. Feuillet hovers on the border of the indiscreet. The piece may almost be said to have first introduced Mrs. Kendal—then Miss Madge Robertson—to the public of London, for she had not been seen before, in town, very prominently, and the piece gained by her interpretation of the young heroine as David Garrick had gained by Miss Nellie Moore's naïve and delightful performance as Ada Ingot. The real successes of Mr. Sothorn might almost be said to have been limited to these three pieces—Our American Cousin, David Garrick, and The Favourite of Fortune—were it not that he was able to put a good deal of cleverness and high spirit into his performance of Sir Hugh de Brass in A Regular Fix. Here he was appearing in a familiar farce, and measuring himself not unsuccessfully with the accepted actors of farce. Mr. Sothorn had not a little to contend with the moment he proposed to pass the bounds of eccentric comedy. The keen intelligence and genuine sense of humour which had enabled him to build up his Dundreary—on the whole, much the best and most individual representation of the silly idle man that the stage has given us—were without avail in the task of bestowing reality on the persons of the more serious drama. Mr. Sothorn could express genial feeling, but he was never, to our knowledge, even within sight of the way to express passion. His voice, allowed by the most indulgent criticism to have been "somewhat hard," was, in truth, wholly without music and much without modulation. The "tears in his eyes," the "distraction in 's aspect," which Hamlet noted with admiration in the player who wept for Hecuba were not easily to be summoned by Mr. Sothorn.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. PINERO shows by his drama of The Money-Spinner that he is capable of interesting an audience with a longer story than he has hitherto chosen to present, and there is not a scene in The Money-Spinner which does not likewise bear witness to the advantage of very practical acquaintance with the stage. His play is a successful one, and it contains enough of good qualities to justify the success; and it says not a little both for the piece and the performance of it that in the excellence of both the public should be able to forget the unworthiness of the character in whom it is specially sought to engage their interest. Millicent Boycott is decidedly not one of those heroines often popular with dramatists and acceptable to the public—a faulty woman, yet "more sinned against than sinning." She is—if Mrs. Kendal's brilliant and sympathetic interpretation can allow her to remain so—an entirely unprincipled woman, who plays at least one very mean trick, and is capable of plenty more. The troubles of Millicent Boycott, such as they are, are about as undeserving of pity as those of any human being can be. She not only cheats desperately, but it is an old lover whom she cheats the most; and her devotion to her husband—who is himself by no means a particularly desirable member of society—is hardly a virtue when it is so viciously exercised. She is not a woman who to do a great right does a little wrong; but a woman who does a great wrong to do comparatively a little right. Mr. Pinero must have had a good deal of confidence in his own powers of literary delineation, or in the player's power over an audience at the theatre, to make a great portion of the success of his piece dependent on the acceptance by the public of so discreditable a heroine. But he did not count without his host. The result justifies his expectations. The play is so well put together, so neatly acted all round—so powerfully by Mrs. Kendal—that the offences of Millicent Boycott are condoned, and people all unused to the melting mood find themselves weeping sympathetically on her behalf as Millicent appeals for mercy to the worthy person whom she has betrayed. Besides affording sufficient opportunity to at least two other actors who have before now been associated with the successes of the St. James's Theatre, The Money-Spinner gives Mr. Hare such an opportunity as he has not lately had, and he takes full advantage of it. He acts the part of a self-made baron, who is as accomplished a humbug as may easily be found in the seediest strata of society. He gives, by countless incidental touches, as well as by a make-up selected with great discretion, reality to this character. By the time we leave the St. James's Theatre we have been indeed with a few honest people, but likewise with a good deal of bad company, and the bad company—in so far as they have been represented by Mrs. Kendal and Mr. Hare—have made themselves quite unusually agreeable. Next time Mr. Pinero writes a play we invite him to provide us with a smaller proportion of dramatis personae bent upon serious offence, or succumbing pleasantly to the first temptation, as he may not always be so lucky as to receive the aid of so finished a performer as Mr. Hare and so great and emotional an artist as Mrs. Kendal. Mr. Pinero's play is not only well constructed, it is excellently written; and, if he will continuously study the world he lives in as well as the stage he acts upon, he may probably give us work which shall belong to literature as well as to the theatre.

La Mort civile, or rather its adaptation, has been withdrawn from performance at the Prince of Wales's, and the theatre closed until the production of Mr. Burnand's new comedy in about a week's time. The drama last performed had probably two stage faults which shortened its days. It was of too unrelieved a melancholy, and it was impossible wholly to sympathise with the hero. These failings weighted it heavily, but they had not quite crushed it. Sometimes the public comes gradually to approve even of an unsympathetic piece when it is well acted; and this was well acted; but the weather dealt it its death-blow. Success had been hesitating enough already, and it is only pieces in which success is already assured that can survive such difficulties of climate and locomotion as have lately arisen in London.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS re-opened on Saturday night with a full house, and an audience that received enthusiastically the performances of Mr. Toole, Mr. Hermann Vezin, Miss Virginia Bateman, and the company generally. The performance of Othello, which was so successful in the autumn, and which was prematurely stopped, will be resumed this evening.

MR. JAMES THOMSON'S WORKS.

Price 5s. each; Large Paper (only a few printed), 10s. each.

VANE'S STORY, and other Poems.

THE CITY OF DREADFUL NIGHT, and other Poems.

"It is worth while, I think, to chronicle the appearance of a new poet. Such I have little hesitation in pronouncing Mr. James Thomson, the Author of 'The City of Dreadful Night, and other Poems.'"

"In 'Sunday at Hampstead' and 'Sunday up the River,' Mr. Thomson gives us two idyllic scenes full of brilliant verse and fancy."

Full Mail Gazette.

London: REEVES & TURNER, 196, Strand.

THE LEISURE HOUR.

A New Series commenced with January Part.

FEBRUARY PART now ready, containing:—

The Ascent of Chimborazo. With Engravings.

"Will He No' Come Back Again?" Chaps. IV.—VI. By JESSIE EDMONSTON SAEVY. Illustrated.

Memorable Scenes in the House of COMMONS.—II. Free Speech. With Engravings.

J. W. M. Turner, R.A. With Portrait and Illustrations.

Natural History Notes. Wild Cats—Talking Birds—Australian Love-Birds—Polar Bears.

Past and Present in the East.—II. By the Rev. HARRIS JONES, M.A. Illustrated.

Faithful Royal Servants.

Sussex Folk and Sussex Ways.—II. By the Rev. J. C. KERTON, M.A.

A Morning Call.

Spiritualism.—II. Spirit-Rapping. By WASHINGTON IRVING BISHOP.

Russian Nihilism. By the Rev. M. KAUFMANN, M.A., Author of "Socialism," &c.

Music. A Lullaby. By JOSEPH BARNBY.

Curiosities of Criminal Law.—II. Circumstantial Evidence.

Poetry. The Thrush.—The Angel.

Varieties.

WITH FRONTISPIECE OF CALAIS PIER, BY TURNER.

SIXPENCE MONTHLY.

PROFESSOR BAIN'S PHILOSOPHICAL WORKS.

LOGIC, DEDUCTIVE AND INDUCTIVE:

Deductive, 4s. Inductive, 6s. 6d.

MENTAL AND MORAL SCIENCE. Fourth Edition. 10s. 6d. Or, PSYCHOLOGY AND HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY. 6s. 6d.

ETHICS AND ETHICAL SYSTEMS. 4s. 6d.

THE SENSES and the INTELLECT. Third Edition. 15s.

THE EMOTIONS and the WILL. Third Edition. 15s.

London: LONGMANS & CO.

Now ready.

FREE CHURCH SERVICES.

FOR MARRIAGES, BURIALS, BAPTISMS, AND THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Adapted, from the Book of Common Prayer, for Nonconforming Congregations.

Crown 8vo, price 2s.

London: S. BAISTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

NEW NOVEL.

BOUND BY THE LAW.

BY HELEN WESCHÉ.

"Narrates the slow, but finally successful, struggle undergone by a man who has to win anew the affections of his wife."—Athenæum.

"Clever and right-hearted."—Daily Telegraph.

"There is both interest and novelty. The author has given us a new moral situation."—Full Mail Gazette.

"The plot is interesting and well worked out, and several of the scenes are really powerful."—London Figaro.

At all Libraries.

London: ELLISSEN & CO., 10, Type-street, Finsbury, E.C.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HENRY IRVING.

THE CUP.

At 7.45, ALFRED TENNYSON'S Tragedy, in two acts,

THE CUP.

Miss ELLEN TERRY—Mr. IRVING—Mr. TERRISS.

At 9.30, THE CORSIAN BROTHERS.

Mr. IRVING as LOUIS and FABIEN DEI FRANCHI.

Doors open at 7.15. Box-office (Mr. HURST) open from 10 to 5 daily.

Seats booked by letter or telegram.

MORNING PERFORMANCES OF THE CUP TO-DAY, SATURDAY, and SATURDAYS, FEBRUARY 5TH and 12TH. Preceded by BYGONES.

Doors open at 1.30; commence at 2.

Stage Manager, Mr. H. J. LOVEDAY. Acting Manager, Mr. BRAM STOKER.

13, Great Marlborough-street.
HURST & BLACKETT'S
LIST.

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST.

By Mrs. G. H. SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. G. H. SUMNER, Hon. Canon of Winchester. 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.
"An earnest and able book, recording personal travel and impressions in those lands which are consecrated to us by their identification with Bible history."—Daily Telegraph.
"A most interesting and charming book, which will afford readers both instruction and amusement."—Hampshire Chronicle.

MY JOURNEY ROUND the WORLD. By Capt. S. H. JONES PARRY, late Royal Madras Fusiliers. 2 vols., 21s.

"It is pleasant to follow Captain Jones Parry on his Journey Round the World. He is full of life, sparkle, sunlight, and anecdote."—Graphic.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE. (1787-1874.) By his daughter, Madame DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol., 8vo, 15s.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and

BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifth Edition. Royal 8vo, with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.
"This work is the most perfect and elaborate record of the living and recently deceased members of the Peerage of the three kingdoms as it stands at this day."—Times.

THE NEW NOVELS.

IDONEA. By Anne Beale, Author of "Fay Arlington," &c. 3 vols.

BERYL FORTESCUE. By Lady DUFFUS HARDY, Author of "Maudie," &c. 3 vols.

"The plot of this story is original, the incidents are novel and startling, and the characters are life-like portraits."—Court Journal.

FIXED as FATE. By Mrs. Hous-

TON. Author of "Recommended to Mercy," &c. 3 vols.
"This novel is likely to be popular. Its characters are sketched with much ability, showing great power and deep study of human nature. It cannot fail to add to the reputation of the author."—Sunday Times.

JEANNETTE. By Mary C. Row-

SELL. Author of "Love Loyal," &c. 3 vols.
"Jeannette" is a love story replete with deep interest, which engrosses the attention to the last page."—Court Journal.
"This story is clearly told, and the situations are neither strained nor improbable."—Daily Telegraph.

GERALDINE and her SUITORS.

By Mrs. SIMPSON, Author of "Windle's History," &c. 3 vols.
"This book is pleasing to read and pleasing to remember."—Pall Mall.
"A delightful novel."—John Bull.

LITTLE PANSY. By Mrs.

RANDOLPH. Author of "Gentiana," &c. 3 vols.
"This novel is sure to be popular."—Sunday Times.

DIMPLETHORPE. By the Author of "ST. OLAVE'S," &c. 3 vols.

"A well-written, ingenious, and interesting story."—St. James's Gazette.

STRICTLY TIED UP. By the Right Hon. A. J. B. BERE-FORD HOPE, M.P. Second Edition. 3 vols.

"Strictly Tied Up" is entertaining. It is in every sense a novel conceived in a light and happy vein."—Illustrated London News.
"A very cleverly constructed novel."—St. James's Gazette.

HER DESERTS. By Mrs. Alex-

ANDER FRASER, Author of "Guardian and Lover," &c. 3 vols.
[Just ready.]

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 6s. (any of which can be had separately), elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated by Sir J. GILBERT, MILLAIS, HUNT, LEITCH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDYS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature.	Sam Slick's American Humour.
John Halifax, Gentleman.	Barbara's History. By Amelia B. Edwards.
The Greenest and the Cross. By Eliot Warrington.	Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Nathalie. By Miss Kavanagh.	No Church.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Adana Graeme. By Mrs. Oliphant.	Alce Forbes. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Sam Slick's Wise Sayings.	Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Cardinal Wiseman's Popes.	A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
A Life for a Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Disson's New America.
Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb.	Robert Falconer. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Margaret and her Bridemaids.	The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Sam Slick's Old Judge.	Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Dasent, D.C.L.
Darlow. By Eliot Warrington.	David Elginbrod. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Sir B. Burke's Family Romance.	A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Laird of Norlaw. By Mrs. Oliphant.	Hannah. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
The Englishwoman in Italy.	Sam Slick's Americans at Home.
Nothing New. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	The Unkind Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Freer's Life of Jeanne d'Albret.	A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.
The Valley of a Hundred Fires.	My Little Lady. By E. Frances Poynter.
Burke's Romance of the Forum.	Phoebe, Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.
Adela. By Miss Kavanagh.	Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor C. D. Yonge.
Stories from Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'	Sir Gibbie. By George MacDonald, LL.D.
Grandmother's Money.	Young Mrs. Jardine. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Jefferson's Book about Doctors.
Mistress and Maid. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'
Les Misérables. By Victor Hugo.
St. Olave's.
Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

TRÜBNER & CO'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT within

HISTORIC TIMES; with Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Demy 8vo, pp. 256, with Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, Bluerwin, and others, cloth, 14s. A few Copies have been printed on Large Paper, 31s. 6d.

DR. APPLETON: his Life and Literary

Holies. By JOHN H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, Sussex; and A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, and Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

KING'S COLLEGE LECTURES on ELO-

CUTION; or, the Physiology and Culture of Voice and Speech, and the Expression of the Emotions by Language, Countenance, and Gesture. To which is added a Special Lecture on the Causes and Cure of Impediments of Speech. Being the Substance of the Introductory Course of Lectures annually delivered by CHARLES JOHN PLUMETRE, Lecturer on Public Reading and Speaking at King's College, London, in the Evening Classes Department. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. New and greatly Enlarged Illustrated Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

A TALMUDIC MISCELLANY; or, a

Thousand and One Extracts from the Talmud, the Mishnah, and the Kabbalah. Compiled and Translated by P. I. HERSHON, Author of "Genesis according to the Talmud," &c. "Extracts from the Talmud," &c. With Introductory Preface by the Rev. F. W. FARHAM, D.D., F.R.S., Chaplain in Ordinary to Her Majesty, and Canon of Westminster. Post 8vo, cloth, 14s.

THE GULISTAN; or, Rose Garden of

Sheikh Musliha'd-din Sadi of Shiraz. Translated for the first time into Prose and Verse, with an Introductory Preface and a Life of the Author, from the Farsi Kadeh. By EDWARD R. EASTWICK, F.R.S., M.R.A.S., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES; or, Jataka

Tales. From the Original Pali of the Jatakavastu, now for the first time Edited by Prof. V. FAUSBOLL. Translated by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 1rs.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of the HUMAN RACE. Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEIGER, Author of "Origin and Evolution of Human Speech and Reason." Translated from the Second German Edition by DAVID ASHER, Ph.D., Corresponding Member of the Berlin Society for the Study of Modern Languages and Literature. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY of the JAPANESE. By BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yeigo Henkaku Ichiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE BIRDS of CORNWALL and the SCILLY ISLANDS. By the late EDWARD HEARLE ROOD. Edited, with an Introduction, Appendix, and Brief Memoir of the Author, by JAMES E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Post 8vo, with Portrait and Map, cloth, 11s.

LETTERS from my MILL. From the French of ALPHONSE DAUDET. By MARY CORET. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s.; boards, 2s.

MATHEMATICAL DRAWING INSTRU-

MENTS, and HOW to USE THEM. By F. E. HUIJER, F.L.S., F.S.A., Art-Master of Marlborough College. Imp. 16mo, with Fifty-six Illustrations, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE GREAT AFRICAN ISLAND: Chap-

TEINS on MADAGASCAR. By the Rev. JAMES SMITH, Jun., of the London Missionary Society, Author of "Madagascar and its People," &c. Demy 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, cloth, 12s.

THE LIGHT of ASIA; or, the Great

Renunciation. Being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Told in Verse by an Indian BUDDHIST. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Author of "The Indian Song of Songs." Crown 8vo, limp parchment wrapper, 2s. 6d.

AN ACCOUNT of the POLYNESIAN

RACE: its Origin and Migrations. By A. FERNANDEZ. Vol. II. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE REPUBLIC of MEXICO in 1876:

a Political and Ethnographical Account of the Population, Character, Habits, Customs, and Vocations of its Inhabitants. By ANTONIO GAICHA CUBAS. Translated into English by GEORGE E. HERBERT. Illustrated with Plates of the Principal Types of the Ethnographic Families. Medium 8vo, cloth, 6s.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

No. XXII. Price Six Shillings.
THE CHURCH QUARTERLY REVIEW
For JANUARY, 1881.

CONTENTS.
1. M. RENAN'S LONDON LECTURES.
2. METTERNICH.
3. THE APOCALYPSE.
4. BARNEVELD and OROTHUS—ERASTIANISM.
5. SPENCER'S DATA OF ETHICS.
6. MISSION and JURISDICTION: the Primitive Rule and the Roman Usurpation.
7. FAIRLAMENTARY OATHS and AFFIRMATIONS.
8. ON the ANTIQUITY of our HOMER.
9. HODGKIN'S "ITALY and her INVADERS."
10. THE LAW of ECCLESIASTICAL DILAPIDATIONS, its WRONG and REMEDY.
SHORT NOTICES.
THE RETROSPECT of 1880.
London: SPOTTISWOODE & Co., New-street-square.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

For FEBRUARY, 1881. Price 2s. 6d.
RITUALISM. By the Very Rev. the DEAN of ST. PAUL'S.
THE TRANSVAAL. By the Right Hon. Sir BARTLE FREER, Bart., G.C.B., G.C.S.I.
COLLIERY EXPLOSIONS. (1) By J. HERMAN MERVILLE. (2) By Colonel SHAKESPEAR, A.S. Inst. C.E.
THE BREAKING-UP of the LAND MONOPOLY. By the MARQUIS of BLANFORD.
LA ROCHEFOUCAULD. By the late E. S. DALLAS.
THE UNITED STATES as a FIELD for AGRICULTURAL SETTLERS. By the Right Hon. the EARL of ARLING.
THE PHILOSOPHY of LIBERALISM. By ROBERT WALLACE.
THE CITY PAROCHIAL CHARITIES. By the Rev. R. H. HADDON.
A JEWISH VIEW of the ANTI-JEWISH AGITATION. By LUCIEN WOLF (Editor of the "Jewish World").
IRELAND.—(1) EMIGRATION. By J. H. TUKE.—(2) ABOLITION of LANDLORDS. By the Right Hon. LORD MONTAGUE.—(3) THE IRISH POLICE. By HENRI A. BLAKE.
London: C. KEOGAN PAUL & CO.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.
THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR FEBRUARY.
THE MORAL INFLUENCE of GEORGE ELIOT. By ONE WHO KNEW HER—ON the MORAL CHARACTER of MAN. By the HON. of AROLL.
THE QUEEN'S PICTURES' VAHORIUM BIBLE and the WESTMINSTER REVISION. By R. S. POOLE.
THE HOMES and the TRANSVAAL. By Lieut.-Colonel W. F. BUTLER, C.D.
THE SOCIALISTS of the CHAIR. By JOHN RAE.
THE FAILURE of FREE CONTRACT in IRELAND. By J. A. FARRER.
WOMAN'S CLAIM. By EMILY FEEFFER.
FREEDOM of THOUGHT in the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Rev. H. K. HAWES, M.A.
THE ARGUMENTS FOR and AGAINST the THREE F's. By STENET C. BUSTON.
PROFESSOR GREEN'S EXPLANATIONS. By HERBERT SPENCER.
SOME RECENT BOOKS: a Glance at the Literature of 1880.
London: STRAHAN & CO. (LIMITED), 34, PATERNOSTER-ROW.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

For FEBRUARY, 1881. No. DCLXXXIV. Price 2s. 6d.
CONTENTS.
THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.—PART IV.
KING GEORGE THE THIRD AND MR. FOX IN THEIR EARLY DAYS.
MR. COX'S PROTÉGÉ. IN TWO PARTS.—PART I.
ON SOME OF SHAKESPEARE'S FEMALE CHARACTERS. II.—PORTIA.
TROLLOPE'S LIFE of CICERO.
THE SALMON of CLOOTIE'S HOLE.
THE GOVERNMENT AND IRELAND.
GEORGE ELIOT.
Edinburgh and London: WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 256. For FEBRUARY. Price 1s.
CONTENTS OF THE NUMBER.
1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Jun. Chapters XIX.—XX.
2. ETIENNE BOULET. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.
3. ATHLETICS and EDUCATION. By HENRY HUTCHINSON ALMOND.
4. CHRISTMAS, and ANCESTOR WORSHIP, in the BLACK MOUNTAIN. By ARTHUR EVANS. PART II.
5. MR. FRANK HUCKLAND. By SPENCER WALPOLE.
6. RUGBY, TENNIS, &c. By THOS. HUGHES, Q.C.
7. "THE CUR." By LADY POLLOCK.
8. THE PREVENTION of FLOODS. By URQUHART A. FORBES.
London: MACMILLAN & CO.

STATISTICAL SOCIETY'S JOURNAL

DECEMBER, 1880. Now ready, Part IV., Vol. XLIII., price 5s.
CONTENTS.
QUESTIONS affecting L.A.B. the Inaugural Address of the President, JAMES CAIRD, Esq., C.B., F.R.S., delivered 16th November, 1880.
THE TENTH CENSUS of the UNITED STATES of AMERICA, a NOTE on. By F. J. MOGAT, M.D., F.R.C.S.
THE ORIENTAL PLAGUE: the Howard Medal Prize Essay of 1880. By H. PEROT POTTER, F.R.C.S.
MISCELLANEA.—Agricultural Returns of 1880.—The Corn Crops of 1880.—Ten Years' Results of the London School Board.—The Annual Local Taxation Returns, 1876-78.—Ten Years' Telegraphy.—The Population of the Earth.—Statistics of the Australasian Colonies for 1879.—Agricultural Distress and Bills of Sale.—Notes on Economical and Statistical Works.—Additions to the Library.—Index to Vol. XLIII., &c.
London: E. STANFORD, 55, CHANCERY-LANE, S.W.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for FEBRUARY contains:—The King and Parsifal—The Father of the Symphony—The Great Composers: Schubert—Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ"—Monday Popular Concerts—Occasional Notes—Foreign and Country News—Reviews—Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for FEBRUARY contains:—"Aftermath;" Part-Song, by T. S. DRUMMOND. Price, separately, 14d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 50 and 51, Queen-street, E.C.

Price 8d.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL

For FEBRUARY I.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME.

Experiments in Workhouse Management.
A Strange Retribution.
Phases in Canadian Home-Life.
Story of the Lord George Gordon Riot.
Ancient Burials in Orkney.
Proclamations against Fires.
A Few Words upon Marrying Customs.
Bird-Law.
Appliances for Saving Life and Treasure at Sea.
A Remarkable Rogues.
How Aristocratic Pearls are Made.
Swiftdom. By W. Chambers.

Concerning Reporting.
Story of Queen Louise of Prussia.
The City Ducking Theory.
Poor Folks as Fundholders.
Curious Antipathies.
What is a Cold?
The Subsidence of Land in the Salt Districts of Cheshire.
Michael O'Shaughnessy's Funeral.
The Puzzle of the Chiltern Hundreds.
Literary Beginners.
A Novel Pet.
A Pin upon Surinames.
Recollections of a Highland Census.
The Month: Science and Arts.
Five Poetical Pieces.

THE FORTUNES OF BERTHAM OAKLEY.

By J. B. HAWOOD, Chapters I.—VII.

London and Edinburgh: W. & R. CHAMBERS.

Now ready.

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S MAGAZINE.

THE ARGOSY

For FEBRUARY.

CONTENTS.

1. COURT NETHERLEIGH: a New Illustrated Serial Story. By the Author of "East Lynne." Chaps. IV., V., VI. Illustrated by M. Ellen Edwards.
2. THE STORY OF DOROTHY GRAPE. By JOHNNY LUOWLOW.
3. IN THE NEW FOREST. By CHARLES W. WOOD, Author of "Round About Norway."
4. A VALENTINE.
5. THE CLOCK'S ROMANCE.
6. WHAT HAPPENED.
7. THE DROOK and the CLOUD.

Sixpence Monthly.

Fourth Edition of THE ARGOSY for JANUARY now ready.

London: RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, 8, New Burlington-street, W.

FOURTH EDITION OF

THE ARGOSY for JANUARY, now ready, containing the opening chapters of Mrs. HENRY WOOD'S New Serial Story, "Court Netherleigh."

"We do not remember to have seen a better number of the 'Argosy' than the present one."—Hullfax Times.

"The 'Argosy' commences well."—Brighton Gazette.

"The 'Argosy' is full of promise for the New Year."—Manx Sun.

"A new story of great promise."—Sunday Times.

"The first three chapters of 'Court Netherleigh' at once claim our sympathy and excite our interest. The situation arrived at in this number is so intensely entertaining that the succeeding number is anxiously looked for."—Yarmouth Gazette.

"The 'Argosy' begins the year with some oblaty, delightful descriptions of ramblings in the New Forest."—Mail.

"The 'Argosy' for January is an excellent number. No magazine has a selection of more universal interest than this excellently conducted periodical."—Liverpool Advertiser.

Fourth Edition now ready.

London: RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, 8, New Burlington-street, W.

SCOTTISH RECORD PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready, in royal 8vo, price 10s.

THE EXCHEQUER ROLLS of SCOTLAND. Vol. IV. A.D. 1406–1436. Edited by GEORGE BURNETT, Lyon King of Arms.

Edinburgh: A. & C. BLACK and DOUGLAS & FOULIS. London: LONGMANS & CO. and TRUBNER & CO. Oxford: PARKER & CO. Cambridge: MACMILLAN & CO. Dublin: A. THOM & CO.

BOOK and MAGAZINE PRINTING.—

UNWIN BROS., the Printers of six-and-twenty various Serial Publications, furnish estimates on application. They have large premises both in London and Chisworth, Stereotype Foundry, and every Modern Appliance for the production of High-class work in Modern or Old Style.—Address, 169A, Cannon-street, E.C. Telephonic communication with upwards of 700 Firms.

MESSRS. WYMAN & SONS, Printers

and Publishers, invite attention to the facilities offered by their Establishment for the COMPLETE PRODUCTION of BOOKS of every description, all Departments of the Business being carried on under the immediate Personal Superintendence of the Firm. Inclusive Estimates promptly forwarded, and liberal arrangements made with Authors for the publication of their MSS., whether Scientific, Artistic, or Works of Fiction. WYMAN & SONS, 74 and 75, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-Inn, London, W.C.

STEPHENS DRAWING INK.

For Architectural Drawing and Artists' use.

Does not require stirring while in use.

Dries quickly, flows evenly from the pen, and becomes an insoluble colour when dry. Drawings executed with it can be washed without fear of injury. The most delicate Drawing Pens used with this Ink are not impaired by corrosion. On the contrary, Instruments left with the Ink to dry on them are preserved as with a lacquer.

Sold in Bottles 6d. and 2s. each.

Can be procured through any Stationer.

H. C. STEPHENS, 191, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Just published. Size, 5 feet 8 inches by 4 feet 6 inches.

PHILIPS' NEW MAP OF MIDDLESEX,

Including large portions of SURREY, KENT, ESSEX, &c., showing clearly the Parliamentary Boroughs, Hundreds, and Parishes; also the Railways, brought down to the present date, with their Stations distinctly marked. Carefully reduced from the Six-inch Ordnance Survey to the Scale of Two Inches to One Mile.

By JOHN BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S.

PRICES—On Four Sheets, 18s.; mounted on Black Rollers and Varnished, or in Case, £1 1s.; mounted on Mahogany Rollers and Varnished, £1 5s.

LONDON: GEORGE PHILIP & SON, 32, FLEET STREET; AND LIVERPOOL.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

WINTER EXHIBITION.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY

EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AND DECORATIVE DESIGNS, BY LIVING ARTISTS,

NOW OPEN DAILY, 10 to 6.

Admission, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."

Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."

W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."

CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

WILLS'

"WESTWARD HO!" NEW SMOKING MIXTURE.

"When all things were made, none were made better than Tobacco; to be a lone man's Companion, a bachelor's Friend, a hungry man's Food, a sad man's Cordial, a wakeful man's Sleep, and a chilly man's Fire. There's no Herb like it under the canopy of heaven."—Kingsley's "Westward Ho!"

In 1 oz., 2 oz., and 4 oz. packets, lined with tinfoil.

W. D. & H. O. WILLS.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
The original, best, and most liberal.
Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Marwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £6 6s. to 50 guineas.

Drawing-room suites, from 49 9s. to 45 guineas.

Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.

And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Marwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.

Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.

Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.

Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.

Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

snid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. It gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

STANDARD EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

DR. DE FIVAS' FRENCH CLASS BOOKS.

"We have previously expressed a very favourable opinion of the works written for learners of French by Dr. de Fivas, and need now only to call attention to the new additions recently issued. Their great popularity is evidenced by the fact that they have all passed through several editions, the grammar having reached the forty-fourth. There are many excellent French grammars in the market, but we know of few equal to De Fivas'. The extracts from French authors contained in the 'Beautés' are well chosen. The 'New Guide to French Conversation' will be found extremely useful to tourists. 'Le Trésor National' contains graduated exercises, intended to facilitate the acquisition of the power of translating English into French, while the 'Introduction' provides a good selection of easy French passages, affording suitable reading for beginners."—SCHOOLMASTER, Dec. 1th, 1880.

DE FIVAS.—NEW GRAMMAR of the FRENCH GRAMMAR. Considering the substance of all the most approved French Grammars, but more especially of the Standard Work, "La Grammaire des Grammaires," sanctioned by the French Academy and the University of Paris. With numerous Exercises and Examples illustrative of every Rule. By Dr. V. DE FIVAS, M.A., F.R.S., Member of the Grammatical Society of Paris, &c. Forty-fourth Edition, Enlarged and Improved, 3s. 6d., strongly bound.

A KEY to the same, 3s. 6d., bound.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE TO THIS EDITION.

"The Académie française having, in 1877, issued a new edition of their Dictionary, introducing many innovations, the opportunity has been taken to thoroughly revise this Grammar in accordance therewith."

"Its precision and conciseness are admirable."—Standard.
"At once the simplest and most complete Grammar of the French language. To the pupil the effect is almost as if he looked into a map, so well defined is the course of study as explained by M. de Fivas."—Literary Gazette.

"This French Grammar has for a long time been recognised as the best we have in England, and it seems to be rapidly superseding most others."—Constitutional Times.

"The very best of the many able works which the present day has produced to meet the requirements of the students of the French language—in other words, of all who aim at belonging to the educated classes."—Public Opinion.

"The Grammar is very full and complete, and the publishers are not tiring that can be reduced to rules in the French language. We can warmly recommend it to private students as admirably adapted to meet their requirements, whilst as a class-book for schools we know of none more lucid, complete, and trustworthy."—Huddersfield Examiner.
"The wants of learners have been carefully studied, with the result of producing a book as near perfection as possible."—Glasgow Comet.

DE FIVAS.—LE TRESOR NATIONAL; or, Guide to the Translation of English into French at Sight. Sixth Edition. 12mo, 2s. 6d., bound. KEY, 12mo, 2s., cloth.

DE FIVAS.—NEW GUIDE TO MODERN FRENCH CONVERSATION; or, the Student and Tourist's French Faite Menee. Containing a Comprehensive Vocabulary, and Phrases and Dialogues on every Useful or Interesting Topic; together with Models of Letters, Notes, and Cards; and Comparative Tables of British and Foreign Coins, Weights and Measures, &c. Twenty-ninth Edition, thoroughly Revised, with many Additions. 18mo, 2s. 6d., strongly half-bound.

"Perspicuous, plain, and easy to understand."—Bookeller.
"De Fivas' has the advantage over other French conversation books of indicating the liaisons and giving other helps to pronunciation."—Academy.

DE FIVAS.—BEAUTES des ECRIVAINS FRANCAIS, ANCIENS et MODERNES. Ouvrage Classique à l'usage des Collèges et des Institutions. Quatrième Edition, augmentée de Notes Historiques, Géographiques, Philologiques, Littéraires, Grammaticales, et Biographiques. 12mo, 3s. 6d., bound.

"A selection of pieces both in prose and verse, which, while it furnishes a convenient reading-book for the student of the French language, at the same time affords a pleasing and interesting view of French Literature."—Observer.

DE FIVAS.—INTRODUCTION à la LANGUE FRANÇAISE; ou, Fables et Contes Choisis, Anecdotes Instructionnelles, Faits Mémorables, &c. Avec un Dictionnaire de tous les Mots traduits en Anglais. A l'usage de la Jeunesse et de ceux qui commencent à apprendre la Langue Française. Twenty-fifth Edition. 12mo, 2s. 6d., bound.

"Besides its suitability for the learner, we do not know a book better adapted than this for brushing up the neglected French of those whose school-days, like ours, have been over for some little time past."—Scotsman.

ETYMOLOGICAL COMPANION TO DE FIVAS' GRAMMAR.

THE FRENCH LANGUAGE: a Complete Compendium of its History and Etymology. For the use of Colleges, Public and Private Schools, and Students. By E. ROUBAUD, B.A. Paris, Professor of the French Language, Author of "The French Pronunciation," &c. 4to, 1s. 6d., cloth.

"A most desirable, indeed a necessary, book for students who wish to perfect themselves in a scientific knowledge of French."—School Guardian.
"A serviceable introduction to French etymology, and a useful companion to French accidence for schoolboys."—Journal of Education.

WEALE'S EDUCATIONAL AND CLASSICAL SERIES.

LATIN TEXTS.—With Explanatory Notes in English.

LATIN DELECTUS. By Henry Young. 1s. 6d.
CÆSAR'S COMMENTARIES ON THE GALLIC WAR. By H. Young. 2s.
CICERO, ORATIO PRO SEXTO. By Rev. James Davies. 1s.
CICERO, CATALINE, VERRES, ARCHIAS. By Rev. T. H. L. Leary, D.C.L. 1s. 6d.
CICERO, CATO MAJOR, DE AMICITIA, &c. By W. Brownrigg Smith. 2s.
CORNELIUS NEPOS. By H. Young. 1s. 6d.
HOMÆ: ODES, EPODES, &c. By H. Young. 1s. 6d.
HOMÆ: SATIRES, EPISTLES, and AGRICOLA. Ily W. B. Smith. 1s. 6d.
JUVENAL: SATIRES. By T. H. S. Escott. 2s.
LYRY. Notes by H. Young and W. B. Smith. Books I, II, 1s. 6d.; Books III, IV, V, 1s. 6d.; Books XXII, XXIII, 1s. 6d.
SALLUST. By W. M. Donne. 1s. 6d.
TERENCE: ADELPHI, HECYIA, PHORMIO. By Rev. J. Davies. 2s.
TERENCE: ANDRIA and HEAUTONTIMORUMENOS. By Rev. J. Davies. 1s. 6d.
TERENCE: EUNUCHUS. By Rev. J. Davies, M.A. 1s. 6d.
VIRGIL: BUCOLICS and GEORGICS. By Rushton and Young. 1s. 6d.
VIRGIL: AENEID. By H. Young. Revised and Improved by Rev. T. H. L. Leary, D.C.L. Books I to VI, 1s. 6d.; Books VII to XII, 2s. 1 or complete in 1 vol, 3s.
LATIN VERSE SELECTIONS. By W. B. Donne. 2s.
LATIN PROSE SELECTIONS. By W. B. Donne. 2s.

GREEK TEXTS.—With Explanatory Notes in English.

GREEK DELECTUS. By H. Young. 1s. 6d.
ARISTOTELIS: PROMETHÆUS VICTUS. By Rev. Jas. Davies, M.A. 1s.
ARISTOTELIS: SEITHEM CONTRA THYBES. By Rev. Jas. Davies. 1s.
ARISTOTELIS: ACHARNIANS. By C. S. T. Townshend. 1s. 6d.
ARISTOTELIS: ALCESTIS. By John Milner. 1s. 6d.
ARISTOTELIS: ECCECHIA and MEDÆA. By W. Brownrigg Smith. 1s. 6d.
ARISTOTELIS: ILLIAD. By T. H. L. Leary. 4 vols. 1s. 6d. each.
HOMERUS ODYSSEY. By Leary. 4 vols. 2d 1s. 6d., 1st 2s.
HERODOTUS. By Leary. 4 vols. 3d 2s., 1st 1s. 6d.
LUCIAN'S SELECT DIALOGUES. By H. Young. 1s. 6d.
PLATO'S DIALOGUES. By Rev. James Davies. 2s.
FENICHI and ARISTOTELIS TYRANNUS. By H. Young. 1s.
SOPOCLES: ANTIPOPHES. By Rev. John Milner. 2s.
THUCYDIDES. Notes by H. Young. 1s.
XENOPHON'S ANABASIS. By H. Young. 2 vols. 1s. each.
XENOPHON'S PENEYRIC ON AGESILAUS. By L. F. W. Jewitt. 1s. 6d.
DEMOSTHENES: ORATIO DE CORONA and the PHILIPPICS. By Rev. T. H. L. Leary. 1s. 6d.

MODERN EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

FRENCH GRAMMAR. By G. L. Strauss, Ph.D. 1s. 6d.
FRENCH DICTIONARY. By Alfred Elwes. Vol. I. French-English, 1s. 6d.; Vol. II. English-French, 2s., or complete, 3s.
FRENCH and ENGLISH PHRASE BOOK. 1s. 6d.
GERMAN GRAMMAR. By G. L. Strauss. 1s. 6d.
GERMAN READER. By G. L. Strauss, Ph.D. 1s.
GERMAN TRILOG DICTIONARY. By N. E. S. A. Hamilton. Part I. English-German-French, 1s.; Part II. German-French-English, 1s.; Part III. French-German-English, 1s.; or in 1 vol, 3s.
ITALIAN GRAMMAR. By Alfred Elwes. 1s. 6d.
ITALIAN TRILOG DICTIONARY. By A. Elwes. Vol. I. Italian-English-French, 2s. 6d.; Vol. II. English-French-Italian, 2s. 6d.; Vol. III. French-Italian-English, 2s. 6d.; or in 1 vol, 7s. 6d.
SPANISH GRAMMAR. By Alfred Elwes. 1s. 6d.
SPANISH-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-SPANISH DICTIONARY. By A. Elwes. 4s.
PORTUGUESE GRAMMAR. By Alfred Elwes. 1s. 6d.

CLASSICAL and BIBLICAL LANGUAGES.

LATIN GRAMMAR. By Rev. Thomas Goodwin. 1s.
LATIN DICTIONARY. By Rev. T. Goodwin. Part I. Latin-English, 2s.; Part II. English-Latin, 1s. 6d.; or 1 vol, 3s. 6d.
GREEK GRAMMAR. By Hans C. Hamilton. 1s. 6d.
GREEK LEXICON. By H. R. Hamilton. Vol. I. Greek-English, 2s. 6d.; Vol. II. English-Greek, 2s.; or the 2 vols. in 1, 4s. 6d.
HEBREW GRAMMAR. By Dr. Bresslau. 1s. 6d.
HEBREW and ENGLISH DICTIONARY. By Dr. Bresslau. 6s.
ENGLISH and HEBREW DICTIONARY. By Dr. Bresslau. 6s.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE and MISCELLANEOUS.

ENGLISH GRAMMAR. By Hyde Clarke, B.C.L. 1s. 6d.
HANDBOOK OF COMPARATIVE PHILOLOGY. By Hyde Clarke. 1s.
DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. By Hyde Clarke. 3s. 6d.
COMPOSITION and PUNCTUATION. By Justin Brauen. 1s. 6d.
DERIVATIVE SPELLING-BOOK. By J. Howbotom. 1s. 6d.
ARABIC SYNTAX SPEAKING. By M. Bantani, Professor at the Sorbonne. 2s. 6d.
MINING and QUARRYING, FIRST BOOK of, for Schools. By J. H. Collins. 1s.
PLACES and FACTS in GEOGRAPHY. By Rev. E. Rand. 1s.
ANALYTICAL CHEMISTRY, QUALITATIVE and QUANTITATIVE. By W. W. Pink and G. E. Webster. 2s.

MATHEMATICS and ARITHMETIC.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS. By J. F. Heather. 1s. 6d.
DESCRIPTIVE GEOMETRY. By J. F. Heather. 2s.
ALGEBRA. By J. Haddon. 2s.
EUCLID'S ELEMENTS. By H. Law. 2s. 6d.
ANALYTICAL GEOMETRY and CONIC SECTIONS. By Hann and Young. 2s.
PLANE TRIGONOMETRY. By J. Hann. 1s.
SPHERICAL TRIGONOMETRY. By J. Hann. 1s.
MATHEMATICAL and NAUTICAL TABLES, with Treatise on LOGARITHMS. By Law and Young. 5s. 6d.
DIFFERENTIAL CALCULUS. By W. S. B. Woodhouse. 1s. 6d.
INTEGRAL CALCULUS, RUDDIMENTS of. By H. Cox. 1s.
DRAWING and MEASURING INSTRUMENTS. By J. F. Heather. 1s. 6d.
SURVEYING and ASTRONOMICAL INSTRUMENTS. By J. F. Heather. 1s. 6d.
PRACTICAL PLANE GEOMETRY. By J. F. Heather. 2s.
COMMERCIAL BOOK-KEEPING. By J. Haddon. 1s. 6d.
ARITHMETIC. By J. K. Young. 1s. 6d.
EQUATIONAL ARITHMETIC. By W. Hipsley. 2s.
REDUCTION. By J. Haddon. 1s. 6d.
RUDDIMENTARY ARITHMETIC. By J. Haddon. 1s. 6d.
THE SLIDE RULE, and HOW to USE it. By C. Hoar. 3s.

HISTORY.

ENGLAND (OUTLINES OF HISTORY of). By W. D. Hamilton, F.S.A. (of the Royal Society). 2s.
GREEK (OUTLINES OF HISTORY of). By Hamilton and Leven. 2s. 6d.
ROME (OUTLINES OF HISTORY of). By E. Leven. 2s. 6d.
CHRONOLOGY OF HISTORY, ART, LITERATURE, &c. Continued to the Conclusion of the Franco-German War. By W. D. Hamilton, F.S.A. 3s.
DATES and EVENTS in ENGLISH HISTORY. By Rev. E. Rand. 1s.

WEALE'S RUDDIMENTARY SCIENTIFIC SERIES comprises, besides the above, upwards of 350 Books in all Departments of SCIENCE, ART, and EDUCATION. Complete Detailed Lists of the whole Series post-free on application to the Publishers.

LOCKWOOD'S SERIES

OF

CIVIL SERVICE HANDBOOKS.

"The work of the Civil Service Commissioners has called into existence a series of Civil Service Handbooks, published by Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Co., which have the exceptional merit of being the work of experts, who have themselves passed through the competitive examinations to which they offer a practical guide. For general use, but especially for candidates for examinations, these volumes will be found to have many points of usefulness not found in ordinary educational books."—PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

DOBSON.—ENGLISH LITERATURE. By

H. A. DOBSON, Board of Trade. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.
"An excellent handbook of English literature."—Athenæum.
"It is with especial pleasure that we can direct attention to Mr. Dobson's work. The author is no mere compiler. He evidently appreciates the higher qualities of literature. He is, too, critical, and quotes from the best authorities."—Westminster Review.

MONKHOUSE.—THE PRECIS BOOK; or,

Lessons in Accuracy of Statement and Preciseness of Expression. For Civil Service Students. Self-Education and Use in Schools. By W. COSMO MONKHOUSE, Board of Trade. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

"* KEY to the above. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.
"Cannot fail to shorten and make more pleasant the novitiate of anyone proposing to enter the public service."—Contemporary Review.

SPENCE.—GEOGRAPHY: General and Political. By the late L. M. D. SPENCE. Revised by THOMAS GRAY, Board of Trade. Sixth Edition. Twenty-fourth Thousand. Woodcuts and Six Maps. Fcap. 2s. 6d., cloth.

"A good manual for practical purposes, adapted to the present state of knowledge."—Athenæum.

WHITE.—HISTORY OF ENGLAND: being a Fact-Book of English History. By F. A. WHITE, B.A. This Edition, Revised, by H. A. DOBSON, of the Board of Trade. With Four Maps. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

"We do not remember to have seen anything of the kind so compendious, complete, accurate, and convenient for use."—Athenæum.
"A volume in pursuance of historic knowledge, invaluable to all who desire a ready reference to the annals of their country."—Civitan.

YATES.—ENGLISH GRAMMAR: being

Notes on the History and Grammar of the English Language. By W. V. YATES, Wilmersley Grammar School. Fcap. 1s. 6d., cloth.
"This text-book will supply a want much felt, and it is so capably arranged that we have no hesitation in recommending it to our readers."—Civil Service Gazette.

"I never before saw the chief points both of eccidene and history put in so nice, concise, and comprehensive a form. Any student who has paid full attention to it must attain a high position in any competitive examination."—C. BELL, B.A., Head Master, Grammar School, March.

MOTTEAU.—FIRST FRENCH BOOK;

being a Practical First Course of French Grammar, with Exercises connected with the Use of Civil Service Candidates, and Private Students. By ACHILLE MOTTEAU. Second Edition, Enlarged. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d., cloth.

"* KEY to the above. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.
"A clear and compact little treatise."—Civitan.
"Well arranged on an easy, simple plan."—Scotsman.

CHRONOLOGY OF HISTORY, ART,

LITERATURE, and PROGRESS, from the Creation to the Conclusion of the Franco-German War. The Continuation by W. D. HAMILTON, F.S.A., of H.M. Public Record Office. Fcap. 3s. 6d., cloth.
"Accurate, wide, and thorough. Most useful to those who are reading up for examinations."—English Churchman.

ORTHOGRAPHY: a Handy Book of English

Spelling. With Rules and Exercises. By E. S. H. B. Second Edition. Revised and Corrected. Fcap. 1s. 6d., cloth.
"A very handy, carefully written, and complete little book."—Full Mail Gazette.

BOOK-KEEPING: its Principles popularly

Explained, and the Theory of Double Entry Analogy. By an EXPERIENCED BOOK-KEEPER. Third Edition. Fcap. 1s. 6d., cloth.
"It is clear and concise, and exactly such a text-book as students require."—Quarterly Journal of Education.

WORKS BY THE LATE JOSEPH PAYNE,

Professor of the Science and Art of Education to the College of Preceptors, &c.

PAYNE'S SELECT POETRY for CHILDREN. With brief Explanatory Notes arranged for the use of Schools and Families. Twentieth Edition, carefully revised, and considerably enlarged by the insertion of several Poems by permission of Miss Ingham, Fenelon, Browning, Kingsley, and others, with fine Steel Frontispiece. 18mo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s.

"We could wish for no better introduction to the study of poetry to place in the hands of our little ones."—Schoolmaster.

PAYNE'S STUDIES in ENGLISH

POETRY. With short Biographical Sketches, and Notes Explanatory and Critical, intended as a Text-Book for the Higher Classes of Schools. Seventh Edition, Revised. Post 8vo, 3s., cloth.
"The selection is both extensive and varied, including many of the choicest specimens of English poetry."—Electric Review.

PAYNE'S STUDIES in ENGLISH PROSE.

Specimens of the Language in its various Stages. With Notes Explanatory and Critical. Post 8vo, 5s., cloth.
"It is a rare collection of literary gems, and it is difficult to imagine a more useful manual."—Scotsman.

LONDON: CROSBY LOCKWOOD & CO., 7, STATIONERS' HALL COURT, LUDGATE HILL, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 457.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
COOPER'S MEMORIALS OF CAMBRIDGE, by J. BASS	91
MULLINGER	91
TROLOPE'S CICERO, by W. WARDE FOWLER	91
THOMSON'S VANE'S STORY, AND OTHER POEMS, by GEO. SAINTSBURY	92
MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS OF FRANCIS LIEBER, by COL. J. L. CHESTER	93
VANDEKINDER'S AGE OF THE ARTEVELDES, by the REV. M. CREIGHTON	93
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	94
CURRENT LITERATURE	95
NOTES AND NEWS	96
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	98
OBITUARY: ARTHUR O'SHAUGHNESSY, by E. W. GOSSE; MRS. S. C. HALL; &c.	98
SELECTED BOOKS	99
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Philological Society and Spelling Reform, by A. J. Ellis and Prince L.-L. Bonaparte; Sir John Mandeville's Text, by T. Bayne	99-100
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	100
OVERBECK ON THE FORMATION OF THE CANON, by Prof. JAS. DRUMMOND	100
CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE	101
NOTES OF TRAVEL	102
SCIENCE NOTES	103
PHILOLOGY NOTES	103
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	103
ROUGE'S INSCRIPTIONS, &c., FROM EDESSA, by AMELIA B. EDWARDS	104
ART BOOKS	105
OBITUARY	105
THE EXHIBITION OF THE GLASGOW INSTITUTE OF THE FINE ARTS, by JOHN M. GRAY	105
NOTES OF ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	106
"DIVORCE"	107
STAGE NOTES	107
H. HOFMANN'S "MELUSINA," &c., by J. S. SHEDDOCK	108

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION, including a Loan Collection of Works by the late George Hodgson, is NOW OPEN, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 5. Admittance, 1s. Catalogue, 6d.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

THE EXHIBITION OF WORKS by the OLD MASTERS, and by Deceased Masters of the British School, including a Collection of Drawings by John Flaxman, R.A., is NOW OPEN. Open from 9 till dusk. One Shilling. Catalogues Sixpence, or bound in cloth, with pencil, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY of ENGLAND.

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

THE EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES for the SOCIETY'S PRIZES and CERTIFICATES, including the Life Membership of the Society, will take place in the week commencing TUESDAY, MAY 10TH, 1881. Copies of the Form of Entry, which is required to be sent in by April 1, 1881, may be had on application to 11, M. JENKINS, Secretary, 12, Hanover-square, London, W.

FOR SALE.—The "ACADEMY" for 1878. Bound in Cases, 2 vols. Also, First Half of 1879, unbound. Separate or together. Half-price, carriage paid.—Apply to Miss PHILLMORE, 5, Arlington-street, S.W.

MR. WHISTLER'S VENICE PASTELS. A Series of FIFTY PASTEL DRAWINGS by MR. WHISTLER are NOW ON VIEW at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, NEW BOND STREET. Admission on presentation of address card.

MR. A. W. THIBAudeau will have ON VIEW on TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, the 8TH and 9TH INST., previous to its disposal by Auction, the MUEHLBACHER COLLECTION of EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY FRENCH and ENGLISH ENGRAVINGS, including the Chefs d'œuvre of Baudouin, Debucourt, Fragonard, Freudenberg, Janssen, Lavreigne, Moreau, St. Aubin, Rowlandson, &c., &c. Admission on presentation of address card.—18, Grouse-street, Leicester-square.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c. The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection, and is a cheap method of illustration where quantities are required.

* For Terms and Specimens apply to the Manager.

AUTOTYPE is especially adapted for REPRODUCTION OF WORKS of ART, possessing a wide range of monochromatic expression, and reproducing with fidelity the Artist's touch.

JUST PUBLISHED on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s., "Come into these Yellow Sands," after the painting by Walter Field, Esq., exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1878, and the Paris Universal Exhibition, 1879. This fine Autotype combines the merits of an engraving with complete fidelity to the artist's touch, Mr. Field having produced a monochrome expressly for Autotype.

Will be ready in January, Autotype Reproductions of Twelve Drawings and Paintings by P. G. Hamerton, Esq.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY

Displays a noble Collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and many interesting examples of MODERN ART. To adorn a Home with permanent Photographic Masterpieces, examples of the greatest Masters, old and new, may be seen, by a visit to the AUTOTYPE GALLERY, to be a matter of trifling cost. Admission free.

Catalogue of the Company's Publications, 138 pages, sixpence, free by post. Gratis to Purchasers.

General Manager, W. S. BIRD.

Director of the Works, J. R. SAWTER.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THREADNEEDLE STREET

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHANCERY CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Life Assurances of all descriptions. Specially low rates for young lives, and for non-participating Policies. Prompt settlement of Claims. A new and greatly simplified form of Proposal, also the Society's newly revised Prospectus, will be forwarded on application.

J. G. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

WINTER EXHIBITION.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY

EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AND DECORATIVE DESIGNS, BY LIVING ARTISTS, NOW OPEN DAILY, 10 to 6.

Admission, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

This day is published, fcap. 8vo, price 2s. 6d.
PRIZE TRANSLATIONS, POEMS, and PARODIES. Reprinted from the "Journal of Education."
London: JOHN WALKER & CO., 96, Farringdon-street, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

ENDYMION.

PERFECTLY CLEAN COPIES of "ENDYMION" are NOW on SALE, at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, price One Guinea per set, strongly bound in half-persian (or 23s. in half-morocco).

A NEW EDITION of MUDIE'S CATALOGUE of WORKS of the best Authors, in Morocco, Tree-calf, Calf extra, Vellum, and other Ornamental Bindings, adapted for Gentlemen's Libraries or Drawing-room Tables, and for Wedding or Birthday Presents, and Prizes, is now ready, and will be forwarded on application.

NEW OXFORD STREET, February, 1881.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

FATHER—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 90,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a-year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £5; Life Membership, £20.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application: ROBERT HARRISON, secretary and Librarian.

STEPHENS DRAWING INK.

For Architectural Drawing and Artists' use.

Does not require stirring while in use.

Dries quickly, flows evenly from the pen, and becomes an insoluble colour when dry. Drawings executed with it can be washed without fear of injury. The most delicate Drawing Pens used with this Ink are not impaired by corrosion. On the contrary, instruments left with the Ink to dry on them are preserved as with a lacquer.

Sold in Bottles 6d. and 2s. each.

Can be procured through any Stationer.

H. C. STEPHENS, 191, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

TO PROPRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, Brief the Week's News, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMICAL, and PUNCTUAL PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether Illustrated or Plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of New Periodicals, for either Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street, London, W.C.

THE PRINTERS of Society, The Citizen,

Four other Newspapers, Twenty Monthly Periodicals, and other Publications possess unrivalled facilities both at London and Chitworth for the production of this class of work. Estimates furnished.—UNWIN BROTHERS, The Gresham Press, 109A, Cannon-street, E.C.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

PROVIDE AGAINST ACCIDENTS! ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN!

A fixed sum in case of Death by Accident, and a Weekly Allowance in the event of Injury, may be secured by a Policy of the

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY,

The Oldest and Largest Company insuring against Accidents of all kinds.

The Rt. Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman.

SUBSCRIBED CAPITAL, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £300,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS

Bonus allowed to Insurers after Five Years.

£1,630,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, and West-end Office, 8, Grand Hotel Buildings, Chancery-cross, or 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

PEPPING FOREST.—In the centre of the land lately thrown open to the public, a well-established SCHOOL offers a comfortable HOME and sound TRAINING. Good Playground and Cricket-field. Cows kept. Pupils pass the College of Preceptors, Cambridge Local, and London Matriculation.—G. P. H. SYKES, B.A., Forest House, Woodford.

BOYS PREPARED for the ENTRANCE and SCHOLARSHIP EXAMINATIONS at RUGBY and the other Public Schools.—For Terms, &c., apply to R. F. E. RUSK, Esq., Hillmorton-road, Rugby.

ABINGDON SCHOOL, Berks.—The new buildings give further accommodation. BOYS are prepared to modern subjects as well as for the Universities, where the School has valuable scholarships. TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS are now open to Boys entering in January. A Scholar's total expenses average £35 per annum.—Apply to Rev. E. SUMMERS, Head Master.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS. — WARBERY HOUSE, Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 210 Guineas.

STUDIO, with Ante-Rooms, &c., in Pem-bridge-place, Baywater.—Specially built for the purpose. lofty and well lighted. £30 per annum.—Apply to E. & F. SWAIN, 82, High-street, Notting-hill, W. (7, 375.)

GREAT DISCOVERY OF GOLD and COPPER.—A few Select INVESTORS may JOIN a NEW COMPANY, Limited, AT PAIK, and realise a HIGH PREMIUM, combined with £5 per cent. Guaranteed Dividend.—Apply immediately to Mr. PAUL, 8, Warwick-place, Leeds, Yorkshire.

LITHOGRAPHY.—GOW, BUTTER-FIELD, & CO. (late Butterfield & Mason) are prepared to execute First-class WORK in FACSIMILES of Oil Paintings and Water-Colours, Book Illustrations, Show-Cards, and Trade Emblems.—Specimens may be seen at their Works, Bowling Green-lane Buildings, Farringdon-road, E.C.

BY-PATHS of LITERATURE.—CATA-logue, No. 3, LOCAL COLLECTIONS of Prints and Cuttings, with Works on Topography; including Lives, Unnumbered Tracts, and other Quaint Literature of the Olden Time, now ready, of A. READER, 6, Orange-street, Red Lion-square, W.C.

THE Solicitors' Journal.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE
LEGAL PROFESSION.

Vol. XXV.—Established 1857. Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.

Discussions of the legal events of the week.

LEADING ARTICLES.

Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

RECENT DECISIONS.

Explanatory and critical disquisitions on all the cases of importance decided in the Courts of Common Law and Equity, pointing out their relations to the previous law. A reference to the Index to the Volume just completed, under the head "Cases Disussed," will show the extent to which the decisions of the year have been treated of in the JOURNAL.

CASES OF THE WEEK.

Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS.

Special reports, furnished by a Barrister.

SOLICITORS' CASES.

Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

PENDING LEGISLATION.

All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR.

Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

REVIEWS.

New legal works are elaborately noticed in this department.

NEW ORDERS, &c.

In this department are given all new Rules and Orders; in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

COURTS.

Special Reports of Cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION.

A complete record of the progress of legislation during each session.

APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.

Pains are taken to render these accurate and complete.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

Full reports of the proceedings of the law societies.

A careful summary is given of all the legal news of the week, and special attention is bestowed on furnishing early copies of all Court Papers.

The FIRST NUMBER of Volume XXV. Published November 6th, 1880.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s.; when paid in advance. Single number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

 The JOURNAL and REPORTER can be ordered from any date, and a proportionate reduction will be made in the Subscription up to the end of the current volume.

Cheques and Post-Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 52, CAREY STREET, LINCOLN'S INN.

MESSRS. BLACKWOOD & SONS' NEW LIST.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

For FEBRUARY, 1881.

No. DCCLXXXIV. Price 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY.—PART IV.
KING GEORGE THE THIRD AND MR. FOX IN THEIR EARLY DAYS.
MR. COX'S PROTEGE. IN TWO PARTS.—PART I.
ON SOME OF SHAKESPEARE'S FEMALE CHARACTERS.
II.—PORTIA.
TROLLOPE'S LIFE OF CICEIRO.
THE SALMON OF CLOOTIE'S HOLE.
THE GOVERNMENT AND IRELAND,
GEORGE ELIOT.

Philosophical Classics for English Readers.

This day is published, Vol. II.

BUTLER. By the Rev. W. Lucas Collins,
M.A., Honorary Canon of Peterborough. With Portrait.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The First Volume contains:—

DESCARTES. By Professor Mahaffy,
Dublin. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

In the press, Vol. III., and will be published immediately, BERKELEY. By Professor Fraser, Edinburgh.

Others will follow.

MR. LAURENCE OLIPHANT'S NEW WORK.

THE LAND of GILEAD. With Excursions in the Lebanon. By LAURENCE OLIPHANT, Author of "Lord Elgin's Mission to China," "Piccadilly," &c.
With Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo, 21s.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A most fascinating book."—Observer.
"The principal charm of the book will be the singularly agreeable narrative of a journey through regions more replete, perhaps, with varied and striking associations than any other in the world."—Athenaeum.
"We thank Mr. Oliphant for making us acquainted with a strangely neglected country, whose charms and capabilities seem to have escaped the notice of all previous travellers."—Saturday Review.
"A most fascinating volume of travel, and there is as much freshness in the style as in the subjects."—St. James's Gazette.
"An admirable work, both as a record of travel and as a contribution to political science."—Vanity Fair.

IRELAND—1881.

"Audi alteram Partem."

IRISH LAND as VIEWED from BRITISH SHORES. A Short Catchism on Irish Land Legislation. In Illustrated Wrapper. Sixpence.

[Just published.

NOTES of an IRISH TOUR in 1846. By LORD JOHN MANNERS, M.P., G.C.B. New Edition, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [This day.

IRISH PEASANT PROPRIETORS: Facts and Misrepresentations. A Reply to the Statements of Mr. Tuke. By W. SINCLAIR. Price One Shilling.
[Just published.

By the Author of "Private Life of Galileo," &c.

THE NEW VIRGINIANS. By the Author of "Private Life of Galileo," "Junia," &c. In 2 vols., post 8vo, 18s.

"The author writes in an amusing, animated style. She is a shrewd and accurate observer, and has an eye for the picturesque as well as for the humorous. . . . Those who have held Dickens's picture of Eden to be a caricature may alter their opinion if they look into the 'New Virginians.'"
St. James's Gazette.

THE LIFE of COLIN CAMPBELL, LORD

CLYDE. Illustrated by Extracts from his Diary and Correspondence. By Lieut.-General SHADWELL, C.B.
In 2 vols., 8vo. With Portrait, Map, and Plans.

[Very shortly.

AN OLD EDUCATIONAL REFORMER—

DR. BELL. By J. M. D. MEIKLEJOHN, M.A., Professor of
of the Theory, History, and Practice of Education in the University of St. Andrews. [Immediately.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

A MANUAL of ENGLISH PROSE

LITERATURE. Biographical and Critical. Designed mainly to show characteristics of style. By Wm.
MINRO, M.A., Professor of Logic and English Literature in the University of Aberdeen. Second Edition, Revised.
Crown 8vo, pp. 566, 7s. 6d.

"A masterly manual of English prose literature."—Standard.
"Will be welcomed by those who are capable of appreciating excellent workmanship. It is not rash to say that this work is the first scientific treatment of the subject by an English writer."—Observer.
"As a history of English literature, the present work is characterised by several features that are novel. . . . It is most elaborate and thorough in the conception, and is expounded with perfect clearness."—Examiner.

EDINBURGH AND LONDON:

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS.

Now ready (One Shilling), No. 251.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For FEBRUARY.

With Illustrations by GEORGE DE MAURIER and W. SMALL.

CONTENTS:

- LOVE THE DEBT. (With an Illustration.) Chap. IV.—Mabel—Childhood. V.—Girlhood. VI.—Squire.
 GEORGE ELLIOT.
 THE ORIGIN of LONDON.
 OXFORD HONOURS.
 ET TU in ARCADIA VIXISTI. By R. L. STEVENSON.
 HOLIDAY CUSTOMS in ITALY.
 VOLTAIRE and SHAKESPEARE.
 A PERSIAN APOLOGUE. (To E. II. P.) By AUSTIN DOBSON.
 A GRAPE from a THORN. By JAMES PAYN. (With an Illustration. Chap. VI.—A Hazardous Descent. VII.—When the Cat's away. VIII.—Two Methods of Pleasing. IX.—Mrs. and Miss Jennyngs.
 London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 250. For FEBRUARY. Price 1s.

CONTENTS OF THE NUMBER.

1. THE PORTRAIT of a LADY. By HENRY JAMES, Jun. Chapters XIX.—XX.
 2. ETIENNE DOLET. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.
 3. ATHLETICS and EDUCATION. By HENRY HUTCHINSON ALMOND.
 4. CHRISTMAS, and ANCESTOR WORSHIP, in the BLACK MOUNTAIN. By ARTHUR J. EVANS. Part II.
 5. MR. FRANK HUCKLAND. By SPENCER WALPOLE.
 6. RUGBY, TENNESSEE. By THOS. HUGHES, Q.C.
 7. "THE CUP." By LADY POLLOCK.
 8. THE PREVENTION of FLOODS. By URQUHART A. FORBES.
 London: MACMILLAN & CO.

Price 8d.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL

For FEBRUARY 1.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME.

- Experiments in Workhouse Management.
 A Strange Retribution.
 Phases in Canadian Home-Life.
 Story of the Lord George Gordon Riots.
 Ancient Burials in Orkney.
 Precautions against Fire.
 A Few Words upon Marriage Customs.
 Bird-Law.
 Appliances for Saving Life and Treasure at Sea.
 A Remarkable Rogue.
 How Artificial Pearls are Made.
 Swellodon. By W. Chambers.
 Concerning Reporting.
 Story of Queen Louise of Prussia.
 The Ugly Duckling Theory.
 Poor Folks as Fundholders.
 Curious Antipathies.
 What is a Cold?
 The Subsidies of Land in Districts of Cheshire.
 Michael O'Shaughnessy's Funerary.
 The Puzzle of the Chiltern Hundreds.
 Literary Beginners.
 A Novel Pet.
 A Play upon Surameses.
 Recollections of a Highland Census.
 The Month: Science and Arts.
 Five Poetical Muses.

THE FORTUNES of UENTRAM OAKLEY.

By J. D. HARWOOD. Chapters I.—VII.

London and Edinburgh: W. & R. CHAMBERS.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for FEBRUARY

contains:—The King and "Parsifal"—Mr. Poppy's, the Musician, by F. Muffet—The Father of the Symphony—The Great Composers: Schubert—Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ"—Two New Overtures by Brahms—Monday Popular Concert—Conference on Organ Construction—Occasional Notes—Foreign and Country News—Reviews—Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for FEBRUARY contains:—"Aftermath;" Part-Song, by T. S. DRUMMOND. Prices, separately, 1½d.

 London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

ECCLESIASTICAL EMBROIDERY.

An entirely New Work, price £2 2s. net, most elegantly bound.

DRAWINGS of ANCIENT EMBROIDERY. Thirty Specimens of great beauty and interest, selected by Mrs. MARY BALDWIN, and executed in the First Style of Chromolithography. Edited by W. BUTTERFIELD, Esq., Architect. A very limited number still unsubscribed for.

"There is nothing like monotony to be found, for the ingenuity which in our own day would have frayed itself away in a search for new patterns and designs, found a better task in varying the arrangement and treatment of the old ones, and the result is a constant freshness, and a real originality, altogether absent from much modern work. The book, which was written at his suggestion, has been superintended for publication, since the death of the author, by Mr. Butterfield, and the publishers deserve the highest possible praise for their share in the work."—Building News.

London: H. SOTHERAN & Co., 35, Piccadilly.

This day, 20pp., 8vo, sewed, 1s.

DEEP-SEA EXPLORATION: a Lecture

by J. GWYN JEFFREYS, LL.D., F.R.S.

By the same Author.

BRITISH CONCHOLOGY: an Account of the Mollusca which now inhabit the British Isles and the Surrounding Seas. 5 vols., with Plain Illustrations, 24; or Coloured, 45 5s.

London: JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

MR. JAMES THOMSON'S WORKS.

Price 5s. each; Large Paper (only a few printed), 10s. each.

VANE'S STORY, and other Poems.

THE CITY of DREADFUL NIGHT, and other Poems.

"It is worth while, I think, to chronicle the appearance of a new poet. Such I have little hesitation in pronouncing Mr. James Thomson, the Author of 'The City of Dreadful Night, and other Poems.'"
 "In 'Sunday at Hampstead' and 'Sunday up the River,' Mr. Thomson gives us two idyllic scenes full of brilliant verse and fancy."
Full Mail Gazette.

London: REEVES & TURNER, 195, Strand.

ART JOURNAL ETCHINGS.—PROOFS.—
ONE HUNDRED PROOFS will be printed from the Original Plates of each Etching on large paper, and published Monthly at 21s. each, or Subscriptions will be received for the Series of Twelve at £10 10s. Free by Post, carefully packed.

NOTICE.—The Proofs of Mr. Herkomer's "BABES IN THE WOOD," and of Mr. A. H. Haig's "AN OLD MILL," are nearly all sold.

Orders for the remaining copies will be executed in the order in which they are received.

The Etching for March will be "AN OLD ENGLISH MILL," by Birket Foster—a companion plate to Mr. Haig's "OLD GERMAN MILL."

LONDON: "ART JOURNAL" OFFICE, IVY LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE ART JOURNAL.—NEW SERIES.

With the JANUARY NUMBER a NEW SERIES of the ART JOURNAL was COMMENCED, with several important alterations and additions.

THE ART JOURNAL.—ETCHINGS.

An Etching will be included with Every Number of the Journal during the year 1881. The Etching for February is "An Old German Mill." By A. H. Haig.

THE ART JOURNAL.—OLD BATTERSEA BRIDGE.

with Facsimiles from Etchings of the Old Bridge and Whistler's House at Chelsea, by Mr. S. A. McN. Whistler, appears in the February Number.

THE ART JOURNAL.—INDUSTRIAL

ART.—A Series of Illustrated Papers will be continued Monthly on "Our Home Surroundings." The first, on "Chimney-pieces and Over-shelves," is continued in the February Number. The principal Art Furniture Manufacturers have promised their assistance.

THE ART JOURNAL.—Hints to Collectors of ETCHINGS, Water-colour Drawings, Lacquer, Ivories, Marqueterie, China, Turner's Liber Studiorum, &c.—A Series of practical Papers on these subjects from the pens of Mr. Seymour Haden, Mr. Roget, Mr. Rawlinson, Mr. Cutler, Mr. A. Nesbitt, and others will appear in the course of the year. IVORIES, Part I., by A. Nesbitt, is in the February Number.

THE ART JOURNAL.—ARTISTS will find every information respecting forthcoming Exhibitions and other matters of importance to them. A portion of the Journal will be devoted each month to Queries on Art matters.

THE ART JOURNAL.—PROOFS of the ETCHINGS.—One hundred proofs of each of the Etchings will be printed from the Original Plates. Price 21s. each, or £10 10s. for the Series of Twelve.

THE ART JOURNAL.—Published

Monthly, price 2s. 6d.

LONDON: "ART JOURNAL" OFFICE, IVY LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

Just published, tastefully bound in extra cloth, with Frontispiece, price 8s. 6d., post-free.

THE BRIDES OF ARDMORE:

A Story of Irish Life.

By AGNES SMITH.

"A highly edifying tale; apart from the interest of the historical fiction, there is much matter of instructive quality both in the body of the book and in a well-compiled appendix."—Daily Telegraph.

"To those readers of fiction who are weary of its conventional forms of expression 'The Brides of Ardmore' will be a welcome surprise."—Brifc.

"This is an interesting story well told; we cordially recommend it to all who take an interest in the mediaeval history of Ireland."—Londonderry Standard.

"No thoughtful reader can deny that the authoress has produced an historical, literary, and theological treatise such as is very rarely met with in the walks of polite literature."—New York Reporter.

LONDON: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS'.
THE HISTORY OF ANTIQUITY.

By Professor MAX DUNCKER.

TRANSLATED BY EVELYN ABBOTT, D.C.L.,
Balliol College, Oxford.

"The History of Antiquity" is a faithful record of the form of culture earliest attained by mankind. Besides including the book of Genesis in its historical progress, and indicating, as far as inference and sure analogy allow, each phase and period of that remote epoch, its duty is to unite the culture of the ancient Orientals with that of the nearly allied Greeks; to gather together the fragments of monuments; to unravel truth from the tangled web of tradition woven around each prominent life; to place before our eyes a distinct picture of the East, with its religion and social state, its art and its industry; and to investigate its political struggles and earnest fanaticism. At the present day, more than at any previous time, historical research is aided by the study of ancient monuments. Egyptian, Babylonian, Assyrian, Syrian, and Persian tablets have been deciphered, and Roman and Greek inscriptions collected, which, while diversifying the subjects, have yet had the same purpose in view, that of clearing from the darkness of tradition the light of the life of that remote period—so that he who runs may read.

Such is the task undertaken by Professor Duncker in writing his "History of Antiquity." He has spared no pains to make the results of his investigations trustworthy, and the most unvarying patience and labour have characterised the researches which he has enriched and coloured by his erudition, before presenting them to his readers. "He understood how to throw fresh light on the subject, and how to enrich it from the stores of his profound historical and political knowledge," remarks an able critic. "His work will be perused with eager avidity, and the unlearned as well as the learned will read his book with enjoyment and delight."

Extract from the Author's Preface.

"My narrative embraces those independent civilisations of the ancient East which came to exercise a mutual influence on each other. First we follow the kingdom on the Nile and the Kingdoms of Higher Asia as far as the point where the nations of Iran began to influence their destinies. Then I attempt to set forth the peculiar development of the Aryan tribes in the valleys of the Indus and the Ganges, down to the times of Ishmandragus and Azoka. Then follows the history of the Hactrians, the Medes, and the Persians, until the period when the nations of the table-land of Iran were united by Darius with the countries of Western Asia, when Aryan life and Aryan civilisation have gained the supremacy over the whole region from Ceylon to the Nile and the Hellespont. The forms of life among the great Kingdoms of Asia are finally brought face to face with the more youthful civilisation attained by the Hellenes in their mountain cantons. This new development we follow down to the first great shock when East and West met in conflict, and the Achæmenids sought to crush the Hellenes under the weight of Asia. With the failure of this attempt my history of the ancient world concludes."

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.

The first volume gives an account of the antiquity of civilisation in the Valley of the Nile, the Kingdom of Memphis, the irruption of the Shepherd-Kings, and the re-establishment of the Egyptian Kingdom; also a description of the manners and religion of the Egyptians. The narrative next passes to the ancient Kingdom of Babylon—the arts, sciences, trades, and religion of the Chaldeans. This volume also deals with the Arabians, Canaanites, and earlier inhabitants of Asia Minor. Perhaps the most interesting portion of this volume is the part devoted to the origin of the Hebrew nation, their life in Egypt and migration to Canaan, taken from the most recent secular as well as Scriptural authority.

CONTENTS OF VOL. II.

The second volume contains an account of the rise of Assyria, of the Phœnician Colonies, the Hebrew Monarchy, the later Pharaohs, the Babylonian and Lydian Empires. It also shows what light has been thrown by recent discoveries and criticism upon the history of the Kings of Judah and Israel, and enables us to compare the statements of Herodotus and Diodorus on Egypt and Lydia with what is known from more original sources.

CONTENTS OF VOL. III.

The third volume contains an account of the fall of Assyria, the overthrow and captivity of Israel and Judah, the later Pharaohs, the Babylonian and Lydian Empires. It also shows what light has been thrown by recent discoveries and criticism upon the history of the Kings of Judah and Israel, and enables us to compare the statements of Herodotus and Diodorus on Egypt and Lydia with what is known from original sources.

CONTENTS OF VOL. IV.

The fourth volume gives the history of India from the Earliest Times down to the Reign of Azoka. It describes the movements of the Arvas from the Indus to the Ganges and their settlements in the South of India, and gives an account of the conquests of Alexander and the Empire of Chandragupta. The various forms of Indian philosophy and religion are also traced, among which the life and teaching of Buddha occupies a prominent place. A short summary is also given of the Indian Epics and the Institutes of Manu.

*This volume should form a valuable assistance to students preparing for Indian Civil Service Examination.

Each volume can be obtained separately in demy 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

*The concluding volumes are in the press.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

LAND.

LAND.—New High-class Weekly Newspaper.

LAND.—Every Saturday, price 6d.

LAND:

A Weekly Journal for all interested in LANDED and HOUSE PROPERTY.

With "INDEX to the ESTATE EXCHANGE REGISTERS."

EVERY SATURDAY, price SIXPENCE.

Number 1 ready Feb. 12.

*Prospectuses of LAND post-free on application to the Publishers.

Printed and Published for the Proprietors by CASSELL, PETER, GALPIN, & Co., La Belle Sauvage-yard, E.C.

Advertisements for the FIRST NUMBER of LAND should reach the Publishers by Thursday, the 10th instant.

LAND.—New High-class Weekly Journal.

It is remarkable, in this journalistic age, that the Press of this country has hitherto produced no high-class paper exclusively addressed to interests so multifarious and widespread as those arising out of Land and its complex incidents. How vast these interests are is measured by the estimate of their money value in the United Kingdom, which is put at no less a sum than THREE THOUSAND MILLIONS (£3,000,000,000) STERLING.

LAND.—Every Saturday, price 6d.

There are Six Millions of inhabited houses, not reckoning manufactories and strictly business premises, and leaving out of consideration thousands of tenements of an estimated yearly value of £20 and under. The annual increase in the number of inhabited houses in the Metropolis alone is represented by a growth of new streets amounting to THIRTY-EIGHT MILES LINEAR EVERY YEAR.

LAND.—New High-class Weekly Journal.

During the last ten years the Register of the London Estate Exchange, the "Index" or Summary of which will in future be incorporated with "LAND," has recorded sales of houses and lands to the amount of nearly ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS (£100,000,000) STERLING.

LAND.—Every Saturday, price 6d.

That interests so vast and varied should, up to the present moment, have lacked a thoroughly representative organ in the Press is almost incredible. The Proprietors of "LAND," therefore, feel satisfied that by establishing a Journal which shall fully meet this requirement they will be doing a work of the highest public utility. After full consideration, and acting in harmony with an arrangement entered into with the Estate Exchange, the Proprietors have matured the plan of their undertaking, and intend to carry it on in such a manner as to command the countenance and hearty support of the Important Societies connected with Landed Property in the United Kingdom and the active co-operation of influential persons similarly interested in the Colonies and abroad.

LAND.—New High-class Weekly Journal.

The columns of "LAND" will, moreover, comprise a large amount of valuable and varied matter in which the public at large will find a constant interest. Thus the great Sanitary questions of the day, both in their Urban and Rural aspects, will be fully treated and discussed, as well as matters of almost equal interest, such as Experimental Farming, Forestry, Water Supply, and River Conservation. The broad acres and parks, the country seats and the London mansions, the historic manor-houses and ancestral residences of England, as well as other properties of every description which are, day by day, brought under the hammer of the Auctioneer, or placed in the hands of the Surveyor and Estate Agent, have, most of them, some story of their own, to be gathered from the pages of the Archaeologist and Topographer.

LAND.—Every Saturday, price 6d.

Compensation Cases, Arbitrations, and Suits connected with questions dealt with in the columns of "LAND" will be specially reported and edited for this Paper, which will thus contain records for reference of the greatest value to all interested in matters affecting Landed and House Property.

LAND.—New High-class Weekly Journal.

The Journal, in short, will do for the Land Market what financial organs do for the Money Market—scanning, discussing, and forecasting every circumstance or contingency likely to affect the great network of interest connected with Real Estate, so that persons of all classes desiring to realise or invest may have full information as to the state of the Market, and timely notice of every circumstance, social, financial, or political, which may influence their decisions.

LAND.—Every Saturday, price 6d.

Owners, Buyers and Sellers of land and houses, Solicitors, Surveyors, Land Agents, and Auctioneers, will each and all find in "LAND" not only indispensable and accurate records of past, but also suggestive and trustworthy guidance for future transactions.

Terms of Subscription:—One Year, 26s. (or by post, 28s.); Half-year, 13s. (or by post, 14s.); Quarter, 6s. 6d. (or by post, 7s.).

Printed and Published for the Proprietors by
CASSELL, PETER, GALPIN, & Co.,
La Belle Sauvage-yard, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, small 4to, with numerous choice illustrations, 16s.

NICE and her NEIGHBOURS. By the Rev. Canon HOLE, Author of "A Book about Roses,"
"A Little Tour in Ireland," &c., &c.

Now ready, 2 vols., demy 8vo, price 32s.

THE STORY of a SOLDIER'S LIFE; or,
Peace, War, and Mutiny. By Lieut.-General JOHN
ALEXANDER EWART, C.B., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen from 1859 to 1872.

A THIRD EDITION IS READY OF
MR. GEORGE MACDONALD'S NEW NOVEL,
MARY MARSTON.
3 vols., 31s. 6d.

Now ready, 3 vols., 31s. 6d.,
A NEW NOVEL BY C. R. COLERIDGE,
Author of "Lady Betty," "Haubury Mills," &c., entitled
AN ENGLISH SQUIRE.

Now ready, 3 vols., 31s. 6d., New Novel.

FLOWER o' the BROOM. By the Author of "Rare Pale Margaret."

Now ready, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

THE HISTORY of ANCIENT ART. By JOHN WINCKELMANN. Translated from the German by GEORGE LONGE, M.D. With a Life of Winckelmann.
Fully and finely illustrated.

THROUGH AMERICA; or, Nine Months in the United States. By W. G. MARSHALL, M.A. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 21s. [Now ready.]

This Work is embellished with nearly One Hundred Woodcuts illustrative of Scenes in the Utah country and the famous Yosemite Valley; the Giant Trees, New York, Niagara, San Francisco, &c.; and contains a Full Account of Mormon Life, as noted by the Author during his Visits to Salt Lake City in 1878 and 1879.

EXTRACT FROM THE WORK.—"Mormonism has now become so firmly established in the United States that it is important, at the present time, when so many of our poor and ignorant countrymen are yearly decoyed to Salt Lake City, to call attention to some of the evils to which Mormon emigrants to Utah are exposed."

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for FEBRUARY.
Fully illustrated. 160 royal 8vo pages, 1s.

Now ready, price 1s., the FEBRUARY Number of SUNRISE: a Story of These Times. By WILLIAM BLACK.

Now ready, 4to, price 1s. 6d.

MEN of MARK for FEBRUARY. With Permanent Cabinet Photographs of
SIR HENRY RAWLINSON.
JOHN FOWLER.
W. Q. ORCHARDSON, R.A.
With Biographical Notices.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.

PATHWAYS of PALESTINE: a Descriptive Tour Through the Holy Land. By Canon TRIS-TRAM, F.R.S. With splendid Permanent Photographs of RACHEL'S TOMB.
JERUSALEM from the MOUNT of OLIVES.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION in SAXONY. By JOHN L. BASHFORD, M.A. Fcap.
8vo, 1s.

All who are interested in Elementary Education should understand the Saxon system.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1881.

No. 457, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Memorials of Cambridge. By Charles Henry Cooper. Illustrated by Le Keux and Robert Farren. In 3 vols. (Macmillan & Co.)

AMONG the select few who, in the present century, have laboured in the cause of historical learning with at once the ability and the disinterestedness which give to such research its highest value, Charles Henry Cooper is entitled to a high place. Owing, however, partly to the singularly quiet and unobtrusive manner in which his labours were carried on, and partly to the fact that, clear as was his historic insight, he did not possess the faculty of historical construction, his name could scarcely be said to be a familiar one, even among men of letters; and when, in 1866, the honoured and benevolent town clerk of Cambridge passed away, few, save the resident members of the university and a small though widely spread body of specialists, fully understood the loss that learning had sustained. That loss is more adequately realised now. All who have had occasion to investigate the history of either the Town or the University of Cambridge can bear witness to the value of the Annals. No student of our sixteenth-century history can fail to become aware of the substantial and trustworthy aid afforded by the vast and accurate investigations embodied in the Athenae, and to lament that such a monument of heroic toil should have been carried no nearer to completeness. In the case of the volumes before us, however, in consequence probably of their appearance in a serial form, and that, too, at somewhat irregular intervals, the compiler's labours have obtained less recognition, and the present re-issue offers, accordingly, an opportunity of bringing their special merits under the notice of our readers.

A detailed, though concise, account of the foundation of seventeen colleges whose origin extends from the thirteenth to the present century, together with biographies of their respective founders, an enumeration of the successive benefactions by which they have been augmented, lists of the eminent men whom they have educated, and notices of their architectural history and characteristic features, represents an achievement of no slight service both to the university and to antiquarian history. It is true that George Dyer (the G. D. of Charles Lamb's Essays of Elia) had essayed the same task nearly half-a-century before, but he lacked alike the materials and the valuable assistance which Cooper had at his command, and any comparison between his History of the University and the Colleges and the work before us is almost out of question. Yet, nevertheless, we cannot but think that a passing recognition of the labours of the poor struggling scholar, as his name comes before the reader among the list of the more notable alumni of Emmanuel College, would have been a not ungraceful tribute from his more fortunate successor.

As regards the literary workmanship of these volumes, while the name of Charles Henry Cooper is a guarantee that every statement has been carefully verified and rests on the best authority, it is evident that, taken by itself, the work has suffered somewhat from the fact that he looked upon it as supplementary to the Annals and the Athenae, and is often contented to refer his readers to these, and especially to the latter, for details which otherwise would naturally have been here included. No English town, indeed, can compare with either Oxford or Cambridge in the wealth of its associations with departed genius and intellectual greatness. The tower where Erasmus, kindling with the spirit of the Renaissance, bent over the page of Jerome—the garden-walk paced and repaced by Ridley as he committed the Pauline Epistles to heart—the chamber where Newton, musing by his solitary fire, conceived the theory of his Principia—or that where Macaulay read for his Craven and composed "Pompeii"—these and innumerable other like reminiscences cast a halo over the banks of the Cam and the Isis, not one ray of which all the wealth of Lancashire could induce to migrate. To not a few it will seem a matter for regret that Cooper did not bestow more attention on such associations in these pages, where their introduction would have been especially appropriate. The inference to which one of the accompanying criticisms of the press would seem to point—that the letterpress, so far as it relates to the colleges, was contributed by the respective Heads—holds good, we apprehend, only as regards the earlier part of the work, and even then must be understood with some qualification. As it is, however, the treatment is very far from being unexceptionable. But few readers are likely to feel much interest in the enumeration of the different offices of State filled by Sir Walter Mildmay, the founder of Emmanuel College, in the course of his long political career, or in the catalogue of his speeches in Parliament. Some account, on the other hand, of Dr. Caius' intensely interesting History of the University, an eminently characteristic production, would have been most acceptable; while the omission of all reference to his Annals of the College is the less excusable seeing that his well-known Annals of the College of Physicians in London receives due notice. Much again, we cannot but think, of irrelevant detail in the lives of the different founders might have been advantageously omitted in order to bestow some brief recognition on those who, in the course of a long academic career, made both their college and their university famous.

But the feature which gives to these volumes their main attraction is undoubtedly the numerous and excellent illustrations with which they abound, the familiar engravings by the masterly hand of John Le Keux being now augmented by a series of admirable etchings by Mr. Robert Farren. In point of fidelity the latter have much the advantage; and, in fact, it seems difficult at first sight to understand that the somewhat imaginative engraving of Great St. Mary's Church which faces p. 304 in the third volume represents the same edifice as Mr. Farren's etching of the subject as seen from Market Hill. Mr. Farren's work is not, however, always of equal excellence. Nothing can be more charming than his "Queens' College, from the River," or his view of the restored interior of Jesus College Chapel. But where he has to deal with masses of foliage or subjects in shadow, he is not always equally successful. His "St. John's College, from Fisher's Lane," has all the gloom of a Rembrandt, with but little of the redeeming felicity. It is to be regretted that St. John's College Chapel, the new Divinity Schools, and the new front of Caius College could not have been added to this valuable series. Perhaps the individual for whom the engravings will have the greatest charm will be some sexagenarian Cantab, who will recognise in the figures of each once familiar scene the self-same early Victorian fashions of costume with which the Cambridge of his youth is associated in his recollections.

It only remains to be noticed that the text, standing as it does as Cooper left it in 1866, contains some anachronisms in its criticisms of the architecture. The front of Caius College certainly no longer presents "a somewhat mean appearance;" and the description of Pembroke is, similarly, in several respects obsolete. With regard to these and all like points, however, Prof. Willis's forthcoming Architectural History of the University, under the able editorship of Mr. J. Willis Clark, who is now engaged upon the completion of the work, will necessarily be the standard authority. J. BASS MULLINGER.

Cicero. By Anthony Trollope. (Chapman & Hall.)

To write the life of a statesman who lived in troubled times, an author should have the qualifications of an historian; but, given a statesman who was also a man of letters, a man of the world, or interesting in his private relations, something may still be done for him by a biographer who is not an expert. This book shows plainly enough that Mr. Trollope is not an historian; but parts of it will give the ordinary modern reader a more vivid if not a truer conception of Cicero's private life and literary work than anything yet published in English. The story, too, as we might expect, is cleverly arranged, and the tragic moments of the hero's life are described with animation and feeling. The author's easy and chatty method leads him not seldom into a garrulity too trifling for his subject; but enthusiasm and freshness make not unpleasing amends for the absence of solidity and concentration.

The book seems to have been first suggested by a strong feeling, derived from long acquaintance with Cicero's writings, of the essential purity and worth of his character. The foreshadowing of Christian humanity which Mr. Froude was inclined to find in Caesar Mr. Trollope sees more naturally in Cicero. Both books are the fruit of enthusiasm rather than research, and each has a certain charm that protracted labour might have destroyed. Nothing can be harder for a pondering student than to write what people call a readable book; beset at every turn by difficulties of fact, interpretation, reasoning, six out of seven such students never struggle out of the groping stage of their labours. Mr. Trollope's book is "readable," not because he has emerged from this stage, but because he has never been in it. He is easy-going, and seldom gets below the surface. Readers of his novels may have asked themselves why they are always so easy to read—so exactly destined for the lazy hour before or after dinner. Perhaps it is because in these stories all the thinking is done for us; no character is a problem, no course of action is unexplained, and Mr. Trollope is always there with his wand to point out the solutions and motives, and with his transparent English to make everything quite plain to us. The same kind of treatment applied to Cicero gives the same result, and here we have two volumes of reading almost as easy as Framley Parsonage or Rachel Ray. But in history there are problems which will not yield to an easy method; and those who are still in the groping stage, and have questions to ask, some of which they may reasonably expect to find answered in two new volumes on Cicero, will be almost entirely disappointed. Perhaps they will have been spoilt by the rare example of the union of scholar and storyteller to which Mr. Trevelyan treated us last autumn.

One reason why the age of Cicero is a favourite with amateurs (if I may presume to call them so) is doubtless because it is unique in classical history in offering abundant material from which impressions may be formed without true criticism. No one, as Mr. Trollope justly says, has ever told the world so much about another man as Cicero has told the world about Cicero. But it hardly follows from this that any gifted man who tries can write a good book about Cicero without a special training. He may tell with an artist's skill all the stories that have to be told, but as surely as he touches the tangled skein of Roman politics, of party relations and half-hidden influences, he will jar on the nerves of unlucky readers who have ever been in despair over these intricacies. Mr. Trollope pronounces on these matters without wincing. For example, after giving a lively account of the history of Verres and his trial, he ends his chapter by expressing his great astonishment that Cicero, "an oligarch by conviction, born to oligarchy, bred to it, convinced that by it alone the Roman Republic could be saved," that this Cicero should have been found ready to defend Verres, "apparently with no other prospect than of making himself odious to the party to which he belonged." This passage is an excellent specimen of the disastrous results of the abuse of political terms. It is nearly as misleading as another a little farther on, where Pompeius is twice over emphatically stated to have been "the leader of the Conservative party" in 67 B.C. Six lines from the "Com-mentariolum petitionis" of Quintus Cicero (sec. 5), lines which Mr. Trollope had already translated when he wrote these words, would have set him right on both these points, or would at least have suggested the danger of applying party names without making it quite clear how you mean them to be understood.

So too his treatment of Cicero's consulship evidently gave the author comparatively little trouble, because, in his hurry to get on and tell the exciting part of the story, he did not stop to fathom the political situation before and during that eventful year. He takes the trial of Rabirius at a flying leap, scrambles through the Lex agraria with his eyes shut, and makes no serious attempt to put Cicero in his proper relation to the great events and actors of the time at Rome and abroad. Here, as often elsewhere, he does not seem to have allowed himself to use Mommsen's history to advantage, though he has no access to untranslated German works on this period. No doubt he was angry with Mommsen for his brusque and contemptuous treatment of Cicero; perhaps, as some of his remarks imply, he was not aware of the solid substructure of investigation on which Mommsen's conclusions almost invariably rest. He would not be likely to know that Mommsen had before him, in the two last volumes of Drumann's work, the most elaborate examination into Cicero's life and character that has ever been attempted, and that Drumann's results are those which his successor has adopted. They are no doubt too German to be fair to the half-Hellenic Cicero, but they are still the conclusions of the two most learned and, at the same time, sagacious and suggestive writers who have ever treated the period.

In his second volume Mr. Trollope loses no opportunity of displaying that extreme dislike of Caesar which seems to be a necessary accompaniment of a love for Cicero. He writes of him (in B.C. 47) as having hunted his great rival to death, and as feeling no remorse. He considers him as "let loose by the hand of God to stop the iniquities of the people," but as "leaving the foul smell of destruction behind him." The nice choice of metaphor in these last words makes one fancy for the moment that it is Mr. Beesly who is writing and Cicero who is being written about. The fact seems to be that in undertaking a political biography a man is wilfully putting himself in blinkers; and it is for this reason the more indispensable that, before concentrating his vision upon the particular object, he should have given himself ample time to take a long and deliberate survey of its surroundings. But Cicero was much more than a disappointed statesman, and what really delights us in him—and delights us all the more the better we know him—Mr. Trollope has keenly felt and told with skill and warmth. The many little blunders and misconceptions in his volumes will not seriously impair their value for the majority of persons who take them up. The average reader will find there a real living Cicero, instead of the dim, colourless figure he has been used to see through the hyperborean atmosphere of modern English education. Mr. Trollope writes from his heart; if sometimes with sprightliness a little forced, yet at others with an almost episcopal earnestness. A more complete equipment in respect of knowledge and judgment would have produced a book that might have been useful to scholars as well as to those who come quite fresh to the subject. As Cicero himself says in one of the many perfectly expressed sentences which Mr. Trollope has translated for his readers, "Dicendi virtus, nisi ei qui dicit ea de quibus dicit percepta sint, exstare non potest." What is true of oratory is true also of biography, as of every undertaking that calls for patient and complete preliminary labour.

W. WARDE FOWLER.

Vane's Story, and other Poems. By James Thomson. (Reeves & Turner.)

It is not surprising that Mr. Thomson should have been tempted by the favourable reception of his City of Dreadful Night to issue another volume. As its contents are exclusively old work, no reproach can be addressed to him on the score of haste. The poems in this volume are scrupulously dated, and, unless we mistake, there is not a single one which is more modern than the sixties. The book, therefore, adds its testimony to the fact of its author's long and patient apprenticeship to the art of poetry in the spirit of a famous sentence of Goethe's. Mr. Thomson's work, however, is not merely the work of the scholar der sich übt; it is fully vollendet. Perhaps the pieces here published, or republished, show rather more distinctly than the contents of the former volume the unoriginal side, as it may be termed, of Mr. Thomson's talent. In The City of Dreadful Night itself, and in most of its companions, only legitimate study of certain poets was observable. That the author had thoroughly assimilated Heine and Leopardi, that he had reverently perused the Laureate and Mr. Browning, was obvious; but there were few pieces in which the most hostile ear could detect anything like a mere echo. In this volume the case is somewhat altered. Most of its constituent pieces date between 1857 and 1864, and the direct influence of the poets named, and especially of Mr. Browning, is unmistakable. None the less does Vane's Story complete the proof of Mr. Thomson's poetical adeptness. We could indeed wish that the crude Voltairianism of certain notes on the principal poem were absent. But nowhere is there imitation that is merely imitation. Everywhere there are proofs of powers which only required a more favourable atmosphere to produce, not something really remarkable—for everything that Mr. Thomson has yet published deserves that phrase—but something that a critic can confidently pronounce to be substantive and likely to outlast the tests of time. We are afraid that certain censors, too easily bewitched by the absence of banality in his work, have somewhat hastily decreed him the proud title of a new poet. That Mr. Thomson has the poetical differentia has been sufficiently asserted already in these columns. But we are inclined to think that he feels perhaps a little too much—paradox as the expression may seem—the form and pressure of the time. It is, as a matter of fact, quite possible to have too much of this, and the Crétins and the du Bartas, the Leas and the Youngs, remain as sorrowful indicators of the fact. The defect of the latter half of the nineteenth century, to persons well acquainted with literary history, is exactly this predominance of mere passing phases of thought and feeling to the exclusion of the more permanent and catholic sentiments of humanity. The real excellence of Mr. Thomson's work is to be found in the fact that his handling of current fancies and crotchets has not grown obsolete in twenty years, and that in the midst of it much that is better emerges clearly. Still, philosophical, theological, and political theories seem to have always had an undue attraction for him. Of his three chief idols—Shelley, Leopardi, and Heine—it may be said that the first and, in a manner, the second died so young that they had not outgrown, as Goethe did, their period of measles. Heine, indeed, is liable to no such reproach; but then Heine is precisely the model that Mr. Thomson has least succeeded in following in spirit, accurately as he sometimes follows him in form. His translations of Heine are for this reason extremely interesting. He gives us, for instance, a version of "The Azra," which is very instructive as showing the technical difficulties that beset the task. The trochaic rhythm of the original is nowhere more effective than in the last line, "Und sie sterben wenn sie lieben." Mr. Thomson has made it catalectic, "They who perish when they love;" and the absence of the dying fall of the final trochee, we do not hesitate to say, vitiates this rendering hopelessly.

Mr. Thomson is not a person to be dismissed without a citation of his work, and we are glad to find in a piece dated 1864 an excellently quotable specimen. It is not faultless—the author's work rarely is—but it has the "cry."

"The fire that filled my heart of old
Gave lustre while it burned;
Now only ashes gray and cold
Are in its silence urned.
Ah! better was the furious flame,
The splendour with the smart;
I never cared for the singer's fame;
But oh! for the singer's heart
Once more—
The burning fulgent heart!
No love, no hate, no hope, no fear,
No anguish, and no mirth;
Thus life extends from year to year,
A flat of sullen dearth.
Ah! life's blood creepeth cold and tame,
Life's thought plays no new part;
I never cared for the singer's fame;
But oh! for the singer's heart
Once more—
The bleeding passionate heart!"
An old tune certainly, but the setting of old tunes shows the poet.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

The Miscellaneous Writings of Francis Lieber. (Lippincott & Co.)

DR. LIEBER was better known in America than in Europe, but, to some extent, his reputation was world-wide. His personal history was eventful and interesting. Born in the Breite Strasse of Berlin, on March 18, 1800, in comparative poverty, he died in the city of New York, on October 2, 1872, honoured and lamented by the nation with which for five-and-forty years his lot had been cast. Between these two dates there was a long life, beginning roughly enough, but terminating peacefully after a career of usefulness that rarely marks the history of the sons of men. Young as he was, he was old enough to be severely wounded at Waterloo. Shortly after, when a student at the Berlin Gymnasium, though still a mere boy, he was a political prisoner for several months, apparently for no other reason than that his abilities had made him the favourite pupil of his master, the celebrated Dr. Jahn. He took his degrees at Jena in 1820, but already his liberal tendencies were so advanced that he could find no place for the sole of his foot in his native land, and, resolving to abandon it, he made his way with great difficulty to Greece, and took part in the luckless struggle of that country for independence. Subsequently he found himself in Rome, almost penniless and friendless. Fortunately, he appealed to Niebuhr, then the Prussian ambassador to the Papal See, who, recognising the man that was in him, first gave him employment, and then made him his friend and companion. Later still he returned to Berlin, where he was again imprisoned, but finally made his escape and took refuge in England. Of his year's life in London, where he earned a scanty living by writing for German periodicals and giving lessons in the languages, he always retained unpleasant recollections, describing himself as "doing uncongenial work and physically labouring like an American army mule." In 1827 he went to the United States, bearing with him the most earnest and affectionate letters from his friend Niebuhr. He enrolled himself as soon as possible a citizen of the great Republic, and at once engaged in important and remunerative literary labour. In 1835 he became Professor of History and Political Economy in South Carolina College, which post he held for upwards of twenty years. During this period he published his principal works, including the three which will probably, more than any others, perpetuate his memory to future generations—viz., A Manual of Political Ethics; Legal and Political Hermeneutics; or, the Principles of Interpretation and Construction in Law and Politics; and Civil Liberty and Self-Government—all of which are so well known and appreciated in England that they require no more than this recapitulation of their titles.

In 1844, his reputation being then established, Lieber paid a visit to his native city, from which he had been compelled to flee nineteen years before. It was a singular illustration of the revenges of time that he was then personally urged by the King, Frederick William IV., to accept a Professorship in the University of Berlin with which, by a curious but deliciously ironical coincidence, was coupled the inspectorship of all the Prussian prisons. Humboldt, with all the warmth of personal friendship, earnestly urged his acceptance of the offer, but neither monarch nor friend could induce him to sever the connexion with his new home.

In 1857, resigning his professorship in South Carolina College, Lieber accepted a similar position in Columbia (old King's) College in the city of New York, and subsequently the Chair of Political Science in the already renowned law school of that institution. He continued to discharge his public duties until his death, and was even then engaged upon a work on the Rise of the Constitution, the outline of which is given in one of the volumes under notice. It was not generally known until after his death that, during the whole of the recent Civil War in the United States, he was the constant and trusted adviser of the Washington Government. He was also, at the request of the President, the author of the Code of War adopted by the War Department, which has since been pronounced by foreign writers a masterpiece.

Dr. Lieber's greater works stand by themselves. Beyond these, his writings were so voluminous that the editor of the two volumes now before us must have felt some embarrassment in selecting the best when all were so good. Prof. Gilman, of the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, to whom this task was assigned, appears to have accomplished it most judiciously, if, as may be supposed, his object was to present his author, through his writings, in the various phases of his character.

The first volume is devoted to Lieber's miscellaneous writings, including "Reminiscences, Addresses, and Essays." Of these, the English reader will perhaps be most interested in his "Reminiscences of Niebuhr," and his own account of himself. This volume also includes an enlarged edition of "A Paper on the Vocal Sounds of Laura Bridgman" (a deaf-mute) "compared with the Elements of Phonetic Language," first published in 1850 by the Smithsonian Institution, which will be found of great interest and permanent importance. The second volume contains a selection of Lieber's "Contributions to Political Science," including lectures on the Constitution of the United States, and papers on other subjects of public importance. Among these will be found the Code of War already mentioned; but probably the two papers which will meet the heartiest acceptance in England are those on "International Copyright" and on the "Fallacies of American Protectionists," both of which might have been written by English authors of the present day.

It would be unjust not to direct special attention to the discourse in the first volume, on the Life, Character, and Writings of Lieber, by the Hon. Martin Russell Thayer, the eminent President-Judge of the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas, one of the ripest and soundest of American scholars and jurists, and the ardent and affectionate disciple of the Gamaliel of whom he treats. It affords the reader a direct personal acquaintance with the living man, and is a splendid tribute to the memory of the dead.

JOSEPH LEMUEL CHESTER.

Le Siècle des Artevelde. Par Léon Vanderkindere. (Bruxelles: Lebléque.)

M. VANDERKINDERE's book deserves the attention of the student of English history, because it deals with a time when the Flemish towns were closely connected with England, and it suggests many points of comparison and contrast with the development of our own institutions. It also suggests a method of historical study which might be advantageously pursued by ourselves. It aims at combining the scattered results of modern archaeology into a connected sketch of the political and social civilisation of Flanders and Brabant in the fourteenth century. There are abundant materials in England for the same sort of work, but they need sifting and arrangement by the student of a special period before they can be made fully available to the historian. The details of the social history of England during the Middle Ages have still to be worked out in an intelligible manner.

M. Vanderkindere does not deal with the purely historical part of his subject. It is enough for him that the Flemish burghers were trying to maintain themselves against France, and that a common antagonism, as well as common commercial interests, led them to an alliance with Edward III. of England. It was the need of giving a constitutional veil to this alliance which caused Edward III. to assert his claim to the French Crown, so that the Flemish cities, in supporting him, were not called upon to renounce their feudal allegiance, and lay aside their deep-seated sentiment of loyalty. M. Vanderkindere finds in the policy of Jacques van Artevelde distinct traces of a plan to set upon the throne of Flanders a son of Edward III. This is an opinion which may be open to dispute; but, whatever was van Artevelde's intention, the want of cohesion among the Flemings led to a conspiracy against him, in which he lost his life. The distress caused by the French War led to a longing for political order, and Philip van Artevelde struggled in vain to make head against France. The centralising policy of the royal house prevailed when Philip the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, uncle of Charles VI., became heir of the lands of the Dampierre and feudal lord of Flanders. From that time forward Flemish civilisation began to lose its originality, as foreign institutions and foreign ideas made their influence slowly felt.

Thus the period of which M. Vanderkindere treats is the most characteristic and the most important in the history of Flanders. His object is to give a picture of the institutions, the economics, the social life, and the ideas of Flanders during this central period. The different parts of his work are of unequal value, and he is more successful as an historian of manners than as a constitutional historian. The constitutional part of his work is either too much or too little; too much if it is merely meant as introductory, too little if it is meant to be a satisfactory summary of the growth of the Flemish communes. He tells us that the Flemish commune developed from three factors—the ancient agricultural corporation, the Frankish hundred, and the commercial guild; but he does not explain sufficiently these constituent elements, nor does he trace with precision the process of their fusion. He gives details that are tedious for an essay and slight for a history. He seems to have attempted a lively sketch in the manner of a modern French writer, but to have been over-weighted with Flemish conscientiousness.

On the other hand, his account of the internal life of the Flemish towns is an excellent summary of the results of recent investigations into their archives and the books of the various corporations and guilds. He sketches the life of an apprentice, and his progress through his commercial career. He traces the operation of the trade guilds and their methods of solving the economic questions which under the system of free trade cause so much embarrassment. All manufactured articles had to receive an authoritative stamp to guarantee their excellence, and the workman who brought goods which could not pass the scrutiny was punished by a fine. The market price of every article was similarly fixed according to a scale carefully adjusted to guard the interests both of consumer and producer. The interests of labour and capital were similarly protected; the forms of labour, the amount of wages, the trade price of materials that had to go through several hands—all were regulated by law with a minuteness that never prevailed in England. The theory of proportionate equality was rigorously carried out. Under this system the artisan prospered and enjoyed considerable comfort. His food was substantial and plentiful, house-rent was cheap, common clothing and furniture were easily obtained. In fact, during the Middle Ages the money of the poor was worth more than the money of the rich; articles of luxury were obtainable only by a few, objects of prime necessity were available to all.

The great economic difficulty under such a system was the application of capital to productive use. It was tolerably easy to make money, but it was not so easy to invest it when saved. Land under the feudal system was inalienable, and, though this might be evaded in small pieces, it was not easy to acquire much. Usury was forbidden by the common law, though this also was evaded. Still the economic tendency of the time put difficulties in the way of saving, and led to a general condition of social comfort rather than an extension of production. This, however, was confined to the towns; in the country the peasants were entirely at the mercy of their masters. The progress of the towns did little to help the country, and all that can be said of the peasant was that if he had a good master his lot was endurable.

The fatal fault of the civilisation of Flanders was the separation of particular interests. The large cities were at strife with the small ones, and within each city war was going on between the privileged and the non-privileged trades. Flemish history presents the same spectacle as Italian history, without its grandeur and without its distinctness. The internal struggles of the Flemish cities produced no great chroniclers, nor did they develop individual keenness and skill. Italian commercial civilisation remained independent till it had produced its full fruits; that of Flanders was checked before it reached its prime. The commercial oligarchy of Flanders preferred to make common cause with their prince rather than join the democratic party in obtaining freedom which they could not endure to enjoy in common. Under the rule of the Dukes of Burgundy the Flemish communes were welded into a centralised organisation, and the independence of the cities had to give way before the needs of the State. But this State was created by force and not by voluntary agreement; and what Flanders gained in unity it lost in liberty.

The best part of M. Vanderkindere's work is the last two chapters, which deal with the condition of the Church and clergy and with social manners in Flanders. We do not know a more careful or more moderate picture of the difficulties which were created in the social and political life of the Middle Ages by the constant growth of ecclesiastical privileges and jurisdiction which went on side by side with the decay of clerical discipline. The riches and power of the Church stood in the way both of political and commercial development; and the lives of the majority of the clergy did not rise above the moral or intellectual level of the ordinary layman. It was inevitable that a spirit of opposition to the ecclesiastical system should grow with the national growth, and the fourteenth century is full of warnings of the great change that was wrought two centuries later. M. Vanderkindere has brought this admirably to light in the sphere of his own especial study.

In dealing with such a book as M. Vanderkindere's it is impossible to do more than note its general characteristics. Its merit is that it brings together in an extremely readable form a great number of interesting details respecting the life of the Flemish cities. If it does not always deal with the subjects which are of most interest to us we must remember that it was not written from an English point of view. M. CREIGHTON.

NEW NOVELS.

The Mystery in Palace Gardens. By Mrs. J. H. Riddell. (R. Bentley & Son.)

Little Pansy. By Mrs. Randolph. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Modesta. By Gina Rose. (E. Faithfull & Co.)

Dorothy Compton: a Story of the '15. By J. R. Henslowe. (Kerby & Endean.)

MRS. RIDDELL'S new novel shows that a crisis has come in her career as a novelist. The question with her is, or should be, is she to sink into a fourth-rate Ouida, or is she to fall back on her better instincts as an artist? The Mystery in Palace Gardens is decidedly Ouidesque; and yet it contains possibilities of literary "salvation." Myra Palthorpe, Lady Moffat—whatever the "superior fiend" of the novel may style herself or be styled in law—is the most violent impossibility even in modern and feminine fiction. The truest thing said of her in the course of these three volumes is that "she has the nature of the lowest type of criminal." She has some coarse physical attractions, it is true. But at the first her manners strike one as offensive to brutality; and even while she lives in "Palace Gardens" and in the atmosphere of refinement she cannot conduct herself with as much propriety as the Daughter of Mme. Angot. Yet we are asked to believe that such a creature could fascinate two essentially strong men, one of them possessed of the soul of a Bayard and the ethical creed of an old Puritan; and this we must positively decline to believe. Yet there are good things in The Mystery in Palace Gardens, and nearly all the characters but one are well drawn—particularly the two other females who live in the house in Palace Gardens, but who, more fortunate than Mrs. Riddell's readers, are ignorant of its hideous and incredible "mystery." Much art, too, is wasted in detailing the mental misery of Sir John Moffat, Myra's saintly paramour. But, for the sake of her reputation, Mrs. Riddell must abandon, at once and for ever, trying, without Ouida's art—let us say also without Ouida's "mission"—to play to Ouida's monstrosity-loving gallery.

Mrs. Randolph in Little Pansy displays a great amount of skill in detailing the adventures of a sweet and ingenious French girl among her English relatives and their circle. Yet, in spite of this skill, or perhaps because of it, the book "leaves a bad taste in the mouth." This is due to Mrs. Deveron, the match-maker in it, and to all whom she blights with her ethics—they are, as they themselves would say, "quite too awfully" vulgar. Mr. Deveron is too worthy a man to have for a wife a woman whose aim in life—happily baffled—is to be able to speak of "my daughter, Lady Kelmore," and who would "like to give a good shaking" to Pansy because, as with incredible candour she tells her to her face, her conduct is likely to "spoil the chances" of her Julia. One is quite prepared, too, to believe that her son Herbert must be a detestable cad who richly deserves to be at once snubbed by his innocent little cousin and cast off by the more worldly-minded mother of a fashionable heiress. Yet we can hardly believe that even he would, before a lady, break out into such "garrison slang" as "Deuced impertinent of her, the old cat." The bouleversement at the end of the third volume by which Pansy finds herself at the altar, the bride not of the man whom she merely esteems, but of the man whom she loves, has an air of theatrical hurry about it. Still, taking these defects into consideration, Little Pansy is deserving of such commendation, from the purely literary point of view, that the authoress is most cordially to be wished still greater success, and better materials for her powers to work upon.

The chief impression left by a reading of Modesta is that the authoress is an immature but a not unpromising writer who is attached to our present Minerva Press school of fiction, but who, if she can achieve her emancipation and has the good sense to wait and "grow in grace" before she writes again, may do better than hitherto. Almost any boarding-school girl whose monotonous round of "exercises" is relieved by a stealthy perusal of the works of "Ouida," Miss Broughton, and the late author of Guy Livingstone is quite capable of writing this:—

"Ah me! could I call thee back, if only for five minutes, my Rizio, I could then be contented, yea, glad to die;" and thus thinking she sinks down on one of the benches, and stays there motionless, while the organist goes off into another strain, and after a grand pedal passage resembling the roll of distant thunder, followed by splendid chords, he produces with a marvellous power the various effects of rain, hail, wind, and deafening peals of thunder, then the storm passes over, the thunder is fainter and fainter, and away in the distance are heard high, clear, silvery voices, that seem to her spirit-voices from some mysterious land, and, as the sweet but quavering notes of the officiating priest, old Padre Pietro, echo and re-echo through the vaulted crypt, Modesta wails aloud, for her feelings have overcome her, and for the moment she forgets where she is, and that she ought to be in her own little cell. Such a sense of desolation comes over her, such unutterable pity, not so much for the poor young woman who is standing in the light of the one bright lamp, her long hair all cut off, and lying in a heap at her feet, as for herself, for the once gleesome, joyous child, whom Maurizio Doria used to spoil and pet, and whom she saw in imagination clad in the black garments of a nun."

The sentiment is as strained as the style. There seems no good reason why "Modesta's" husband, Rizio, should die; still less why, after he is dead, she should not marry again, except that the writer belongs to a school which holds, above all things, that "whom the gods love die young," which is neither truer nor falsier than the Norse "whom the gods hate, they make school-masters." When she has shaken off the fetters of her training, she will see men and women as they are, and not "as trees walking." And then she will write more pleasantly and more accurately of both.

Little need be said of Dorothy Compton, except that it is a well-told tragic episode, in one volume, of that bungled tragic-comedy the earlier of the Jacobite risings of last century. The plot is slight, and the style is simple; but both have the ring of what Mr. Matthew Arnold properly emphasises as "sincerity." Thus Dorothy and her lovers—the one who cast honour to the winds to win her, and the other whom she died to save—strike the reader at once as flesh and blood. As an historical fiction, Dorothy Compton will not stand minute criticism, though one or two of the sides of the many-sided Bolingbroke are fairly presented to us.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Haroun Alraschid, Caliph of Bagdad. By E. H. Palmer, M.A. ("New Plutarch Series.") (Marcus Ward and Co.) It was a good thought to include in the "New Plutarch" a Life of "Haroun Alraschid," or Aaron the Orthodox, and to induce Prof. Palmer to write it. The famous Khalif of the Thousand and One Nights, the ruler of the Muslim empire in its grandest epoch, makes a fine subject for biography; and, if the "New Plutarch" is intended to include types of the great men of all nations, perhaps no fitter representative of the Augustan Age of Mohammadan literature could be found than the "sole star of all that placid time, the good Harûn ar-rashid." Prof. Palmer has told his story very well. He has led up to it by a short sketch of the early events of Muslim history, and the establishment of the house of 'Abbâs; and then related the historical account of the great Khalif in four chapters, concluding with a fifth and longest chapter on the Khalif of the legends. The four historical chapters show us very clearly the true nature of the "golden prime" which Tennyson has celebrated. The gilding is certainly rubbed; instead of the universal peace and happiness which we associated with the rule of the genial Khalif, the history is a long record of rebellions and conspiracies; tribal, sectarian, dynastic, and official jealousies filled up the "good" Harûn's reign; and he himself, "sole star" that he was, began by murdering his relations, and continued and ended by cutting off the heads of his most trusty and well-beloved servants and boon companions. His dying eyes were, by his own order, cheered with the sight of one of his enemies being hacked to pieces by the executioner. The good-natured Khalif was of that unenviable temper in which Eastern Sovereigns are understood to excel. He would joke pleasantly with a friend one minute, and the next would order black Mesrûr to chop off his head—not from any settled malice, but simply from a momentary whim. It was clearly unsafe to live too near to the "golden prime," and those who endeavoured to ingratiate themselves with the fickle Khalif did so with their heads in their hands. There are instances of Harûn's hasty violence and sudden condemnations in every other page of his biography; and, when he did not kill his victim, he would amuse himself by depriving him of his fortune, and often the savings (or peculations) of years were swept away on a single fine morning by the Khalif's attendants, without a shadow of a pretext. The lamentable fate of the loyal and noble-spirited Barmecide family was the most tragic of all Harûn's cruel persecutions, and Prof. Palmer's chapter on this story of single-minded devotion rewarded by distrust and finally death or captivity, will be read with no common interest. But the part of the book which will attract many readers the most strongly is the "Caliph of the Legends," a collection of the best anecdotes of Harûn's Court, admirably told and pleasantly strung together. Prof. Palmer's well-known gift of rendering Eastern wit and humour serves him well here; and we cannot read his clever sketch of the Khalif at home without feeling that we are really made free of the palace at Bagdad, and are personally enjoying the good things of the "golden prime"—for good things there were in it, and in abundance, though their tenure was uncertain and their influence restricted. To appreciate the glories of Harûn, it is best to see him over the lyre and wine cup, and join in the chorus of the songs which Abu Nawwâs and Abu Atâhiyeh are trolling out so genially; only, while we expand, it is wise to have an eye to our neck, which is apt to become unexpectedly loose in the Khalif's palace. One maxim is always in request there, that the best way out of a difficulty is to put a bold face on it; and nothing is more useful to Harûn's fellow-topers than an inexhaustible stock of impudence. Abu Nawwâs was continually drawing on the Khalif's patience and his own impertinence; and Abu Miriam, of Medina, was almost as incorrigible.

"One morning early the Caliph came into the room where Abu Miriam was asleep, and, pulling the blanket from his face, said, 'How are you this morning?' 'It isn't morning yet,' was the reply; 'go about your business.' 'Arise,' said Haroun, solemnly, 'and say the prayers of dawn.' 'This is the time prescribed by Abu Jerûd,' said the other; 'I belong to Abu Yûsuf's sect.' So the Caliph proceeded to say his prayers by himself, until, when he came to a passage from the Koran, 'What ails me that I should not worship Him who created me?' Abu Miriam observed, 'I'm sure I don't know.' The Caliph, much incensed, reproached him for interrupting his prayers. 'I did not mean to interrupt you,' said he, 'but I was shocked to hear you making such a remark;' on which Haroun could not help laughing again, but warned him to avoid making fun of religious subjects in future" (p. 172).

Those were good days when humour went for so much; but Prof. Palmer's charming little book shows us that they were also perilous days, and that practical joking was carried to unseasonable lengths.

Hamlet, Macbeth, Romeo y Julieta, por Guillermo Shakespeare. Version al Castellano de Guillermo Macpherson. (Madrid.) This translation of three of Shakspeare's most noted dramas into Spanish seems to be very carefully done. We have compared it closely with the original, and, though here and there a meaning is given which is not the one which we ourselves should have preferred, we have met with none which is absolutely inadmissible. Now and then the startling imagery of Shakspeare is somewhat softened, and metaphors which would appear over-strained or over-harsh in Spanish are exchanged for a Castilian equivalent. The extreme licence of expression which was customary and permitted in Shakspeare's time, but which would be intolerable in a modern writer, is also, and we think rightly, either slightly Bowdlerised or altogether omitted. An ideal version into the Spanish of Calderon's day might have included these passages, but they are impossible in the language of the present century. As a poetical version preserving most closely the metre of the original we place this very high; the variations of rhythm in the blank verse are observed, and the rhyming couplets with which the speeches often conclude are given as in the original. Spanish friends whose opinion we have asked on these versions considered merely as Spanish plays speak of them in the highest terms. We may therefore warmly congratulate Mr. Macpherson on his success in his very difficult task, and on the proof which he has thus given of his full mastery over both idioms—the Castilian and the English.

The Bibliography of Thackeray. (Elliot Stock.) Mr. Herne Shepherd has followed up his bibliographies of Ruskin and Dickens by a similar catalogue of the writings of Thackeray. The so-called édition de luxe of Thackeray's works, which contains all that his publishers and his representatives think worth preserving, has naturally given Mr. Shepherd much of his material; but the special feature of the list is the enumeration of Thackeray's contributions to Fraser's Magazine and Punch. This is a very copious one, and will give many readers who have access to sets of those periodicals a pleasant occupation in hunting up the "flying leaves" of the great writer. A short list of Thackerayana (i.e., of books and articles dealing with Thackeray, for in modern literary slang the termination ana has changed its meaning) concludes the little volume. This list might have been made more exhaustive, but the rest of Mr. Shepherd's task seems to have been carefully done.

Analytical Index to Kaye's "Sepoy War" and Malleson's "Indian Mutiny." By Frederic Pincott. (W. H. Allen and Co.) This considerable volume of two hundred pages forms in itself an alphabetical summary of the History to which it purports to be only an Index. To students it supplies an invaluable work of reference; and we have already had occasion to test its accuracy by verifying the references to Kolhapur. We cannot altogether admit that Mr. Pincott has satisfactorily solved the supreme difficulty of spelling, as may be seen under the heading Chittagong, where there is no cross-reference to Chatgaon. Nor do we approve of the taste which admits into an Index such statements as the following about men still living or but recently dead:—"his act in no way meritorious;" "converts his duty into a sensational drama;" "his disastrous incapacity;" "created a K.O.B. for his incompetence." By this elaborate preservation of the actual words of the original work, its offensive characteristics are reproduced on an occasion when they might well have been suffered to pass into oblivion.

The Victoria Cross: a Chronicle of Deeds of Personal Valour, 1856-80. Edited by Robert W. O'Byrne. (W. H. Allen and Co.) The compilation of this little book was worth undertaking, and it has been fairly well done. No attempt has been made to trace the careers of those who have once won a place in the roll of honour; nor are the several "acts of bravery" explained by reference to the campaigns in which they occurred. But a work of this kind suggests not so much criticism about its literary form as reflections upon the substance of its contents. There can be no doubt that the supreme military decoration of V.C. has been bestowed in a somewhat haphazard fashion. Passing over one fortunate soldier who extinguished a fire in an ammunition waggon "not in the presence of an enemy," and an equally fortunate party of men who did little more than perform ordinary lifeboat duty, we observe that no official notice has yet been taken of any exploit during the second half of the late Afghan War. What is far more significant, not a single Sepoy of the Indian army has ever obtained the coveted honour. To attribute this to failure in worthy deeds would be absurd, especially when we find that two English privates were on one occasion decorated for a joint exploit to the glory of which a native trooper contributed at least his share. It is more pleasant to point out that, of all the regiments, the 24th Foot comes first with fourteen crosses, and next the Rifle Brigade and the 9th Lancers, each with thirteen. The only civilians on the list are three well-known members of the Indian service.

Leaders of Men. A Book of Biographies specially written for Youth. By H. A. Page. (Marshall, Japp and Co.) Mr. Page seems to be ambitious of becoming a rival to Dr. Smiles. The recipe is not difficult. First, choose a telling title. Then take in equal proportions moralising and anecdote, and shake the mixture well together. We cannot imagine on what other principle the present book has been compiled. The title bears no relation to the contents. More than half the persons whose lives are sketched never "led" anybody. But biographies have been written of them which are capable of being easily boiled down. Robert Dick of Thurso and George Moore have already been taken as texts by Dr. Smiles himself. The sketch of Lord Lawrence, the only really leading man in the volume, is from the rhetorical pen of Dr. George Smith. Books of this kind are made to sell, and not to be criticised. They find readers, and they do good in their way; but they are not literature.

"New Views of Ireland;" or, Irish Land: Grievances: Remedies. By Charles Russell, Q.C., M.P. (Macmillan.) Disturbed Ireland. By Bernard H. Becker. With Route Maps. (Macmillan.) These two books may receive a brief notice together. Both are descriptive, and the contents of both have recently appeared in well-known newspapers. But there all resemblance ends. The one is written by a man who wrote because he had something to say; the other, by a man who wrote because other people wanted something to read. The one treats his subject with a sobriety of statement that is almost painful in its matter-of-fact literalness; the other indulges a faculty for word-painting that perhaps offends more than it allures. Whoever has already read the one should now read the other, and thus he may possibly be enabled to arrive, not at any practical conclusions, but at a tolerably correct conception of the permanent misery of life in Western Ireland, and of the social conditions to which at the present time that misery has given rise. True narratives such as those given by both Mr. Russell and Mr. Becker have a didactic power such as no mere essays, pamphlets, or even speeches can possess.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. C. KEGAN [PAUL AND CO. have in the press a Life of the late Dr. Whewell, with selections from his private and academic correspondence. The aim of the editor, Mrs. Stair Douglas, has been to tell the story of his life in his own words, with such supplement only of narrative as is requisite to elucidate the letters. The work will form one large octavo volume, and will be ready for publication next month.

A work is promised in February by Messrs. Blackwood entitled At Home in Fiji, by Miss C. F. Gordon Cumming, who is already known by a book of travel—From the Hebrides to the Himalayas. On the present occasion Miss Gordon Cumming has made the tour round the world, but her forthcoming work will limit itself to Fiji, where she was a guest at Government House with the family of Sir Arthur Gordon; and the home-life there, with accounts of the new colony, will be given, as well as the position of planters, the characters of the natives, their customs, dances, manufactures, with some account of their unique pottery. Miss Gordon Cumming brought home a large number of sketches, which are at present exhibiting in Edinburgh.

MR. W. LAIRD-CLOWES, author of Love's Rebellion, will publish in the spring a volume containing nearly a hundred exotic poems, and entitled The Lover's Progress. The work will be illustrated by the author, and will be printed at the Chiswick Press.

THE reprint of Purvey's revision of Wycliffe's translation of the New Testament, issued by the Clarendon Press in 1879, has been so far acceptable to students that the Delegates have decided upon issuing, in a similar form, a reprint of the poetical books of the Old Testament, in the same version—viz., Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Solomon. It will have, as before, a brief Introduction by Prof. Skeat, and a full Glossarial Index, almost entirely rewritten, compiled by Mr. Gabbett, of Lincoln College, Oxford, and carefully revised. It is nearly ready for publication.

An Unlabeled Girl, a new novel by Mrs. H. Martin, author of Bonnie Lesley and For a Dream's Sake, will shortly be published by Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co.

THE first volume of The Churches of Yorkshire, by Mr. W. H. Hatton, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

A NOVEL institution has been recently established at Brussels by an ordinance of King Leopold II. upon the proposal of the Minister of the Interior, M. Rolin-Jaequemyns. A commodious suite of rooms in the new part of the Hôtel du Ministère de l'Intérieur has been fitted up as a library where foreign periodicals and every important modern work of science, legislation, and the fine arts will be accessible to readers furnished with tickets of admission from the Minister. The personnel of the Library consists of a chef du bureau and a staff of translators; and a consultative committee of five members nominated by the King will select from time to time the works most deserving of translation; which will be published in the columns of the Moniteur Belge, or in some other appropriate form. A printed catalogue of the works already in the library has been published by Gustave Mayolez, 13 Rue de l'Impératrice, Brussels.

DR. GINSBURG's edition of the Massora may still be had at subscription price, i.e., at £10 per volume, which is, we understand, below cost price. After May 1881 the subscription will be £15, which merely covers the cost of printing. There are only 287 copies, and more than half the issue has already been taken. One could wish that twenty years and more of unremitting labour on a work of such great importance for the text of the Hebrew Bible had received a more distinct recognition. It has been necessary to examine minutely as large a number as possible of MSS. of the Old Testament, since each of them only contains (in its margin) a part of the critical apparatus or directory known as the Massora. The treasurer for the work is W. Aldis Wright, Esq., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, to whom subscriptions may be sent.

A BIOGRAPHY of the celebrated Italian statesman Ratazzi is being prepared by Mme. Ratazzi under the title of Ratazzi et son Temps. Many documents of great interest will be included in the work.

MR. JAMES L. MACLEAN, of Glasgow, will shortly reproduce in book form a series of articles on "The Duties and Position of Railway Officers" which he wrote some time ago for the Railway Official Gazette. These papers contain much important and useful information, and will form a valuable addition to literature of a practical character.

THE "Emerson number" of the Literary World (Boston, U.S.A.) is about to be followed by a "Longfellow number," to which Miss Amelia B. Edwards will contribute a paper on "Longfellow's Place in England."

MR. WILLIAM ANDREWS, honorary secretary of the Hull Literary Club, will contribute an exhaustive paper to Old Yorkshire on "The Rhymes and Proverbial Sayings of Yorkshire."

MR. HORACE WEIR (L'Allegro), a favourably known local journalist, will contribute to a number of provincial journals a series of stories entitled "Newspaper Romances."

PROF. MONIER WILLIAMS' lecture on "The Castes and Trades of India," to be delivered at the London Institution next Thursday evening, will be largely illustrated with costly specimens of Indian industries lent by the South Kensington Museum.

DR. ISAMBARD OWEN has translated for Y Cymmroder Prince L.-L. Bonaparte's Italian "Observations on the Pronunciation of the Sassarese Dialect of Sardinia, and on Various Points of Resemblance which it presents with the Celtic Languages," and separate copies of the translation have been issued by the Prince.

MR. G. BARNETT SMITH will contribute a series of articles to London Society for the current year, entitled "Half-Hours with Some Old Ambassadors." The first article of the series will appear in the March number.

PROF. A. CHIAPPELLI will publish shortly at Florence a work entitled Della Interpretazione panteistica di Platone.

SEÑOR NUÑEZ DE ARCE read the first canto of his new poem, Hernán el Lobo, before a large audience in the Madrid Athenaeum on the evening of the 22nd ult. The poem has not as yet appeared in print, a fact which naturally whetted public curiosity. The poet was received with much enthusiasm, and his recitation of the opening verses, which are marked by his characteristic elegance of style and brilliant colouring, was loudly applauded.

SEÑOR C. FERNÁNDEZ DURO has succeeded in collecting no fewer than eighty ballads connected with the legend of the Cid, to which he has added a critical study of the events to which they refer and a copious bibliography. The collection, which is much larger than any hitherto published, is issued under the title Romancero de Zamora, and forms vol. xxxv. of the "Biblioteca Enciclopédica Popular."

SINCE 1871 a German commission has been engaged in revising Luther's translation of the Bible. The New Testament was finished some years ago. In September next the commission will finish the third and last reading, after which the new text is to be printed. All those who are acquainted with the difficult work are expected to communicate to the commission any proposals as to suitable emendations, and then the final text is to be published.

MESSRS. CASSELL, PETTER, GALPIN AND CO. have made arrangements for the issue of a series of new and original volumes, by well-known authors, on subjects of widespread interest, to be published under the title of "Cassell's Monthly Shilling Library." The first volume of the series, entitled History of the Free Trade Movement in England, by Augustus Mongredien, will be issued on February 25, and will be followed by Lives of the Covenanters, Boswell and Johnson, The Life of Wesley, Domestic Folk-Lore, and American Humorists.

PROF. STENGEL, of Marburg, has just issued his carefully collated edition of El Cantare di Fierabraccia et Uliuieri—"un bel dir dilectoso di Carlomano" and "l'amarante Bilante, crudele, feroce," as the old romance says—with an Introduction by Carl Buhlmann on this Italian version of the French Fierabras, on the relation of its two texts to one another, and to the Provençal and French versions. The book is of great interest to the student of our early Charlemagne romances.

HERR E. LÜTHI, of Bern, in his essays on Die bernische Politik in den Kappeler-Kriegen (Bern: J. K. Wyss), has proved, beyond contradiction as it seems, that Zwingli, through his intolerance and strong self-will, involved Switzerland in civil war and threw the Reformed Church into the greatest danger. By his death on the battle-field of Kappel, according to Herr Lüthi, he fell a victim to the war which he had himself provoked and promoted. For the last two years Herr Lüthi's evidence has never been contradicted by the Zürich historians, though they have from time to time expressed a hope that the eminent Staatsarchivar of Zürich, Dr. Johann Strickler, the author of the popular Lehrbuch der Schweizergeschichte, would find materials for the confutation of Lüthi. The third volume of Strickler's documentary collection of the Swiss Reformation-acts has just appeared. It contains the documents elucidating the negotiations of 1531, but these only offer new proof of the historical fidelity and accuracy of the work published by Herr Lüthi in 1878, in which he dared to question, criticise, and destroy one of those false traditions with which accepted Swiss history abounds. The same writer has now followed up his earlier attack upon the Zwingli-Sage with further and fuller evidence from the archives of Bern. It appears that the people of Bern were as little desirous of a religious war among the Swiss Confederates as the people of Zürich were, and the Bern Government agreed with the people in its anxiety that there should be no breaking of the civil peace between the Catholic and the Reformed cantons. The war was solely the product of Zwingli's determined energy, seconded by his blind and fanatical adherents in Zürich. It appears further, from a number of documents brought to light by Herr Lüthi, that the Government of Bern not only employed no arbitrary measures for the extension of the Reformation in Neuchâtel, Grandson, and Orbe, but that it actually restrained reformatory fanaticism in the French-speaking districts. The "Fruchtsperre" (interception of provisions) against the five Catholic cantons, the instigation of which has hitherto been laid to the charge of Bern, proceeded originally from Zürich.

THE Director of the archives belonging to the Russian Foreign Office at Moscow, Baron F. A. Bühler, has just published the first part of Records of the Chief Archives of Moscow. This publication resumes, after a long interval, the series of documents edited by Prince Obolonski during his directorship of the Moscow archives. Among the contents is a mémoire in the French language, written by Baron Bühler in response to enquiries made by several foreign Governments, and giving information as to the arrangement of documents and the general constitution of the Russian archives. Then follows an account of the most important State documents, written in 1819 by a former archivist, M. Malinowski. Besides these papers, there are articles discussing the mutual relations of Russia and Prussia, and based on MSS. preserved in these collections. The editor promises to include in future issues certain ordinances relating to the Dardanelles and other interesting matter. There has at the same time been published an important historical study, by M. Ladizhevski, entitled Prince Prozorovski's Mission to England in the Year 1662. This latter work is illustrated with photo-lithographed portraits.

THE St. Petersburg Society of Chamber-Music has just announced an international competition for a work the subject of which will be "The Historical Development of Chamber-Music and its Importance to the Musician." The MS. may be in Russian, French, or English. Two prizes will be awarded, the first of 500, and the second of 250, roubles. The work to which the first prize is awarded will be printed and published in Russian at the society's expense, but the profits of the sale of the first edition—the printers' and publishers' expenses deducted—as well as the entire profits of subsequent editions, will go to the author. The MSS.—each bearing some motto or device—must be sent to the President of the society (Katharina-Prospect) before September next.

MISS AMELIA B. EDWARDS has communicated to us the following extracts from a letter addressed to her by M. Alphonse Mariette, dated Hyères, January 26:—

"I send you the only photograph of my dear brother which I have at hand. He was a striking-looking man, tall, broad-chested, and about six feet in height. His disposition was naturally somewhat imperious, and his manner commanding; yet a more kind-hearted man never breathed, or one more beloved by his friends and family. He was singularly modest and unostentatious; and, although he had a breastful of decorations, he never wore any one of them, except when officially compelled to wear the Legion of Honour. Even then he only wore the miniature decoration, and contrived to hide that microscopic cross under his coat. He was a marvel of industry. As a rule he was in his library at six a.m. all the year round—now writing at a table covered with heaps of papers most neatly and systematically arranged; now pacing to and fro across the room, his wide brow furrowed by thought. At eleven, when he sat down to his déjeuner, he would unbend, and give free scope to his Gallic wit. The savant then became the most charming of conversationists. He kept table ouverte all his life, entertaining with lavish hospitality all the friends who chanced to drop in at those unceremonious meals. . . . My sister writes to me from Boolak that our poor brother has been embalmed, and still lies in the museum in his coffin, which is covered with flowers momentarily renewed by the friends who continually bring fresh wreaths and bouquets. The Khedive has sent to Thebes for a certain ancient Egyptian sarcophagus which the Pasha had himself once pointed out, to M. Vassali as the receptacle in which he should wish his ashes to repose. He was a Commander of the Legion of Honour, of the Medjidie, of the Italian order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus, of the Order of Francis-Joseph, and I do not know how many more. He was also an Officer of the First Class of the Red Eagle of Prussia."

WITH regard to our paragraph about Chaucer's grandfather, Robert Chaucer, last week, Mr. Walter Rye tells us that it was Riley's Liber Albus that first drew his attention to the Coram Rege Roll. He admits, of course, that we were right in saying that the boy John Chaucer was not married to Joan de Esthale in December 1324. The words of the Roll are—"set dicunt quod predicti Agnes, Thomas, Galfridus & Laurencius, predictum heredem non maritarunt." And Geoffrey Stace's Petition to Parliament in 1328 to lessen the £250 damages says, "le dit heire est al large, & ove les avantditz Richard & Marie demoraunt, et unkore dismarie." So here is, at last, proof positive, for Mr. Bradshaw's and Mr. Furnivall's solace, that Geoffrey Chaucer, the poet, could not have been born in 1328. As to the trial: the proceedings were begun at Westminster, then continued at York, thence adjourned to London, where the verdict was given, and then finished at York, where judgment was delivered and the verdict confirmed. We treated York as the principal place on account of judgment (the important thing) being delivered there; but, as the ultimate trial was held and the verdict given at London, the City privileges being in question, we had better have held London as the place to be mentioned. By help of Mr. Greenstreet's old Chaucer Record-notes, we find that Geoffrey Stace and Agnes (whom he married) were put in prison for not paying the £250; and, after they had been there four years, they pleaded that John Chaucer, then of age (in 1331), had given them an acquittance for the £250. The record of the trial has not yet been found.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

SEVERAL of the magazines for February give articles upon George Eliot. Blackwood tells the story of her introduction to the editor, and of her long and friendly connexion with him. The relation here sketched between writer and publisher is entirely honourable to both, and affords a pleasing example of what has not been too common in the world of letters. Among other interesting details, we learn that the title originally chosen for The Mill on the Floss was Sister Maggie, and was altered at the suggestion of Mr. Blackwood. The following passage, also, concerning George Eliot's mode of composition deserves quotation, as supplying an additional point of resemblance to her great compeer, Charlotte Brontë:—

"She was the most careful and accurate among authors. Her beautifully written manuscript, free from blur or erasure, and with every letter delicately and distinctly finished, was only the outward and visible sign of the inward labour which she had taken to work out her ideas. She never drew any of her facts or impressions from second-hand; and thus, in spite of the number and variety of her illustrations, she had rarely much to correct in her proof-sheets."

The authorship of the paper in the Contemporary upon "The Moral Influence of George Eliot" is at once revealed by the style no less than by the matter. We may be pardoned for thinking that the time has not yet come for this kind of speculative analysis, which displays the subtlety of the essayist rather than the simplicity of the influence of which he treats. The genius of George Eliot, in which universality is one of the chief notes, may be criticised, but cannot be explained, from a standpoint that is not only alien, but exceedingly narrow in its principles of judgment.

In the sixth number of the Revue de Droit international et de Législation comparée the first article is by Prof. Holland, of Oxford, who has reproduced in substance the last chapter of his recent work on the Elements of Jurisprudence. It is entitled "De l'Application de la Loi." Its main object is to advocate the banishment of the term "private international law" from our juridical vocabulary, as calculated to cause an erroneous conception of the true character of the particular department of the science of law which governs the choice of the system of private law applicable to the determination of a given class of facts. He suggests that the phrase "extra-territorial private law" would be a more correct designation. Prof. F. Martens, of the University of St. Petersburg, completes his article on "Le Conflit entre la Russie et la Chine" which was commenced in the previous number. The entire article has been subsequently published in a separate form by Muquardt, at Brussels and Leipzig. It well deserves perusal as the best account of the treaty arrangements hitherto in force between two of the great Continental States of the distant East, and also of the recent differences between the two States with regard to the possession of the Province of Kulja, which are still a subject of diplomatic negotiation at St. Petersburg. An article on the development of the legislation of Switzerland since 1872, by Prof. Orelli, of Zürich, informs us, among other matters, that the right of marriage has been placed under the protection of the Confederation, which has declared that every marriage shall be recognised as valid throughout the Confederation which has been concluded in any canton or in any foreign country conformably to the legislation which is in force therein. This provision of the Federal Law will, we presume, henceforth render it impossible for a Swiss citizen to repudiate a marriage contracted in a foreign country as not being in conformity with the legislation of his own canton, of which repudiation a scandalous instance was cited in our review of the third number of this volume in accordance with the legislation of the canton of Geneva. Prof. Rivier, of Brussels, has supplied a brief notice of the recent session of the "Institut de Droit international" at Oxford, of which a more complete account will be forthcoming in the Annuaire de l'Institut for 1881. Prof. Louis Renault, of Paris, has contributed a chronicle of international matters in which the French Government has taken part; and the customary review of new juridical publications concludes the number, to which a full Table of the Contents of the entire volume is appended.

UNDER the title "A Practical Mining School," Señor Becerro de Bengoa begins, in the Revista Contemporanea of January 15, a description of the coal-field of Barruelo de Santullán, in Placencia, worked by the Spanish Northern Railway Company. A posthumous article signed Rafael Luna (Señora Mathilde Cherner, who died last August) on Catalan and Spanish dramatic literature attributes the greater success of the Catalan plays of Don Pablo Soler (Serapi Pitarra) to the fact that he writes for a real audience, the Catalan people, who follow him with attention; while the Madrid dramatists write conventional plays for a conventional audience, who listen with indifference. Fernandez Merino writes enthusiastically of the Mexican poet Ignacio M. Altamirano, whose idyllic grace and deep feeling he highly praises. Miguel Sanchez reviews unfavourably the work of the Prussian Col. von Cönnig on Morocco, but says that Spain has no interest to oppose possible Prussian designs on that kingdom.

THE last number of Le Livre for 1880 was good, and the first number for 1881 is perhaps better. There are two excellent illustrations hors texte. One of these gives a striking portrait of Daniel Elzevier recently discovered in Italy, and which, it is suggested to collectors, will make an excellent addition to M. Willems' admirable catalogue raisonné of the works of the great printers published last year. The other is a Fragonard—sufficiently Fragonardish. There are only three original articles in the number, but they are all good. M. Drujon continues his studies of books with keys; and another instalment of M. Honoré Bonhomme's Cabinet des Fées is given. The authors mentioned in it are for the most part almost unknown to the general reader, and therefore this sketch of them is all the more interesting. Criticism is not M. Bonhomme's strong point, but his knowledge of the early eighteenth and late seventeenth century is remarkable. The article of the number, however, is an enquiry from authentic documents into the Venetian part of the famous Casanova memoirs. It goes to show that the excellent Jacques de Seingalt was not quite such a romancer as he has sometimes been kindly suspected of being.

OBITUARY.

ARTHUR O'SHAUGHNESSY.

It is nearly twenty years since any English poet has been taken from us in the plenitude of his powers. We have lost Wells, Hawker, Procter, and Peacock in extreme old age, and Kingsley and Sydney Dobell in the apparent decline of their poetic faculty; but since the death of Clough no poet has been removed in the midst of his work. Mr. O'Shaughnessy was still only in his thirty-fifth year, and writing with more ardour than ever before, when he was carried away by inflammation of the lungs last Sunday morning, at six o'clock, almost without a warning. He had been suffering from a heavy cold, and I am informed that his zeal in going to the British Museum on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week greatly increased this. But it was not till Friday that he took to his bed, and on Saturday night he was still so little of an invalid that he sat up and chatted cheerfully with a friend. But young as he was, to the public he is younger still, for his last volume of poems dates from 1874, when he was only twenty-eight years of age. Since then he had gone through much suffering and experience, without ever abandoning the consolations of poetry, and in all probability we shall not know for some time how much we have lost in losing him. It is difficult to those who have known him familiarly, as I have done for eleven years, to believe that he is gone. He was of a very equable temperament, never complaining of his health or exulting in it—one of those slight, erect, dapper men who seem to have taken out a lease of longevity.

Arthur William Edgar O'Shaughnessy was born, I find, in London, on March 14, 1846. I think he entered the British Museum as a transcriber in the Department of Printed Books in 1864, under the auspices of the late Lord Lytton, who had been struck by the boy's talent. In 1866 he was promoted to be a senior assistant in the Natural History Department, and ever since, until last week, the main part of his life has been spent in the classification of reptiles and fishes. No odder haunt for a poet can be conceived than the queer little subterranean cell, strongly scented with methylated spirits of wine, in which he worked for fifteen years with grim creatures pickled round him in rows on rows of gallipots. In 1870 he brought out his first volume of poems, An Epic of Women, illustrated with strange designs by Mr. John Nettleship, since distinguished as an animal painter. This book had an immediate and very decided success, went into several editions, and gave its author at once a recognised place in English literature. It was followed in 1872 by a series of stories, in octosyllabic verse, paraphrased very freely from Marie de France, and called Lays of France. These enjoyed a success of esteem, but did not very much attract the public. His third poetical venture, Music and Moonlight (1874), though containing some of his best productions, must in fairness be called a failure, and one which, for the time, seriously injured his position. In 1873 he married the eldest daughter of the eminent dramatist, Dr. Westland Marston, a lady of remarkable mental accomplishment. But disaster followed disaster. They published together, in 1875, a volume of prose tales, called Toyland. The death of their intimate friend, the marvellous boy, Oliver Madox Brown, led the way to the loss of their own two infant children, of Mrs. O'Shaughnessy's only sister, and, in 1879, of Mrs. O'Shaughnessy herself. After all these griefs, the elastic nature of the poet seemed once more to assert itself, and to promise him another and a brighter future; but now, by a strange destiny, he has gone to rejoin his kinsfolk. His friends will not soon forget his suave and gentle ways, his singular loyalty, the quaint earnestness of his manner; but these are things of which no impression can be given to a stranger.

But so earnest a poet and so true an artist deserves some word even thus early by which his position may be roughly indicated. Perhaps no one who ever loved poetry so much or wrote it so well was less judicious in his estimation of it. His mind was lacking in that critical sense which is now so common, and which used not to be considered at all a necessary attribute of the poet. But the result of this, so far as O'Shaughnessy was concerned, was that the quality of his work was exceedingly unequal. If his memory is to be kept before the public in an honourable manner he must be sternly edited, for there is a great deal of chaff among the wheat. But, when all that is trivial has been winnowed away, there will remain, as I believe, so long as English verse is preserved, a residuum of exquisite poetry, full of odour and melody, all in one key, and all essentially unlike the work of anybody else. As some Catholic writers have been drawn through mysticism into sensuousness, O'Shaughnessy was led through sensuous reverie into mystical exaltation. His much-maligned, much-misrepresented piece called Creation, if we exclude the cynicism of the last stanza, is pure Catholic doctrine, and might have been signed by St. Bernard. There was much more in his talent than this, but I should venture to indicate as the central feature of his individuality as a poet his habit of etherealising human feeling, and looking upon mundane emotion as the broken echo of a subtle and supernatural passion. This is what seems to make his best poems—such as "The Fountain of Tears," "Barcarolle," "There is an Earthy Glimmer in the Tomb," "Song of Betrothal," "Chateval," and even, as the reverse of the medal, "Bisclavaret"—so unique in our literature. The public, who considered O'Shaughnessy a mere "fleshy poet" because of one or two juvenile echoes of a stronger lyre, had not begun to be aware of his real characteristics. There will be much more to say about him when his posthumous poems are given to the world, and we may venture to hope that some editorial care, probably of a drastic kind, will be expended. Those will do most honour to our departed friend who have learned the art of omitting with judgment.

EDMUND W. GOSSE.

MRS. S. C. HALL died on January 30 at Down Lodge, East Moulsey. Generations have come and gone since she fairly became known as a pleasing writer in fiction and in studies of national character. Her maiden name was Anna Maria Fielding, and she was born in that land of Ireland which has furnished us with so many well-known names in English literature. Her golden wedding with Mr. Samuel Carter Hall was celebrated in 1874; and five years later her golden wedding with literature might have received a similar honour. It was in 1829 that her first work, Sketches of Irish

Character, was published, and its success was so marked that a second series appeared in 1831. In later life she published several more volumes on the country of her birth, but the best known of all was the comprehensive work on Ireland: its Scenery and Character, which she issued in conjunction with her husband in the years 1841 to 1843. Her essays on the places in our land which have become hallowed by their association with the noblest characters in English literature and English history originally appeared in the Art Journal, and were introduced to the acquaintance of a larger circle of readers by their republication under the title of Pilgrimages to English Shrines. The favourable reception accorded to this work induced her to undertake the task of describing the scenery on the banks of the Thames, and the attractions, both in natural beauty and industrial enterprise, of South Wales. The first work appeared in 1859, the second in 1860. In the latter year she issued a separate handbook on Tenby: its History and Antiquities. Mrs. S. C. Hall ventured on dramatic composition, and several of her plays were well received by the public. She was a novelist; and one at least of her works enjoyed the dignity of being translated into two foreign tongues. In everything which she wrote there was a brightness of tone and sympathy of feeling. It would be affectation to assert that her compositions were of the highest order of genius, but all of them were instinct with a pleasantness of touch and kindness of character. The sympathy of all readers will be with Mr. Hall in his bereavement.

THE death is likewise announced of Mr. David Liston, Emeritus Professor of Hebrew and Oriental Languages in the University of Edinburgh; of Mr. George Dodd, author of Days in Factories, Curiosities of Industry, The Food of London, &c.; of Mr. Aberigh Mackay, the "Ali Baba" of Vanity Fair; of Dr. Jakob Leonard Eurenium, the Swedish translator of Tasso; of the Countess Hatzfeld; and of M. C. F. Kuhlmann, of Lille, author of many chemical works published under the collective title of Recherches scientifiques.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ABEL, E. Analecta ad historiam renaissance in Hungaria litterarum spectantia. Budapest. 1s.
CANELLO, U. A. Storia della Letteratura italiana nel Secolo XVI. Turin: Loescher. 13 fr. 75 c.
CARTIER, E. L'Art chrétien. Paris: Poussielgue. 15 fr.
DUMAS, A. fils. La Princesse de Bagdad: Pïdée en trois Actes. Paris: C. Lévy. 4 fr.
HANDBOOK to the Mediterranean. Murray. 20s.
LEMAU, G. A Bord de la Junon. Paris: Charpentier. 20 fr.
LENGORMANT, F. La Grande Grèce: Paysages et Histoires. T. I. Paris: A. Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
LEROY-BEAULIEU, P. Essai sur la Répartition des Richesses et sur la Tendance à une moindre Inégalité des Conditions. Paris: Guillaumin. 9 fr.
MARSHALL, W. O. Through America; or, Nine Months in the United States. Sampson Low & Co. 21s.
MÉNARD, R. Le Monde vu par les Artistes. Paris: Delagrave. 25 fr.
MÉAUME, P. Lettres à M. Panizzi, p. p. L. Fagin. T. I. Paris: C. Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
MICHELIS, A. Van Dyck et ses Elèves. Paris: Loones. 20 fr.
SCHÖNFELD, P. Andrea Sansovino u. seine Schule. Stuttgart: Metzler. 15 M.
THUROT, feu F. Mélanges de. Paris: Firmin-Didot.
UFALVY-BOUADUN, M. de. De Paris à Samarkand. Paris: Hachette. 50 fr.
WINKELMANN, J. The History of Ancient Art. Trans. G. H. Lodge. Sampson Low & Co. 31s.

THEOLOGY.

- CHRYNE, T. K. The Prophecies of Isaiah. Vol. II. C. Kegan Paul & Co. 12s. 6d.
ECHENKHOFFER, L. A. Das Weissagungsbuch d. Propheten Jeremia ausgelegt. Prag: Bellmann. 9 M. 60 Pf.

HISTORY.

- BOUGAIN, L. La Chaire française au XII^e Siècle, d'après les Manuscrits. Paris: Palmé.
DU BOIS-MELLY. Histoire anecdotique et diplomatique du Traité de Turin entre la Cour de Sardaigne et la Ville de Genève 1751. Basel: Georg. 2 M. 50 Pf.
FRANCK, A. Réformateurs et Publicistes de l'Europe (XVI^e Siècle). Paris: C. Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
GALIFRE, J. B. G. Le Refuge Italien de Genève aux 16^e et 17^e Siècles. Basel: Georg. 4 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- DE-GREGORIO, A. Fauna di S. Giovanni Ilarione (Parisiense). Parte I. Turin: Loescher. 35 fr.
HANSEN, A. Vergleichende Untersuchungen üb. Adventivbildungen bei den Pflanzen. Frankfurt-a-M.: Winter. 8 M.
KLEIN, E., and E. Noble SMITH. The Atlas of Histology. Smith, Elder & Co. 81s.
LEJTEY, K. Ueb. den Bau d. Gastrosciscus polymastus. Leuckart. Frankfurt-a-M.: Winter. 3 M.
PELZELN, A. v. Bericht üb. die Leistungen in der Naturgeschichte der Vögel während d. J. 1879. Berlin: Nicolai. 3 M.
SMITH, E. Noble. The Descriptive Atlas of Anatomy. Smith, Elder & Co. 25s.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BLANC, E. Epigraphie antiques du Département des Alpes-Maritimes. Nice: Imp. Malvano-Mignon.
BUDINSKY, A. Die Ausbreitung d. lateinischen Sprache üb. Italien u. die Provinzen des römischen Reiches. Berlin: Besser. 6 M.
CODON Cumanicus bibliotheca ad templum divi Marci Venetiarum. Ed. Comes Osz Kuun. Budapest. 10s.
CONSTANS, L. De Sermone Sallustiano. Paris: Vieweg. 7 fr. 50 c.
HEINZEL, R. Beschreibung der isländischen Saga. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 3 M. 40 Pf.
JUN JA'IS Commentar zu Zamachshari's Mufassal. Hrg. v. G. Jahn. 5 Hft. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 12 M.
JELLINEK, A. Bibliographie der Nominal-, Verbal- u. Real-Indices zum babyl. u. jersal. Talmud, zur Midrasch- u. Sohar-Literatur, etc. Wien: Löwy. 1 M. 20 Pf.
REPERTORIUM ad litteraturam Daciae archaeologicam et epigraphicam. Comp. C. Torma. Budapest. 54.
SCHIAFFARELLI, E. Il Libro dei Funerali degli antichi Egiziani. Turin: Loescher. 100 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY AND SPELLING REFORM.

25 Argyll Road, Kensington, W.: Jan. 29, 1881.

On January 28 the Philological Society, after an intermittent discussion lasting for six evenings, "approved" of the "Partial Corrections of English Spelling" drawn up at the request of the society by Mr. Henry Sweet on the initiation of the late President, Dr. Murray. As I was in the chair at each of these meetings, and am known to have worked for a very long period (actually thirty-seven years) at spelling reform, it might be thought that I agreed with and rejoiced in the action of the society. I should be obliged, therefore, by your allowing me to say very briefly (1) that I wholly dissent from the principle of "partial correction;" (2) that I dislike the particular alterations proposed; (3) that I think a rapid series of divisions in numerous meetings of members, few of whom had previously, or in the intervals, paid especial attention to the very complicated inter-connexions of the subject, and who were not constant in their attendance, is not adapted to secure a satisfactory result; and (4) that I personally, relieved from voting by being in the chair, also abstained from moving any resolution or amendment.

My wish is, first, to leave present spelling undisturbed to its one claim to recognition—practical uniformity of usage; and, secondly, to run beside it another independent system of spelling possessing these qualities—(1) to be easy to learn to read by the illiterate, children or adults; (2) to be adapted to convey received pronunciation to all who learn to read it; (3) to be easy to learn to write as well as the reader has learned to speak; (4) to form the readiest introduction to the reading of books already printed; (5) to be easy to read at sight by those who can already read our present spelling; (6) to be easy to print with our present types.

ALEXANDER J. ELLIS,
President of the Philological Society.

6 NOTTING TERRACE, Bayswater: Feb. 2, 1881.

In reference to the votes at the last meeting of the Philological Society on orthographical changes recommended to the English public, I feel myself bound to say:—(1) That I thoroughly dissent from the opinion of the majority of the members present at that meeting about the expediency of adopting such changes; (2) That, though the votes at a duly called meeting do generally bind the society, yet, in this very exceptional, and not yet contemplated case, they may not express the opinion of the actual majority of the society, unless proxies are admitted.

L.-L. BONAPARTE.

SIR JOHN MANDEVILLE'S TEXT.

Helensburgh, N.B.: Jan. 31, 1881.

Mr. Thomas Arnold states in his Manual of English Literature (fourth edition), p. 129, that Mandeville's Travels "had been originally written in French, and afterwards translated into Latin." It is curious to find Prof. Henry Morley making the same statement in the fourth volume of his Library of English Literature. As Prof. Morley knows otherwise (vide First Sketch, p. 136), it may be as well to quote here the sentence of the recently published volume of the Library, dealing with "Shorter Prose Works":—"Sir John Mandeville's account of his travels, written, as it appears from the texts, first in French, and then translated into Latin, was translated also into English, and that version is ascribed in the Introduction to some copies of it to Sir John himself." The following is from the Prologue to the Voiage, as edited by Mr. Halliwell from the edition of 1725:—"And 3ee schulle undirstonde, that I have put this boke out of Latyn into Frensch, and translated it agen out of Frensch into Englyssch, that every man of my nacion may understonde it." See Morris and Skeat's Specimens, part ii., p. 167. THOMAS BAYNE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, Feb. 7, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
- 5 p.m. London Institution: "Succession to Thrones," by Sir H. S. Maine.
 - 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "On Drawing Objects in Motion," by Mr. E. Armitage.
 - 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Watchmaking," I., by Mr. E. Rigg.
 - 8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "The Truths of Revelation confirmed by the Advance of Science," by Dr. S. Kings; "Biblical Proper Names, Personal and Local, illustrated from Sources external to Holy Scripture," by the Rev. H. G. Tomkins.
- TUESDAY, Feb. 8, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schiffer.
- 8 p.m. Anthropological Institute.
 - 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Portsmouth Dockyard Extension Works," II., by Mr. C. Oulton; "The Plant and Temporary Works used in the Portsmouth Dockyard Extension," by Mr. O. H. Meyer.
- WEDNESDAY, Feb. 9, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Amazons," by Prof. Colvin.
- 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Present Condition of the Art of Wood-carving in England," by Mr. J. H. Pollen.
 - 8 p.m. Microscopical: Annual Meeting.
- THURSDAY, Feb. 10, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Troubadours," by Mr. F. Hueffer.
- 4.30 p.m. Royal.
 - 7 p.m. London Institution: "The Castes and Trades of India," by Prof. Monier Williams.
 - 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "On the Finish of Works of Art," by Mr. E. Armitage.
 - 8 p.m. Mathematical: "Some Theorems of Kinematics on a Sphere," by Mr. E. B. Elliott; "On Some Integrals expressible in Terms of the First Complete Elliptic Integral and of Gamma Functions," by Mr. J. W. L. Glaisher; "On Mr. McColl's Calculus of Equivalent Statements," by Herr Schlötl (Strassburg); "An Application of Conjugate Functions," by Mr. E. J. Routh.
 - 8 p.m. Telegraph Engineers: "Earth Currents—Electric Tides," by Mr. A. J. S. Adams.
 - 8 p.m. Society for the Fine Arts: "The Influence of Women upon Art," by Mrs. Needham.
- FRIDAY, Feb. 11, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Gold-fields of India," by Mr. Hyde Clarke.
- 8 p.m. Quekett.
 - 8 p.m. New Shakspeare Society: "On the Finest Passage in Each of the Sections of Shakspeare's Work," by the Rev. W. M. Wynell-Mayow.
 - 8 p.m. Folk-Lore Society: "Slavonic Folk-lore," by the Rev. W. S. Lach-Szyrna; "The Aryan Expulsion in Celtic Folk- and Hero-Tales," by Mr. A. Nutt.
 - 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Distances of the Stars," by Prof. R. S. Ball.
- SATURDAY, Feb. 12, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Amazons," by Prof. Colvin.
- 3 p.m. Physical: Annual General Meeting; "On a Hydrostatic Illustration of Electrical Phenomena, and other Lecture Experiments," by Dr. O. J. Lodge.

SCIENCE.

OVERBECK ON THE FORMATION OF THE CANON.

Zur Geschichte des Kanons. Zwei Abhandlungen von Franz Overbeck, Dr. der Phil. u. Theol., ordentl. Prof. der Theol. an der Universität Basel. (Chemnitz.)

PROF. OVERBECK'S latest contribution to the history of the Canon consists of two essays, one on the tradition of the ancient Church regarding the Epistle to the Hebrews, the other on the New Testament Canon and the Muratorian Fragment. The object of the former treatise is, not to extend our knowledge of the facts composing the tradition—for this has hardly admitted of increase since Bleek's complete survey of the ground—but to throw some new light on the interpretation of these facts, and to exhibit their inner connexion and their bearing on the general history of the Canon. The author very properly asks for an unprejudiced hearing and an enquiring spirit, though he does not secure the reader's confidence in his own impartiality by warning off the admirers of the most recent theological pettifogging (Rabulistik, p. 2). No doubt there are pettifoggers in theology as in other human avocations, and it is satisfactory that Overbeck does not regard Biewenthal as one of them; still it is as well to leave the humbler members of the craft unnoticed, and the grand airs of impartiality which "modern criticism" is too apt to assume in opposition to more conservative opinions are among its weakest characteristics. One cannot help suspecting Overbeck of just a little animus against "the comedy of ecclesiastical tradition" (p. 28, note 1; p. 66, note 2), and fancying that it gives him pleasure rather than pain to charge the original framers of the Canon with deliberate falsification of their documents. These outbursts of contempt are, however, of rare occurrence; and the discussion, though it is not likely to convince even all who are unprejudiced, is as fair as it is careful and suggestive.

His peculiar view of the manner in which the Epistle was fraudulently forced into the Canon is first explained as a key to the interpretation of the phenomena presented by early differences of opinion in regard to its authorship. Assuming that the work was a real letter, addressed to a perfectly definite community, probably in Rome, he argues that the oldest known superscription "to (the) Hebrews" was not original, but an addition which served to conceal the real destination of the work. This addition, however, is proved by its universal acceptance to have been made before the formation of the Canon, though probably not without some intention which the known facts did not justify. In connexion with this a more serious charge arises. The adoption of the Epistle into the Canon must have depended on the supposition of its apostolical origin, and therefore (as in Overbeck's view the work was certainly not Paul's) either a real ignorance of its origin was violently set aside in favour of a pretended knowledge, or actual knowledge was replaced by a claim that corresponded with the required canonicity. The more damaging of these two suppositions is preferred by Overbeck. The Epistle, he conceives, must originally have had the usual address. This was removed on the formation of the Canon, so that it might be possible to represent Paul as the real author. With the same laudable object the closing verses were added, so as delicately to suggest a Pauline authorship, while not directly asserting it.

An examination of the usual ancient testimonies exhibits a remarkable difference between the East and the West in the reception of the Epistle. In the Oriental Church opinion drifted more and more in favour of the Pauline authorship; and Overbeck endeavours to show, especially from the testimony of Clemens A.L., that the ascription of the Epistle to Paul dates from the period when the Canon was formed, and that, therefore, the motive for this ascription is to be found in the necessity for an apostolical origin as a title to incorporation among the authoritative books. This view is, he thinks, confirmed by the peculiar course of events in the Western Church. He observes there three distinct periods in which the Epistle received strangely varied treatment. The first is the period of controversy between the East and the West respecting the canonicity of the work. Rome was too well acquainted with its real origin to be misled, and the view which was sanctioned by the Roman Church was adopted by the West generally. Hence the Pauline authorship is rejected by Irenaeus, Hippolytus, Caius, and Tertullian. Owing to this deliberate refusal to accept the Epistle as canonical a second period arose, extending from 240 to 350 A.D., in which it was simply ignored, and its origin was consequently forgotten. It might be supposed that this indifference would have been impossible in face of the confident claims put forward by the East; but from the beginning of the third century there was a remarkable separation between the East and the West, which was overcome only through the policy of Constantine and the Arian controversy. With the renewal of intercourse between the separated portions of the Church began a third period, in the course of which the Epistle was adopted by the no longer reluctant West. To the still confident opinion of the East the Latin world had now nothing to oppose but its own ignorance; and, as it was not desirable to have a difference on so vital a question as the composition of the Canon, it gave way, and acquiesced in the Oriental tradition.

It cannot be denied that this hypothesis has the advantage of presenting a consistent picture of the course of events, and explaining the unquestionable difference between the Eastern and Western Churches. But, when we ask whether it possesses historical probability, it is not so easy to give an affirmative answer. Is it likely that the ecclesiastical authorities, I will not say of the East generally, or even of Egypt, but of Alexandria, where Overbeck finds the source of the mischief, would conspire together to falsify a document in order to obtain for it a fictitious authority? Undoubtedly forgeries exist in the domain of ecclesiastical literature; but, when little or nothing was to be gained, it is difficult to believe that the responsible heads of a single Church could have been induced to practise a deliberate fraud upon the people whom they were appointed to teach. Even the leaders of the early Church were men, and not monsters. But supposing this conspiracy to have been formed, could it possibly have succeeded? How did these framers of a false Canon procure the mutilation and interpolation of all subsequent MSS. and the destruction of all that were already in existence? Why did not other Churches protest? Nay, it is admitted that the West did protest. Why, then, did it not produce genuine copies, and overwhelm the authors of this sorry trick with confusion? How is it, moreover, that in the evidence which has survived there is not the slightest trace of any consistent tradition in the West, which is supposed to have been so much better informed? Tertullian's ascription of the Epistle to Barnabas stands by itself, and does not bear the marks of superior knowledge. Again, it may be urged that direct apostolical authorship was not regarded as essential to canonicity. The Gospels of Mark and Luke were canonical; but, though a quasi-apostolical authority was sought for them, they were not treated as the actual works of Peter and Paul. The Epistle to the Hebrews might have been received on a similar ground, and it is precisely on such a ground that Origen pleads for its acceptance. Notwithstanding his undisguised admiration for it, and his frequent reference to it as Pauline, he frankly admitted in his Homilies, delivered in the later portion of his life, that it could not be the work of Paul himself, but must have proceeded from a disciple who wrote the master's thoughts in his own style.

Thus Overbeck's hypothesis is not free from difficulties; nor can I see that it is required by the facts which it is intended to elucidate. Admitting that the Epistle did not proceed from the Apostle, its reception as canonical and its ascription to Paul may have originated, as Overbeck supposes, in Alexandria, where its Alexandrian strain of thought was most welcome. The higher criticism of that learned city would seek to discover the anonymous author, and, in spite of the diversity of style from the confessedly Pauline Epistles—a diversity susceptible of different explanations—would find none so probable as the great Apostle who was a debtor to the Jews as well as the Greeks. The high authority of the Alexandrian teachers may have caused their opinion to spread in ever-widening circles through the East. If we may judge, however, from the passage in Origen's Homilies already alluded to, the opinion spread slowly, and was far from being universally received during his lifetime, even in the East. From this point, if we except the brief reference of Dionysius of Alexandria, there is a blank in our information till the fourth century, when the Epistle appears to have been generally received in the East, though even then not without some difference of opinion. The West was naturally less affected by the authority of the Alexandrian school, and the conjecture which started from Egypt had to convert the East before it could appeal with anything resembling a traditional consensus to the Latin Church. For there is really no proof, and Overbeck does not pretend, that, when the great Western writers were unanimously rejecting the Pauline authorship, they were confronted by a unanimous acceptance of it in Syria, Asia Minor, and Greece, as well as in Alexandria. If the tradition of the Roman Christians was the earliest, they were also likely, from their position, to retain it longest; but it may well be, as Overbeck supposes, that, during the third and the earlier part of the fourth centuries, the interest in the Epistle waned, and, when Latin and Greek Christianity once more came into close connexion, the former, having no longer any decided view of its own, was ready to succumb to what was at last the almost unanimous tradition of the latter. These are, of course, only stray hints towards the solution of a question which is too large and technical to discuss adequately in a brief review; but they may suffice to suggest the possibility of retaining what is best in Overbeck's hypothesis, while casting off the burden of a grave historical improbability.

Overbeck's second treatise is an examination of the views recently expressed by Harnack, and maintains that the Muratorian Fragment is not inconsistent with the belief that presumed apostolicity was the one original ground for the admission of a book into the Canon, and that this ground was not limited, as Harnack supposes, by the principle of catholicity. This is a question to be solved only by a detailed examination of the Fragment; and I must, therefore, content myself with calling the attention of those who are interested in the history of the Canon to Overbeck's searching criticisms.

JAMES DRUMMOND.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

The Gardens of the Sun; or, a Naturalist's Journal on the Mountains and in the Forests and Swamps of Borneo and the Sulu Archipelago. By F. W. Burbidge, Trinity College Botanical Gardens, Dublin, and formerly of the Royal Gardens, Kew. With Illustrations. (Murray.) The title of this book is very captivating, the matter of it rather commonplace. It requires the brilliant style of Thackeray or of Lord George Campbell to make a chapter on the voyage to Singapore, or a description of that familiar town, even bearable; and, whatever Mr. Burbidge's talents as a traveller, a botanist, or a horticulturist, literary composition is not his strong point. He went over no new ground; he met with no striking adventures; but he saw a good deal of North-western Borneo, made a journey to the Sulu Islands, and twice visited Kini Balu in search of the rare plants to be found there. He might have written a couple of interesting magazine articles, or even have given us a small book of a hundred pages or so; instead of which we have a volume of 360 pages, in which he narrates the most commonplace incidents of his trips to the interior, with details of his dinners and his baths day after day. The only bright pieces of description are when he comes across rare plants or abundance of insects, and the reader who knows nothing whatever about Borneo may obtain a good idea of the country and the people by means of this book. Mr. Burbidge thus describes his first meeting with the great pitcher plants on Kini Balu at a height of from 6,000 to 9,000 feet:—

"On open spaces, among rocks and sedges, the giant Nepenthes Rajah began to appear, the plants being of all sizes, and in the most luxuriant health and beauty. The soil in which they grew was a stiff yellow loam, surfaced with sandstone-grit, and around the larger plants a good deal of rich humus and leaf-debris had collected. The long red-pitched N. Edwardsiana was seen in two places. This plant, like N. Lowii, is epiphytal in its perfect state, and is of a slender rambling habit. Highest of all in the great nepenthea zone came N. villosa, a beautiful plant, having rounded pitchers of the softest pink colour, with a crimson frilled orifice similar to that of N. Edwardsiana. All thoughts of fatigue and discomfort vanished as we gazed on these living wonders of the Bornean Andes! Here, on this cloud-girt mountain-side, were vegetable treasures which Imperial Kew had longed for in vain. Discovered by Mr. Low in 1851, dried specimens had been transmitted to Europe, and Dr. (now Sir Joseph) Hooker had described and illustrated them in the Transactions of the Linnean Society; but all attempts to introduce them alive into European gardens had failed. To see the plants in all their health and vigour was a sensation I shall never forget—one of those which we experience but rarely in a lifetime!"

Almost the only adventure in the book is the crossing of a difficult stream on the return from Kini Balu, Mr. Burbidge riding on a buffalo, and his companion, Smith, holding on to the saddle by a rope. We give it as a fair example of our author's style:—

"I shall never forget our last crossing. We had missed the proper place to ford without our knowing it. The place we had chosen to cross was, as we afterwards found, a succession of smooth boulders and deep holes. The buffalo had to feel its way, and, when in mid-stream, unluckily set its feet on a boulder. Ugh! how I did shiver as I sank to my neck with the buffalo submerged beneath me. As we rose again, I glanced around and thought for a moment poor Smith had gone. In a moment, however, he rose to the surface of the stream, where he lay extended, grasping the ropes of the saddle with one hand at arm's-length, and gasping for breath. All the time we were being carried down stream, and bravely as the plucky buffalo struggled her feet continually slipped on the loose pebbles below. 'Hold on, Smith!' I gasped, as splash we all went over another gigantic boulder, and the water surged up to my ears although on the back of the beast. I clung like a sailor in a gale. Fortunately for us the buffalo regained her footing, and clearing the current by a great effort she carried me and dragged poor old Smith up the bank Koungwards. 'That's a narrow squeak, old boy,' I said, but Smith was too exhausted to answer as he tottered and staggered to a seat on a stone lying near."

Among the minor defects of the book are the constant references to plants by their Latin names without any description of their chief characteristics, so that the non-botanical reader feels a continual irritation owing to his being quite unable to form any mental picture of the thing referred to. There are a number of good wood-cuts illustrating plants, scenery, and natives. Some of these appear to be taken from other works, as that of the "Orangutan or Wild Men of Johore," and as no authority is given for the accuracy of these figures they are of little value. An Appendix contains a short account of the new plants discovered, with lists of the ferns collected in Borneo and of the birds collected in the Sulu Islands and on Kini Balu.

Botanisches Centralblatt. Referirendes Organ für das Gesamtgebiet der Botanik. Hrsg. von Dr. O. Uhlworm. Quartal 1 u. 2. (Cassel: Fischer.) Nothing has appeared more surely indicative of the activity of botanical research at the present time than this most useful and admirably conducted publication. Its weekly issues contain notices or abstracts, longer or shorter as the case may be, of every publication of importance, independent or in the pages of a journal, in all countries of the globe, in all departments of botanical science. At least this is its aim, and it seems to us to have been as fully carried out as circumstances will permit by the energetic editor and his large corps of assistants on the Continent, in England, and elsewhere. Should every part or every volume be furnished with as good an index raisonné as that prefixed to the first part, the work will, as it proceeds, supply a complete résumé of botanical literature indispensable to all workers who desire to know what has previously been done in any particular department. The undertaking is most creditable to the enterprise of those who have started it, and we sincerely wish it success. Although the present notice refers only to the first two quarters of the first volume, the second volume has been actually commenced with the new year.

The Guests of Flowers is a Botanical Sketch for Children. By C. E. Meesterkerke. (Griffith and Farran.) This little book is founded on a work already noticed in our columns, Flowers and their Unbidden Guests, by Dr. Kerner, who has also supplied a Preface. We welcome with pleasure every fresh effort to introduce to the notice of children some of the fascinating details of the world of nature in which they live; and we do not doubt that the present volume will be useful in this respect. But we are inclined to question whether the somewhat stilted and forced style in which it is written is, after all, so attractive to children as a plain narrative or description in easy and not too technical language, such as that adopted in those model botanical books for children, Prof. Asa Gray's How Plants grow and How Plants behave. More might certainly have been made of the admirable subject, especially with the aid of a few simple wood-cuts.

The Coal Fields of Great Britain: their History, Structure, and Resources; with Descriptions of the Coal Fields of our Indian and Colonial Empire, and of other Parts of the World. By Edward Hull, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S. Fourth Edition. (Stanford.) The appearance of a new edition of so well-known a work as Prof. Hull's Coal Fields calls for but few remarks. It is a book which passed long ago into the rank of our geological classics, and it still forms, with Mr. Smyth's admirable treatise on Coal and Coal Mining, our standard authority on this subject. On examining Dr. Hull's new edition, it is satisfactory to find that several improvements have been introduced, notably in the description of the Carboniferous Flora. It needs a specialist to describe, with accuracy, the plants of the coal measures, and, as Prof. Williamson, of Manchester, has revised this part of the work, the student may turn to it with the utmost confidence. The Blue-books embodying the work of the Royal Coal Commission have now become so scarce that the reader will be glad to find the pith of the Reports introduced into Prof. Hull's volume.

Plant-Life: Popular Papers on the Phenomena of Botany. With 148 Illustrations by the Author. Early Lessons in Botany. By the Author of "Plant-Life." With 120 Illustrations. (Marshall, Japp and Co.) These two little books would appear to be written by a working member of the Lambeth Field Club, and are commendable attempts to interest a wider public in the pursuits to which the writer has evidently paid great attention. It is, we think, a mistake for any scientific work, however elementary, to be published anonymously, as it thus loses more than half its raison d'être. We have no doubt that many into whose hands these books come will be stimulated to use their own observing faculties in the same field; and to this end we wish them every success. But should they reach another edition, they should be carefully revised. Misprints are numerous; nor are they free from more serious errors. Thus, Zygnaea (p. 5 of Plant-Life) does not produce zoospores; nor has the fuchsia (fig. 37) ten stamens; while the classification of Algae on p. 201 is not one that will be found in any work of authority. The illustrations, by the author himself, are very unequal. Some of them, like those of Pinguicula and Darlingtonia, are superior to those we generally find in elementary text-books; while others—many of them evidently copied, and not drawn from nature—are altogether below the mark.

Note-book on Practical Solid or Descriptive Geometry. By Edgar and Pritchard. Fourth Edition, by A. G. Meeze. (Macmillan.) The appearance of the fourth edition of this work will be the signal for its promotion from the position of an elementary treatise to that of a leading text-book on the subject. The study of descriptive geometry has of late years been much encouraged in all the important scientific educational establishments of the country, probably because it is recognised as one which, although possessed of but a small actual range, yet affords an almost unlimited scope for ingenuity of conception and originality of treatment. Its mastery is unattended with the sacrifice of much time or labour, while the benefits to be derived from it are both permanent and important; for, without exacting the committal to memory of any empirical formulae, it familiarises the student with the forms and properties of all the leading figures with which he is likely to have to deal hereafter, and thus provides a fitting introduction to a profound study of the more special branches of mathematics. Space forbids our enlarging upon the ingenious manner in which the book has been rewritten. What has been retained has been made to conform to the most modern of our accepted notions, while much has been introduced that is entirely new. Special attention should be directed to a novel method of representing all requisite dimensions, in one view of an object, by means of what is styled a tri-metric projection. Isometric projection, often difficult of application in practice, and usually relegated to an isolated position in books on descriptive geometry, here follows as a simple rider to the enunciation of the tri-metric method. We would add that the chapters on Axial Projection (another novel conception) and on Curved Surfaces demand as much quiet and careful study at the hands of the reader as they have experienced conscientious and original treatment at the hands of the writer.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

THE well-known West African explorer, M. Savorgnan de Brazza, after founding the French station on the Upper Ogowé, appears to have started on his journey in the Congo basin without waiting for his colleague, Dr. Ballay, and has achieved the great feat of reaching the River Congo, about one hundred miles south of the Equator. No detailed account of this successful exploration has as yet come to hand, but, from the brief telegram received by the International African Association, M. de Brazza appears to have struck the Congo between the Mpaka and the next principal affluent on the right bank, or between 2° and 3° S. lat. He has also ascertained the correctness of his belief that the River Alima, discovered during his former expedition on the Ogowé, was an affluent of the Congo. M. de Brazza reached the banks of the Congo last July; and, as he did not arrive at Stanley Pool till September, he has, no doubt, done other interesting work, the particulars of which we have yet to learn. He afterwards descended the river, and, having visited Mr. H. M. Stanley at his advanced post, reached Vivi, at the foot of the Yellala Falls, on November 12.

In the February number of Good Words we find two papers of interest from a geographical point of view. Under the title of the "Road to the Pole," Capt. A. H. Markham, R.N., commences a popular account of his voyage in the Isbjörn to Novaya Zemlya and the Barents Sea, in company with Sir H. Gore Booth. Mr. Joseph Thomson, in a paper entitled "Toiling by Tanganyika," brings us to a very interesting part of his recent explorations in East Central Africa.

LETTERS have lately been received in Paris from Dr. Crevaux, by which we learn that he was on the point of crossing the Cordillera to the basin of the River Orinoco, having been induced to depart from his original plans. His main object in his new field of labour is to explore the course of the Guayabero, which he believes will prove to be a navigable affluent of the Orinoco, and valuable for commercial purposes. Dr. Crevaux has already completed some useful work on the River Magdalena, having carefully mapped a considerable part of its course.

THE Government of Queensland have undertaken the publication of a map of the colony on a large scale; it will be comprised in six sheets, of which three have lately been issued. When the last mail left Brisbane they were also engaged in fitting out an expedition for the exploration of the country between Blackall and Point Parker, on the coast of the Gulf of Carpentaria.

IN the extreme north of the Gulf of Carpentaria some very useful explorations have lately been conducted by Capt. Pennefather in the Pearl on the east coast, by which a considerable tract of hitherto unknown country has been examined and the coast line laid down with accuracy. He first visited the mouth of the Coen River (12° 13' S. lat.), and, after a short journey inland, established the fact that as a river it has no real existence. He next explored the Archer River, a few miles farther south, and found the natives numerous and not over-friendly. Finding that the country was not very promising after an ascent of fifteen miles, Capt. Pennefather returned to the coast and sailed northwards to the Batavia River, which enters the gulf in 141° 53' E. long., 11° 51' S. lat. This river he explored more thoroughly for a distance of thirty-six miles, and his report of the surrounding country, which was previously quite unknown, shows that it is well adapted for settlement. The river is, in his opinion, a very fine one, maintaining a considerable width for a long distance, and its mouth would make a splendid port, its chief drawback appearing to be the great number of alligators found there.

SOME little alteration has lately been made in the arrangements for polar stations which the Russians have for some time been preparing to establish. Lieut. Jürgens, of the Russian Navy, who has been diligently preparing himself for his work, will be the chief of the two stations, one of which will be formed near the mouth of the Lena, and the other probably at the entrance to the River Kolyma, and not, as has been stated, on one of the islands of the New Siberia group.

COL. FLATTERS left Wargla on December 5, journeyed up the Wad Milya as far as Hassi Inifel, in lat. 30° N., and left that place on December 18 for El Meseggem, a well on the road from Insalah to Ghadames, first visited by Rohlf. Thence he proposes to pass between the mountains of Ahaggar and Tassili into the heart of the country of the Tuareg.

EQUALLY satisfactory are the reports received from the members of the German expeditions now in Africa. Herr Buchner writes on July 1, from the Muene Chikambo's village on the Lulua, that, after a residence of six months at the Musumba of the Mwata Yamvo, he left that place, as he was unable to obtain permission to extend his explorations to the northward. On reaching the left bank of the Lulua he despatched the bulk of his people to Angola, and was about, with fifty picked men, to trace the banks of that river to its confluence with the Congo. Herr Schuler, of the East Coast expedition, reports his arrival at Tabora on October 17. He has fixed upon Kisinda, near the Gombe River, as a suitable site for the "station" which he was sent out to found. Dr. Rohlf and Dr. Strecker left Masua on December 12 for Ailet in Abyssinia.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Fossil Sponge-spicules.—We have received a copy of a memoir, by Mr. George Jennings Hinde, descriptive of a collection of sponge-spicules which he obtained from a single flint from the Upper Chalk of Horstead in Norfolk. The cavity in this flint contained a quantity of fine material resembling flour, and representing a portion of the mud of the Cretaceous ocean, hermetically sealed in the interior of the flint. The material consisted not only of an abundance of sponge-spicules but of numerous foraminifera, entomostraca, fragments of echinoderms and mollusca, with fish-scales and coprolites. From the single flint no fewer than one hundred and sixty different forms of spicules were obtained, belonging to thirty-eight species and thirty-two genera of sponges. These spicules were carefully studied by the author at Munich, under the direction of Dr. Zittel. The memoir is admirably illustrated with lithographs of the spicules executed by Herr Conrad Schwager, of the Palaeontological Museum at Munich.

SOME little time ago we drew attention to the fund started at Birmingham for the endowment of scientific research, of which the first recipient is Dr. Gore. We learn, from an address to the Birmingham Philosophical Society by its President, Dr. Heslop, that this fund now amounts to nearly £100 in annual subscriptions and £900 in donations. In addition, a house has been taken and fitted up as an "Institute of Scientific Research" by the liberality of a member of the society, and handed over to Dr. Gore and Dr. Norris, in order that they may enjoy at least the requisite structural conveniences for the prosecution of their work.

A HITHERTO unknown variety of the hippopotamus, named, like the ancient Egyptian hippopotamus-goddess called Ta-urt, or Thoueris, has been discovered, it is said, at some very remote part of the Blue Nile.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MR. VISHVANATH NARAYAN MANDELIK, C.S.I., of Bombay, has published the second part of his elaborate work on Hindu Law, the present volume containing the full translation of the Vyavahāra Mayūkha and of Yājñavalkya's Smṛiti, with numerous notes; a long Introduction on the general literature; and four exhaustive Appendices, the first of which contains an analysis of eighteen other Smṛitis, while the others deal with the law of charitable donations, of Sāpinda relationship, and of marriage and adoption respectively. The style and method show how thoroughly the author has assimilated European ideas of literary history and criticism, and the various notes are evidence of his wide acquaintance with the riches of the extensive native literature on Hindu Law. It is also especially worthy of attention how cordially he endorses the complaints made by the late Prof. Goldstick, and again recently by Mr. Nelson, of the Madras Civil Service, on the deficiencies in the English administration of Hindu Law, arising chiefly from the very inadequate acquaintance with the authorities possessed by judges who, in their ignorance of Sanskrit, are dependent upon incomplete and faulty translations. The present work, and those of Prof. Jolly and of Dr. Bühler, will do something to remedy this great and crying want; but versions of half-a-dozen or a dozen law books, chosen somewhat at random from so much larger a number, cannot be expected to remove all occasion for further mistakes. It is, after all, but a small, though a very important, part of the ancient system which is still supposed to be followed in our courts; and a somewhat complete catena of authorities on these points should be published both in Sanskrit and in scholarly translations. Private enterprise may indeed, as this volume shows, do much to accomplish the task; but it will scarcely be performed, without the assistance and authority of the central Government, until numerous decisions founded on inadequate knowledge have already introduced an almost irremediable confusion. The first portion of the present work compares most favourably with Borrodaile's well-known, but in many places inaccurate, version of the Vyavahāra Mayūkha, and is based upon the excellent text of that great commentary which appeared in part i.; and, though in the portion devoted to Yājñavalkya the author has had to go over ground already occupied by so great a scholar as Prof. Stenzler, he may be fairly said to have given us the first complete and trustworthy translation of that ancient text-book. It is satisfactory to find a further proof of the rise of a school of native scholars well able to hold their own in a comparison with those who have been trained in Europe.

THE Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, part iv., completing the volume for the year 1880, is mainly occupied with a long and full history of Tibet, translated from the Chinese T'ang history by Dr. Bushell, physician to the English Embassy at Peking. The paper is entitled "The Early History of Tibet," and, after describing in a few sentences the earlier traditions of the period from the fifth to the middle of the seventh century A.D., it gives an elaborate account of Tibetan affairs from the year 631, when the first Tibetan envoys were sent to China, down to the year 850. The history is founded on contemporaneous official documents, and, though doubtless tinged with official colouring, is perfectly trustworthy in its main features, and, what is of more importance, is full of references to the curious customs and beliefs of the Tibetan people. It gives a very favourable impression of the spirit in which the Chinese historical works, of which we have heard so much and seen so little, are composed. There is one detail of especial interest for Indian history—an account of the embassies sent on the representations of Hiouen Tsang to Shiliditya, King of Magadha (p. 528). To this important paper is appended a facsimile, text, and translation of an inscription set up in 822 A.D., recording a treaty made in that year between China and Tibet. Mr. Le Strange follows with a few "Notes on Some Inedited Coins," being local coins of various ages collected by him in Persia from 1877 to 1879. The concluding paper is one on the "Buddhist Nirvāna and the Noble Eightfold Path," by Oscar Frankfurter, Phil. Dr. It is well known that the meaning to be assigned to the Buddhist expression Nirvāna has hitherto depended on the interpretation of a few isolated passages and epithets which, in the hands of different European scholars, have been made to support or imply such widely different conclusions that discussions on Nirvāna have become almost a byword for intricacy and uncertainty. Dr. Frankfurter has discovered three entire suttas in the Pali scriptures devoted to the subject; and, though the second is little more than a repetition of the first, these suttas may fairly be taken as containing the views of the early Buddhists themselves on the question that has given rise to so much controversy. It is instructive to notice that they are entirely free from any of the deep metaphysical discussions which enter so largely into European treatments of Nirvāna; and that they describe that summum bonum of the Buddhists very simply and concisely as "the cessation of lust, anger, and ignorance." "The answer given by Sariputta," says Dr. Frankfurter, "as well as the sermon preached by Gotama, in these suttas on Nirvāna, fully bears out the opinion of Mr. T. W. Rhys Davids, expressed in his little book on Buddhism—viz., that Nirvāna is to be attained in this life." The paper concludes with the full Pali text of all the three suttas referred to. The present part also contains the Report for 1880, drawn up by the secretary, Mr. W. S. W. Vaux—a worthy sequel to those exhaustive accounts of all the Oriental literature of the past year which have lately been periodically contributed by the secretary to the pages of the Asiatic Society's Journal.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.—(Monday, Jan. 24.)

SIR H. C. RAWLINSON, K.C.B., President, in the Chair.—A paper was read by Mr. W. Simpson "On the Identification of Nagarahara, with Reference to the Travels of Hiouen-Tsang." Nagarahara, he stated, was the name of the chief city of the Jelalabad Valley, as also of the province, the extent of which, according to Hiouen-Tsang, was probably from Gundamuck to the Khyber Paas. It was visited by Hiouen-Tsang and Fah-Hian, who describe some of the buildings in it, at the same time referring to its distance from Hidda (now Hada), and thus confirming the suggested identification. Mr. Simpson stated that, when in the Jelalabad Valley with Gen. Sir Samuel Browne's column in 1879, he made many explorations into the Buddhist remains there, discovering, inter alia, an isolated rock covered with ruins of Buddhist masonry, bearing the local name of Bala-Haara (i.e., "the Citadel"), the whole ground about it being strewn with stones and fragments of topeas. Around it may also be seen a series of ridges, probably the remains of the ancient defences of the town. Hiouen-Tsang states that it was four miles in circumference, and that it was six miles from Hidda, both of which measures agree exactly with those made by Mr. Simpson. M. Vivien de St.-Martin, who very nearly worked out a correct map of this district in his Mémoire sur la Carte de l'Asie Centrale, was, Mr. Simpson stated, misled by the map published in the Asiana Antiqua.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, Jan. 27.)

EDWIN FRESHFIELD, Esq., V.-P., in the Chair.—Mr. Peacock exhibited rubbings of brasses of Martin Gravenor from Messingham church, and of Marmaduke Tirwhitt, who died 1599, from Scotter church, and also a copy of the arms on the tomb of Joseph Justus Scaliger, at Leyden, which are or, a ladder gules, and a double-headed eagle vert, showing his connexion with the family of La Scala at Verona.—Mr. George Grazebrook exhibited several matrices of seals, among which were the following devices:—A grotesque head, with the legend PRIVIVS DIVI, probably the common inscription "Prive suit" with other letters interposed to make it a puzzle; a tower, with the legend "Force de Boudouin;" two of St. Martin and the Beggar, of the fourteenth century; and one belonging to a prebendary of Bar, bearing crusilly, two pikes hauriant endorsed.—Mr. H. S. Milman read a paper upon the mode of keeping Wardrobe accounts in the reign of Edward I. In the Exchequer two concurrent rolls were kept—one by the clerk of the treasurer, called the Pipe roll, and the other by the Chancellor's clerk. These were collated at the audit. The same system appears to have been in use in the Wardrobe, and a roll for 28 Edw. I. similar to that formerly printed by the society is now in the possession of the Earl of Ashburnham, and was lent to the society for exhibition. In the case of the Wardrobe, the primary roll or compotus was kept by the custos or treasurer, and the counter-roll by the comptroller. The accounts of the treasurer of the King's Chamber for the last year of Edward II. were also exhibited. These are in French, while the earlier ones are in Latin.

FINE ART.

Inscriptions et Notices recueillies à Edfoo (Haute Egypte) pendant la Mission scientifique de M. le Vicomte E. de Rougé. Publiées par M. le Vicomte Jacques de Rougé. (Paris: Leroux.)

SOME thirty years ago, when Mariette-Pasha undertook the excavation of the great Temple of Apollinopolis Magna, he found it buried under the populous hamlet of Edfoo. Its stupendous pylons yet towered seventy-five feet above the minaret of the village mosque; but their bases were sunk in fifty feet of rubbish. Its terraced roof—crowded with mud huts and swarming with fellaheen, poultry, dogs, asses, buffaloes, and vermin—formed the central plateau of a wilderness of mounds. Its columned halls, its courtyards and chambers, its corridors, its sanctuary, were choked to the brim. For sixty generations, Copt and Arab had been erecting their crude brick dwellings upon the site of that ancient city called by the Egyptians Teb, and by the Greeks Apollinopolis Magna; each generation superimposing its fragile structures upon the crumbled walls of its predecessors, and, like the races of the coral insect, helping to pile a mountain to its own memory.

Mariette-Pasha began by demolishing ninety-two houses, sixty-four of which were on the roof of the temple. He next caused the surrounding mounds to be cut away, and the whole building to be cleared and cleansed throughout. Thus disinterred, it emerged the most perfect monument of ancient Egypt. The pylon-cornices are gone; and over the portico, and immediately above the sanctuary, a few roofing-stones are missing. Here and there, too, may be observed a defaced inscription, a noseless deity, a mutilated capital. All else is unchanged. We tread the ancient pavement; we mount the ancient stairs; we find the granite naos still standing in the sanctuary. The sculptures are for the most part as sharp, the stone is as smooth and creamy-white, as on that day when the temple—begun, as one inscription records, on the 7th Epiphi, year 10, of Ptolemy Euergetes, and completed ninety-five years later—was solemnly consecrated to the great Apollinopolitan triad; namely, to "Horns the Great God, the Lord of Heaven, the Golden Hawk, Son of Osiris, King of the Kings of the Northern and Southern hemispheres; Hathor, mistress of the Golden Crown, she who gives beauty to the King and loveableness to man and to woman;" and Harhat, or Harpokroti, their divine offspring.

Some idea of the literary wealth of the temple of Edfoo may be gathered from the following facts. The building consists of a gateway flanked by two gigantic pylons, a courtyard, a portico, two hypostyle halls, two transverse corridors, a chapel, numerous side-chambers, a sanctuary, and an external open corridor, bounded by a magnificent wall some forty feet in height. The pylon-gateway measures 250 feet in width by 125 feet in height. The courtyard measures 160 feet in length by 140 in width. The entire length of the building is 450 feet, and it covers an area of 80,000 square feet. It is no exaggeration to say that every ceiling and pillar and architrave, every doorway and soffit and frieze, every side-chamber however dark, every subterranean crypt however secret, is covered with sculptured groups and hieroglyphed inscriptions. The external surface of the temple, the inner side of the great open corridor, the huge pylons upon whose parapets "lean-headed" vultures sun themselves all day, are carved in like manner from top to bottom. The whole building, in short, is one vast illustrated book—not a royal autobiography, like Aboosimbel or Medinet Haboo; not an aggregate of epics and military chronicles, like Karnak; but an encyclopaedic collection of civil and religious texts, astronomical and geographical treatises, kalendars, genealogies, hymns, diagrams, mystical invocations; lists of Egyptian and Nubian nomes, with their capital towns, their products, and their tutelary deities; lists of tributary provinces and princes; catalogues of temples and their territorial possessions; lists of priests and priestesses, of singers and scribes; tables of feasts and fasts; records of donations and offerings; and an incredible profusion of mythologic legends. Nor is this maze of texts without a plan. As in tombs of the ancient empire we find ceilings painted to imitate the sky and the stars, and dados adorned with symbolic representations of the farms and fishponds of the deceased, so at Edfoo all that is of the earth earthly is confined to the lower walls and basement chambers, while the ceilings and friezes are dedicated to celestial phenomena and the astronomic divinities.

Engrossed by the work of excavation, Mariette-Pasha was unable to do more than report upon the variety and value of these Edfoo inscriptions, which he described in 1860 as equivalent to a kilomètre of mural sculpture. To this report the French Government responded in 1863 by despatching the late Viscount E. de Rougé upon an archaeological mission to Egypt; and it was during that expedition (in which M. Jacques de Rougé was associated with his father, and in which Mariette-Pasha ultimately assisted) that the texts reproduced in the present collection were copied. Since that time Messrs. E. Naville, Brugsch, Dümichen, de Rochemonteix, and others have laboured in the same mine; and still we are far from having exhausted a tithe of its treasures.

It was chiefly to the geographical lists that MM. de Rougé devoted their attention at Edfoo. Similar lists are found in other temples, the most ancient being those of Seti the First at Abydos; but by far the most comprehensive are those of Apollinopolis Magna, which consist of twenty-seven processions of symbolical figures, representing nomes, towns, canals, backwaters, provinces, lakes, sacred enclosures, and the like. The King heads each procession, introducing it in flowery phrases to the tutelary triad of the temple; while every figure carries his name upon his head. As these hieroglyphed names are phonetically spelled, their philological value to the student is almost equal to their topographical and historical importance. Dry as they sound, these geographical lists contain, beside mere names of localities, a host of curious correlative details. We learn from them, for instance, the titles of various priests, such as "The Great First," "The Head," "The Child of the Sanctuary," "The Purifier," "The Sacrificer," "The Propitiator of the Spirit of the Waters," "The Opener of the Gates of Heaven," &c., &c. The High Priest of Cynopolis was Neb-nest-f, i.e., "The Lord is his strength," a title identical with the name of the last native Pharaoh. A priestess of Amen, at Thebes, figures as "Adorer of the Divinity." This dignity was also borne by two royal princesses of the Twentieth Dynasty, and would seem to have been at one time hereditary in the female line of Thebes—a fact which scores another error against Herodotus, who asserts (book ii., chap. xxxv.) that in Egypt no woman could fill a priestly office. The sacred bari, or portable boat carried on men's shoulders in ceremonial processions, has long been familiar to us in the mural sculpture of Egyptian sanctuaries. We now know that each temple possessed one or more of these arks; that they were occasionally launched upon the temple lakes, and even upon the Nile; and that they were distinguished by quaint and high-sounding names, such as "The Lord of the Scimitar," "The Light of the Two Lands," "The Great of Turquoise," "The Ornament of the Ram," "The Lady of the Waters," and the like. One remarkable text (see plate cxvi., vol. ii.) treats of the sources and heights of the Nile. Thoth, diademed and holding a papyrus, addresses the King, Ptolemy Euergetes, in these words:—"I give thee a book from the library of thy father." Next follow the contents of the papyrus:—

"I establish the fields of Egypt to endure for ever in the presence of Horus, from Aboo [Elephantine] to the sea-limits, a distance of Aah* 12,700. For Egypt is called the eye of Osiris. The Nile is its pupil; the mountains of the East and of the West are its two eyelids. . . . The Nile issues forth from Ker-t [gy. Khartoom?] at his hour [i.e., period]. At Aboo he rises to a height of twenty-four cubits, three palms, and four parts. He neither falls short of this measure nor exceeds it. When the Nile comes he waters the earth," &c., &c.

Plates cxiii., cxiv., and cxv. reproduce a series of Nilotic figures heading lists of neighbouring nations, whose names, as written here and elsewhere, are more or less satisfactorily identified with the Syrians, Libyans, Tunisians, Edomites, and Mesopotamians.

Want of space forbids me to quote further; but a handful of ore proves the quality of the mine. The present work, which consists of 143 plates of lithographed texts, comprises apparently all the copies made at Edfoo by MM. de Rougé, and includes the selected texts contributed some few years ago by M. Jacques de Rougé to the Revue Archéologique, to which articles I beg to acknowledge my obligations.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

* A superficial measure; value unknown.

ART BOOKS.

Gainsborough and Constable. By G. Brock Arnold. (Sampson Low and Co.) The volume before us, which is the latest addition to the extremely unequal, though often meritorious, little series, "The Illustrated Biographies of Great Artists," gathers together some of the best-known facts and some of the oldest opinions respecting two charming artists. Readers who have little opportunity of access to books may find that a certain value attaches even to such a compilation; but those who would like to understand what it is the fashion to call "the secret" of Gainsborough's art—in other words, its characteristics, what inspired it, and what it performed—cannot reasonably be satisfied with so arid a performance as the present. For, while there is an absence of fresh facts, there appears to us to be a yet more plentiful lack of individual thought. The time has gone by for quoting, at great length, such a meritorious gossip as Allan Cunningham, for one naturally prefers to read him in the original; while to speak of Waagen—the author of a voluminous and rose-coloured chronicle—as an "eminent critic" is now even more inappropriate than at the time when that worthy was still writing. But what we really find least satisfactory in the present book is the absence of any sufficient sign of personal and familiar knowledge of the works that are treated of. The chapters on Gainsborough, and, we fear, also those on Constable, might almost have been compiled by a writer surrounding himself with the older authorities and with little further material. A better indication than any that is given here of the true nature of Gainsborough's and Constable's art is needed to satisfy even a modest demand for art knowledge. It is fair to say that the task set before Mr. G. B. Arnold appears to have been executed by him with steady pains; but of any of the best gifts of a critic—insight, fullness of knowledge, and power of expression—there is, to say truth, little trace. Gainsborough and Constable have been written about so much better, and so many times, that we cannot attach any importance to the volume before us. We willingly believe, however, that the writer has done his best.

Pencil and Palette. By Robert Kempt. (Chatto and Windus.) This volume is a collection of anecdotes, many of them relating to contemporary painters, and of the kind that may while away half-an-hour on a railway journey. It is not without interest, though it is without substance. Mr. Kempt has read a good deal of gossip upon art, and has had a good memory or a constant friend in scissors and paste-pot. The book, which it would be absurd to praise, yet more absurd to reprove, is the result of this.

Practical Ceramics for Students. By Charles A. Janvier. (Chatto and Windus.) It is strange that no such comprehensive book of this kind has, so far as we are aware, been published before in England, and this, if we mistake not, is American in origin. In the works of Brongniart and Salvétat, in those of Arnoux and Tenax, and scattered about in a hundred other volumes, are the materials from which Mr. Janvier has laboriously, intelligently, and accurately compiled this very valuable little work, which is thoroughly businesslike, without being unreadable. It is addressed to "students," but this is a word of wide signification, and may well be held to include all lovers and collectors of china who are not pure china-maniacs—a class which we would fain hope is becoming extinct. No one who really cares for china will not be glad to be able to study a little of its technicalities. It adds greatly to the pleasure of the few "pieces" which almost everyone now possesses to know not only their marks (if they have them), but to be able to see how the human hand and eye have worked, to be able to discern glaze from slip, earthenware from faïence, and underglaze colours from enamel. The history of china is the history of mankind, and it is something to be able to detect from the quality of paste whether the little piece of blue-and-white which delights you was made by a Chinaman, a Japanese, an Italian, a Dutchman, or an Englishman. Mr. Janvier's book will perhaps scarcely enable one to do this; but it will help, by fixing in the mind, by a glance or two at his carefully compiled tables, the principal dates in the history of the art, when such-and-such glazes were used and such-and-such pastes invented, to make ignorance unsatisfactory, and, by its short, but almost sufficient, list of standard books of all countries, enable anyone to perfect his knowledge who cares to do so. To those numerous persons of both sexes who pleasantly and usefully employ their leisure in decorating china it will give many valuable hints, and its extracts on the elements of decoration have been very happily selected. Although the author has generally preferred to give the views of others to his own, he has shown, not only by the judgment of his quotations, but by the original remarks with which they are accompanied, that he has not only much learning but sound taste, and may be safely taken as a guide in nearly all matters of which he treats. The errors and shortcomings of his volume—such as his omission of reference to Rhodian and Anatolian ware, and his mention of Persian hard porcelain—are far fewer than could have been expected. He, like Miss Young, has trusted Jacquemart too much.

The Great Historic Galleries of England. Vol. I. (Sampson Low and Co.) This serious attempt to bring within the reach of ordinary pockets faithful copies in black and white, or rather rich brown and cream colour, of some of the treasures of art which are contained in the great galleries (whether historic or not) of England is one which deserves, and no doubt will receive, large support. To the present handsome volume the chief contributors have been the Duke of Sutherland, the Earl of Ellesmere, Lord Lanerton, and Sir Richard Wallace. To the next, Mrs. Hope of Deepdene, whose very fine collection of Dutch masters forms the chief feature of the present exhibition at Burlington House, will lend her valuable aid. We have so frequently borne testimony to the excellence of the photographs as the separate parts were published that it is scarcely necessary to allude to them here. The volume is prefaced by an interesting Introduction by Lord Ronald Gower, whose labours as editor would seem, from the rest of the letterpress, to be of the slightest. Considerable praise must, however, be awarded to the selection of the pictures, and the programme for the next volume would be one of great interest if it were only for the miniatures which are promised us from the collection of the Queen.

OBITUARY.

MR. ALFRED ELMORE, R.A., who died last week in the sixty-sixth year of his age, was an artist much more talked of ten or fifteen years ago than at the time of his decease, though it is possibly not easy to say whether his work had perceptibly declined or whether the public taste had somewhat shifted from his work. He painted chiefly pictures of romantic incident, the subjects of which were occasionally drawn from his own fancy, but oftener derived from the elder fiction or poetry. One of the most impressive pictures he ever painted was that exhibited in or about 1864, and entitled Within Convent Walls. He did much graceful work that evidenced a large acquaintance with romantic literature and history, and much of his work was pleasant painting. Mr. Elmore was an Irishman. It is said that he was born on the day of the Battle of Waterloo. He came to London as a child, and was enabled to prosecute study in London and Paris. The number of his exhibited works is verily legion. More than one has been engraved. Mr. Elmore was a charming and friendly companion, as well as an artist of considerable worth.

THE death is announced of M. Jules Lafrance, who won the first Grand Prix de Rome for sculpture in 1870, and whose statue of Sauvage, exhibited in last year's Salon, is to be inaugurated shortly at Boulogne.

THE EXHIBITION OF THE GLASGOW INSTITUTE OF THE FINE ARTS.

MUCH of the attractiveness of this exhibition of the Glasgow Institute is due to the number and excellence of the London and foreign pictures which the directors have brought together, and which cannot fail to be interesting to a local public. The walls show us many of the prominent works of the Royal Academy and Grosvenor Exhibitions, among the rest the Rose Leaves of Mr. Albert Moore, a picture which one cannot see too often; Mr. R. W. Macbeth's Sedge Cutting in Wicken Fen, his Welcome as Flowers in May, and his single seated figure, entitled Expectation; Mr. A. C. Gow's Last Days of Edward VI.; Mr. Orchardson's delicate Young Housewife of the eighteenth century; and Mr. Croft's Marlborough after Ramilies. Mr. Holman Hunt's subject, The Plain of Esdras, from the Heights above Nazareth, has, we believe, not been exhibited in London—has certainly not been recently shown there. It is admirable in the thoroughness of its workmanship, and in the effect of softness and distance which is attained without any effect of mist or suppression of detail or local colour. Among the other landscapes are two indifferent works by Gustave Doré; a large Highland subject by Herkomer, somewhat heavy and wanting in atmosphere; Mr. MacWhirter's gnarled, tempest-worn pine, The Lord of the Glen; and an impressive scene by Mr. Oakes of daybreak among the lonely snow-tipped mountains, a heron and an otter—The Poachers from which the picture is titled—being the only living creatures visible in the solitude.

The art of deceased foreign painters is represented by several small but interesting examples. Chief among these is Millet's Going Home—a peasant family, with the father wheeling a barrow on which his child lies half-embedded among grass. The colour of this subject is splendidly rich and glowing, and the delicate realisation of the flesh-tints is wholly admirable. Several canvases show the handling of Diaz, Fortuny, Daubigny, Troyon, and Corot, the Landscape by the last-named artist being exquisitely clear and silvery in tone. Among living Continental painters we have Children Wading, by M. Israels; two or three of M. F. Buhot's clever but prosaic street scenes; a powerful bit of sea-painting by Mesdag; and examples of Fantin, Lalanne, A. Flameng, Tissot, and Aumonier.

Most of the members of the Scottish Academy contribute. The President and Mr. Barclay send portraits; and a fancy head by Mr. Herdman—Rosabella—is exceedingly refined in form and richly harmonious in colour. Mr. George Reid's Provost of Peterhead, Mr. McTaggart's Rev. Mr. Black, and Quartermaster Coull by Mr. James Irvine—one of the strongest of the Scottish portraitists—may be mentioned for their powerful handling and successful realism. Among Scottish painters unconnected with the Academy, J. F. Reid, John White, R. McGrigor, Joseph Henderson, R. W. Allan, and A. Melville treat landscape and rustic subjects; and Mr. R. Little and Mr. S. Reid show excellent flower pictures. Mr. A. K. Brown depicts Storm in the Fen Country in a great canvas, dark but for the distant red gleam of sunset above the low horizon; but by far the most impressive picture by a local artist is the Château Gaillard by Mr. David Murray, whose Highland Funeral and other contributions to the Grosvenor will be remembered. It shows a foreground with blossoming fruit-trees, the bend of a winding river, and the castellated château crowning a grassy height. The picture owes much of its poetic sentiment to the vivid rendering of the clear evening sky and of the rosy masses of clouds that appear above the ruins, and to the rich slumberous quality of the blue haze which floods the hollows of the distances.

JOHN M. GRAY.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE collection of French prints of the eighteenth century formed by M. Mulbacher will shortly be sold in Paris, and we understand that it will be on view at Mr. Thibaudeau's, 18 Green Street, Leicester Square, on Tuesday and Wednesday next, prior to its sale. M. Mulbacher's collection is considered to be the most complete that has ever been formed of the works of the masters in whom this amateur was interested. These were the little masters of France, "l'aimable et galante école du dix-huitième siècle." Even M. Octave de Béhague was less rich than M. Mulbacher in these prints; Baudouin, Lavreince, Freudeberg, Moreau, and the St.-Aubins have never yet been actively collected in England.

At a general meeting of the St. Mark's, Venice, Committee a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to Commendatore Azzurri, the President of the Academy of St. Luke, Rome, for his expression of opinion, at a special assembly of the Academy, on the subject of the preservation of St. Mark's. The committee, finding its sentiments so admirably set forth in the statement of the President, is desirous, for the future, to acknowledge the Academy of St. Luke as the centre and channel for any observations which it may find necessary to make on the subject.

We hear that Mr. May, of Dorset Road, Merton, S.W., has been contemplating the production of another magazine of etchings. It is proposed to call it English Etchings; and "the object of English Etchings," writes Mr. May, "is to afford amateurs the opportunity of publishing their work and of seeing what other amateurs are doing." There is probably a sufficient field for the labour Mr. May proposes to undertake, and we may wish success to his artistic adventure.

MR. JOHN BRETT, painter, Mr. Andrew Gow, painter, and Mr. William Burges, architect, have been elected Associates of the Royal Academy.

THE series of original sketches made in Tangier by Mr. Edward Goodall have been arranged on the walls of the studio of the Crystal Palace School of Art.

THE sub-Directorship of the new College of Egyptology at Cairo has been confided to M. Bourgoing, a distinguished French savant, whose life has been devoted to the study of hieroglyphic literature and Arab art. M. Bonnet, a well-known Egyptian traveller, is also attached to the mission, and will especially occupy himself with Arabic literature. The college, we understand, is by no means founded for the exclusive promotion of hieroglyphic studies, but will also keep in view the interests of Arab art and literature. The French Government undertakes the entire expenses of the college, in which professors and students will live together under one roof as a single family.

M. GABRIEL CHARMES, who was the prime mover in the creation of the new French College of Egyptology, has advised the Khedive to institute a committee for the preservation of ancient Arab mosques; and recommends that the committee be composed of qualified native and European savants learned in Arab art.

MR. WALTNER is engaged in etching a portrait of Rembrandt by himself from the painting in the National Gallery; Lady Camden, by Sir Joshua Reynolds; and The Wayfarers, by the late F. Walker, A.R.A. All the etchings are to be published by Messrs. Dowdeswell and Dowdeswells.

M. MASPERO has been appointed by the Khedive to succeed Mariette-Pasha as Director of the Boolak Museum and of archaeological excavations in Egypt.

THE first sitting of the Salon Commission took place last week, when the State officially relegated all its power into the hands of the Commission, leaving to it the sole management of future Salons. At the opening of the sitting M. Turquet, Under-Secretary of State, made a long declaration, in which he stated that the Government henceforward would only intervene in the affairs of the Salon à titre gracieux, and that for the rest the artists might take all the profits of the enterprise, subject, of course, to all the losses. The only right which the Government reserves is that of making purchases at the Salon and of giving commissions to artists for such works as it may deem desirable for the decoration of its museums and public buildings. French artists have thus obtained what they have long been striving for, and it remains to be seen what use they will make of their powers. One regulation already passed is that the number of works admitted shall not exceed 2,500. This will be a great relief to the weary public. There were, it will be remembered, upwards of 7,000 works in the last Salon.

M. CHAMPFLEURY is writing an interesting series of articles in L'Art, entitled "L'Art, la Littérature, et la Musique d'après les Vignettes romantiques." A good many of these vignettes from various romantic works of the past century, both in verse and prose, are given in illustration. It is a novel subject well treated.

THE Fine Arts Society of Nice has just opened its exhibition of paintings for 1881. There are 780 works in the gallery, some of which are really remarkable. The grouping of the pictures is especially happy. M. Levrot, Director of the School of Architecture of Nice, and M. Bonnardel, Director of the School of Fine Arts of Nice, have been made officers of the French Academy.

THE January number of the Revue des Arts décoratifs contains a very beautiful photogravure of the elegant coffee-pot executed by MM. Broeck, Trotte, Heintz, and Rose, to which the Grand Prix of the Union Centrale was awarded.

THE Italian Government has resolved to complete the hall of entrance to the Laurentian Library, Florence, designed by Michelangelo, in conformity with his plans. The staircase is by Giorgio Vasari. There can be no doubt that when finished this hall of entrance will have a very magnificent aspect. The long gallery of the library is to be extended as planned by Michelangelo, and, by means of the greater space thus obtained, the superb contents of this unique library will be better arranged and more conveniently seen.

THE third exhibition of pictures which have been hidden away in the store-rooms of the gallery of the Uffizi is now on view, by order of the Minister of Public Instruction. It was a very judicious step thus to exhibit these works. This third instalment consists of 792 pictures, partly religious and partly very much the reverse. They amply justify the action of the officials who consigned them to the obscurity of the stores, for there is not one picture among them of the slightest merit or value. They illustrate in a remarkable manner the prodigious number of very bad pictures which have been painted in the course of centuries. They are types of many more of the same quality, and, while the world has not suffered by their concealment, it will be no loss whatever if the whole of them are destroyed.

WE have already mentioned the rage that exists in Paris and Brussels for panoramas. One is now exhibiting in Paris of a very attractive kind. It represents all the celebrities of Paris—aristocratic, literary, artistic, Ministerial, and theatrical—moving about on their business or pleasure on the broad Place de la Concorde. Victor Hugo, for instance, is safely mounted on the front seat of an omnibus, and with him Banville and Leconte de Lisle. Coppée runs after the well-laden vehicle, making signs to the conductor. Gambetta is driving in his carriage from the Chamber, which he has just left. Gérôme, Champfleury, and Carrier-Belleuse are coming out of the Institute—all the well-known celebrities of Paris, in fact, are seen collected together in this busy place. The likenesses are said to be surprising and the illusion complete. The panorama is in truth the work of an excellent artist, André Gill; and his panorama is not a mere showman's performance, but is affirmed by the Evénement to be "une œuvre artistique de premier ordre."

THE French Ecole des Beaux-Arts has restored a series of pictures which will be of the utmost interest to all concerned in the history of art. These pictures are the portraits of several of the painters of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries who were members of the Academy. All artists who were admitted as members were bound to present to the society two diploma pictures. As a rule, the new members presented their own portraits, or portraits of other members of the Association. These portraits formed a valuable collection, dating from the foundation of the society to the close of the reign of Louis XV. The series was broken up during the troubled times of the Revolution; many of the pictures were lost or destroyed, while others were placed in the Louvre, in the galleries at Versailles, and some in various small provincial museums. The Ecole des Beaux-Arts, however, contrived to keep some eighty portraits, which have just been restored by M. Mercier, and placed in a gallery where the public will be able to see them. Amateurs will be gladdened by the sight of several specially fine portraits, notably those of Sébastien, Bourdon, Lebrun, Blanchard (received in 1665), and of Martin de Charmoy, the President of the Academy.

By a happy chance the Royal Picture Gallery of Dresden has been able to secure a very rare and precious picture by Velasquez. It represents a large group of ideal full-length portraits, its subject being a number of noble persons at the Court of Philip IV., who are here given under the mythological disguise of Diana and her followers. Diana herself, the Director supposes, is very probably the second wife of Philip, Queen Maria Anna. The whole group is very gracefully composed and of excellent workmanship, imitating very closely the manner of P. P. Rubens, with whom Velasquez became acquainted in 1628. The picture is one of Velasquez' best works, and is said to have been painted by the master for the King's hunting-castle, Torre-della-Parada; in 1710 it seems to have been taken away in the confusion of war, and was acquired, in 1840, by Count P. Fersen, a great amateur in St. Petersburg, from whose collection it has now passed into the possession of the Dresden Gallery.

THE December number of the Revue des Arts décoratifs is wholly devoted to the reports of juries and other documents relating to the late exhibition of metal work organised by the Union Centrale. Plates are given of the plaque honorifique and the diploma awarded. The next exhibition of the Union will take place in 1882, and will comprise tissues, paper, skins, and wood (applied to furniture).

L'Art has of late been excelling itself in the number and excellence of its etchings and other illustrations. It has already put forth two double numbers this year, each containing two full-page etchings of remarkable works. We would mention especially an admirably clear and delicately executed piece by A. Boulard from a picture by de Marne in the possession of Mr. John Wilson. Every face in the festive group is distinctly rendered and its expression preserved, although these faces are so small that their execution in etching must have required the greatest care. We may also point out two etchings, one of the Sleeping Servant by van der Meer, and the other of the Child with the Gaufre, executed respectively by Charles Courty and F. A. Milius, and the portraits of Louis del Rio and his sons—three solemn-looking white faces painted by Moro and effectively rendered by Gaujean.

THE recent numbers of the American Art Review have hardly been up to the mark. They have been defaced with several reproductions of the nefarious art of Antoine Wiertz—art which seems to set before itself as an ideal the literal representation of ugliness and horror. The articles, too, have not lately been of very general interest, at least to Europeans. But the etchings by American artists continue to be a charming feature in the Review; and that by a young man of twenty-four, Otto Bacher, given in the last number, is full of talent and promise.

THE STAGE.

"DIVORCE."

Divorce, the new extravagant comedy which was brought out at the Vaudeville on Saturday, is adapted by Mr. Robert Reece from a French piece which has not yet been acted. If the original is as funny as is the adaptation the Parisians have a hearty laugh in store for them. Divorce, as we find it at our Vaudeville, is good or bad according as we take it. If we seek to analyse it too profoundly, it is bad; it presents us with more than one improbable character, and more than one impossible situation. But if we suffer it to amuse us as a frank and clever caricature, then it is good, and will amuse us very much. It deals principally with the industrious efforts of an elderly gentleman to push the fortunes of his son at the bar—in other words, to secure him a first brief. These efforts take the enterprising father into strange places and strange company, and there is in his character and in all that he does an engaging mixture of cunning and naïveté. One of his first achievements is to drag into the chambers of his son, who is then absent, a London flower-girl, whose newly wedded husband has, he understands, been accused of manslaughter; and extreme is his disappointment when he finds that the impetuous client he has been seeking is charged only with the assassination of an irritating bird—a parrot—which, as he had gone by to his work, had been wont to denounce him as "thief." The ridiculous and trivial incident affords opportunity for two pieces of character-acting of a remarkable kind. Mr. Thorne, here, and elsewhere throughout the piece, is as entertaining as possible in the part of the industrious seeker after practice for his son; and Miss Lydia Cowell performs the part of the flower-girl—the part is limited to a single scene—with a most extraordinary mixture of absolute truth and of stage effectiveness; or, to be more correct, this is an instance in which absolute truth may be maintained, from beginning to end, without fear of sacrificing stage effectiveness. The flower-girl is a lively specimen of her class, not altogether without charm, though typically crude and rough; Mr. Reece has put into her mouth some of the choicest and most expressive slang of Clare Market and "the Dials," and Miss Cowell utters this with an accent that never fails her. Expressions of the face wholly instinctive, words and phrases flung at you just as they rise in the mind, and owning not the very slightest control of training or manner—to these Miss Cowell does absolute justice; and we have no hesitation in saying that her picture of a street-girl, rough, humorous, and good-hearted, quick at anger and at gratitude, is as complete a portrait, as complete a piece of character-acting, as we have seen upon the stage for years. If Divorce were silly and dull in every scene but this scene—which certainly it is not—it would be worth going to the theatre for this scene alone. The actress who can do this part as Miss Cowell does it may or may not be capable of more exalted performance—successes in character-acting are sometimes made by those who are not much heard of afterwards in parts more ambitious—but this has not got to us any of the air of a chance success; and, whether it be so or not, the perfect art of the present performance must be warmly recognised. It says a good deal for the sterling qualities of the whole extravagant comedy that its obvious and even over-charged caricature should still be not only endurable but entertaining when one has just seen one single performance into which caricature does not enter at all; and, in truth, all the many adventures of the enterprising father of the briefless barrister are genuinely laughable, even when they are farthest from probability. The piece has been described as a little in the genre of the Criterion; and, as far as the subject and the extravagance of its treatment are concerned, this is so. But the Criterion, with all its popular successes, has not often given us a play in which the occasion for amusement has been so continual, and in which some true study of character has been the basis of the fun. If it is really laughter that people want at the theatre—and we take leave to think that sometimes it is—then there should be a long run in store for Divorce. It is generally well acted. We have implied already that Mr. Thorne is at his cleverest and his quaintest. Mr. Maclean, as one seeking divorce, but not seriously depressed by the fancied necessity for it, is cheery and impulsive. Mr. Graham's small part—perhaps the least telling in the piece—is very creditably walked through; for acting there is little opportunity. The mock tragedy of Miss Marie Illington—a "tragic comedian" not in the sense of Mr. George Meredith—is in keeping with the tone of the piece, even where it is a little stiff and forced. And Miss Cicely Richards is known to be by far the best maid-servant available for purposes of comedy or farce, while there are other characters which she can as pleasantly assume. The piece then is happily played.

STAGE NOTES.

Othello, at Sadler's Wells, played for a few nights prior to the performance of Macbeth, proves one of the most interesting of the Shaksperian revivals undertaken there. We spoke of it last autumn, when it was first performed at Islington, and need only add a few words this week. Desdemona has become perhaps the best of all Miss Isabel Bateman's parts. She plays it with gentleness, grace, and impressive earnestness. Mrs. Crowe's Emilia is not less adequate. There is nothing in the part that the actress has not understood, and nothing in it which she has not discreetly as well as vigorously interpreted. Mr. Vezin's Iago—the result of conscientious and intelligent study—yet seems to us to hit the mark less exactly. Certainly it is perfectly unstaged—and so far good—but its realism and homeliness are of a kind that perhaps detract from the force of the impression produced. Mr. Vezin does not seem to us quite to hit the just mean between a too marked display of villainy and a too successful concealment of it. Some hints may be given to an audience that are yet rightly withheld from Othello in his blind confidence. Mr. Warner as Othello pleases us exceedingly. We cannot consider that he is open to a charge that has been made against him—that of over-emphasising minor matters and giving undue significance to little things. He well conveys the instinctive nobility of the Moor, and likewise his instinctive devotion. The Moor, with him, is a great, free, large-hearted character, left at the end much as Nature had made him at the beginning. The quality of Mr. Warner's voice is heard advantageously in the sonorous lines of Othello, and his delivery of blank verse is of rare excellence.

MR. EDWIN BOOTH's Iago has, as we anticipated, proved one of his finest impositions. Those who, in America, best knew the whole range of his power, had likewise prophesied that the English public would find him most satisfactory as Iago, and there are excellent reasons why this should be. Mr. Booth, though of most agreeable presence and happy delivery, has not quite the sympathetic power to put himself en rapport with his audience; and the absence of that power lends an additional difficulty to his assumption of parts in which sympathy between player and playgoers is almost the first thing needed. It is not by reason of Iago's villainy that Mr. Booth succeeds in interpreting him to us—several actors could be named far more obviously fitted for the assumption of villainy than is the fine-looking American gentleman who has just satisfied us as Iago; but it is by reason of Iago's coldness—a character which makes even less demand than Mr. Booth might well be able to meet on the emotional faculties of the actor representing it. Nothing in Iago is beyond the range of Mr. Booth's power. He shows, in nearly every scene in which this most polished of stage scoundrels is permitted to appear, his discretion, his intellectual appreciation, and his command of all the materials which must lie at the service of the experienced player outside the player's own nature. A performance never overdone in any particular, reaching all its effects without visible effort, and at the end of it leaving upon the mind no suggestion of imperfection or deficiency must necessarily be one of rare occurrence on the English stage; yet there is hardly exaggeration in saying that such a performance is to be seen in the Iago of Mr. Booth. It has always to be remembered—and in the present instance the limitation implies no shadow of reproach—that it is the intellect and not the feelings that Mr. Booth appeals to. Art criticism has been defined as an intellectual light thrown upon art. Acting is a practical criticism of the art of the dramatist. Those who find nothing insufficient in the definition we have quoted will find nothing insufficient in the acting of Mr. Booth. For ourselves we are content to say that his acting is wholly satisfactory as Iago.

Nana is the filthiest novel that has been written for a generation; even those who would be very sorry to be squeamish must allow that it is disgustingly raw. Yet the evil celebrity which it attained and the popularity of M. Zola—whose popularity is sometimes deserved—sufficed to ensure a dramatized version of it being presented on the Parisian stage, and this version, arranged by M. William Busnach—a gentleman of whom Mlle. Sarah Bernhardt made an exceedingly clever bust—was brought out on Saturday night at the Théâtre de l'Ambigu. It was at the Théâtre de l'Ambigu that the adaptation of M. Zola's far greater work, L'Assommoir, was produced—also adapted, and very skilfully, too, by M. William Busnach—but there is not much comparison to be made between the two pieces. It is rather curious, however, that while it should have been thought effective, not to say necessary, to somewhat idealise and elevate Gervaise, the heroine of the Assommoir, it has now been found possible to present the new heroine, Nana, in situations of a deeper degradation than befel her mother even in the novel, not to speak of the play. The public cheerfully receive the revelations of the intimate life of Nana, who has none of Gervaise's quiet charm, none of her affection, none of her pretty tenderness, but who is, from almost the beginning to almost the end, the good-humoured but unprincipled instrument of the brutality of men. The stage representative of Nana, it is said, however—and we can truly believe—is not carnal enough to stand for the young woman of whom so lavish a display was made for the benefit of "Son Altesse," when Nana acted in a féerie or a revue. Mlle. Massin, the pleasant, if not very dramatic, actress who appears as Nana, is of too delicate a type to do justice to the character; and, though public morality may conceivably gain thereby, the stage effect is less satisfactory than when the gentle Gervaise of the Assommoir was represented by the gentle Mme. Hélène Petit. Apart, too, from the visible inappropriateness of putting Mlle. Massin into so disgusting a part as that of Nana, it must be confessed that there is no comparing Mlle. Massin with Mme. Hélène Petit; for while Mlle. Massin is lightly engaging, coquette, and agreeable, Mme. Hélène Petit is simply one of the greatest artists on the French stage, and her Gervaise was as sympathetic and as delicate a performance as any that may be seen. Nana's success, it is therefore evident, will not be due to the actress who plays Nana. Some of it may be due to the quite excellent low comedian who plays a good man's part in it—M. Dailly, who played the Mes-Bottes of L'Assommoir. But the greater part of the success of Nana will be due to the cynical frankness with which Nana's life and the air of her apartments—where order never reigns and luxury never brings comfort—are displayed upon the stage. The most morbid curiosity in Paris may perhaps be satisfied by the piece; but we should imagine that even the most morbid curiosity would have arrived at satiety by the time that Nana, at the end of the play, is displayed with the pustules of the small-pox, which is just going to kill her, very evident to all the spectators. This may be realism, but it is not art. It is not even skilful artifice. Yet the play—thanks to the effort of M. Busnach—is not so bad as the novel. Both appear inartistic, but the drama does not quite successfully rival the romance in the monotony of its grossness.

MUSIC.

H. HOFMANN'S "MELUSINA," ETC.

THE second subscription concert of the Borough of Hackney Choral Association took place last Tuesday week. The attendance was very good, notwithstanding the inclement weather.

The programme was one of great interest, and included Heinrich Hofmann's cantata Melusina. It was performed at Signor Garcia's concert at St. James's Hall in 1877, but only with pianoforte accompaniment. This was the first performance in London with orchestra. H. Hofmann, one of the most interesting composers of the present day, was born at Berlin in 1842. Besides a large number of smaller compositions he has produced a symphony, Erithjof, which has been given at the Crystal Palace; two operas; and two large cantatas, Melusina and Cinderella. The former is founded on an old German legend. Count Raymond (Mr. Thureley Beale) falls in love with Melusina (Miss Annie Marriott), the fair Queen of the Water Nymphs. He marries her, after promising to allow her to leave him each seventh day. Misfortunes come on Raymond's land; the people declare that his wife is a witch, and demand her life. In despair he watches Melusina on the seventh day, and finds her a mermaid in the stream, surrounded by her companions. The King of the Water Spirits (Mr. Frederick Bevan) is summoned, and dooms Melusina to live for ever in ocean waves. In the raptures of a last embrace, Count Raymond expires. Such is a brief outline of the romantic tale. There is a small part for Clotilda (Raymond's mother), which was taken by Miss Marian McKenzie. The music is full of charm and poetry. The composer expresses his thoughts in a perfectly natural manner, and often with originality and dramatic power. It is true that he seems greatly guided by Mendelssohn, Gade, and even Goetz; and he is no stranger to the works and theories of Wagner. Yet we may say, as Schumann said of Mendelssohn, whose pianoforte sonata reminded him at times of Weber and Beethoven, "this is not caused by weak originality, but rather by intellectual relationship." We would especially notice the charming choruses of Water Nymphs, the effective chorus of the people, the scene of Melusina and the Nymphs at the fountain, and the whole of the dramatic finale. One word about the excellent orchestration. The composer has written a very good pianoforte accompaniment, but to hear the work properly it is absolutely necessary to have the orchestra. Herr Hofmann is a master of instrumentation; his ingenious combinations and constant and effective use of the wind and strings as solo instruments add wonderfully to the interest of the composition, and attract attention from the first to the last bar. The work is written for an ordinary orchestra; the trombones are not used till the close of the duet when Raymond swears to keep his oath; they are employed afterwards with charming effect alone, and in combination with the horns both in forte and piano passages quite after the manner of Schubert. The singing of the chorus was on the whole excellent; the ladies particularly distinguished themselves. The work is extremely difficult, and the performance was not altogether free from blemish, but it was good enough to enable us thoroughly to enjoy the beautiful music. Mr. E. Prout conducted the whole with great care and ability. The second part of the concert included Beethoven's Egmont; Gade's Spring's Message; E. Prout's minuet and trio (repeated by desire); a scena, Hero and Leander, by A. Goring Thomas, well sung by Miss Marriott; a chorus by F. E. Gladstone; and Nicolai's overture, The Merry Wives of Windsor.

Mr. Carrodus, the distinguished English violinist, gave a violin recital at St. James's Hall on Thursday evening, January 20. It was a novel and interesting experiment. The programme included four pieces by Molière; Spohr's adagio from the ninth concerto excellently played; but more especially would we note his fine rendering of Bach's wonderful chaconne in D minor. In this piece he was able to exhibit to perfection his full tone and faultless execution. There were also pieces by Ernst, Vieuxtemps, Paganini, &c. Mr. Frank Amor and Master John Carrodus (a boy of promise) were the accompanists. Despite the unfavourable weather, there was a fair attendance, and Mr. Carrodus was well received and enthusiastically applauded throughout the concert.

We would notice briefly the last Monday Popular Concerts. Miss Dora Schirmacher was the pianist on January 24, and gave an unusually good rendering of Beethoven's difficult variations in C minor. Her touch is excellent, and her mechanism clear and neat. Mme. Néruda was the violinist and Mr. Frank Boyle the vocalist.

On Monday, January 31, Mlle. Krebs was the pianist, and gave an excellent performance of Bach's "Prelude and Fugue à la Tarentella." She also took part with Signor Piatti in some cleverly written though somewhat monotonous variations for piano and violoncello by Willner, the present Hofkapellmeister at Dresden. Another novelty was a trio in B flat for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello by Mr. F. W. Davenport, the composer of the Alexandra Palace prize-symphony. The trio is well written; the themes are pleasing and the workmanship clever and not too elaborate.

Mr. Oscar Beringer gave his fourth annual pianoforte recital last Wednesday afternoon at St. James's Hall. The programme of a piano recital requires above all things variety, not only of names, but also of pieces, and we cannot but think it was a mistake to give four long sonatas (although by different composers) at one sitting. It was a heavy dose, fatiguing both to player and audience. The sonatas chosen were, however, of the greatest interest. The first was Beethoven's in B flat (op. 106). The scherzo and difficult fugue were magnificently played, but the opening allegro was not given with the requisite dignity, nor the adagio with sufficient warmth of expression. After this came Weber's sonata in A flat (op. 39), the finest of the four sonatas left to us by that genial and romantic composer. We were not pleased with the rendering of this work; the first and last movements were taken at a rate which spoilt much of the charm and poetry of the music. The third sonata was one by Brahms in F minor (op. 5). As the opus number shows, it is an early composition, and bears strong traces of the influence of various composers, especially Schubert and Mendelssohn; but the individuality and peculiar style of the composer are already manifest. It is a most interesting work, and very difficult to play. The last sonata was Liszt's in B minor. Various opinions are entertained respecting this so-called sonata, but all musicians will agree that it is a work full of technical difficulties and most brilliant passages. We have freely expressed our opinion with regard to Mr. Beringer's playing of the first two sonatas, and we would now mention that his rendering of the last two was highly satisfactory, not only mechanically, but intellectually and poetically. The loud applause with which the pianist was greeted at the close of the recital testified to the attention and approval of his audience. Considering the bad weather, the attendance was fairly good.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

BIBLE REVISION.

THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wicli. 1381.—Tyndale, 1534.—Crammer, 1539.—Geneva, 1577.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611.—1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."

Overper.

London: S. BAGSTER & SONS, 15, PATERNOSTER-ROW.
And sold by all booksellers.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

A RIMAS. By H. PECKWATER, A.M.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & CO.

THEATRES.

CONNAUGHT THEATRE.

Sole Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

To-night, at 8, OFFENBACH'S Comic Opera, in three acts, LA FILLE DU TAMBOUR MAJOR.
 Misses Eugene Edwards, E. Iman, Rose Fleury, Kate Humming, Fanny Edwards, and Amy Grundy; Messrs. Aynsley Cook, J. Braunsdew, H. St. Maur, A. Collini, J. Sweetman, W. H. Woodfield, &c.
 The waltz, tarantella, and minuet, composed in 1659, will be danced by a selected corps de ballet.
 New and elegant dresses by Mrs. May; scenery by Albert Calcott; efficient chorus. Military and orchestral bands.
 Preceded, at 7.30, by a Farce,
 WHICH IS WHICH?

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8, an adaptation of the Comedy in five acts, ADRIENNE LECOUVREUR.
 Messrs. Forbes-Robertson, Beveridge, Lin Rayne, Darley, Doone, &c., and G. W. Anson; Mesdames Modjeska, Emery, Varro, J. Clifford, Garnier, &c., and Mrs. Bernard Beere.
 Box-office open 11 to 5. Doors open 7.15. Carriages 10.45. No fees.
 Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

DRURY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

MOTHER GOOSE,
 By E. L. Blanchard. The success of the season.
 Misses Kate Sumley, Ada Blanche, Addie Blanche, D'Auban, Hewitt, Do Vere, Howard, Farquhar, Hogarth, Ridgway, Braham, and Payne; the children of the School of Dancing, under Miss Katti Lanner; Messrs. Arthur Roberts, John D'Auban, James Fawn, Kinghorne, Ross, Wyatt, Riddle, Abrahams, and Girard; Mesdames Palladino, Percival, Fisher, Evans, Rowella, and Cote.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
 At 8.15, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called THE UPPER CRUST.
 Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, E. W. Garden, G. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Misses Lillian Cavalier, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thornc.
 At 10.15, ICI ON PARLE FRANCAIS.
 SPRIGGINS—Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
 Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to 25 5s. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. CHARLES WINDHAM.

Every evening, a new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, entitled LA BELLE NORMANDE.
 Composed by MM. YASSER and GREVE, the libretto by Messrs. A. MALTEY and R. MANSELL. Scenery by Mr. RTAN.
 Supported by a powerful company.
 Preceded, at 7.30, by a new Comedietta, by H. WILLIAMSON, entitled THE GENIES.
 Box-office open daily from 11 till 5.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, at 8, OTHELLO.
 Mr. WARNER and Mr. YEZIN re-appear as OTHELLO and IAGO, characters in which they have been fortunate enough to gain distinguished success.
 Miss BATEMAN (Mrs. Crowe) resumes the character of EMILIA, played by her at the Lyceum with very remarkable success.
 Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 6.30. No fees.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. D'O'LY CARTE.

At 8.15, THE PIKATES OF PENANCE.
 A new and original Melodramatic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN.
 Preceded, at 8, by IN THE SULK.
 By Messrs. FRANK DESPREZ and ALFRED CELLIER.
 Messrs. J. Grossmith, Richard Temple, Richard Harrington, F. Thornton, Durward Lely, Geo. Temple; Mesdames Emilio Petrelli, Jessie Bond, R. Brandreth, Gwynne, Barlow, and Alice Barnett. Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

At 8.30 a new Comedy, in three acts, called THE COLONEL.
 By F. C. BERNARD.
 Preceded, at 7.45, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDY, in HONOUR BOUND.
 Messrs. Coghlan, James Fernandez, W. Herbert, Eric Bayley, Rowland Buckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Mesdames Amy Rosalie, Myra Holmo, C. Graham, Leigh Murray, &c.
 New scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.
 Doors open 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER GOUGH.

Mr. EDWIN BOOTH.
 LAST NIGHTS of Shakespeare's Tragedy, OTHELLO.
 Mr. EDWIN BOOTH will alternate the characters of OTHELLO and IAGO MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, and FRIDAYS—OTHELLO; TUESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS—IAGO.
 Mr. HENRY FORESTER has been specially engaged to support Mr. Booth.
 Specially selected Company. Preceded, at 7.15, by the laughable Farce, THAT BLESSED BABY.
 Doors open at 6.15. Box-office open daily.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss KATE LAWLER.

This evening, at 6.15, THE SECRET.
 At 7.30, BOY BELLS.
 To conclude, at 9.30, with DOX JUAN JUNIOR.
 The whole produced under the direction of Edward Nighton.
 Musical Director, Herr Max Schreier. Secretary and Treasurer, Frank Rothay.
 Acting and General Business Manager for Kate Lawler, CECIL RALEIGH.

Just published. Size, 5 feet 8 inches by 4 feet 6 inches.

PHILIPS' NEW MAP OF MIDDLESEX,

Including large portions of SURREY, KENT, ESSEX, &c., showing clearly the Parliamentary Boroughs, Hundreds, and Parishes; also the Railways, brought down to the present date, with their Stations distinctly marked. Carefully reduced from the Six-inch Ordnance Survey to the Scale of Two Inches to One Mile.

By JOHN BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S.

Prices—On Four Sheets, 18s.; mounted on Black Rollers and Varnished, or in Case, £1 1s.; mounted on Mahogany Rollers and Varnished, £1 5s.

LONDON: GEORGE PHILIP & SON, 32, FLEET STREET; AND LIVERPOOL.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

COCOA

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."

Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."

W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."

CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.F., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
 A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

"THE BEST SELECTIONS OF THE BEST GROWTHS."

WILLS' CIGARETTES.

"DUBEC" (MILD).

"YENIJEH" (FULL FLAVOUR).

SOLD BY ALL PRINCIPAL DEALERS.

Every Genuine Cigarette bears the name of

W. D. & H. O. WILLS.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on
 MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM.
 The original, best, and most liberal.
 Cash prices.

No extra charge for time given.
 Illustrated Price Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
 F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from 25 6s. to 50 guineas.
 Drawing-room Suites, from 45 9s. to 45 guineas.
 Dining-room Suites, from 27 7s. to 40 guineas.
 And all other goods in great variety.
 F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
 Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
 Promotes Appetite and Improves Digestion.
 Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
 Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

fluid combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion, by gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fullness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 4s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

PROTECTION FROM FIRE.
BRYANT & MAY'S

PATENT SAFETY

MATCHES.

EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

ADVANTAGES.

Are not POISONOUS
 Are free from SMELL
 Are manufactured
 Without Phosphorus
 Are perfectly harmless
 To the Operatives employed
 Are very DAMP PROOF
 LIGHT ONLY ON THE BOX.
 EIGHT PRIZE MEDALS.

PROTECTION TO HEALTH.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
 MAYFAIR, W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
 A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
 1st March, 1880. FRANCIS RAYNSCROFT, Manager.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready, Vols. I. and II., with Illustrations, demy 8vo, price 21s. each.

A DICTIONARY OF MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

BY EMINENT WRITERS, ENGLISH AND FOREIGN.

Edited by GEORGE GROVE, D.C.L.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

"As a complete account of the biographical as well as technical materials relating to the art of music and its history, Mr. Grove's Dictionary is without precedent in England."—Quarterly Review.

"Dr. Grove's Dictionary will be a boon to every intelligent lover of music."—Saturday Review.

Now ready, 4 vols., crown 8vo, each 7s. 6d.

THE ENGLISH POETS:

Selections, with Critical Introductions by various Writers, and a General Introduction

By MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Edited by THOMAS HUMPHRY WARD, M.A., late Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford.

Vol. I. CHAUCER to DONNE.

Vol. II. BEN JONSON to DRYDEN.

Vol. III. ADDISON to BLAKE.

Vol. IV. WORDSWORTH to SYDNEY DOBELL.

The following Writers have contributed to the Work:—

The DEAN of WESTMINSTER—The DEAN of ST. PAUL'S—Lord HOUGHTON—Sir HENRY TAYLOR—MATTHEW ARNOLD—T. ARNOLD—W. T. ARNOLD—A. C. BRADLEY—J. COMYNS CARR—J. C. COLLINS—W. J. COURTHOPE—AUSTIN DOBSON—Prof. DOWDEN—E. W. GOSSE—Prof. HALES—W. E. HENLEY—A. LANG—W. MINTO—F. W. H. MYERS—Prof. NICHOL—W. H. PATER—MARK PATTISON—E. J. PAYNE—A. M. F. ROBINSON—G. SAINTSBURY—Dr. SERVICE—G. A. SIMCOX—Prof. SKEAT—GOLDWIN SMITH—A. C. SWINBURNE—J. A. SYMONDS—T. H. WARD (the Editor)—Mrs. T. H. WARD—Prof. A. W. WARD—W. THEODORE WATTS.

"An excellent design admirably executed. . . . Mr. Ward and his coadjutors may be congratulated on having produced a valuable contribution to the critical knowledge of English literature, and a thoroughly representative selection of examples."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"A work of the very highest excellence, which promises to be a most valuable addition to the standard criticism of English literature."—Academy.

NEW NOVEL, BY HENRY JAMES, JEN.

WASHINGTON SQUARE: the Pension Beaurepas:

a Bundle of Letters. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

LOUKIS LARAS; or, the Reminiscences of a Chiote

Merchant during the Greek War of Independence. From the Greek of D. BIKELAS. Translated, with Introduction on the Rise and Development of Modern Greek Literature, by J. GENNADIUS, late Chargé d'Affaires at the Greek Legation in London. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

DISTURBED IRELAND: being the Letters written during the Years 1880–81. By BERNARD H. BECKER, Special Commissioner of the Daily News. Crown 8vo, with Route Maps, 6s.

"Nothing better in the way of special correspondence has, perhaps, ever been seen. The book will be most valuable to every M.P. wishing to understand the burning question of the time."—World.

THE STEAM ENGINE and its INVENTORS: an Historical Sketch. By ROBERT L. GALLOWAY, Mining Engineer. Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 10s. 6d.

A SHORT MANUAL of the HISTORY of INDIA,

with an Account of INDIA AS IT IS. The Soil, Climate, and Productions; the People—their Races, Religions, Public Works, and Industries; the Civil Services and System of Administration. By ROGER LETHBRIDGE, M.A., C.I.E., Press Commissioner with the Government of India, late Scholar of Exeter College, &c., &c. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE MYTHE of LIFE, and other Sermons; with an Introduction on the Social Mission of the Church. By CHARLES W. STUBBS, Vicar of Granborough, Bucks. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"We strongly recommend this little volume."—Spectator.

Eighteenth Annual Publication, Revised after Official Returns.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK for 1881: a

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the Civilised World. By FREDERICK MARTIN. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"No statesman, member of Parliament, or publicist can afford to dispense with it, and to all private persons who desire to have an intelligent notion of the different nations it will be an admirable guide."—Daily News.

THE YEAR'S ART: a Concise Epitome of all matters

relating to the Arts of PAINTING, SCULPTURE, and ARCHITECTURE which have occurred during the year 1880, together with information respecting the events of the year 1881. Compiled by MARCUS B. HUISS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"It is sold at half-a-crown, and we would willingly have given a guinea for it." Portfolio.

ARISTOTLE. The Metaphysics, Book I. Translated

into English Prose, with marginal Analysis, and Summary of each Chapter. By a CAMBRIDGE GRADUATE. Demy 8vo, 5s.

MACMILLAN'S CLASSICAL SERIES.—NEW VOLUMES.

OVID.—FASTI. Edited, with Notes and Introductions, by G. H. HALLAM, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Assistant-Master at Harrow. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

PLAUTUS.—MILES GLORIOSUS. A Revised Text, with Notes. By R. Y. TYRRELL, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Dublin. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

MACMILLAN'S ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.—NEW VOLUME.

CAESAR. Scenes from the Fifth and Sixth Books of the Gallic War. Edited, with Notes, &c., by C. COLBECK, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Assistant-Master at Harrow. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 458.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

THE NEW SEASON.

Mudie's Select Library was established in 1842, in order to meet the growing demand of the age for a Higher Class of Books than could then be readily obtained on moderate terms from the ordinary Circulating Libraries.

From its commencement the original purpose of the Library has been kept steadily in view. The Best Books of every shade of opinion, on all subjects of general interest, have been taken in large numbers—Hundreds, and in some instances Thousands of Copies of the Leading Works of every Season having been placed in circulation.

The prosperity of the Library is in great measure due to the co-operation of those Subscribers who chiefly require Books of sterling interest and merit. In the selection of Books, great care is always taken to study their wishes, and to make the Library not only 'Select,' but comprehensive.

The best Works in History, Biography, Religion, Philosophy, Travel and Adventure; and the Higher Class of Fiction, continue to be taken in large numbers on the day of publication, and fresh copies are added as the demand increases.

Arrangements have again been made with the Leading Publishers for an ample supply of the Principal Works already announced for the New Season, and of all other Forthcoming Books of general interest as they appear.

FIRST-CLASS SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA PER ANNUM,

For a Constant Succession of the Newest Books.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY SUBSCRIPTION, TWO GUINEAS PER ANNUM,

For the Free Delivery of Books in every part of London.

BOXES AND PARCELS OF THE NEWEST BOOKS

ARE FORWARDED DAILY TO

LITERARY INSTITUTIONS, BOOK SOCIETIES, AND READING ROOMS,

IN EVERY PART OF THE COUNTRY,

ON THE LOWEST POSSIBLE TERMS.

THE NAMES OF NEW SUBSCRIBERS ARE ENTERED DAILY.

Revised Catalogues of Works recently added to the Library, and of Surplus Copies withdrawn for Sale at greatly reduced prices, are now ready, and will be forwarded, post-free, on application.

All the Books in Circulation and on Sale at MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY may also be obtained by all Subscribers to

MUDIE'S LIBRARY, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

And (by order) from all Booksellers in connexion with the Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), New Oxford Street.

CITY OFFICE: 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
MR. RUSKIN'S LETTERS, by the Rev. MARK PATTISON	109
GAIRDNER'S THREE FIFTEENTH-CENTURY CHRONICLES, by E. PEACOCK	110
WARD'S ENGLISH POETS: WORDSWORTH TO DOBELL, by the Rev. Principal SHARP	111
GOLDSMID'S BIOGRAPHY OF OUTRAM, by ANDREW WILSON	113
CURRENT LITERATURE	114
NOTES AND NEWS	115
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	116
OBITUARY: THOMAS CARLYLE, by Prof. E. DOWDEN; HENRY NICOL, by H. SWEET, &c.	117-9
SELECTED BOOKS	119
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Roman Inscription at Brough-by-Stanemore, by W. Thompson Watkin; Captain Burton's "Lusiads," by Capt. R. P. Burton; Mandeville's Travels, by E. B. Nicholson; "Iazza," by the Rev. H. G. Tomkins; Kock's "Greek Comic Fragments," by Prof. J. P. Mahaffy	119-20
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	120
DARWIN'S POWER OF MOVEMENT IN PLANTS, by the Rev. G. HENSLOW	120
OBITUARY: MR. JOHN GOULD, BARON DEMBOWSKI	122
NOTES OF TRAVEL	122
SCIENCE NOTES	122
PHILOLOGY NOTES	123
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	123
YEAST'S FLORENCE, by H. WALLIS	123
THE RECENTLY DISCOVERED STATUETTE OF ATHENIS PAPHNOS, by C. T. NEWTON	124
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	124
THE NEW SATIRE, by FREDK. WEDMOORE	125
STAGE NOTES	126
RECENT CONCEITS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	126

BOYS PREPARED FOR THE ENTRANCE and SCHOLARSHIP EXAMINATIONS at RUGBY and the other Public Schools.—For Terms, &c., apply to R. F. E. BUSH, Esq., Hillmorton-road, Rugby.

ABINGDON SCHOOL, Berks.—The new buildings give further accommodation. BOYS are prepared in modern subjects as well as for the Universities, where the School has valuable Scholarships. TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS are now open to Boys entering in January. A Scholar's total expenses average £35 per annum.—Apply to Rev. E. HUMBERS, Head Master.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS. — WARBERY
HOUSE, Bishopsdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. R. STERLING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 210 Guineas.

STUDIO, with Ante-Rooms, &c., in Pem-bridge-place, Daywater.—Specially built for the purpose. lofty and well lighted. £50 per annum.—Apply to E. & F. SWAIN, 82, High-street, Nottingham, W. (7,375.)

GREAT DISCOVERY OF GOLD and COPIER.—A few select INVESTORS may JOIN A NEW COMPANY, Limited, AT PAIR, and realise a HIGH PREMIUM, combined with 48 per cent. Guaranteed Dividend.—Apply immediately to Mr. PAUL, 8, Warwick-place, Leeds, Yorkshire.

LITHOGRAPHY.—GOW, BUTTER-
FIELD, & CO. (late Butterfield & Mason) are prepared to execute First-class WORK in FACSIMILES of Oil Paintings and Water-Colours, Book Illustrations, Show-Cards, and Trade Emblems.—Specimens may be seen at their Works, Bowling Green-lane Buildings, Farringdon-road, E.C.

SECRETARY.—A GENTLEMAN
Desires an Appointment as SECRETARY, Travelling preferred, as it is wished to undertake Lectures with ordinary duties, or as Lecturer only to a Society.—Address, E. N., care of Mr. Digby, 126, Aldersgate-street, London.

BOTTLED DAYLIGHT.—A GENTLE-
MAN is prepared to deliver a Popular SCIENCE LECTURE on this important Discovery at Scientific Institutions, &c. Lecture illustrated by brilliant Experiments with Balmain's Luminous Paint.—Address communications to E. B., Bursledon, Bournemouth, Hants.

RARE ETCHINGS, ENGRAVINGS, and
DRAWINGS by the most esteemed OLD MASTERS may be obtained at GEORGE LOVE'S OLD PRINT SHOP, 81, BLENHILL ROW, LONDON. The Engravings, &c., are in fine condition, and have formed portions of the most celebrated collections. A Catalogue of a small portion of the Stock will be sent on receipt of two penny postage stamps.
 Established above 60 years.

Second Edition, with Maps, price 10s. 6d., pp. 447.
EPIDEMIOLOGY; or, the Cause of
Epidemic Disease, of Murrain, of Blight, of Marasmus, and of Abnormal Anatomical Variations. With a History of Epidemic Diseases, and of the Phenomena that accompanied them. By JOHN PARKIN, M.D.
London: DAVID DOUGLAS, St. Martin's-place, W.C.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

ERNST PAUER, Esq., Principal Professor of the Piano-forte at the National Training School for Music—FIRST of TWO LECTURES on "THE HISTORY OF DRAWING-ROOM MUSIC" (with Musical Illustrations), on THURSDAY NEXT, FEBRUARY 17, at 3 P.M. Half-a-Guinea the Course.
REGINALD STUART POOLE, Esq.—FIRST of FOUR LECTURES on "ANCIENT EGYPT IN ITS COMPARATIVE RELATIONS," on SATURDAY NEXT, FEBRUARY 19, at 3 P.M. Half-a-Guinea the Course.
Subscription for all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.
FRIDAY NEXT, FEBRUARY 18TH, 3 P.M., Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., D.C.L., F.R.S., M.R.L.—"FRUITS and SEEDS," 9 P.M.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY, 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 21, at 4 P.M.
The Rev. JOHN CAIN will read a PAPER "ON the KOIS or GOND TRIBES OF CENTRAL INDIA."
W. S. W. VAUX, Sec. R.A.S.

ROYAL SCHOOL of MINES.

Professor J. W. JUDD, F.R.S., will commence a COURSE of FIFTY LECTURES on GEOLOGY, at the SCIENCE SCHOOLS, SOUTH KENSINGTON, on MONDAY NEXT, the 14TH INST., at 10 o'clock A.M., to be continued on every week-day (except Saturday) at the same hour. Fee for Lectures, £4; for Practice in Laboratory and Field, £5.
Mr. WARINGTON W. SMYTH, M.A., F.R.S., will commence a COURSE of FORTY LECTURES on MINERALOGY, at the MUSEUM of PRACTICAL GEOLOGY, JEREMY STREET, on MONDAY, the 21ST INST., at 12 o'clock at NOON, to be continued on every succeeding Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Monday, at the same hour. Fee for the Course, £4.
F. W. RUDLER, Registrar.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

The EXHIBITION of WORKS by the OLD MASTERS, and by Deceased Masters of the British School, including a Collection of Drawings by John Flaxman, R.A., is NOW OPEN. Open from 9 till 7. One Shilling. Catalogues sixpence, or bound in cloth, with pencil, One shilling. Season Tickets, Five shillings.

MR. WHISTLER'S VENICE PASTELS.

A Series of Fifty PASTEL DRAWINGS by MR. WHISTLER are NOW ON VIEW at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, NEW BOND STREET. Admission on presentation of address card.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C. (Twenty doors west of Madie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.
The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Guineas the Set.
TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS of PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAME, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 28 in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

"COME UNTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.
Pictures Cleaned, Restored, Framed.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces of little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Felling Lane, Middlesex.
General Manager, W. S. HIRD. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

MESSRS. WYMAN & SONS, Printers
and Publishers, invite attention to the facilities offered by their Establishment for the COMPLETE PRODUCTION of BOOKS of every description, all Departments of the Business being carried on under the immediate Personal Superintendence of the Firm. Inclusive Estimates promptly forwarded, and liberal arrangements made with Authors for the publication of their MSS., whether Scientific, Artistic, or Works of Fiction.—WYMAN & SONS, 74 and 75, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn, London, W.C.

This day is published, 8vo, cloth, Vol. III., completing the Work, 438 pp., 125 Illustrations, drawn to scale, £1 4s.

A THEORETICAL and PRACTICAL TREATISE on the MANUFACTURE of SULPHURIC ACID and ALKALI, with the Collateral Branches, By GEORGE LUTHE, Th.D., F.R.S., Professor of Technical Chemistry at the Federal Polytechnic School, Zurich, formerly Manager of the Tyne Alkali Works, South Shields.

Vol. I.—658 pages, 309 Illustrations, £1 16s.
Vol. II.—708 pages, 237 Illustrations, £1 16s.
London: JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row.

Now ready.
MRS. HENRY WOOD'S MAGAZINE.

THE ARGOSY For FEBRUARY.

- CONTENTS.
1. COURT NETHERLEIGH: a New Illustrated Serial Story. By the Author of "East Lynne." Chaps. IV., V., VI. Illustrated by M. Ellen Edwards.
 2. THE STORY OF DOROTHY GRAPE. By JORNEY LUDLOW.
 3. IN THE NEW FOREST. By CHARLES W. WOOD, Author of "Round about Norway."
 4. A VALENTINE.
 5. THE CLOCK'S ROMANCE.
 6. WHAT HAPPENED.
 7. THE BROOK and the CLOUD.

Sixpence Monthly.
SIXTH EDITION OF THE ARGOSY for JANUARY now ready.
London: RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, 5, New Burlington-street, W.

SIXTH EDITION OF
THE ARGOSY for JANUARY, now ready, containing the opening chapters of Mrs. HENRY WOOD'S New Serial Story, "Court Netherleigh."

"We do not remember to have seen a better number of the 'Argosy' than the present one."—Halifax Times.

"The 'Argosy' commences well."—Brighton Gazette.

"The 'Argosy' is full of promise for the New Year."—Manx Sun.

"A new story of great promise."—Sunday Times.

"The first three chapters of 'Court Netherleigh' at once claim our sympathy and excite our interest. The situation arrived at in this number is so intensely enthralling that the succeeding number is anxiously looked for."—Farmouth Gazette.

"The 'Argosy' begins the year with some chatty, delightful descriptions of rambles in the New Forest."—Mail.

"The 'Argosy' for January is an excellent number. No magazine has a selection of more universal interest than this excellently conducted periodical."—Liverpool Albion.

SIXTH EDITION now ready.
London: RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, 5, New Burlington-street, W.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for FEBRUARY

contains:—The King and "Parsifal"—Mr. Peppys, the Musician, by F. H. H. H.—The Father of the Symphony—The Great Composers: Schubert—Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ"—Two New Overtures by Brahms—Monday Popular Concerts—Conference on Organ Construction—Occasional Notes—Foreign and Country News—Reviews—Correspondence, &c. Price 3d.; post-free, 4d. Annual Subscription, 4s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for FEBRUARY contains:—"Aftermath": Part-Times, by T. S. DRUMMOND. Price, separately, 1d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & CO., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

BIBLE REVISION. THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Cramer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorised, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s.; or morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."—Observer.

London: S. DAISTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.
And sold by all Booksellers.

BOOK and MAGAZINE PRINTING.—

UNWIN BROS., the Printers of six-and-twenty various Serial Publications, furnish estimates on application. They have large premises both in London and Chiswick, Stereotype Foundry, and every Modern Appliance for the production of High-class work in Modern or Old Style.—Address, 10-9, Cannon-street, E.C. Telephonic communication with upwards of 700 Firms.

This month will be published, in demy 8vo.

UNBELIEF in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

The Cunningham Lectures for 1880.

By JOHN CAIRNS, D.D.,

Principal and Professor of Systematic Theology and Apologetics in the United Presbyterian College.

EDINBURGH: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

WINTER EXHIBITION.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY
EXHIBITION OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS AND
DECORATIVE DESIGNS, BY LIVING ARTISTS,
NOW OPEN DAILY, 10 to 6.

Admission, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

TRÜBNER & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE HISTORY of INDIA from the EARLIEST AGES.

By J. TALBOT WRELLER, late Assistant-Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department; Author of the "Geography of Herodotus," &c. Vol. IV. Part II. MOGHUL EMPIRE—AURUNGEZEB. Demy 8vo, pp. 308, cloth, with Map, 12s.

THE SCIENCE of BEAUTY:

An Analytical Enquiry into the Laws of Aesthetics. By AVARY W. HOLMES-FORRES, M.A., of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law. Post 8vo, pp. vi—200, cloth, 6s.

BRITISH ANIMALS EXTINCT within HISTORIC TIMES;

With Some Account of British Wild White Cattle. By J. E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Demy 8vo, pp. 256, with Illustrations by Wolf, Whymper, Sherwin, and others, cloth, 14s. A few Copies have been printed on Large Paper, 31s. 6d.

DR. APPLETON: his LIFE and LITERARY RELICS.

By JOHN H. APPLETON, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, Sussex; and A. H. SATCE, M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, and Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford. Post 8vo, with Portrait, cloth, 10s. 6d.

KING'S COLLEGE LECTURES on ELO- CUTION;

On the Physiology and Culture of Voice and Speech, and the Expression of the Emotions by Language, Countenance, and Gesture. To which is added a Special Lecture on the Causes and Cure of Impediments of Speech. Being the Substance of the Introductory Course of Lectures annually delivered by CHARLES JOHN FLEMPTRE, Lecturer on Public Reading and Speaking at King's College, London, in the Evening Classes Department. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. New and greatly Enlarged Illustrated Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

A TALMUDIC MISCELLANY;

Or, a Thousand and One Extracts from the Talmud, the Midrashim, and the Kabbalah. Compiled and Translated by P. I. HERSON, Author of "Genesis according to the Talmud," "Extracts from the Talmud," &c. With Introductory Preface by the Rev. F. W. FARRAR, D.D., Canon of Westminster. Post 8vo, cloth, 14s.

THE GULISTAN;

Or, Rose Garden of Sheikh Muslih'ud-din Sadi of Shiraz. Translated for the first time into Prose and Verse, with an Introductory Preface and a Life of the Author from the Atish Kadah. By EDWARD B. EASTWICK, F.L.S., M.R.A.S., &c. Second Edition. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

BUDDHIST BIRTH STORIES;

Or, Jataka Tales. From the Jatakavannana. Translated from the Original Pali, by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 15s.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the HISTORY of the DEVELOPMENT of the HUMAN RACE.

Lectures and Dissertations. By LAZARUS GEIGER, Author of "Origin and Evolution of Human Speech and Reason." Translated from the German by DAVID ASHER, Ph.D. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE CLASSICAL POETRY of the JAPANESE.

By BASIL HALL CHAMBERLAIN, Author of "Yeigo Henkaku Ichiran." Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE BIRDS of CORNWALL and the SCILLY ISLANDS.

By the late EDWARD HEARLE RHOOD. Edited, with an Introduction, Appendix, and Brief Memoir of the Author, by JAMES E. HARTING, F.L.S., F.Z.S. Post 8vo, with Portrait and Map, cloth, 14s.

LETTERS from my MILL.

From the French of ALPHONSE DAUDET. By MARY COREY. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s.; boards, 2s.

MATHEMATICAL DRAWING INSTRU- MENTS and HOW to USE THEM.

By F. E. HULME, F.L.S., F.R.A., Art-Master of Marlborough College. Imp. 16mo, with Fifty-six Illustrations, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE LIGHT of ASIA;

Or, the Great Renunciation. Being the Life and Teaching of Gautama, Prince of India and Founder of Buddhism. Told in Verse by an Indian Buddhist, by EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I., Author of "The Indian Song of Songs." Crown 8vo, limp parchment wrapper, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: TRÜBNER & CO., LUDGATE HILL.

HURST & BLACKETT'S NEW WORKS.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

OUR HOLIDAY in the EAST.

By Mrs. GEORGE SUMNER. Edited by the Rev. O. H. SUMNER, Hon. Canon of Winchester. 8vo, with Illustrations, 15s.
"An earnest and able book."—Daily Telegraph.
"A most interesting and charming book."—Hampshire Chronicle.
"A very readable and instructive record."—Examiner.

MY JOURNEY ROUND the WORLD. By Capt. S. H. JONES PARRY, Royal Madras Fusiliers. 2 vols., 21s.

"Capt. Parry is full of life, sparkle, and anecdote."—Graphic.
"A readable book, light, pleasant, and chatty."—Globe.

PLAYS, PLAYERS, and PLAY-

HOUSES, at HOME and ABROAD; with Anecdotes of the Drama and the Stage. By LORD WILLIAM FITZ LENOX. 2 vols., 21s.
[Now ready.]

MONSIEUR GUIZOT in PRIVATE

LIFE. (1787—1874.) By his daughter, Madame DE WITT. Translated by Mrs. SIMPSON. 1 vol., 8vo, 15s.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and

BARONETAGE for 1881. Under the Especial Patronage of HER MAJESTY. Corrected by the Nobility. Fifth Edition. 1 vol., with the Arms beautifully engraved, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

THE NEW NOVELS.

HER DESERTS. By Mrs. Alex-

ANDER FRASER, Author of "Guardian and Lover," &c. 3 vols.

IDONEA. By Anne Beale, Author of "Fay Arlington," &c. 3 vols.

"Miss Beale's novel, from beginning to end, cannot fail to be attractive to the reader. The plot is interesting, and the characters are well delineated."—Court Journal.

BERYL FORTESCUE. By Lady

DUFFUS HADY, Author of "Madge," &c. 3 vols.

"This story is fresh, unconventional, and of unusual interest. It is emphatically a novelty in novels, and ought to be a great success."—Sunday Times.

"The plot of this story is original, the incidents are novel and startling, and the characters are life-like portraits."—Court Journal.

FIXED as FATE. By Mrs. Hous-

TON, Author of "Recommended to Mercy," &c. 3 vols.

"This novel is likely to be popular. Its characters are sketched with much ability, showing great power and deep study of human nature. It cannot fail to add to the reputation of the author."—Sunday Times.

JEANNETTE. By Mary C. Row-

SELL, Author of "Love Loyal," &c. 3 vols.

"Not the least of the many charms of this fresh, wholesome tale is the simple English in which it is told."—Whitehall Review.

"This story is clearly told, and the situations are neither strained nor improbable."—Daily Telegraph.

GERALDINE and her SUITORS.

By Mrs. SIMPSON, Author of "Winulo's History," &c. 3 vols.

"This book is pleasing to read and pleasing to remember."—Pall Mall.

STRICTLY TIED UP. By the Right Hon. A. J. B. BEREFOORD HOPE, M.P. SECOND EDITION. 3 vols.

"Strictly Tied Up" is entertaining. It is in every sense a novel conceived in a light and happy vein."—Athenaeum.

"A very cleverly constructed novel."—St. James's Gazette.

LITTLE PANSY. By Mrs.

HANDOLPH, Author of "Gentiana," &c. 3 vols.

"MISSING! By Mary Cecil Hay, Author of 'Old Myddelton's Money,' &c. 3 vols. [Just ready.]

CHEAP EDITIONS.

Each Work complete in 1 vol., price 5s. (any of which can be had separately, elegantly printed and bound, and illustrated, by

Sir J. GILBERT MILLAIS, HUNT, LEECH, POYNTER, FOSTER, TENNIEL, SANDS, E. HUGHES, SAMBOURNE, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY

OF CHEAP EDITIONS OF POPULAR MODERN WORKS.

Sam Slick's Nature and Human Nature. By Amelita B.

John Halifax, Gentleman. By Amelita B.

Barbara's History. By Amelita B.

Life of Irving. By Mrs. Oliphant.

No Church. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Christian's Mistake. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Alce Forbes. By George MacDonald.

Edwards. By George MacDonald.

Agnes. By Mrs. Oliphant.

A Noble Life. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

John Halifax. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Dixon's New America. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Robert Hecateer. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

The Woman's Kingdom. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Annals of an Eventful Life. By G. W. Huxton, LL.D.

David Elginbrod. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

A Brave Lady. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Hannah. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Sam Slick's Americans at Home. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

The Unkind Word. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

A Rose in June. By Mrs. Oliphant.

My Little Lady. By E. Frances Poynter.

Phoebe, Junior. By Mrs. Oliphant.

Life of Marie Antoinette. By Professor G. D. Young.

Sir Gibbie. By George MacDonald, LL.D.

Young Mrs. Jardine. By the Author of 'John Halifax.'

Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton.

New Works and New Editions.

DR. ZELLER'S PRE-SOCRATIC

SCHOOLS, a History of Greek Philosophy from the Earliest Period to the Time of Socrates. Translated by S. F. ALLEYNE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 30s. [Now ready.]

BIOGRAPHICAL STUDIES. By the late

WALTER BAGEROT, M.A., Univ. Coll., London. Uniform with "Literary Studies" and "Economic Studies" by the same Author. 8vo, 12s. [Now ready.]

WILLIAM LAW, Nonjuror and Mystic,

Author of "A Serious Call," &c. A Sketch of his Life, Character, and Opinions. By the Rev. J. H. OVERTON, M.A. 8vo, 15s. [Now ready.]

SELECTED ESSAYS on LANGUAGE,

MYTHOLOGY, and RELIGION. By F. MAX MÜLLER, K.M., &c. Professor of Comparative Philology at Oxford. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

LECTURES on the SCIENCE of LAN-GUAGE. By F. MAX MÜLLER, K.M., &c. Professor of Comparative Philology at Oxford. New Edition (1880), with Twenty-nine Woodcuts. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

THE EARLY HISTORY of CHARLES

JAMES FOX. By GEORGE OTTO TREVELYAN, M.P. Third Edition. 8vo, price 18s.

HISTORY of ENGLAND from the Conclusion of the Great War in 1816. By SPENCER WALPOLE. 8vo. Vols. I. and II., 1815—1832 (Second Edition, Revised), price 36s. Vol. III., 1832—1841, price 18s.

THE ENGLISH in IRELAND in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By J. A. FROUDE, M.A. Cabinet Edition, with a New Preface and a New Supplementary Chapter. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

ENDYMION. By the Right Hon. the Earl of BRACONSFIELD, K.G. "Quicquid agunt homines." 3 vols., post 8vo, price 31s. 6d.

BURIED ALIVE: Ten Years of Penal

Servitude in Siberia. By FEDOR DOSTOYEVSKY. Translated from the Russian by MARIE VON THILO. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

TURKISH ARMENIA and EASTERN

ASIA MINOR. By the Rev. HENRY FAYSHAW TOZER, M.A., F.R.G.S., Tutor of Exeter College, Oxford. 8vo, with Five full-page Illustrations and Map, 16s.

THE FLIGHT of the LAPWING: a Naval Officer's Jottings in China, Formosa, and Japan. By the Hon. HENRY NOEL SHORE, R.N. 8vo, with Frontispiece, Two Maps, and a Plan, 15s.

DR. LATHAM'S ONE-VOLUME DIC-

TIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE, based on Johnson. New and Cheaper Edition. Medium 8vo, price 14s.

CATES'S BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY.

Third Edition, completed to the Present Time, with nearly 400 new Memoirs and Notices. 8vo, 28s.

EWALD'S HISTORY of ISRAEL. Translated from the German by J. E. CARPENTER, M.A., with Preface by R. MARTINEAU, M.A. 5 vols., 8vo, 63s.

EPOCHS of ANCIENT HISTORY.

ROME and CARTHAGE: the PUNIC

WARS. By R. BOSWORTH SMITH, M.A., Assistant-Master at Harrow School. Fcap. 8vo, Maps, 2s. 6d.

OUTLINES of ASTRONOMY. By Sir

J. F. W. HERSCHEL, Bart., M.A. Latest Edition. With Plates and Diagrams. Square crown 8vo, 12s.

PROFESSOR HELMHOLTZ'S POPULAR

LECTURES on SCIENTIFIC SUBJECTS. Translated by Dr. E. ATKINSON, Staff College. Second Series. Crown 8vo, Woodcuts, 7s. 6d. Second Edition of the First Series, uniform, 7s. 6d.

THE DISEASES of the OX: a Manual of Reference for the Veterinary Practitioner and Student. By J. H. STREEL, M.R.C.V.S., F.Z.S. With Two Plates and 116 Woodcuts. 8vo, 15s.

THE VENTILATION of DWELLING

HOUSES and the UTILISATION of WASTED HEAT from OPEN FIRE-PLACES. By F. EDWARDS, Jun. Second Edition. With 106 Figures. Royal 8vo, 10s. 6d.

LONDON: LONGMANS & CO.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S

NEW WORKS.

Immediately will be published. THE MEMOIRS of PRINCE METTERNICH, 1815-1829. Edited by his Son, PRINCE RICHARD METTERNICH. Translated by ROBINA NAPIER. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

Now ready. THE POLITICAL DIARY of LORD ELLENBOROUGH, 1828-1830. Edited by LORD COLCHESTER. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

ACROSS PATAGONIA. By Lady FLORENCE DIXIE. Demy 8vo, with Illustrations by Julius Beerbohm, 15s.

"To read it is to be exhilarated and refreshed."—World.

"The book is not to be described, it is to be read."—Vanity Fair.

STUDIES in ENGLISH ART. By

FREDERICK WEDMORE. The Second Series, containing Romney, Constable, David Cox, George Cruikshank, Méryon, Burne-Jones, and Albert Moore. In 1 vol., large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"We know few criticisms more just than that in which Mr. Wedmore selects the stronger and more permanent qualities of Romney's painting, and fixes to a shade the type and beauty which was his luxurious ideal. Mr. Wedmore's 'Studies' blend the results of careful and conscientious study and sound judgement with an exquisitely consummate cockiness of manner."—St. James's Gazette.

"Amongst many good passages relating to Mr. Burne-Jones's work, the following seem to us the most complete and truly critical. We have been led into fuller quotation than usual by the pleasure of following Mr. Wedmore's literary expression."—Portfolio.

"The discrimination is as subtle, the opinion as nicely balanced, as ever. . . . For one of Mr. Wedmore's most sympathetic criticisms."—Academy.

"We are especially glad to find the paper on Méryon. Mr. Wedmore's style is always thoughtful; in dealing even with very subtle qualities he has a peculiar gift of making what he would have understood and appreciated clear and definite."—Daily News.

UNKNOWN HUNGARY. By

VICTOR TISSOT. Translated by Mrs. OSWALD BRODIE. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"The book is full of good stories, old and new, sparkling with anecdote, rich in descriptions of scenery, and, withal, instructively suggestive in regard to social and political questions."—Graphic.

"A book which at once challenges attention."—Daily Telegraph.

ROUND ABOUT NORWAY. By

CHARLES W. WOOD, Author of "Through Holland," &c. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s.

"Mr. Wood's book is as lively a narrative as any we have met with for a long time. His descriptions are so clear that, reading him, we fancy we can hear the Lapps with their shrill voices, smell the Lofoden oil works, and see the glorious sunsets."—Graphic.

THE CORAL LANDS of the PACIFIC: being an Account of nearly all the Inhabited Islands of the Pacific, their Peoples, and their Products. By H. STONEMEWEE COOPER. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Illustrations, 28s.

"We cannot resist giving a few lines of the author's description of a lagoon in which a pearl fishery was established. . . . These passages, detached from pages that have charmed us, will, we think, prove that Mr. Cooper is a master of word-painting, although he never neglects his principal theme."—Morning Post.

THE POET and the MUSE: being a Version of ALFRED DE MUSSET's "La Nuit de Mai," "La Nuit d'Avril," and "La Nuit d'Octobre." With an Introduction. By WALTER HERBERT POLLOCK. 1s. 6d.

"We forget for the moment that there is any other metre than that which carries us forward through the exquisitely tender thoughts of Alfred de Musset, and the no less beautiful heralding of them by Mr. Pollock himself in his Introduction."—Examiner.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

LIEBER'S (Dr. F.) MISCELLANEOUS

WRITINGS (Reminiscences, Addresses, Essays, and Contributions to Political Science). Portrait. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, £1 10s.

"Dr. Lieber's greater works stand by themselves. Beyond these, his writings were so voluminous that the editor of the two volumes now before us must have felt some embarrassment in selecting the best when all were so good."—Academy.

BRISBIN'S (Gen. J. S.) THE BEEF

BONANZA; or, How to get Rich on the Plains: being a Description of Cattle-growing, Sheep-farming, Horse-raising, and Dairying in the West. Illustrations. 12mo, cloth, 6s.

"A lively, practical, but very readable sketch of the life and prospects of a cattle-breeder on the plains of the Far West."—Saturday Review.

OSWALD'S (F. L.) SUMMERLAND

SKETCHES; or, Rambles in the Backwoods of Mexico and Central America. Seventy-six Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 11s.

"A readable book . . . worthy of the opportunity which the author has enjoyed . . . of describing a region and a people almost unknown and, at any rate, unfamiliar."—Saturday Review.

LEIGHTON'S (W.) SHAKESPEARE'S

DREAM, YOUTH and AGE, the GOLDEN WEDDING, and other Poems. Small 4to, cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

"A true poet, who deserves popularity as well as praise."—Evening Bulletin.

MCCOOK'S (H. C.) THE AGRICULTURAL

ANT of TEXAS: its Natural History. A Monograph of the Habits, Architecture, and Structure of Pogonomymex Barbatus. Numerous Plates. 8vo, cloth, £1 1s.

"Quite free of all technicalities, and so attractive that it is difficult to stop at the end of a chapter."—Times.

"A most fascinating account."—Spectator.

"Full of the most interesting and carefully conducted observations."—Journal of Science.

DUHRING'S (Dr. L. A.) ATLAS of SKIN

DISEASES. To be completed in Ten Parts, each containing Four Plates. Parts I. to VIII. now ready. 4to, in paper wrappers, 12s. each.

"The plates all reach a very high standard, whilst the letterpress is all that can be desired."—Lancet.

"The plates are of great artistic excellence. . . . The work is one of high merit."—Practitioner.

"It need not fear comparison with any rival."

Dublin Medical Journal.

ARR'S (Mrs. E. H.) OLD-TIME CHILD-

LIFE: a Series of Sketches illustrating the Charms of Quiet Country Life. 12mo, cloth, 6s.

"Graceful, homely, quiet sketches of old-time childhood life."—Saturday Review.

FURNESS' NEW VARIORUM SHAKESPEARE.

Vol. V., containing "KING LEAR." Large 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 18s.

"For all practical purposes perfect."—Spectator.

"Every instalment is of great value, and complete as regards the play treated."—Athenaeum.

London: 16, Southampton-street, Strand.
Philadelphia: 715, Market-street.

Will be ready next Tuesday, at every Library, in 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

MR.

WILLIAM

BLACK'S

NEW NOVEL,

SUNRISE:

A Story

of These

Times.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1881.

No. 458, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Arrows of the Chace: being a Collection of Scattered Letters published chiefly in the Daily Newspapers, 1840–80, by John Ruskin, and now Edited by an Oxford Pupil. In 2 vols. (Sunnyside, Orpington, Kent: George Allen.)

THE quotation from Fors Clavigera placed as motto before these two volumes—"I never wrote a letter in my life which all the world are not welcome to read if they will"—emphatic as it is, is not enough to describe the author's attitude toward this collection of his published letters. It must be reinforced by his own decisive endorsement in the short Preface, that "in the entire mass of them there is not a word I wish to change nor a statement I have to retract." Considering that the letters range over a period of forty years, that they touch upon most things, from foreign politics to domestic servants, from war to silk-worms, and that all these things were "deeply cared for" by the writer, who "never was tempted into writing a word for the public press, unless concerning matter which I had much at heart," it is impossible to avoid expressing surprise at this constancy of opinion and feeling preserved throughout a whole life. Few of us are there, indeed, who have not seen it necessary before arriving at sixty to change some of the opinions we held at thirty, even about things we "deeply cared for." Even in those of us who have not passed through the crucible of a total conversion, or who have had to make material "retractions," the insensible evolution of years mostly makes us outgrow the size or the fashion of our earliest mental garments. Are we really to take Mr. Ruskin at his word? If we are to do so, we must suppose that he alone of his generation has not grown, has not developed, has not become wiser by experience and added knowledge. This is a preposterous idea, and one I cannot bring myself to accept even on Mr. Ruskin's own testimony. Here I must be allowed tacitly to put a construction upon the defendant's evidence against himself, and I want no better warrant for so doing than his own words as I find them in these volumes. In 1857, when Mr. Ruskin would be barely forty, he could look back upon his youth, and say:—

"Sound criticism of art is impossible to young men, for it consists principally in the recognition of the facts presented by the art. A great artist represents many and abstruse facts; it is necessary, in order to judge of his works, that all those facts should be experimentally known to the observer whose recognition of them constitutes his approving judgment. A young man cannot know them."

The first volume of Modern Painters was published in 1843, when its author was presumably not twenty-five years old, but was certainly young. Accordingly, looking back in 1873, through a vista of thirty years, upon this his first utterance, Mr. Ruskin himself pronounces it "written in a narrow enthusiasm, the substance of its religious and metaphysical speculation being only justifiable on the ground of its absolute sincerity."

Of the letters reprinted in these two volumes only four, and those of secondary moment, go back to a period as early as vol. i. of Modern Painters. The first letter in which the principles of art are deeply sounded—that headed "The Pre-Raphaelite Brethren"—is of date 1851. It is already in a far more matured tone than the letter which precedes it, headed "Danger to the National Gallery," dated 1847. The later letter, of 1851, appearing in the Times at the critical moment when academic propriety was in the height of its indignation at the presumptuous audacity of the Pre-Raphaelites may be said to have marked an epoch in art criticism. The letter, though its author was still young (being presumably not much over thirty), is written in a style of calm and assured authority, without any trace of the jealous self-assertion or feverish emphasis in which youth propounds its novel opinions. The letter explains to an impatient and angry public that the new school of painters were not, as was being said by the official critics, imitators of Perugino or of the early Italian school, or imitators at all; that they intended to surrender no advantage which the knowledge or invention of their own time could afford to art; that if they could be said to intend to return to early days it was in this one point only, that they will draw only what they see, irrespectively of any conventional rules of picture making. To us in 1880 it may seem surprising that this eternal verity of art criticism should have required to be stated anew, or should, when stated, have seemed a paradox. But it is evident that a writer who begins his career with a firm grasp of a simple, but far-reaching, truth such as this, and confines himself to inculcating that truth, and such precepts as may be deducible from it, can have little to recant or to regret. It is a rare good fortune to have reached at thirty an intellectual eminence at which the struggle for principle is over, and the undivided mind may be given to observation and registration of facts. It is the fortune of few, like the "Happy Warrior," to start in the race with "The generous spirit, who, when brought

Among the tasks of real life has wrought
Upon the plan that pleased his childish thought."

If the matter of these letters be such as still expresses their author's mind; if, "with more accurate knowledge, he holds the same opinions still, and more strongly" (ii. 184), he is obliged to look back with a wistful regret at a power of expression of which he is now no longer master.

"At the time of my life in which most of these letters were composed I was fonder of metaphor and more fertile in simile than I am now; and I employed both with franker trust in the reader's intelligence. Carefully chosen, they are always a powerful means of concentration; and I could then dismiss in six words 'thistle-down without seeds, and bubbles without colour,' forms of art on which I should now perhaps spend half a page of analytic vituperation; and represent with a pleasant accuracy, which my best methods of outline and exposition could now no more achieve, the entire system of modern plutocratic policy, under the luckily remembered image of the Arabian bridegroom bewitched, with his heels uppermost."

What has happened to Mr. Ruskin—the drying up of the richest source of poetical expression, the power of metaphor—is only what has happened to all men of the gifted tongue who have lived long enough, and to the greatest poets most conspicuously—witness Milton and Wordsworth. But whoever, before Ruskin, knew it of himself, and dared to say so?

The unfortunate effect upon us of ageing is that our feeling of the evil of life, and the mistakes of the managers of affairs, continues to be no less intense than it was in our youth, while the power of venting our indignation in veiled sarcasm, or flashing figure, is no longer at command. We are thus tempted to take refuge in expressions of direct scorn and contempt, which directness is but the sign and mark of intellectual failure—failure, not in judgment, but in power of expression. We all regard "restoration" with horror, and are aghast at the havoc it has made among our antiquities. But surely the cause of the beautiful and the venerable is not served by outbreaks such as, "All restoration is accursed architects' jobbery, and will go on as long as they can get their filthy bread by such business." Another such burst of splenetic irritation against John Stuart Mill is only to be palliated by the apology which the editor offers in a note—viz., that it occurs not in a published letter sent by the writer to the papers, but in a private communication to a friend.

It has been the strength and weakness of Mr. Ruskin throughout, that he has not been an art critic and nothing more, but that he has looked upon life and seen it whole, art included. It has been his strength, inasmuch as it has preserved him from the technicality and pedantry of the ordinary criticism; it has been his weakness, because he has been tempted to utterances upon everything, and no one man can know everything better than anybody else. How to esteem the ordinary criticism he teaches us himself in a short letter, of date 1875, but free from the irritable intenseness of the later style.

"Criticism is as impertinent in the world as it is in a drawing-room. In a kindly and well-bred company if anybody tries to please them they try to be pleased; if anybody tries to astonish them they have the courtesy to be astonished; if people become tiresome they ask somebody else to play or sing, but they do not criticise. A bad critic is probably the most mischievous person in the world . . . and a good one the most helpless and unhappy; the more he knows the less he is trusted, and it is too likely he may become morose in his unacknowledged power. A good executant in any art gives pleasure to multitudes and breathes an atmosphere of praise, but a strong critic is every man's adversary; men feel that he knows their foibles, and cannot conceive that he knows more. His praise, to be acceptable, must be always unqualified; and the art of correction which he has learned so laboriously only fills his hearers with disgust" (ii. 241).

This is Mr. Ruskin's own description of the calling he has pursued for forty years. Undeniably true, and admirably expressed, as this description of the critic is, it rather tends to keep out of view the important truth that no one man can be a critic all round. There is no such art as the universal art of judging. A man can only estimate values with which he has long been conversant. Everyone knows and admits this. "Cuique in sua arte credendum" is a principle so old and trite that one is almost ashamed of quoting it. Yet, strange to say, the practice of modern reviewing is founded upon the denial of this principle. If you are only a good writer, and have got a certain knack of style, you may opine upon everything under the sun in the columns of "the largest circulation in the world." This unconscientious abuse of the power of the press is an abuse which we might have expected Mr. Ruskin to have been among the most forward to protest against. I think he would surely do so, if the question were proposed to him in this form. But in his own practice, as it is chronicled for us in these two volumes, Mr. Ruskin rather appears to countenance the portentous assumption of omniscience on which modern "reviewing" is founded. Upon art, and all that concerns it, Mr. Ruskin, whatever disputable opinions he may have at times broached, stands unrivalled as a judge, an interpreter, an appreciator. But he cannot claim the same deferential hearing when he speaks of the Italian question, of Denmark, the Jamaica Insurrection, modern warfare, the depreciation of gold, strikes, commercial morality, railway economy, houses, drainage, the streams of Italy, the morality of field sports, dress, female franchise, Shakspeare, dramatic reform, and so on ad infinitum. It is not that upon any of these things Mr. Ruskin may not have something good to say, but that he cannot expect to transfer to any of these subjects the prestige which his special knowledge has justly conferred on his opinions on art. On art topics Mr. Ruskin is a prophet or an oracle; on economical subjects he is but one of us. When it comes to speaking of sweeping crossings, the crossing-sweeper is sure to know a thing or two which we do not know.

But what excellent things are scattered up and down these miscellaneous letters! "A gentleman would hew for himself a log-hut rather than live in modern houses." "You can't have art where you have smoke." "So far from wishing to give votes to women, I would fain take them away from most men." "There is only one way to have good servants, that is, to be worthy of being well served." "Good art cannot be produced as an investment. You cannot build a good cathedral, if you only build it that you may charge sixpence for entrance." "We must recognise the duties of governors before we can elect the men fit to perform them." "While everybody shrinks at abstract suggestions of there being possible error in a book of Scripture, your sensible English housewife fearlessly rejects Solomon's opinion when it runs slightly counter to her own." Such sparkling bits of aphoristic wit and wisdom are scattered in profusion over these letters, even those of which the main tenor is paradoxical or unpractical.

Without attempting to deny that many of the social and economical opinions and proposals here put forward are of this unpractical character, I think the reader will nevertheless feel himself stirred and animated in a way in which more sober and well-considered suggestions never move him. Mr. Ruskin does but feel more keenly than the rest of us those evils which spoil and darken the wholesomeness and beauty of modern life. When the whole creation groaneth and travaileth together, there are some spirits who feel the anguish too acutely, and cry out in their noble rage that we have but to will it and the evil will disappear. Mr. Ruskin, like other humanitarians, exaggerates the power of human skill and energy to cope with natural conditions. Smoke is an evil; you have but to will it, and there shall be no smoke, is, in fact, what he says. The enormous gulf between the capitalist and the operative is an evil. "There shall be no capital," cries Mr. Ruskin; for to suppress interest is to suppress capital. Discussion or argument is not forwarded by such downright denunciation of existing evil as is here found. But we are quickened and invigorated for the struggle in which we are all engaged with the misery of the world, and the sluggish and the selfish may be reached by Mr. Ruskin's random arrows where homilies and exhortations are all in vain.

I cannot quit these volumes without noticing what must be apparent to the most casual reader—the unusual excellence of the editing. It is not only that paper, type, binding, and general mien distinguish the outside appearance as "a gentleman" among books, but the literary labour bestowed upon the contents has been as unsparing in quantity as it has been skilful and discerning in quality. To have unearthed 157 letters out of the infinite piles of buried newspaper and periodical rubbish is alone a wonderful work of patience and research. But even this prodigious labour is surpassed by the tact and industry with which the annotator has explained his author's allusions and references. Many of these allusions are so obscure and to events so fugitive that the author himself may well have been unable to remember what it was that was in his mind at the time of writing. Yet I have only noticed one occasion on which the editor (ii. 146 note) confesses his inability to verify an anecdote referred to in the text. Nothing but the attachment of a personal regard could have secured for Mr. Ruskin the devotion of so much time and skill. Those of us who want to bring out a book should pray that there might be granted to them such an editor as Mr. Ruskin's Oxford pupil!

MARK PATTISON.

Three Fifteenth-Century Chronicles, with Historical Memoranda, by John Stowe, the Antiquary. Written by him in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. Edited by James Gairdner. (Camden Society.)

THE recent issues of the Camden Society have been of a high order of merit, and the volume before us is certainly well fitted to rank with the best of them. The little Chronicles here given cannot be expected to contain many new facts of great importance. The history of England, as far as it is ever to be recovered, must now be looked for in a different class of documents. Nearly all the great chronicles exist in print in some form or other; and, unless some unlooked-for good fortune awaits us, little more is to be gleaned in that direction. These three small chronicles, however, give us some new light, and where the information is not new it is sometimes given in the very words in which it was first jotted down by the person who heard the rumour. This is pleasant to have, and is at times not a little useful; for every student of history knows whether his gaze is directed upon the Middle Ages or the nineteenth century; that the first impression of any event has a value of its own independent of and different from the carefully prepared account given when men have time to think of the effect of what they write, balance probabilities, and sift evidence. Mere phraseology is sometimes useful in determining points of interest, but remotely connected with the matter in hand. For example, we read in the Paston Letters (ii. 6) that the slain at the battle of Towton amounted to twenty-eight thousand men "nomberd by herralds." Those who know how the armies of the Wars of the Roses were made up, and what were the means of destruction of which they were possessed, have not unnaturally been led to compare this vast sum of slaughter with the death-list of various battles of recent times where modern means of slaughter have had full play, and the result has been, we imagine, to lead to the conclusion either that the text is corrupt or that the herralds were very bad accountants. The "Short English Chronicle" in this volume makes it in a high degree probable that the Paston memorandum has not been corrupted or blundered, but that the fault lay with those whose duty it was to make the report, for we find the very same phrase used and an even more extravagant number given of the killed at the battle of Halidon Hill. The passage, in a modern form, runs thus:—"At that battle was slain thirty-five thousand seven hundred and twelve of Scots, and numbered by herralds, and of Englishmen but twenty-seven persons." "Numbered by herralds" seems to have been a common form by which it was hoped to authenticate these wild estimates. Everyone who has the most vague notion of the difficulty of making estimates of military losses at a time when the army of a civilised State, viewed as a machine, is nearly perfect must be aware that no such counting of slaughtered Scots could have taken place. We doubt whether, even at the present time, a victorious army, unless it has taken permanent possession of the country where the battle was fought, could ever make more than a very rough estimate of the losses of the defeated side. By far the most important thing in the volume is Jack Cade's proclamation. It has never been printed at full length before, though portions of it, or of another version, are given by Stowe. Mr. Gairdner thinks, and we have no doubt that he is right, that it is not a declaration of Cade himself, but a statement of the causes of their revolt put forth by his followers.

Anyhow, it is a most curious rebel State-paper, well worthy of careful study on the part of those who are anxious to enter into the inner life of that disturbed time. The English in which it is couched also deserves attention. It is, in many passages, sufficiently idiomatic and forcible. The phrase, "fals and of nowght browght up certain persones" is new to us, and is an extremely pleasing form of vituperation, conveying the utmost contempt, without any indiscreet violence. We once heard a publican describe a temperance lecturer as a "nowt of all nowts," and gave him credit for inventing the phrase; he may well, however, have inherited it from the man who drafted this curious paper. The divine-right notion that the King was above the law, which caused so much bloodshed and sorrow in the seventeenth century, is repudiated in a manner so sensible that it reads in modern spelling much like the dictum of some Whig statesman of the time of the Revolution:—

"They say that our sovereign lord is above the laws to his pleasure, and he may make it and break it as him list, without any distinction. The contrary is true, and else he should not have sworn to keep it, the which we conceived for the highest point of treason that any subject may do, to make his prince run into perjury."

The Camden Society does not, we are sure, endeavour to make its publications handy missiles for modern controversy, but the present issue will be found extremely useful or harmful, as we may view the question, to some theological disputants at the present hour. Stowe's memoranda give a picture of the religious state of London which is simply frightful, and would be quite incredible were it not supported by contemporary evidence in print and MS. which it is impossible to disbelieve. That two poor madmen, in an age of fierce theological bickering, should imagine themselves to be, the one our blessed Saviour and the other Saint Peter, is not surprising; nor is it wonderful, in a time such as that, when the nature of brain diseases was unknown, that these poor maniacs should have been treated as heretics, and beaten with a brutality which makes one shudder while one reads of it three hundred years after the deed was done. But it does seem strange that a strong government like that of Elizabeth could afford to punish "Papists" with severity, and yet permit the wildest conduct of the Protestant mob to go on unchecked. In 1562 we find Lady Cary (who was a blood relation of the Queen), Lady Sackville, and Mistress Pierpoint "arrayned amongstest theves and mowrderers" at Newgate for the offence of being prepared to hear mass; for it seems the service had not begun when the servants of Richard Cox, Bishop of Ely, broke in upon them. Of course, they were found guilty, and long imprisonment and heavy fines were inflicted. As a contrast, and as showing, if we interpret matters aright, the fear which the ruling powers had of the rabble of London and their leaders, we find the orders of the Crown and the bishops set at naught, and the most unseemly riots occurring when the clergy ventured to obey the orders of their ecclesiastical and civil rulers.

Because a man is a violent religious fanatic, it does not follow that he should not be in advance of his age in other matters. This seems to have been the case with one "Turnar of Bullyn," who had been a minister among the soldiers in that town. He came to London in 1563, and attacked the use of the passing bell as a remnant of superstition, but he also protested against intramural interment, saying "that the deade of the cittie shuld be buryed out of the citie in the fylde." We should much like to know more of this man's opinions. Did he protest against burying among houses because he had ascertained that it was unhealthy for the living, or was it because he dreaded superstitious rites being performed at the graves of the departed?

The book is edited throughout with Mr. Gairdner's usual minute care and accuracy. We cannot doubt, however, that he is in error when he charges one of his authorities with the mistake of thinking that Pomfret Castle was near Southwark. The Pomfret that is in all our histories the men of the Middle Ages knew to be in Yorkshire as well as we do; but that there was another Pontefract somewhere on the Thames near London was made clear by the late Mr. Hunter (Archæologia, xxxvi. 248) in a paper which he wrote in 1855 on "The Mission of Queen Isabella to the Court of France."

EDWARD PEACOCK.

The English Poets: Selections with Critical Introductions, &c., &c. Edited by T. H. Ward, M.A. Oxford. Vol. IV.—"The Nineteenth Century: Wordsworth to Dobell." (Macmillan.)

To pass from the third to the fourth volume of this work is a transition not only to another century, but into a vaster and more fascinating world of poetry. England has known nothing more stirring in its literary history than the great outburst of song which aroused the close of last and the opening of the present century. Preludes of the strain there had been, breaking the formality of the classic period, with the poetry of Cowper and of Burns, with Percy's Ballads, and, further back still, with the sweet singing of Collins. These were but the first pipings in the early dawn, before the full chorus of the wood which greets the sunrise. It is right that the name of Wordsworth should stand at the head of this new poetic period, not only as the eldest born of the great brotherhood, but as its most original and substantial power. It might have been wished that the designation of this volume could have closed with some other name, for, without disparagement to the younger poet, does not "from Wordsworth to Dobell" sound somewhat of an anti-climax? Since dramatic poems are excluded from the design of this work, the fourth volume may be said to contain more high poetry than any of the three preceding ones; it might almost be said, than all of them put together. For it contains the best effusions of a true Renaissance, in which poetry, shaking itself free from the bonds of long conventionality, burst once more into its native element, and, apprehending more deeply and intensely all the manifestations of life, past, present, and future, uttered the sentiments which these inspired in a more natural language, and in sweeter, more varied cadences than any which this country had known before. A body of poetry so rich and many-sided it would be vain to try to ticket, label, and subdivide into schedules; but there is one great outstanding distinction which runs through all the poets of this period, making between them almost a difference in kind. A few of them, and these the greatest, have something of the old bardic inspiration, belong to the prophetic order, who are charged with some old truth to revive or some new truth to reveal among men. Paramount, though not alone, in this order stands the great man whose name here heads the nineteenth-century poets. This prophetic strain, which sounds through some of Wordsworth's younger contemporaries, grows less and less as we approach our own time. It is last heard as an undertone in most of the poetry of Clough, but in him it is thwarted and baffled sadly by mental conflicts which disturbed his master-vision. In this volume the introductory essays maintain the same high level reached in the former ones. The first, in which the Dean of St. Paul's introduces Wordsworth, says nearly all that within so short space can be said of Wordsworth. So much has been recently written of him and his poetry that to say anything entirely new would be impossible. "Wordsworth," the Dean says,

"is destined, if any poet is, to be immortal; but immortality does not necessarily mean popularity. . . . Mankind is deeply divided in its sympathies and tastes; and for many, not merely of those who read, but of those who create and govern opinion, that which Wordsworth loved and aimed at and sought to represent will always be the object, not only of indifference, but of genuine dislike."

This is a fact which Wordsworthians should learn to accept submissively, as a law of nature, which they cannot reverse. And the Dean shows well what are the limitations in Wordsworth which cause it so to be. But then he goes on to ask what that is which his admirers feel to be Wordsworth's special gift; and he answers well,

"It is the penetrating power of his perceptions of poetical elements, and his fearless reliance on the simple forces of expression, in contrast to the more ornate ones. He had an eye to see these elements; . . . he saw that the familiar scene of human life—nature as affecting human life and feeling, and man, as the fellow-creature of nature, but also separate and beyond it, had not yet rendered up even to the mightiest of former poets all that they had in them to teach the human heart. And he accepted it as his mission to open the eyes and widen the thoughts of his countrymen, and to teach them to discern in the humblest and most unexpected forms the presence of what was kindred to what they had long recognised as the highest and greatest."

This has often been said before, but never better said. To many of the Dean's own generation Wordsworth no doubt has largely done this very delicate service, and probably also to poetic hearts here and there among his younger contemporaries. Yet one cannot but sadly doubt whether Wordsworth can continue to do this benign work, as powerfully as he has done, amid the distractions and complexity of modern life, and whether the young men who make the future will not seek their excitement from newer, but not purer, fountains.

"Another race hath been, and other palms are won."

And even poets whom we call immortal must submit to this condition of mortality.

There is a peculiar and personal interest in the short essays which Sir Henry Taylor contributes on Southey, Rogers, and Campbell. They contain the mature experience and mellowed reflection on poetry of one who is himself a true poet, and they are enlivened by some quite fresh anecdotes derived from his personal intercourse with the men he speaks of. Of Rogers as a poet he forms no over-estimate.

"His poetic gifts," he says, "were surpassed by half-a-dozen or more of his contemporaries; his gift of wit equalled by only one or two. His deliberate and quiet manner of speaking made it the more effective. I remember one occasion on which he threw a satire into a sentence. 'They tell me I say ill-natured things. I have a very weak voice; if I did not say ill-natured things no one would hear what I said.'"

Then Sir Henry adds: "If it is true that he said ill-natured things, it is equally so that he did kind, and charitable, and generous things, and that he did them in large measure, though, to his credit, with less notoriety." In the selections given from Rogers and Campbell one misses one or two small pieces that can ill be spared. One of these is the beautiful lines of Rogers on his visit to Loch Long. Another is one of Campbell's latest poems on "Field Flowers." A friend had sent him, in his declining years, a posy of wild flowers. They recalled to him his early days in the Scottish Highlands, and he composed some lines in which he struck, for the last time, the fine lyric note which he had awakened in his prime:—

"I love you for lulling me back into dreams
Of the blue Highland mountains and echoing streams,
And the birchen glades breathing their balm."

In his notice of Campbell, Sir Henry Taylor says of the Americans "that they are affected quite as much as we are, if not more, by what is old and unfamiliar." And this he confirms by the following anecdote:—

"I breakfasted in company with Mr. Webster on his first arrival in London. Mr. Webster was a man of a weighty and imposing presence and appearance, with a grave and stern expression of countenance, silent and self-possessed. After breakfast we took him to Westminster Abbey. He walked in, looked about him, and burst into tears."

In his essay on Shelley, Mr. Frederick Myers pleads eloquently in defence of Shelley against those who, he thinks, do not value him highly enough. There is no doubt that Shelley's poetic name has been strongly in the ascendant for the last twenty years, and it may be almost said that, to men under five-and-thirty, he is quite the prime poet of our century. Of these, Mr. Myers would seem here to be the spokesman. What men of forty, or beyond it, who still care for poetry—a small minority, it must be allowed—say is that, in spite of all his marvellous gifts, the melody and subtle magic of his verse, he wants that substance of thought and that coherence which all great poets have. This would repel many who might be tolerant enough of his sentiments. This fundamental objection Mr. Myers states through three pages of his essay. His reply to it seems to be, first, the poet's youth and immaturity, when his life closed—an immaturity, however, which he was fast leaving behind, as is shown by the productions of his last four years, in which a great, though not uniform, progress is discernible. Secondly, to the question, What has Shelley contributed to thought? Mr. Myers answers that "the common religion of all the world advances by many kinds of prophecy, and is spread abroad by the flying flames of emotion as well as by the solid incandescence of eternal truth." The evanescent "hues of sunset have for us their revelation" as well as the solid frame of mountains. Be it so. We would pay all respect to the inspiration that lies in sunsets. At the same time, we would wait to see whether those who have chosen Shelley for their exclusive coryphaeus are led by his guidance to nobler heights than their fore-runners attained. Till we see the issue—and another decade will show it—judgment may be reserved.

There are two ways of criticising—one is to set forth at large the poet's limitations and faults, and, after these have been fully emphasised, to point out wherein lies his peculiar strength. The other allows, but does not dwell on, the limitations and defects, and tries mainly to interpret and bring out the positive merits of the poet. Examples of both these methods are to be found in the present work. Mr. Arnold, in speaking of Keats, has chosen the former way. He has evidently little patience with those admirers of Keats "whose pawing and fondness does not good but harm to his fame; who concentrate attention upon what in him is least wholesome and most questionable." It is not for the sake of the strong sensuous vein in him, but in spite of it—for the strength, the clear judgment, and the character which underlie it—that Mr. Arnold admires Keats. He shows that his attitude towards the public was that of a "strong man, not of a weakling avid of praise"—that he despised the artistic and literary "jabberers" who kept gushing over him; and quotes a saying of his, "I have met with women who, I really think, would like to be married to a poem, and to be given away by a novel." One might almost fancy that Mr. Arnold had himself been bored by persons of this sort, with such relish does he dwell on Keats' disdain of them. Keats' master-passion, Mr. Arnold shows, was his love of the principle of beauty in all things—his feeling that, as Keats says in prose, "what the imagination seizes as beauty must be truth," or, as he says in verse:—

"Beauty is truth, truth beauty"—

"and this is not the passion of the sensuous or sentimental poet, but is an intellectual and spiritual passion. It is no small thing to have so loved the principle of beauty as to perceive the necessary relation of beauty with truth and of both with joy. Keats' was a great spirit because this just and high perception made itself clear to him."

Speaking of his poetry, Mr. Arnold says, as he has said before, that its great and almost peculiar merit is the truth and felicity with which it interprets nature, and in this gift of natural magic

"he ranks with Shakespeare. He is Shakespearean in that rounded perfection and felicity of loveliness of which Shakespeare is the great master. 'I think,' Keats said humbly, 'I shall be among the English poets after my death.' He is—he is with Shakespeare."

This is criticism, this is insight, of the finest order. And if some part of it we have heard from Mr. Arnold before, it would be hard, when a man has said the best thing that has been said on a subject, to require of him that he should say yet a better. I have given so much from this essay on Keats because it is so excellent. On the first reading it seemed not quite equal to the essay by the same author on Gray in the preceding volume. But a second perusal convinced me that it was not only equal to that essay, but in keen, discriminating insight probably went beyond it.

I wish I could have dwelt on Mr. Goldwin Smith's essay on Scott and the Dean of Westminster's on Keble. The former evidently finds Scott a more congenial subject than Cowper. Of Scott he says—and truly—that "Walter Scott ranks in imaginative power hardly below any writer save Homer and Shakespeare." The truth is that he is the nearest—indeed, the only—representative of Homer which modern times have produced. It may be doubted whether the selections from Scott's poems are always the best that could be made. Why are the opening stanzas of the Lay, and those of Marmion, too, not included? Why not the "Battle of Flodden"—the finest battle-piece in English poetry? Again, surely a better example of Scott's treatment of scenery could have been found than the description of Lake Coriskin.

Dean Stanley has brought out with his peculiar emphasis those traits in the poet of The Christian Year with which he himself most sympathises—the keen eye he had for the local colouring of the Bible and for the human side of its characters, and the theology of the poet's heart everywhere breaking into views of religious thought, deeper, truer, more humane than those sanctioned by his party bonds. There are, however, it must be allowed, tones in Keble's character and poetry which his admirers will not find noted in the Dean's estimate of him. In the selections from his poems they could willingly have spared one or two of those which are given to make room for the poem for the Fourth Sunday in Advent; that for the Monday before Easter; and those for the Second, the Fourth, and the Twenty-Fourth Sundays after Trinity.

Scant justice, I think, is done to the Ettrick Shepherd either in the very brief notice of him or in the one short specimen given of his poetry. Surely there are some of his other songs better than "A Boy's Song," the only piece of his here given. The Queen's Wake contains several ballads which exhibit, especially "Bonny Kilmeny," much more of his power than this tiny little canticle.

Neither do the poetesses receive in this volume the recognition which is their due. Mrs. Hemans is spoken of in an apologetic tone that sounds almost like depreciation.

For her long poems we have little to say. We all know what can be urged against her for exuberance, fatal facility in rhyming, flowers out of all proportion to fruit. But, when the worst has been said that can be said, it still remains true that of her brief arrow-flights of song the best have the genuine lyric cry, none the less because their theme is the domestic affections, with the undertone of a broken heart. She of whom Wordsworth spoke as

"that holy spirit,
Sweet as the spring, as ocean deep," deserves a higher place than that here accorded to her.

Our English Sappho, Mrs. Barrett Browning, has fared scarcely better at the hands of Mr. William T. Arnold. Much is made of her alleged defects, some of which we admit, while others may be questioned. A lance might well be broken in defence of what are spoken of as her defective rhymes. In the licence which she claimed as to these, some of her attempts may have been failures; some, we think, were not. But it was a gallant effort for a woman to set convention at defiance, and endeavour to win for her country's poetry a larger freedom where freedom is so sorely needed. On the subject of rhymes there is much to say, but this is not the place to say it. Mr. W. T. Arnold seems, even when he would most praise her, somewhat too much afraid of the cynical generation he addresses. The deductions he makes are, to use his own phrase, more "to be counted against the reader than against the poetess." For intensity of passion and proud pathos Mrs. B. Browning stands almost without a rival among the poets of her own land. These feelings are no doubt seen at their best when condensed into her sonnets—not in the Portuguese sonnets alone, but in many others. Such sonnets as those on "Bereavement," "Consolation," "Substitution," "Futurity," "The Two Sayings," and "The Meaning of the Look" will not lose by comparison with any in our language, and will oftener come to the lips of men and women, when deeply moved, than most poems of the modern time.

I have little acquaintance with the poetry of Mr. Dobell, and have, therefore, nothing to say against his finding a place in this collection. But it was a thing to be wished that some notice had been taken of his friend and brother poet, Alexander Smith. Though he died at the early age at which so many poets have died, he left in his City Poems and in some of his later single pieces strains that ought to "plead against oblivion for his name."

But it seems almost invidious to note the few omissions or oversights that may have been made in a volume which contributes so much to the knowledge and enjoyment of the finest bloom of England's literature. Those who have long known by heart many of the poems here given read them with new pleasure when they find them surrounded by so many brother poets, and introduced by so appreciative commentators. And for the young, no work they will meet with can give them so good a view of the large and rich inheritance that lies open to them in the poetry of their country.

J. C. SHARP.

James Outram: a Biography. By Major-Gen. Sir F. J. Goldsmid, C.B., K.C.S.I. In 2 vols. Second Edition. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THOUGH Sind is a small and poor country, it has been intimately connected with the lives of many great men. Fabulously, no doubt, some of the characteristic scenes in the life of Gautama Buddha are laid on the banks of the Indus. The retiring army of Alexander passed through Sind and Beloochistan. History has few more tragic stories to relate than that of the youthful Mohammed Kasim, the Mohammedan conqueror of Sind, and the daughters of King Dahir. It is indissolubly associated with the too circumscribed career of the great British general, Sir Charles Napier, whose unfortunate fate it was never to find a sufficient sphere for his commanding and almost surpassing ability. Many able men were in Sind in Napier's time—some supporting, some opposing, him. It was the keen insight of Sir Charles which at once detected the great genius of Richard Burton, and gave him what may be called a roving commission, which resulted in his marvellous knowledge of Eastern life and his power of assuming Eastern disguise, not to speak of his invaluable works on Sind; but, unfortunately, there were other men, great in their way, such as Outram and John Jacob, who, like Lord Dalhousie afterwards, did not hit off matters so happily with the old warrior. A new state of matters and a new group of able men followed under the Commissionership of Sir Bartle Frere, known as "the Sindians;" and it is to this group that the author of Outram's biography belongs. Distinguished at an early period by his linguistic and especially Persian acquirements, Capt. Goldsmid was still more distinguished by the accuracy of these acquirements, by a calm unpretentiousness, combined with a genial wish to make them as serviceable to others as he possibly could. He was, and has always been, the model of a cautious and successful official, minus the meaner and objectionable qualities which, as matters go at present, are often the accompaniments, and perhaps even the aids, of successful officialdom. It is possible that Gen. Goldsmid's very satisfactoriness, his unpretendingness, and the completeness of his work have been taken too much as a matter of course, so as to prevent his employment in higher positions than those which he has filled. Had he been a little less perfect and just a little turbulent, like Outram, he might have bulked larger to-day in the eye of the world. As it is, his services are best known in connexion with the arduous work of carrying through the overland telegraph lines between India and Europe, and as chief of the Commission for settling the boundaries between Persia, Afghanistan, and Beloochistan.

Gen. Goldsmid had no special acquaintance with Outram; but he has had the higher qualification of being quite familiar throughout with the career of his hero, and of being well acquainted with the circumstances of the whole field. Consequently, he has given us a most able, interesting, clear, and, except as regards one affair in Outram's life, a very impartial and satisfactory biography. We doubt whether anyone else could have done it so well. The Bayard of India is clearly set before us in all his strength, and with almost all his failings. This is not done by any attempt on the biographer's part to take measure of his subject—to defend him here, or to accuse him there—but by the simpler and more satisfactory method of making such a full yet judicious use of the material at his command as to place the reader in possession of the essential facts and the necessary details of Outram's career, and so to leave him in a most favourable and easy position for forming his own judgment. This is biography of a very high order; of a sort which is peculiarly acceptable to the English mind; and we do not know that we could point to any finer specimen of it in our language. It has involved, however, the publication of two bulky volumes, not a line of which is unnecessary in a first and general biography of Sir James Outram; but it may be suggested that if a popular memoir of him is to be published, and a volume produced which all men and boys will read as they do Southey's Life of Nelson, these two volumes should be not so much cut down as concentrated in another edition into less than half their present size; and no one could do that half so well as Gen. Goldsmid himself, who has shown that he can write in a remarkably controlled and trenchant manner.

The second edition of this biography is now before us; and it is pleasant to note that so admirable a work on so interesting a subject has met with so much recognition and success. There is no change of any consequence in the new edition; only the addition of some small details in regard to Outram's rather trivial operations in the Southern Mahratta country in 1843, and a map of the Bhil country and other districts lying to the north of Bombay, which is acceptable.

The point in which the biography is deficient is that as to the relations of Outram in regard to Sir Charles Napier and the annexation of Sind. It is not generally known that the perhaps overcharged sobriquet of "the Bayard of India" sprang from the generous heart of Sir Charles Napier, and was conferred upon Outram in a speech which Napier made at a military dinner given to the former at Sakhar in November 1842. The speech is worth quoting, being, like so many of the old hero's letters and speeches, something like a battle itself:—

"Gentlemen, I have told you that there are only to be two toasts drunk this evening; one, that of a lady (the Queen), you have already responded to; the other shall be for a gentleman. But before I proceed any further, I must tell you a story. In the fourteenth century there was in the French army a knight renowned for deeds of gallantry in war and wisdom in council; indeed, so deservedly famous was he, that by general acclamation he was called the knight sans peur et sans reproche. The name of this knight, you may all know, was the Chevalier Bayard. Gentlemen, I give you the 'Bayard of India,' sans peur et sans reproche, Major James Outram of the Bombay Army."

Outram's return for this, and for all Napier's generous recognitions of him, was a rather poor one; and the height which his generosity appears to have reached in this controversy may be judged of from a contrasting passage. Much of Outram's feeling against Sir Charles had no foundation in facts, and he himself came to see so much; but the furthest extent to which he went in acknowledgment of his error and ingratitude is specially worthy of notice. After wandering back and back from the violent and unfounded things he had written against his (acknowledged) noblest friend, Sir Charles Napier, Outram had no more apology or explanation of his own mistaken conduct to give than the following one:—

"It was too much in consonance with fallen human nature to regard and treat the misrepresentations as intentional—to repay harsh words and unkind misrepresentations with harsh and unkind rejoinders—to return railing for railing. All this I did; but, long ere Sir Charles was called away, I often bitterly, and with a deep sense of humiliation, deplored the loose run I had given to my irritated feelings, and the licence I had allowed my pen. And, when the grave closed over him, I had, from the bottom of my soul, forgiven him, in respect of all I had thought he had done requiring my forgiveness."

Surely an egotistical superior-mediocrity never reached a higher apex of sublime self-renunciation than this. At last, when the grave closed over the great and unfortunate Sir Charles Napier, Outram had, from the bottom of his soul, forgiven the great hero for all which he (Outram) had ascribed to Napier and considered as requiring his (Outram's) forgiveness, and which Outram virtually admits was in great part figment of his own imagination!

The strong reasons there were, both in justice and in policy, for the annexation of Sind are not sufficiently brought out by Gen. Goldsmid. Perhaps too much, also, is made of Outram's treatment of the Bhils, considering how many officers have highly distinguished themselves by similar successful treatment of the wild tribes of India. As to Outram's career in general, I should say it was a singularly fortunate one. A different impression is apt to be created by the number of quarrels in which he was engaged; but, if he found people to oppose him, he also found as powerful persons to support him; and, if some people superseded him, others restored him or gave him higher appointments. A notable instance of his good fortune was his being appointed to the command of the Persian War, without having had military experience qualifying him for such a position. His fate, as compared with that of some Indian officers of far higher ability and as great deserving, was a very happy one. Nevertheless, he well merited his great success, and the story of his life is a most interesting and instructive one.

ANDREW WILSON.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

THE new edition of Mr. Eastwick's translation of Sadi's Gulistan has long been desired, and, now that it has at length appeared (Tribnor), will be welcomed by all who take any interest in Oriental poetry. The Gulistan is a typical Persian verse-book of the higher order; its curious medley of anecdote and aphorism, stanza and repartee, represents precisely the species of literature in which the Persian mind revels most enjoyingly; it possesses all that niceness of expression, that curiosa verborum felicitas, which we prize in Horace, whose choiceness, perhaps, finds a parallel only in Heine and in the Persian poets. But, beyond this, Sadi's chef d'œuvre has a tone apart and above the works of other Persian poets. Sadi is the most modern (if we may use the term) of Oriental writers; we find him more in tune with the spirit of our own day; in other words, people felt and reasoned in very much the same fashion in Sadi's thirteenth as in our nineteenth century. The influence of the mystic doctrines prevalent in Persia then as now accounts in great measure for the reflective turn of Sadi's poems; and to the same source may perhaps be traced their purity in word and thought and their high ideal of conduct. In many respects they are, if not more charming, more interesting than Hafiz' songs, and those who received Omar Khayyam's Rubaiyat as a new revelation should compare it with Sadi's Gulistan. Mr. Eastwick's is the standard translation, and, though it cannot rival Mr. Fitzgerald's Omar, it is graceful and, withal, literal. So much of the beauty of Persian poetry rests in the form that it is seldom fair to subject it to the disadvantages of a translation, in which the charm of the original is almost inevitably lost. In attempting a rhymed version Mr. Eastwick has increased the risk of failure; and it may be doubted whether it is practicable, save in very exceptional cases, to render Oriental poetry into anything but unrhymed verse, without losing much of that minute exactness which is essential to the preservation of the Eastern colouring. Mr. Eastwick's rhymed translation, however, is much above the average of such hazardous attempts, and has long established itself in a secure position as the best version of Sadi's finest work. And Sadi is one of those few poets of the Mohammedan middle-age who wrote as a poet and not as a versifier, and thought first of his meaning and then of his words, and yet brought his style to a point of finish which was never reached by those who began with thinking of their words and afterwards sought to introduce a meaning.

What Girls can do: a Book for Mothers and Daughters. By Phillis Browne. (Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co.) This is a very sensible and well-written book, and one likely to be extremely useful to the present generation of girls, most of whom, it is encouraging to note, are animated by a sincere desire to "do something." This book seeks to direct efforts, and show how they can best be applied. It is divided into three main parts, under the heads of "Work for Duty," "Work for Pleasure," and "Work for Necessity." Under the first head comes "Household Work," including cleaning of rooms, light laundry work, cooking, dressmaking, &c., all of which the author rightly deems a well-educated girl may, if required, undertake without any loss of dignity or culture. Some warning hints are given as to charitable work, which girls are advised not to undertake except under direction, the mischief done by indiscriminate alms-giving being pointed out. Pleasure work includes instruction in painting, gardening, keeping poultry, and a variety of methods for filling vacant hours. "Work for Necessity" gives valuable, though often it has to be very discouraging, advice on the subject of gaining a living. The various positions lately opened for clerks, teachers of all kinds, sick-nurses, &c., are discussed, and their advantages and disadvantages pointed out, but in all cases girls are advised not to try for appointments unless they have received suitable training. Literary work without some special vocation is discouraged; and, in all things, the writer of this book counsels her young readers to perfect themselves in what they can do rather than to aim at what they cannot.

Russia. By W. R. Morfill. (Sampson Low and Co.) Mr. Morfill's account of Russia forms one of the series of small volumes on "Foreign Countries and British Colonies." He has evidently taken great pains to render it as complete as any so brief a description of so immense an empire can be, not contenting himself with the ordinary sources of information, but conscientiously seeking those fountain-heads to which only scholars who are versed in Slavonic tongues have access. To give a good sketch of Russian history in twenty pages is not an easy task, but he has performed it with full success. His account of Polish history is also remarkably good; and the chapters devoted to Russian and Polish literature contain a very great amount of trustworthy information in a very small compass. Sometimes, it is true, undue stress seems to have been laid upon minor points. The space allotted to Mickiewicz's Konrad Wallenrod is almost as great as that allowed to the history of Russia during the last hundred years. And in speaking of the French invasion of Russia it seems but of little use to tell English readers that "some very interesting papers narrating the sufferings of the Russians during the occupation of the French have appeared in the Rousski Arkhiv." But such exuberances as these are due to a fullness of knowledge which can scarcely be deemed a fault. The illustrations are quite unworthy of Mr. Morfill's text.

The Norfolk Antiquarian Miscellany. Vol. I. Vol. II., Part I. Edited by Walter Rye. (Norwich: Goose and Co.) Mr. Rye is a careful and industrious antiquary, and has enlisted in his service some of the most accomplished scholars of East Anglia. His publication differs from the Transactions of a local archaeological society, inasmuch as one mind only is responsible for the contents, though they have proceeded from many pens. There is nothing like fine writing in the book; no endeavour to be popular at the expense of sense or fact. The first volume was published some time ago; the first part of the second has only recently appeared. It contains fourteen articles, almost every one of which is a distinct addition to our stock of knowledge. Miss Lucy Toulmin Smith's paper on the Walloon church at Norwich is the most interesting in the collection. The history of the foreign Protestants who fled to our shores to escape persecution has yet to be written. Whoever undertakes the labour will find Miss Smith's paper most useful. The list of foreigners at the end is very curious, and should be carefully examined by those interested in surnames. The name of Gaston Martineau, who had been a surgeon at Dieppe, appears near the end of the catalogue. Dr. Augustus Jessopp, whose labours on the historic family of Walpole have already had an important bearing on English history, contributes an amusing paper on "The Wooing and Married Life of Elizabeth Lady L'Estrange," and Mr. Edward Milligen Beloe a notably excellent article entitled, "Our Home in East Anglia;" but why does he use the corrupt half-Latin form Canute when he wishes to speak of King Cnut? And why does he so horribly mutilate Sir Walter Scott? The poet wrote of Witkind the Waster:—

"And he burn'd the churches, that heathen Dane,
To light his band to their barks again."

Mr. Beloe, however, thinks it good to offer the lines to his readers in the following corrupt fashion:—

"He burned the churches, that wicked Dane,
To light his men to their ships again."

We wonder when it will cease to be necessary to tell people that there is no need of their lighting up their own prose with purple patches from the poets, but that if they do so it is incumbent upon them to give what the poet wrote, and not a hash—part one thing and part another. There is a note on "The Squire Papers"—certain documents said to relate to Cromwell and the Civil War time (see Carlyle's Letters and Speeches of Oliver Cromwell, ed. 1857, vol. i., p. 355). It is very short, but it adds materially to the mass of evidence already gathered together, which proves almost to demonstration that these papers are not relics of the times to which they profess to relate.

Précis of Official Papers. Session 1880-Part I. (W. H. Allen and Co.) This considerable volume, clearly printed and handsomely bound, contains the substance of all the official documents presented to Parliament during the past year. As the parts appeared monthly, they obtained the general consensus of approval which they deserved. In its present form, the publication will be an invaluable addition to the libraries of all who take an interest in public affairs. Few have hitherto had the opportunity of studying the activity of the press that may be called public in the truest sense. For Blue-books generally are too dry and too large, while newspapers are too busy in giving us something new or something clever. We are glad to be able to add that the Index to the complete volume, upon which half its utility for reference depends, leaves nothing to be desired either for accuracy or fullness. All we miss is some sort of preface describing the nature of the various classes of documents here analysed. The ordinary public, we feel sure, have no knowledge of what a "command paper" means, or how important and even interesting its contents may be.

A Popular History of the Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth at Heath, near Halifax. By Thomas Cox, M.A. (Halifax: King.) When the monks went out the schoolmasters came in. There were schools of grammar connected with the monasteries too many to mention—indeed, it is probable that there was hardly one of the older foundations which had not something of the sort belonging to it; yet it is nevertheless true that, with exceptions too trifling to mention, the grammar schools of England owe their origin to the great desire for knowledge which sprang into being in the sixteenth century. Dugdale and his continuators have made it possible for us to know something about nearly every one of the houses of religion, but we have had no similar book about our grammar schools. We do not forget Nicholas Carlisle's Concise Description, but it is of little value; concise to a fault where information is wanted, few books are more discursive when useless knowledge is to be conveyed. Though we have no book dealing properly with the schools of England as a whole, we have several most useful school-histories, and the head-master of Heath has added a useful volume to the number. It is not prettily "got up," and the photographs might have been left out with advantage; but the letterpress, which is after all the main thing, is thoroughly good. The only fault we have to find is that certain bits of Latin are given in their contracted form when they would have been far more readable if printed at length. It is important to give the Latin of charters and other mediæval documents exactly as it was written, for doubts may often arise as to what the true form of a word is; but there can hardly be a doubt as to the interpretation of a legal paper of the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Mr. Cox gives useful biographical details of several of the masters, and some very full lists of scholars. These things will be useful to many who have no special interest in school-history. Notwithstanding the way in which population shifts in these days, it will be found on examination that among the nineteenth-century pupils there is an overwhelming majority of old Yorkshire names.

Poems. By Mrs. Horace Dobell. (C. Kegan

Paul and Co.) The very miscellaneous nature of these poems makes it somewhat difficult to review them, it being manifestly impossible to grasp the intention and appreciate the execution of all with the thoroughness that would be comparatively easy if one had to deal only with some. Mrs. Horace Dobell has not published in haste. She has waited, if anything, too long—too long only because it is such a body of verse that is now at once given to the public. Better, however, to have to make complaint of over-much substance than to have to make complaint of too scanty fare; the former is, at all events, but an insignificant mistake. And it is easy to recognise in these very various poems—some of which are graceful narratives, others spirited appeals, and others thoughtful reflections—the evidence of a refined and varied mental life furnishing naturally many themes and much material for poetical uses. Some of these poems, and some which we confess we like the best, in their ensemble, though not always in their details, are personal poems; such is the Farewell to Odsey—a pathetic reverie over an old and beautiful home—and such, we take it, more than one of the poems written "by lamplight, in a London library," and full of the associations which that library and its tenants recall. But Mrs. Dobell has not been mistaken in giving an important place in her book to the story of Ethelstone, for not only is the tale well told, but the verses abound in facile melody. Altogether, it would be a mistake not to extend a welcome to such a body of graceful and refined poetry.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE volume of Clerical Reminiscences which has recently been published under the nom de plume of "Senex," and has interested a large circle of readers through the freshness of its anecdotes, is now stated to have been written by the Rev. Josiah Bateman. Mr. Bateman held for several years the vicarage of Margate, but has for some time past been Rector of Southchurch, near Southend. Many of the anecdotes in his work are connected with Kent and the diocesan who rules the larger part of the county.

MESSRS. HURST AND BLACKETT will shortly publish a new work, in two volumes, by Lord William Lennox, called Plays, Players, and Playhouses at Home and Abroad; with Anecdotes of the Drama and the Stage. The same publishers have just ready a new story, entitled Missing! by Mary Cecil Hay, the author of Old Myddleton's Money.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN and Co. will publish next week the first volume of Mr. D. C. Boulger's History of China.

MR. RYE means to work further at his Chaucer pedigree, and has kindly promised to draw up for the Chaucer Society a large table, pedigree-wise, of all the old Chaucers yet known.

WE have just received the programme of the "Fourth General Meeting of the American Library Association," which was to be held at Washington and Baltimore on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of this week. The Association was to be received on Thursday evening by the President of the United States; and on Friday was to visit the Johns Hopkins University of Baltimore by invitation of its President. We may congratulate the American librarians on the very full and excellent list of papers to be read.

AT the last meeting of the London Association of Correctors of the Press on February 7, a recent correspondence in the Athenæum on the relations between authors and printers' readers was brought forward in a short paper by the treasurer, Mr. George Chaloner, F.C.S. An animated discussion ensued, in which several readers of great experience took part; and, though no formal resolutions were proposed, the sense of the meeting was pretty plainly expressed. The speakers fully endorsed the doctrines laid down in the paper—namely (1), that the reader is the servant not of the author, but of the master printer, who pays him to find out the errors of compositors in putting MS. into type; (2) that it is the reader's duty not to look for authors' mistakes, but if he observes any he may "query" them. Even this, however, is beyond the strict line of the duty for which he is paid; (3) that the reader ought not to rectify authors' errors on his own responsibility, except in rare cases of emergency, because he thereby makes himself an unauthorised agent, running his employer's custom into expense without his knowledge or sanction.

THE character of Job Thornberry, who acquired wealth and distinction as a manufacturer in Lancashire, and lived to see his son a devoted sympathiser with Tractarianism, will be remembered by many readers of Endymion. The name of the shrewd man of business is another of the things which Lord Beaconsfield has borrowed from those who went before him. Job Thornberry is the name of the honest tradesman in George Colman's play of John Bull, who differs from the creation of the novelist in that his troubles come to him through his daughter and not through his son.

AT the special request of Mr. Gladstone, a new edition is about to be published of Systems of Land Tenure in Various Countries, being a series of essays published under the sanction of the Cobden Club, and edited by Mr. J. W. Probyn. Messrs. Cassell, Petter, Galpin and Co. are the publishers.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW and Co. will shortly publish a volume of essays entitled Eighteenth-Century Studies, by Mr. Francis Hitchman, author of The Life of Lord Beaconsfield.

M. ULYSSE ROBERT has brought out, in a finely printed quarto of 330 pages, the sixth-century Latin translation of the Pentateuch contained in the Codex Lugdunensis—the famous MS. of which a portion was purloined by Libri from the Lyons Library, and recently restored by Lord Ashburnham. The edition consists of a printed facsimile, a printed text with the parallel Septuagint version, and a very elaborate Introduction, in which the palæographical, philological, and critical features of the text are fully dealt with.

THE authorities of the Strassburg University Library have offered the Swiss Federation the opportunity of purchasing a number of valuable documents bequeathed to the library by a member of the family of Schauenberg. They consist principally of notes and plans which were drawn up for the Bern Council of War during the last decade of the eighteenth century, and contain a large quantity of useful and hitherto unknown material for Swiss history during the period of the struggle with France. They will probably be bought for the Stadtbibliothek of Bern. The Strassburg University Library also possesses, from the same source, the letters which General von Schauenberg wrote out of Switzerland, but the authorities are not inclined to part with the originals in this case.

THE revised Federal Constitution of Switzerland takes the legislation concerning Urheberrecht (rights of authors and original inventors) from the cantons, and gives it into the hand of the Confederation. The Swiss Department of Trade and Agriculture has drawn up a Bill for the protection of literary and artistic property, and has laid it before a special commission of experts for examination and advice. The commission includes two members of the Nationalrath, Herr Weber, of Solothurn, and M. Pictet, of Geneva; the Federal Judge Blasi; Profs. A. von Orelli and Rambert, of Zürich, and Hilty, of Bern; Herr Stehlin-Burckhardt, President of the Swiss Association of Painters and Sculptors; Musikdirektor Munsinger, of Bern; the architect, A. Koch, of Zürich; and two publishers, M. Sandoz, of Neuchâtel, and R. Schmid, of the firm of Dalp, in Bern. The new law will come forward for debate in the Federal Assembly in June.

A NEW fortnightly Review of literature, art, music, and the drama is appearing in New York under the title of The Critic. Among the contributors are Messrs. C. D. Warner, S. H. Gay, Walt Whitman, E. C. Stedman, R. H. Stoddard, R. W. Gilder, and Miss Kate Field.

THE Hamburgische Correspondent completed on December 31, 1880, its 150th year. A jubilee number has appeared, the contents of which were taken from old issues; and some numbers of singular interest, dating from the last and the beginning of the present century, have been reproduced. In the last "Festnummer" the history of the starting and the various vicissitudes of the Correspondent are retold in an interesting manner.

At the meeting of the Clifton Shakspeare Society held on the 22nd ult., reports in connexion with The Merchant of Venice were presented from the following departments:—Shakspeare's Play-craft, by Mr. J. A. Sanders; Plants and Animals, by Dr. J. E. Shaw; Satire and Irony, by Mr. J. W. Mills, B.A. A paper on "The Quality of Mercy," from the University Magazine of January 1880, which had been read before the New Shakspeare Society on November 14, 1879, by the author of "Home Side of a Scientific Mind," was read, and formed the basis of a discussion on the characters of "Shylock" and "Portia."

MR. GLADSTONE has, through Prince L.-L. Bonaparte, given the New Shakspeare Society a suggestion as to the meaning of one of Shakspeare's words. Iago sneers at the military knowledge of his supplanter, Cassio, and calls the latter

" . . . A fellow
That never set a squadron in the field,
Nor the division of a battle knows
More than a spinster" (Othello, I. i. 22).

Mr. P. A. Daniel, on this, noted that, as Florio in 1611 said squidra or squadron meant "properly a part of a companie of souldiers of twentie or fife and twentie, whose cheefe is a Corporall," Shakspeare may, in the instance above, have used squadron "in the sense of the smallest company, commanded by the lowest officer, and have placed it in Iago's mouth to give additional point to that villain's contemptuous estimate of Cassio's soldieryship": see New Shakspeare Society's Transactions, 1877-79, p. 103, where Mr. Furnivall adds that the word here is but a "squad." (We noted this at the time, ACADEMY, September 1, 1877.) Mr. Gladstone now adds that, as the root of the word is the Latin quadrare, from quatuor, the squadron was clearly the fourth part of a company, like the modern "section," still under the command of a corporal, so that Florio's "companie" would consist of eighty or one hundred men, as it often does still. The squadron thus compares with our "quarter," the Latin quadrans, a farthing, or fourth-ing, "quadro, quarta pars anni, French trimestre," "quadra, quartier de paie," &c. All we can say is that, if the meaning given by Mr. Daniel and Mr. Gladstone to Iago's squadron is not right, it ought to be, so well does it suit the spirit of the passage in which it occurs. And, with the other contemporary authorities—Fenton, Barrett, &c.—cited by Mr. Daniel, we think no one need hesitate to accept a "corporal's squad" as the equivalent of "his Moorship's ancient's" girding term.

WE have received Proceedings of the Dublin Mansion House Relief Committee, 1880 (Dublin: Browne and Nolan); New Guide to Modern French Conversation, by V. de Fivas, twenty-ninth edition, thoroughly revised (Crosby Lockwood and Co.); All Round the Year: Verses from Sky Farm, by E. and D. R. Goodale (New York: Putnam's Sons); Poems for the Period, by Heone, ed. the Rev. H. Reid (Irvine: Murchland); Cries in a Crisis, by R. A. Macfie (Stanford); The Miracles of Our Lord explained to Country Children, by the Rev. S. C. Malan (G. Bell and Sons); A Modern Babylon, by Leonard Lloyd, second edition (Remington); The Clergy Directory and Parish Guide, 1881 (Bosworth); The Royal Supremacy historically examined, by the Rev. F. King (Parker); Theism and Pantheism, von Dr. W. Deisenberg (Wien: Faesy); National and International Currency, by J. Hector (P. S. King); The Ornaments Rubrick: its History and Meaning (Parker); &c.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

POLITICAL economy is well represented in the magazines for February. To the Fortnightly Mr. Cliffe Leslie contributes an autobiographical sketch of M. de Laverne, happily illustrated both with personal details and with reflections upon provincial France. This is immediately followed by a paper upon "Small Farmers in South-western France" by the Rev. Wentworth Webster, which may be strongly recommended to those who prefer facts to theories. The writer not only possesses a long personal knowledge of the country, but he has sought to gather information widely. He is emphatic in describing the high degree of material prosperity attained by the Basque peasants. He bears witness to the readiness with which they have adopted agricultural machinery and new breeds of cattle. But he insists that their social condition is mainly determined by the fact that they keep down their own numbers by emigration. In Mr. Webster's opinion, "emigration is everywhere a necessary concomitant of prosperous peasant farming." Though he quotes other cases in support of this proposition, we are by no means sure that it is of universal application. The Contemporary has an article by Mr. J. A. Farrer upon "The Failure of Free Contract in Ireland," which should rather run, "The Failure of the Theory of Free Contract." Mr. Farrer might have made even more than he has done out of the analogy of the Indian rent law. Mr. John Rae writes about the Katheder-Socialisten, or "Socialists of the Chair." What he says is valuable, but it might have been conveyed in a more interesting form and with less of dogmatism. The new school of political economy has a future before it in this country as well as in Germany; and Mr. Rae does not help much to determine its position, except as bearing upon practical politics.

By far the most noteworthy literary paper in the Fortnightly is one by Mr. Swinburne on Tennyson and Musset, in which, in addition to giving us an ingenious comparison between Mr. Robert Browning and M. Leconte de Lisle, he contrives to produce a pretty exhaustive criticism of the two poets whose names are at the head of the article. It seems to be his admiration for Mr. Tennyson's lately published poem of Rizpah that has urged Mr. Swinburne into elaborate discussion of the works of the writer generally. He would have called Mr. Browning the most pathetic of living poets before Rizpah was published, and Pompilia would have justified him; but he holds that there are certain notes in Rizpah, "bi-sexual," establishing the womanliness as well as the manliness of a great poet in his love and thought for little children. "Not even Victor Hugo himself has ever touched the very deepest and finest chord of the human spirit with a diviner power, a more God-like strength of tenderness, than Mr. Tennyson has touched it here." The paper contains some extremely cogent criticism of In Memoriam and of the Idylls of the King. Mr. Swinburne does not quite appreciate the virtues of the Prince Consort or the "anti-Gallican cackle" of the Laureate. In Alfred de Musset's work, Mr. Swinburne gives a great place to his prose. Musset "died before his time in spirit." It had long been evident that the once exquisite poet "n'avait plus rien dans le ventre." Heine "might have added the remark that never did poet come so soon to the proverbial 'bottom of his bag.'" The whole article, whatever be its defects, is a wonderful instance of Mr. Swinburne's possession of the truest and most thoughtful critical power, combined with an instinctive delight in uttering warmly the praises of "his masters and his peers." The presence of this delight is a note of true criticism.

THE Cornhill Magazine has an article on "George Eliot" (without which, indeed, no periodical is nowadays complete) in which the writer happily remarks that George Eliot's favourite theme is "the woman in need of a confessor," and her weakness lies in the fact that "she takes the point of view of the confessor rather than the artist." A paper on "The Origin of London" gives a very clear and extremely readable account of the historical causes which have rolled into one a commercial seaport and an administrative capital, so as to make of London the largest city in the world. There is also an excellent paper on "Voltaire and Shakespeare," which traces how Voltaire first introduced Shakspeare to the French, and himself imitated him, till finally, alarmed at the growing enthusiasm and jealous for the honour of the French classics, among whom he no doubt ranked himself, Voltaire turned round upon his former idol and attempted to overthrow him. The story not only forms a curious chapter in literary history, but also illustrates the moral and intellectual character of Voltaire.

THE Journal of the National Indian Association for February has an article upon "Hindu Schools" which deserves attention. The system of education in India has hitherto been treated too much as a department of the Administration. All schools are classed either as "Government" or as "aided." The Government schools are doubtless the more efficient, but their cost is sometimes extravagant, and their total number is necessarily limited. The aided schools may be subdivided into those supported mainly by missionary societies and those supported mainly by local native effort. The last are known in Madras as "Hindu schools." Both these classes of aided schools are beginning to complain that they are handicapped in the competition with the Government schools, which possess advantages in money, in prestige, and in the status of their teachers. It would appear that a reconsideration of the whole question presses most in the Madras Presidency.

THE December number of the Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums contains a new explanation of Psa. xxxvi., and that for January a paper on the influence of the ideas of Isaiah ii. on the literature of the close of the Exile and a still later period, both by the editor, Dr. Grätz. Notes from the Munich Library (on Minchath Yehuda) and a continuation of a series on the Tosefta are also contained in the January number.

OBITUARY.

THOMAS CARLYLE.

THE old, inevitable commonplace of death repeats itself; another voice silent for ever; another face veiled by the shadow. That a man of fourscore and six years should prove mortal does not carry surprise to any heart. Yet the event, always uniform in certain superficial incidents, varies to the spiritual eyes as much as sunsets vary in their fiery intensities, or solemn splendours, or calm acquiescence of decline. Had we among us one of such visionary faculty as William Blake in his lucid moods, a veritable seer, to represent the reality of what has happened, he would show us no poor worn-out body on its bier, but a dead prophet whose venerable form is still instinct with miraculous power—a prophet who was also a pilgrim, his pilgrim staff now laid along, having ended his wayfaring and finished his course; nor should we be unaware of spiritual presences at the head and feet, sorrowing, yet fervently aspiring.

Carlyle's prime influence was a religious one; he was a preacher before he was a critic or an historian. James Carlyle, one of "the fighting masons of Ecclefechan," not only could lay the stones straight and firm, but, as a member of the Relief Church, had doubtless a Scottish clearness and vigour in matters of the faith, and, we are informed, loved to read old books which told of Reformation times and the deeds of the Covenanters. It was intended that Thomas, his eldest son, should be a minister of the Church. A brilliant French critic has called Carlyle a Puritan, and Carlyle himself described Puritanism as "the last of our Heroisms." His heritage of faith was indeed transformed, but it was never cast away. To view life, at times sadly, at times sternly, and always seriously, is the Puritan habit, and it was Carlyle's, only relieved by the sudden tenderness of his heart, and by his humour as an artist, often almost Aristophanic, before which the whole world would appear in a moment as a huge farce-tragedy. To bear about with us an abiding sense of the infinite issues of human existence is a part of Puritanism. Poor, indeed, is this little life of man for pleasure or for pride; yet of measureless worth, since heaven and hell environ it. Each deed, each moment is related to Eternity. God and the devil, one at odds with the other, are not names, but terrible realities; righteousness and sin stand apart from one another by the whole diameter. On whose side does each of us find himself? The many are foolish, slumbering and sleeping, hearing no cry in the night. The wise are few, ever ready, with the loins girt and the lamp lit.

But Puritanism, in its desire to fortify the moral will, contracts the sensibilities, impoverishes the affections, averts its gaze from half of nature and of human life. How is one of stormy sensibility, to whom all of life is dear, an artist and a poet, a lover of beauty, a lover of strength even when ill-regulated, full of tenderness, pity, wrath; full also, in this new century, of new aspiring thoughts and impulses of revolt—how is such an one to be a Puritan? By his twenty-first year it had become clear to Carlyle that if he were to be a preacher he must preach another gospel than that of the Presbyterian Kirk. And in due time the authentic voice, calling him to be "a writer of books," grew audible. He must preach, if at all, through literature.

A broad way in literature for men of passionate temper had been opened by Byron. His victories had followed one another so brilliantly, so rapidly, that no other career seemed like his—that of Napoleon. He had revolted against a society of decencies and respectability, of social hypocrisies, and moral cant; and with that revolt Carlyle sympathised.

He had known the fever of a deep unrest; he had been miserable among negations and extinct faiths; with such unrest, such misery, Carlyle was not unacquainted. In Byron he recognised a certain desperate sincerity, underlying all superficial insincerities. Yet for one who had learnt that "man's chief end is to glorify God," who had heard of obedience to a divine will, of service to a divine King, Byron's egoistic revolt, though of service as a protest against the false, seemed to go but a little way towards attaining the liberty of true spiritual manhood. Is no better way possible? Is a religious freedom unattainable? Is it possible to be "a clear and universal man," and at the same time a man of faith? Carlyle, like Teufelsdröckh, closed his Byron; like Teufelsdröckh, he opened his Goethe. And in Goethe he found his own problem and the problem of his time solved. "The question," he writes in his essay on Goethe's works, "Can man still live in devoutness, yet without blindness or contraction; in unconquerable steadfastness for the right, yet without tumultuous exasperation against the wrong; an antique worthy, yet with the expansion and increased endowment of a modern? is no longer a question, but has become a certainty and ocularly visible fact."

Puritanism had said "Live resolutely for God in what is good," but Puritanism had narrowed the meaning of the word "good" as Carlyle henceforth could not narrow it; Puritanism had renounced the experiment of entering the kingdom of heaven otherwise than maimed and blind. Goethe said, "Live resolutely a complete human life, in what is good and true, in the whole of things"—In Ganzen, Guten, Wahren resolut zu leben. So the seriousness which is at the heart of Puritanism might grow large, and free, and beautiful. What Carlyle wrote of Goethe was not the mere expression of a literary judgment; he wrote with the sense that it was Goethe who had made it possible for him to live. He did not approach Goethe, like poor Sterling, with questions as to his classification—Was Goethe a Pagan, or a Christian? a Pantheist, or perchance a "Pot-theist"? He found, or thought he found, in Goethe a complete, heroic, modern man. "Carlyle breakfasted with me," wrote Crabb Robinson in 1832, "and I had an interesting morning with him. . . His voice and manner, and even the style of his conversation, are those of a religious zealot, and he keeps up that character in his declamations against the anti-religious. And yet, if not the god of his idolatry, at least he has a priest and prophet of his church in Goethe, of whose profound wisdom he speaks like an enthusiast. But for him, Carlyle says, he should not now be alive. He owes everything to him!"

Those were happy days in the moorland solitude of Craigenputtock, when, having conquered the egoistic despair of youth, and found in renunciation and a wise limited activity his "Everlasting Yea," Carlyle moved with a free, courageous step through untrodden regions of literature, and was for a time a prophet of joy and hope. He talked to De Quincey of founding a "Misanthropic Society," its members uniting to "hurl forth their defiance, pity, expostulation over the whole universe, civil, literary, and religious." But in truth he was no Timon; around him was the solitude which nourished his soul—

"a solitude altogether Druidical—grim hills tenanted chiefly by wild grouse, tams and brooks that have soaked and slumbered unmolested since the deluge of Noah, and nothing to disturb you with speech, except Arcturus and Orion, and the Spirit of Nature, in the heaven and in the earth, as it manifests itself in anger or love, and utters its inexplicable tidings, unheard by the mortal ear."

But, adds this misanthrope, "the misery is the almost total want of colonists." Yet, when he returned to his fireside, there was sufficient human society in the wife, whose "soft invincibility, capacity of discernment, and noble loyalty of heart" were to stand him in stead during forty years; in her, and in that pile upon his library table, eyed with the pride of a young literary athlete—"such a quantity of German periodicals and mystic speculation, embosomed in plain Scottish Peat-moor, being nowhere else that I know of to be met with."

In full manhood, and with none of the edges of his individuality worn away, Carlyle removed in 1834 from the solitude with society of Craigenputtock to the society with deeper solitude of London. His experiment of public lectures, though deeply interesting to those who were present (and they, if few—sometimes one hundred—were a fit audience), could not please himself. One constitutionally shy and nervous finds his bodily presence a slight but difficult barrier between his spirit and the spirits on which his influence should play; moreover, from the time a course was announced till it was finished, we are told, Carlyle scarcely slept. The American Ticknor, who found the lecture impressive and picturesque, saw before him "rather a small, spare, ugly Scotchman, with a strong accent." And even his warm-hearted friend Harriet Martineau, to whom Carlyle's rugged face appeared always "steeped in genius," had her courage dashed by the lecturer's evident anxiety and distress: "Yellow as a guinea, with downcast eyes, broken speech at the beginning, and fingers which nervously picked at the desk before him, he could not for a moment be supposed to enjoy his own effort." After the fourth annual experiment it became clear that thenceforward Thomas Carlyle was to be, if anything, what he names himself in his Petition on the Copyright Bill, "a writer of books."

In temperament Carlyle differed widely from his master, Goethe. When he came from his Northern solitude to London his age was the same as that of Goethe in the year of his return from Italy to Weimar. In solitude or congenial society, freed from the multifarious cares of a great public servant, delivering his heart from the exaltation of an ideal passion which could not transform itself into duty and happiness nor into creative activity, surrounded by the marble aristocracy of antique art, Goethe in Rome attained a serenity of vision and a comprehensive definiteness of purpose which some have described as resulting in a refroidissement of his genius. Carlyle, combative as a son of one of "the fighting masons of Ecclefechan" must needs be, with stormy sensitiveness pained by all the griefs and wrongs and follies of the time, lost such serenity as had been his in his moorland home, saw in tempestuous vision the old Puritan conflict between the powers of hell and heaven renewing itself in our modern world, and could not choose but show forth his vision, announce the woes that were coming on the earth, and declare, to those who had ears to hear, the all-but impossible way of salvation for society. "The savageness which has come to be a main characteristic of this singular man is, in my opinion," wrote Harriet Martineau, "a mere expression of his intolerable sympathy with the suffering." Goethe's wide and luminous view is, like that of Shakspeare in his last period, a gazing down upon human life from some clear outpost on the heights. Carlyle, with marred visage and rent prophetic robe, is hurtled hither and thither in the tumult of the throng. It is for his fellows that he enters the tumult; for his own part, could he but stand alone, his feet are established on a rock.

From the prophets we do not get the axiomata media of wise living, individual or social. They tell of righteousness, mercy, and judgment to come. Others of trained intelligence must apply their doctrine to life. Carlyle helped to make us feel that the issues of our time for evil or for good are momentous; that the chasm between truth and falsehood, between right and wrong, is sheer and of infinite depth; that all things do not of necessity tend from bad to good; that, on the contrary, bad often grows to worse; that a nation, by faithlessness and folly, may indeed go straight to the devil; that each bit of needful work done soundly, honestly, contributes to avert that catastrophe. This was an awakening piece of nineteenth-century prophecy. But how to find the truth? how to distinguish, in the complex material of life, between good and evil? how to attain the right? Worship of heroes (sometimes of questionable heroism), government by the Best (but where to find them?), drilling of Democracy (which will surely drill itself in the only effectual ways)—these suggestions did not greatly serve to make our path clear. The patient intellect of man had pursued other methods leading to other results. These were indignantly exploded by our transcendental prophet as the manufacture of logic-mills, fragments of the Dismal Science, leavings of the Pig Philosophy, wisdom of National Palaver, and such like. Happily, it was among the elemental forces of individual character that Carlyle wrought with chief power; his influence, therefore, without losing its virtue, could submit to manifold transformations. Many a democrat will acknowledge Carlyle's influence as having inspired his conduct with faithfulness and courage. Many a Utilitarian will confess that the reviler of the Pig Philosophy has been his chief spiritual master.

Carlyle's transcendentalism was part of the spirit of his time, part of the reaction moral, intellectual, and imaginative against the eighteenth century. The Carlylean transcendentalism derived its unique character from the Scottish Peat-moor, "Druidical Solitude," "speech only of Arcturus, Orion, and the Spirit of Nature"—from these mingling with influences from that pile of "German periodicals and mystic speculation" upon his library table. He needed a vast background, Immensities, Eternities, through which might wander "the passion-winged ministers of thought," Wonder, and Awe, and Adoration. But in the foreground of clear perception and sane activity, all was limited, definite, concrete. From Goethe he had learnt, what, indeed, his own shrewd Scottish head could well confirm, that to drift nowhither in the Inane is not the highest destiny of a human creature; that, on the contrary, all true expansion comes through limitation, all true freedom through obedience. Hence the rule, "Do the work that lies nearest to your hand;" hence the preciousness of any fragment of living reality, any atom of significant fact. If Carlyle was a mystic, he was a mystic in the service of what is real and positive. Still the little illuminated spot on which men toil and strive, and love and sorrow, was environed, for Carlyle's imagination, by the Immensities; the day, so bright and dear, wherein men serve or sin, was born from a deep Eternity which swiftly calls it back, engulphs it. From which contrast between the great and the little, the transitory and the eternal, spring many sudden surprises of humour and of pathos, which at length cease to surprise, and grow but too familiar to the reader of Carlyle.

To History, the region of positive, concrete fact, his mind gravitated. As a critic of literature he had done signal service by showing that a passionate sympathy is often needful to attain the ends of justice. The essays on Burns and Johnson are illuminated by fine intelligence, yet less by intelligence than by pity, reverence, and love. While scornfully intolerant of dilettantism and "the poor Fine Arts" founded on unvaracity, Carlyle had done much to introduce into England the Continental feeling for art and the artist as important factors in human society; but the art of which he spoke must be one founded on true insight into man's life and genuine belief; the artist must possess something more than manipulative dexterity; he must be in some measure a vates, whose conscious activity has, underlying it, a deep, unconscious energy. As a literary critic, Carlyle was sometimes perverse; he missed proportions; now and again he would resolutely invert things, and hold them up to mockery, in grotesque disarray. A certain leaven of Puritanism made him impatient of some harmless wiles and graceful pastimes of "the poor Fine Arts."

A poet of our century, who was also one of its most admirable prose writers, has told in verse the reproof which he received as rhymers from "Clio, the strong-eyed Muse." History pleased Carlyle, for its matter is robust, and yet it may be steeped in sentiment. What he could not endure was to attenuate history to a theory, or to relegate its living, breathing actors to a classification. He would fain lift up a piece of the past whole and unbroken, as a fragment of veritable human experience, with its deep inarticulate suggestions to the conscience and the will. Nothing should be lost, except what is unvital, mere wrappage and encumbrance of history. Working as an artist, with an idea of the whole, and a genius for distinguishing essentials from non-essentials in the myriad of details, the historian must attempt the almost impossible feat of rivaling reality, of presenting things in succession so that they may live in the imagination as simultaneous, since once they were so in fact; of presenting a series so that it may be recognised as a group. Much that is characteristic in Carlyle's work as historian has its origin in the marvellously quick and keen glance of his eye, his power of reading off some minute visible incident into its invisible meaning, and thus interpreting character by picturesque signs and symbols, together with the studiously elaborated style which quickens and exalts the reader's sensitiveness almost to the point of disease, playing upon every nerve-centre with snapping sparks of a new kind of electricity, until he tingles between pleasure and pain. The strain in Carlyle's writing is caused by his desperate resolve to produce in narrative, which, as he says, is linear, the effect of action, which is solid. "It is not in acted as it is in written History: actual events are nowise so simply related to each other as parent and offspring are; every single event is the offspring not of one but of all other events, prior or contemporaneous, and will in its turn combine with all others to give birth to new: it is an ever-living, ever-working Chaos of Being, wherein shape after shape bodies itself forth from innumerable elements." In other writers we may read more correctly the causes and the effects of the French Revolution. If we would enter the sack of the maelstrom and explore its green-glimmering terror we must accompany Carlyle.

From the work which endures our thoughts return to the man whom we have lost. To the spiritual eye a prophet and a pilgrim; but perhaps, more than all else, a soldier—the last in our time of the Ironsides. His heart, a well-spring of living tenderness; his pity, fine and piercing; his laughter, sudden and deep, at times even stupendous. Yet his best praise is that of a plain and faithful soldier in the warfare of man's life, and more particularly of life in this our century. We would turn away to our own toil and strife with a courageous thought, as he would bid us were it possible, and it cannot be better uttered than in words of his: "He that has an eye and a heart can even now say, Why should I falter? Light has come into the world; to such as love Light, and as Light must be loved, with a boundless all-doing, all-enduring love. For the rest, let that vain struggle to read the mystery of the Infinite cease to harass us. It is a mystery which, through all ages, we shall only read here a line of, there another line of. Do we not already know that the name of the Infinite is Good, is God? Here on earth we are as Soldiers, fighting in a foreign land; that understand not the plan of the campaign, and have no need to understand it; seeing well what is at our hand to be done. Let us do it like Soldiers, with submission, with courage, with a heroic joy. 'Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might.' Behind us, behind each one of us, lie Six Thousand Years of human effort, human conquest; before us is the boundless Time, with its as yet uncreated and unconquered Continents and Eldorados, which we, even we, have to conquer, to create; and from the bosom of Eternity there shine for us celestial guiding stars."

EDWARD DOWDEN.

HENRY NICOL.

By the death of Henry Nicol at Algiers, on January 30 last, England has lost its first Romance and Old-French scholar, and one of its foremost English and general philologists.

Henry Nicol was born in London in October 1845. He was first educated at a day-school in London, and afterwards had private teachers at Teignmouth, where he studied for the Cambridge local examinations, finally gaining a first class—a distinction which, if he had been born a few years later, would have given him a scholarship at the university. At the age of seventeen he was put into a merchant's office, where he remained till nearly within a year of his death.

From his earliest childhood he showed that he had a keen and restless intellect. While still a boy he acquired a sound elementary knowledge of most of the natural sciences and the various branches of mathematics, in addition to his school routine. The first dawnings of an interest in the scientific problems of language can also be traced back to this period; but it was not till he read Max Müller's Lectures that his attention was definitely concentrated on philology. I have letters of his, dated as far back as 1865, showing that he had already arrived at remarkably clear and sound views on many of the fundamental problems of language; he had, indeed, even then anticipated some of the views which were not brought forward till much later in Germany. It was at this time that he began the study of Diez's Comparative Romance Grammar, at first only as an introduction to the study of comparative philology. I had meanwhile made some progress in Germanic philology, and had formed the plan of writing a full historical English grammar. We then agreed to make it a joint work, he taking the Romance element. This led him to make Old French his speciality.

The next turning-point in his philological development was due to Bell's Visible-Speech (1868), and Ellis's Early English Pronunciation, which appeared soon after. He was among Bell's earliest pupils, and was, I believe, one of the very first fully to accept Mr. Ellis's (at that time) very startling and unexpected results. Henceforth, phonology assumed in his estimation that paramount position it is now assuming in everyone else's, especially in the classification of dialects. He joined the Philological Society in 1870.

Meanwhile, material obstacles, among which want of time was the most formidable, had compelled us to put off trying to carry out the comprehensive schemes of our earlier youth till happier times, which he was destined never to see. So in 1874 I came out with the History of English Sounds as an instalment of my share of the undertaking. He had already begun to work at a parallel History of French Sounds in English, but on a far more elaborate basis than my slight sketch. Failing health and diminishing leisure, joined with excessive conscientiousness in elaborating details, made him put off the completion of this his first great work from year to year, till at last he resolved to give up business, and live on the small income he had, till he had finished his book. But this step, and even his removal to Algiers, came too late. He is gone, and nothing remains of his work but a few short papers and abstracts in the Transactions of the Philological Society, his article on the French language in the new edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, and his MS. materials, of which I cannot speak as yet.

Little as he had published, he had a European reputation. Many a distinguished foreign savant has expressed his amazement on finding that such a man, instead of being a professor at Oxford or Cambridge, as he had always assumed, was a common clerk. One of them once said to me: "We are a poor nation, and not over-liberal in encouraging science, but I do think we should have found a place for a man like that."

His main characteristics were perfect purity and truthfulness. He was entirely free from the meaner passions of vanity or jealousy. His defects were such as sprang inevitably from his virtues, and the narrow and uncongenial surroundings in which he grew up. No one ever made warmer friends among his fellow-workers, and, when we think what his influence has been on them, we feel that he has not toiled in vain. I know myself that at least half of what is good in my work is due to him. HENRY SWEET.

In the death of A. T. Pisemsky, which occurred on February 2, Russia has lost a novelist and dramatist who was accounted little inferior to Tourgueniev and Tolstoy. Though less known than these in Western Europe, in his own country he was deservedly one of the most popular authors of recent years. Among his numerous novels and tales, A Thousand Souls, which has received a German translation, Troubled Waters, and Bourgeois are perhaps the best known. In 1879 he turned his efforts to the historical romance, and produced The Freemasons, first published in the periodical Ogonyek. In this his last work he drew a vivid picture of the Russian Freemasons at the beginning of the present century. Of his dramatic pieces, Gor'kaya Soud'bina ("Bitter Fate") was the most successful. M. Pisemsky had long been in feeble health, and was not yet sixty years old, so that he cannot be said to have escaped the premature death which seems to be the lot of most Russian literary men.

THE death is likewise announced of Mr. B. J. Talbot, author of Gothic Forms applied to Furniture and Decorations for Domestic Purposes, &c.; of the distinguished Italian historian, Cesare Cantù, of whom we shall take another opportunity of speaking; and of the Rev. W. E. Scudamore, author of Steps to the Altar, Notitia Eucharistica, &c.

SELECTED BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BAGHOT, W. Biographical Studies. Longmans. 12s.
 EAWAT, Lieut.-Gen. J. A. The Story of a Soldier's Life; or, Peace, War, and Matiny. Sampson Low & Co. 3s.
 FAYVE, Jules. Discours parlementaires de, p. p. Mmes. Jules Fayve. T. 1 et 2. Paris: Plon. 15 fr.
 GRUYER, E. A. Raphaël Peintre de Portraits. Paris: Renouard. 15 fr.
 HILDEBRAND, K. Zeiten, Völker u. Menschen. 5. Bd. Aus dem Jahrb. der Revolution. Berlin: Oppenheim. 6 M.
 HOLE, Canon. Nice and her Neighbours. Sampson Low & Co. 16s.
 KERTBENY, K. M. Bibliographia der ungarischen Literatur. 1. Bd. 1454-1600. Budapest: Kilian. 1 M.
 LINDER, A. v. d. Quellenstudien zur Geschichte d. Schachspiels. Berlin: Springer. 20 M.

- MORROBIN, B. Storia della Letteratura italiana. II Seicento. Turin: Loescher. 7 fr. 50 c.
 OVERTON, J. H. William Law, Nonjuror and Mystic. Longman. 15s.
 ROCCA, N. Le Comte Frédéric Solopis de Salerano (1798-1878). Paris: Salmon. 5 fr.
 SACHER, F. Bibliographie de la Bretagne. Rennes: Pihon.

THEOLOGY.

- ABROT, E. The Authorship of the Fourth Gospel. Trübner. 3s. 6d.
 KLOSTERMANN, A. Commentatio quae nititur loco Paulino Rom. v. 1 sqq. de interno habitu christianis. Kiel: Universitäts-Buchhandlung. 1 M. 20 Pf.

HISTORY.

- BERTI, D. Di Vincenzo Gioberti, Riformatore politico e Ministro. Turin: Loescher. 3 fr. 50 c.
 BRVANT, W. O., and S. H. GAY. Popular History of the United States. Vol. IV. (concluding the work). Sampson Low & Co. 40s.
 CHIAPPELLI, L. Vita e Opere giuridiche di Cino da Pistoia. Turin: Loescher. 3 fr.
 DOUBLET, L. L'Empereur Charlemagne. Paris: Fischbacher. 3 fr. 50 c.
 HOLST, H. v. Verfassungsgeschichte der Vereinigten Staaten v. Amerika seit der Administration Jackson's. 2. Bd. Berlin: Springer. 12 M.
 LEHR, E. La Mandefeste de Fribourg dans l'Uechtland de l'An 1249. Lausanne: Benda. 8 fr.
 THOMAS, G. M. Diplomatarium Veneto-Levanticum. A.D. 1300-50. Venice: Minster. 20 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ACHENPOHL, L. Das niederheinisch-westfälische Steinkohlengebirge. 2. Lfg. Essen: Silbermann. 10 M.
 EVELLIN, F. Infinit et Quantité. Paris: Germer Baillière. 5 fr.
 KUERTNER, F. Bestimmungen d. Moondurchmessers aus neun Plejadenbedeckungen d. Zeitraumes 1839 bis 1876. Leipzig: Engelmann. 6 M.
 LE JOLIS, A. Liste des Algues marines de Oberbourg. Paris: J.-B. Baillière.
 PFRIFFER, L. Nomenclator heliocorum vivientium, ed. S. Glessin. 7. Lfg. Cassel: Fischer. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 POSELGER, E. T. Aristoteles' mechanische Probleme. Hannover: Schmorl. 80 Pf.
 ROSENTHAL, J. General Physiology of Muscles and Nerves. O. Kegan Paul & Co. 5s.
 ZELLER, E. Pre-Socratic Schools. Trans. S. F. Alleyne. Longmans. 30s.

PHILOLOGY.

- DESCEMET, Th. Inscriptions doléaires latines. Paris: Thorin. 12 fr. 50 c.
 HEYNE, M. Uebungsstücke zur Laut- u. Flexionslehre der alten germanischen Dialekte. Paderborn: Schöningh. 1 M. 35 Pf.
 KYCALA, J. Neue Beiträge zur Erklärung der Aeneis. Prag: Tempsky. 8 M.
 STORM, J. Englische Philologie. I. Die lebende Sprache. Heilbronn: Henninger. 9 M.
 TACHAU, L. De enuntiatorum finium apud Euripidem ratione atque usu. Oöttingen: Vandenhoeck. 3 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ROMAN INSCRIPTION AT BROUGH-BY-STANEMORE.

39 Plumpton Street, Liverpool: Feb. 1, 1881.

Since my last letter to you on this subject (ACADEMY, January 8), renewed study of the inscription has further developed the ideas I then expressed as to its purport. In that letter I repeated what I had virtually asserted in my letter published in your issue of November 13—i.e., "I consider it almost certain that consuls are named in this line, and, as before said, prefer [TERTVLL. ET] CLEMENT. COSS. as the original inscription; but I do not state these names absolutely."

My preference for these names has now ripened, by further acquaintance with the inscription and the inspection of the stone by other antiquaries, to what I consider a certainty, and the only difference to be adjusted in this respect is Dr. Hübner's reading of [ANTO]NINO, and my conjectural one of [ALB]INO, at the end of the fourth line. This I think may be easily explained, and an interesting historical question thereby settled.

The Emperor Caracalla, as we know from various sources, was proclaimed Caesar, by his father, early in A.D. 196 (Spartian says it was while Severus was marching against Albinus). But in an inscription found at Ilkley he is named Caesar Destinatus. This must clearly have been executed before he was proclaimed Caesar. But how long before? Was this title given to him immediately upon the death of Pescennius Niger? It seems very probable. At any rate there is no reason why he should not have been thus commemorated in A.D. 195, the year in which Tertullus and Clemens were consuls. If so, we have only, in the blank after CAES, to insert DESTINATO, and all is plain.

Dr. McCaul, of Toronto, writes to me:—"I do not see anything of the sixth line, unless it be COSS for COSS," thus confirming my view as to consuls being named, as against Dr. Hübner's DEC. The same learned epigraphist also says that at the end of the second line he sees "traces of PERTIN," in this respect differing from both Dr. Hübner and myself, at the same time being equally correct from an epigraphical point of view.

I have seen Dr. Hübner's letter in your issue of January 29. My present communication will be the best reply to it. I presume he abandons Cohors II. Gallorum, and the absolute date A.D. 197, which cannot be affected by reference to other epigraphists.

W. THOMPSON WATKIN.

PS.—I am aware that Dr. Hübner remarks that the Ilkley inscription could scarcely fit the year A.D. 195, and consequently supplies IMP. after CAES, as in four Continental inscriptions of the year A.D. 197. On the other hand, Prof. Henzen gives the date of it (though with a query) as A.D. 195. The Brough inscription seems to confirm the correctness of the latter. The letters DE (the commencement of Destinatus) seem to me visible at the beginning of the fifth line.

CAPTAIN BURTON'S "LUSIADS."

Trieste: Jan. 31, 1881.

Will you kindly allow me a few lines of explanation concerning the Lusiads—my version? Sundry friends suppose that I have attempted it in the "English of the period," and reviewers rate me for "perplexing diction," "archaic vocabulary," and so forth. I could not do otherwise. Camoens, who, in his sonnets, has hardly a difficult word or a strange construction, deliberately adopted for his epic a language of his own; and, as in the case of Chaucer, his linguistic medley excited the ire of commentators. His vocabulary bristles with Græcisms and Latinisms (ninety-nine in Fonseca's list), archaisms and neologisms. He delights in such figures (saving your presence) as syncope and crasis, apocope and aphaeresis, alliteration, diæresis, paragon, slurring (the sdrucciolo), and superfluous syllables. In his speeches the hyperbaton is excessive.

The translator cannot but follow suit in this matter; and I must e'en take my punishment meekly for having honestly attempted to reproduce the effect of the original. The master was strong enough to make his public accept what he gave them. Whether the disciple is also strong enough only time can show.

To conclude. Referring to a letter by Prof. Wright in your columns (January 8) it is as well to state that long ago I translated and annotated Prof. Wetzstein's valuable little Reisebericht. As yet, however, I have not had time to cast about for a publisher.

RICHARD F. BURTON.

MANDEVILLE'S TRAVELS.

London Institution: Feb. 6, 1881.

If Mr. Thomas Bayne will read my letter in the ACADEMY of November 11, 1876 (correcting the clerical error "French" in line 10 into "English"), he will find that the Latin and English versions attributed to Mandeville are most certainly not from his hand, and that, beyond a passage in only one known English MS., discredited by the contrary evidence of many French MSS., there is no ground for supposing that he wrote his book in any language but French.

In giving an outline of the proofs that our printed English version was not Mandeville's, I was forestalling much of the interest of my intended edition of that version for the purpose of giving immediate information to students of English literature. Messrs. Thomas Arnold, Collier, and Minto (how many more I know not) have resolved to frustrate such Quixotic self-sacrifice, and have continued in their respective manuals to hold up "the father of English prose" on the throne into which he has been wrongfully forced. I am much touched by their generosity, and only hope that the students aforesaid will appreciate it equally.

People ask me when ever my edition is coming out. I have not an idea—but the delay is no fault of mine. In 1877 I learnt from the French Société de l'Orient Latin that they had in hand an elaborate critical text of the original French, which was to have appeared in the autumn of that year, but has been unavoidably deferred. I am bound to wait for this before I begin collating a critical text of both or either of the two English translations.

EDWARD B. NICHOLSON.

"IAZZA."

Park Lodge, Weston-super-Mare: Feb. 7, 1881.

The first campaign of Thothmes III. was caused by a revolt across the eastern frontier, "beginning with Izza" (Brugsch, Hist., Eng. tr., i. 320) or rather Iazza (Maspero, Pap. Abbott, 33), evidently the nearest point to Egypt.

When Esarhaddon began to feel his way toward Egypt "he took the city of Azza, which was situated on the small stream called the river of Egypt, dividing that country from Palestine" (G. Smith, Assyria, 130; Budge's Esarhaddon, iv. 41).

This Azza seems to be the Iazza of Thothmes. Is Wady el Arish a corruption of this name of Azza? Or is the "Neby Jasar" which Mr. Greville Chester mentions (Palestine Exploration Fund Quarterly Statement, 1880, p. 158) close to the sea-shore, at the entrance of the Wady, with the remains of ancient houses hard by, the representative of Iazza?

I think we have here a very interesting identification. HENRY GEORGE TOMKINS.

KOCK'S "GREEK COMIC FRAGMENTS."

Dublin: Feb. 8, 1881.

In my notice of Th. Kock's Comicorum Atticorum Fragmenta, vol. i., printed in No. 449 of the ACADEMY, there are some points which require correction.

I have been fair to Dr. Kock in placing his statement of the arguments on a level with that of Meineke. There are many cases where he has emended and improved upon (or even refuted) his predecessor. So, also, in adding new fragments, he has done more than I had stated, and in some cases, such as the Ὀλκάδες and Δράματα, he has found from his own reading several which had escaped all previous editors. I owe to a kindly letter from him the additional remark that the immense number of passages from Athenaeus discussed by Cobet in his Novae and Variæ Lectiones do not show any remarkable profit obtained from his collation of the Codex A, so that the present editor of the Fragments did not consider its aid in any way indispensable.

It gives me much pleasure to be able to add these corrections within reasonable limits of time, while the book is still new and before many of your readers. I will only add that a longer and more minute study of it, in comparison with Meineke's edition, shows me how much has been added to our knowledge of the subject, not only by the intermediate studies of the Germans, but by the learning and acuteness of the new editor. There can be no doubt that his work, when completed, will take its place (as I before said) among the standard books in Greek philology. J. P. MAHAFFY.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- MONDAY, Feb. 14, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Troubadours," by Mr. F. Hueffer.
5 p.m. London Institution: "Fruits and Seeds," by Sir John Lubbock.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Study and Practice of Architecture," by Mr. G. E. Street.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Watchmaking," II., by Mr. E. Rigg.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Berkeley," by Mr. W. C. Barlow.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Geographical and Physical Aspects of Sarawak and North Borneo," by Mr. W. M. Crocker.
TUESDAY, Feb. 15, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schäfer.
7.45 p.m. Statistical.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion on "The Portsmouth Dockyard Extension Works."
8 p.m. Spelling Reform Association: "Sound and Unsound Spellers," by Mr. H. B. Wheatley.
8.30 p.m. Zoological: "On Additions to the Society's Menagerie during January 1881," by the Secretary; "On the Coleopterous Insects belonging to the Family Hispidæ collected by Mr. Buckley in Ecuador," by Mr. C. O. Waterhouse; "Additions to the Rhynchotal Fauna of the Ethiopian Region," by Mr. W. L. Distant; "On a Collection of Shells from Lakes Tanganyika and Nyassa, &c.," by Mr. Edgar A. Smith.
WEDNESDAY, Feb. 16, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Participation of Labour in the Profits of Enterprise," by Mr. Sedley Taylor.
8 p.m. British Archaeological Association: "Prehistoric Interment at Plymouth," by Mr. F. Brent; "Roman Wall of London in Houndsditch," by Mr. C. Watkins; "Notes on New Grange," by Mr. J. Romilly Allen.
THURSDAY, Feb. 17, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Drawing-room Music," by Prof. Pauer.
4.30 p.m. Royal.
7 p.m. Numismatic.
7 p.m. London Institution: "Violins," by the Rev. H. R. Haweis.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Principles of Architecture," by Mr. G. E. Street.
8 p.m. Linnean: "British Fishes," by Dr. F. Day; "On Right- and Left-hand Contortion of the Corolla," by Mr. C. B. Clarke; "On a New Form of Sponge," by Prof. P. M. Duncan; "On the Reparative Processes which occur in Vegetable Tissues," by Mr. S. G. Shattock.
8 p.m. Chemical.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, Feb. 17, 8 p.m. Geological: Anniversary.
8 p.m. Philological: "On the Pronunciation, Grammar, and Non-Literary Vocabulary of Welsh; with Collections of Dialogues, Proverbs, &c.," II., by H. Sweet.
9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Fruits and Seeds," by Sir John Lubbock.
SATURDAY, Feb. 19, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ancient Egypt," by Mr. R. S. Poole.

SCIENCE.

The Power of Movement in Plants. By Charles Darwin, LL.D., F.R.S. Assisted by Francis Darwin. With Illustrations. (Murray.)

THE sum and substance of this book, which, like all of Mr. Darwin's, contains a great mass of facts and generalisations, is circumnutation; all the various movements of different parts of plants being modifications of that phenomenon. This word stands for a circularly bowing motion of an organ, by which it describes irregular ellipses, loops, or zigzags, as it is successively directed towards all points of the compass. The cause is an increased turgescence on the convex side of the organ, which precedes growth, and which is then followed by a similar turgescence on the other side. If there be a pulvinus, which consists of an aggregation of small cells arrested in their development, then the increased turgescence of the cells on opposite sides is not followed by growth, and the organ can consequently circumnutate for much longer periods. "On the whole," Mr. Darwin says, "we may at present conclude that increased growth, first on one side and then on another, is a secondary effect, and that the increased turgescence of the cells, together with the extensibility of their walls, is the primary cause of the movement of circumnutation" (pp. 2, 3).

The work contains mines of wealth of observations on circumnutation, based on the most minute and careful experiments upon the movements of radicles, "hypocotyls" and "epicotyls" of seedlings; also upon flower-stems, stolons, and leaves; the "hypnotropic" or sleeping states of leaves being also brought about by modified circumnutation. The motions of climbing plants, and the influences of light, gravity, and other stimuli, are fully discussed in their bearings upon the subject.

Commencing with radicles, we learn that, as soon as the tip has protruded from a seed, it begins to circumnutate, the use apparently being to aid it in penetrating the soil, by guiding it along the lines of least resistance, and especially into cracks, worm-burrows, &c. Mr. Darwin observes that "geotropism," which is a weak force, does not give a radicle sufficient power to penetrate the ground, but merely tells it which course to pursue. The actual penetration is due to the forces of longitudinal and transverse growth. An ingenious contrivance for growing radicles in circular holes cut in split pieces of wood or in wooden clips connected by a spring showed that the force exerted in the first case, as a transverse strain, was probably more than 8 lbs. 8 oz., and in the latter case 3 lbs. 4 oz.; while the apex increased in length with a force equal to at least a quarter of a pound. I would venture to suggest a possible source of error in the experiment with the pincers, for they only show the least amount of force requisite to open them to a stated distance. There is nothing to show that, if the spring of the clip had been three times greater than it was, the radicle could not have just as easily opened them to the same distance, for it might have possessed, and probably did possess, much greater transverse power; but, the diameter of the radicle at any point not increasing beyond the requirements of growth, it could not possibly widen the clips to the full extent of the power possessed. The result of these forces is that the radicle acts like a powerful wedge driven slowly into a crevice and expanding simultaneously.

The author then describes how the arched "hypocotyls" (an abbreviation for "hypocotyledonary axes") and "epicotyls," or developing plumules, rise up and break through the soil by means of their circumnutation, assisted by apogeotropism—that is, as far as the resisting medium will allow of it. The cotyledons are also in constant motion, rising once up and once down in the course of twenty-four hours in a vertical plane. Some cotyledons, like leaves, are provided with a pulvinus, and Mr. Darwin finds that the difference between the movements induced by the aid of pulvini and without such aid is due to the expansion of the cells not being followed by growth in the first case and being so followed in the latter. The tissues of the pulvinus are arrested, and, consequently, the movements of pulvinated cotyledons last much longer than of those without a pulvinus. Cotyledons are affected "paratonically" by light—that is, their daily periodic movements are greatly and quickly disturbed by changes in its intensity or by its absence, showing that their movements are not governed by the actual amount, but by changes in the intensity or degree of light. Mr. Darwin next deals with the sensitiveness of the apex of the radicle to contact of solid bodies or to other irritants. An object which yields with the greatest ease will deflect a radicle. That of a bean encountering the polished surface of extremely thin tin-foil laid on soft sand made no impression on it, but yet was deflected at right angles; while the curvature of the upper part extended for a length of 8 to 10 mm. The results of Mr. Darwin's experiments were that the apex was sensitive to contact, and that an effect was transmitted to the upper part of the radicle, which was thus excited to bend away from the touching object. Sachs discovered that the radicle, a little above the apex, is sensitive, and bends like a tendril towards a touching object. But when one side of the apex is pressed by any object the growing part bends away from the object, and this, Mr. Darwin observes, seems to be a beautiful adaptation for avoiding obstacles in the soil. This, too, appears to be the only known instance of an organ bending away from an object in contact with it.

An exquisite series of experiments was made by affixing cards, thin glass, &c., to the tips of radicles, which consequently curved away towards the opposite side—in some cases to such an extent as to make complete hoops or even knots! The motion is affected by different degrees of temperature; and so small a force as the two-hundredth part of a grain sufficed to excite movements in some radicles of the bean. Radicles are also sensitive to prolonged irritation, without any objects being permanently fixed upon them; and, in comparing effects of an irritant with geotropism, the author found that "the initial power of an irritant on the apex of the radicle of the bean is less than that of geotropism when acting at right angles, but greater than that of geotropism when acting obliquely on it" (p. 154).

Mr. Darwin found dry caustic to produce similar effects. He also discovered that "a thin slice removed by a razor from one side of the conical apex of the radicle causes irritation, like that from an attached object, and induces curvature from the injured surface" (p. 160).

Sachs has shown that pressure at the distance of a few millimetres above the apex causes the radicle to bend, like a tendril, towards the touching object. Mr. Darwin corroborates this, as also another of Sachs' discoveries, that the radicles of many seedling plants bend towards an adjoining damp surface. This peculiar form of sensitiveness resides in their tips, which then transmit some influence to the upper part, causing them to bend towards the source of moisture.

Mr. Darwin next describes the circumnating movements of the several parts of mature plants. A number were selected from different orders, and especially woody plants, being less likely to have circumnating stems, but the result showed that it is a universal phenomenon, the curves described being more or less irregular ellipses, the longer axes of which are directed to different points of the compass, often interrupted by zigzags, triangles, loops, &c. Stolons and runners form no exception, though circumnating in a very complex manner, being so great in amplitude as to be almost comparable to that of climbing plants. They are thus aided in passing over obstacles, &c.

With leaves Mr. Darwin found it to be so general that he concludes it would not be rash to assume that growing leaves of all plants circumnate, as is probably the case with cotyledons. The seat of the movement generally lies in the petiole, but sometimes in the blade as well. The periodicity of the movements of leaves is peculiar. They generally rise a little in the evening and the early part of the night, and sink on the following morning. It is determined by the daily alternations of light and darkness.

After having described circumnutation as a general phenomenon of growing organs in the fifth chapter, the author enters upon the field of "modified circumnutation"—that is, where this has become utilised for special purposes. He had previously and elsewhere described the processes of climbing plants, and now only observes that it is an amplified state of circumnutation, probably due to a moderately increased growth spread over a considerable length of the moving organ, preceded by turgescence and acting successively on all sides.

Two chapters are devoted to a full and apparently exhaustive discussion on the sleep or nyctitropic movements of leaves. These consist of the phenomena of an upward or downward movement of leaves and leaflets, of the folding along the mid-rib, of the rotating on the pedicels, &c., the general result being either to protect the upper surfaces by covering them one upon another, by crowding the leaves together, or by placing them vertically. In every case the object is to avoid the evil effects of radiation into the open sky; for Mr. Darwin has proved that leaves compelled to remain horizontally at night suffer much more from radiation than when placed with their edges vertical. One would like to ask the question whether this will account for the phylloidinous species of acacia, as well as the gum-trees, having their foliar organs so often vertical, instead of horizontal, in Australia.

Movements excited by light and gravitation occupy the next four chapters, while the twelfth and last deals with a general summary and concluding remarks.

Heliotropic movements are determined by the direction of light, while periodic movements are effected by changes in its intensity, and not by its direction. Mr. Darwin shows that a heliotropic motion (towards light), apheliotropic (away from light), diapheliotropic (taking up a position transverse to light), and paraheliotropic (avoiding intense light) are all forms of circumnutation; though how the actual causes—themselves not always known—act in producing these effects is unknown at present.

The manner in which organs of plants move towards a lateral light shows that it is evidently the movement of circumnutation which gives rise to or is converted into heliotropism, &c. This view is borne out by the existence of every possible gradation between a straight course towards a lateral light and a course consisting of a series of loops and ellipses. The transmitted effects of light are curious. While observing the accuracy with which the cotyledons of Phalaris canariensis became bent towards the light, Mr. Darwin found that the upper part bends first, and afterwards the bending gradually extends towards the base, and even to a short distance below the ground (one-fifth of an inch), though it seems probable that a simultaneous stimulus of the lower part by light greatly favours its curvature.

The motion produced by apogeotropism is sometimes remarkably straight, though generally complicated by zigzags and ellipses, showing that it is clearly an adapted form of circumnutation, a rectilinear course being merely an extremely modified form of it. An organ which, while young, is extremely sensitive to apogeotropism, ceases to be so as it grows old.

Geotropism is, of course, the exact opposite, and finds illustration in all growing roots, though secondary roots and rhizomes are more generally diageotropic, and take a more or less horizontal direction.

Perhaps the most remarkable instance of aerial organs being geotropic is that of plants which bury their seed capsules, as Trifolium subterraneum. The various adaptations of the peduncle, of its abortive flowers, &c., are extremely curious, and are especially worthy of perusal. One chief good, Mr. Darwin suggests, is the protection of the seeds from animals. But as the other fruits not buried rarely yield seeds, it seems that the absorptive power of the hairs which clothe them, and which show "aggregation" on the application of carbonate of ammonia, would indicate that they are liable, when exposed to insufficient nutrition for ripening their seeds, not to mature at all.

With regard to the geotropism of radicles, it appears that the tip (from 1 to 1.5 mm.) is alone sensitive, and, when excited, causes the adjoining parts to bend. This was proved by cutting off or cauterising, as well as by covering the tips with grease. Mr. Darwin remarks:—

"To see anything of the above kind in the animal kingdom, we should have to suppose that an animal, while lying down, determined to rise up in some particular direction; and that, after its head had been cut off, an impulse continued to travel very slowly along the nerves to the proper muscles; so that, after several hours, the headless animal rose up in the predetermined direction" (p. 543).

The last chapter is a general summary of the contents of the book. The work is of the profoundest interest and importance, but intensely hard reading. In the vast accumulation of minute details it almost out-Darwins Darwin! But botanists will agree that its great value lies in collecting, testing, and proving the truth of a large series of facts and in bringing them into one common bond—that of "circumnutation." Starting with this as an inherent property due to turgidity of tissues and growth of all organs, the various specialised motions of the parts of plants are due to its modifications in adaptation to external conditions which themselves set up the changes, such external conditions being light, mechanical irritations, &c.

In fig. 149A, of Desmodium gyrans, the two small leaflets of each leaf seem to be accidentally omitted. They were possibly not photographed in consequence of their continual jerking, and so shifting their positions. It would have been desirable to add them from the living specimen.

GEORGE HENSLOW.

OBITUARY.

MR. JOHN GOULD, F.R.S.

ORNITHOLOGISTS, as well as lovers of sumptuous books, have sustained a grievous loss by the death of Mr. John Gould, F.R.S., which took place at his house in Charlotte Street on the 3rd inst. Born in 1804 at Lyme Regis, from early years he showed a love for outdoor pursuits—fishing, shooting, and sketching, together with the practical study of natural history. Botany and floriculture were added to these tastes before he was twenty by a residence at the Royal Gardens, Windsor, under the care of the late Mr. J. T. Aiton. In 1838 Mr. Gould visited Australia, and was greatly assisted by Government introductions in acquiring a comprehensive knowledge of its fauna. On his return in 1840, he at once began to publish the results of his investigations. His first important work, A Century of Himalaya Birds, had already appeared in 1832, and, together with other ornithological studies, he had completed The Birds of Europe, in five volumes folio, in 1837. Mr. Gould has produced in rapid succession, when their laborious character is borne in mind, The Birds of Australia, in seven folio volumes (1848), and The Mammals of Australia; The Birds of Asia, The Birds of New Guinea, also in folio, with coloured plates; and The Birds of Great Britain, five folio volumes (1862-73), with an octavo Introduction, the work by which he is perhaps best known to lovers of our native birds. This exquisite book cost twelve years' labour; all the illustrations (by Wolf and Richter), every sky, even every feather of each bird, having been coloured by hand. To open the book at random and light upon such an illustration as that of the Circus cineraceus (Montagu's harrier) standing on a mole, which puts upon forepaw as if to deprecate further injury, would alone show the keen eye and artistic taste of this accomplished ornithologist. These great works, which might well satisfy the literary ambition of most men, were but a tithe of the laborious monographs and papers which Mr. Gould published. Mention need only be made of his monographs on the Ramphastidae, Trogonidae, and Odontophorinae (the American partridges), and especially of his gorgeous book on the humming-birds (Trochilidae), and the equally useful one, The Handbook of Australian Birds, published in two volumes octavo in 1865, which enumerates more than six hundred and fifty varieties of birds of that country. Indefatigable as was Yarrell in producing papers on his favourite subject, he was far exceeded by Mr. Gould's activity. Up to 1873 the catalogue of scientific papers compiled by the Royal Society shows that he had contributed 229 papers to science. Seldom have the seventy-seven years to which Mr. Gould's life was spared been better spent by a devotee of natural history. The impulse which his numerous writings and their beautiful illustrations have given, not only to his particular study, but also to the development of coloured lithography, cannot easily be estimated. Like Audubon's elephant folios, Mr. Gould's books will always command high prices, as much from their beauty as their usefulness. They owe much of their attractiveness to that love of nature and country pursuits which so often led him, with observant eyes and reflective mind, to seek recreation on the Thames, for, like many other men, Mr. Gould never forgot his studies in his amusements.

By the death of Baron Ercole Dombowski a special branch of practical astronomy has lost one of its most skilful and industrious cultivators. About 1852, when living at Naples, Dembowski began his measurements of double stars by means of a moderate telescope with defective micrometrical apparatus. His first results were published in 1857, and proved him to be an intelligent and zealous observer. In 1860 he settled at Gallarate, near Milan, erected a well-equipped private observatory, and devoted himself with great success to his favourite pursuit, and became one of the most diligent, most accurate, and most trusted observers of double stars. In 1878 the Council of the Royal Astronomical Society gave expression to their high appreciation of his labours by conferring the society's gold medal upon him. His published observations are scattered over some seventy numbers of the Astronomische Nachrichten; and, as a great many accurate measurements still await publication, it is to be hoped that all will be collected and made accessible in one substantial volume. Dembowski, who was descended from a Polish family known in political history, died on the 19th ult., in his sixty-ninth year.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

THE Russian Geographical Society are about to send an expedition, in charge of M. Poliakoff, to explore the island of Saghalien.

MR. ROBERT ARTHINGTON, of Leeds, has lately offered the Church Missionary Society the sum of £5,000 for investment towards providing a fund for the maintenance of a steamer and a staff of agents on the Upper Binue and Lake Chad, on the assumption that there is navigable water-communication between the two, a fact which has not yet by any means been proved.

HERR J. M. SCHUVER has recently started from Cairo with the intention of traversing the African continent to the Cape of Good Hope. Herr Schuver, who is an experienced traveller, has lately been undergoing a course of scientific instruction in London.

THE United States Senate have passed a resolution appropriating the sum of £35,000 for the purpose of fitting out an expedition to search for the Arctic exploring vessel Jeannette and the missing whalers, which some believe to be imprisoned in the ice near Wrangel Land.

THE current number of the Monthly Record of Geography contains two papers—Capt. Holdich's on the geographical results of the Afghan campaign, and Mr. W. Powell's on New Britain and the neighbouring islands. The latter embraces the information gathered by its author during six years' explorations, and adds considerably to our knowledge of a little-known region as well as of its inhabitants. Fortunately, too, Mr. Powell was a practised surveyor, and is consequently able to rectify the blunders of our old maps in that which he gives us with his interesting paper. In the geographical notes prominence is given to particulars furnished by H.M. consul at Loanda respecting the progress Mr. Stanley is making in surmounting the difficulties presented by the Yellala Falls of the Congo, and to a description of the Rev. T. J. Comber's recent visit to the newly discovered Arthington Falls on the River Ambriz. Under the heading of "Irrigation Works on the Lower Jaxartes," the recent efforts of the Russians to fertilise the Kazalinsk district are referred to. M. Montolieu's exploration of the Ynirida River in the upper Orinoco basin is afterwards briefly dealt with. In a letter to the editor, Dr. Köner, of Berlin, furnishes some curious particulars respecting the past history of the Keeling Islands, which, however, it is well to note are drawn from Dutch sources.

THE February number of the Leisure Hour opens with an interesting account of Mr. E. Whymper's ascents of Chimborazo in January and July of last year, given from the explorer's own letters, &c. With regard to the collections made during the journey, we learn that they include a large number of pieces of pottery, metal, &c., of the time of the Incas. Insects and plants were found at greater heights than previously in the two Americas; and beetles were several times met with among the rocks on the tops of mountains higher than Mont Blanc, while butterflies were caught at an elevation of 16,000 feet, and flies even higher. Mr. Whymper, we may add, is stated to be preparing a work on the Andes which cannot fail to be of value to geographers.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Ethnological Classification.—A paper by Mr. C. Staniland Wake on "The Classification of the Races of Mankind," having been read before the Hull Literary Club, has been printed for private circulation. Mr. Wake admits that in the present state of science a perfect system of classification is scarcely possible, inasmuch as it would need an almost exhaustive knowledge of all anthropological phenomena—physical, mental, and social. He is disposed, however, to follow Dr. Topinard, and to assume, as a good working hypothesis, that all existing races may be classed either as European, Mongolian, or Negro, or as crosses between two or more of these types. At the same time he has grave doubts as to the purity of the Negro type, and looks favourably upon the supposition that it may have sprung from an intermixture of Topinard's European and Mongolian races.

Libration of the Moon.—A valuable contribution towards a more accurate determination of the moon's libration has been made by Dr. E. Hartwig at Strassburg. According to the laws which were found by Dominio Cassini to explain the apparent shifting of spots on the moon's disc, and which have been called after him since their publication in 1721, the moon rotates with uniform velocity, the time of rotation is exactly equal to the mean time of the moon's revolution round the earth, the inclination of the plane of the lunar equator to the ecliptic is constant, and the ascending node of the equator always coincides with the descending node of the moon's orbit on the ecliptic. The effect of these laws is the moon's optical libration. But Cassini's laws cannot be strictly true, as they represent only the average state of the moon's rotation; small periodical deviations produce a physical libration, the amount of which is to be determined from proper observations. The mathematical theory of the moon's physical libration has occupied the talents of some of the most distinguished mathematicians—Lagrange, Laplace, Poisson, and others; and it has been sufficiently solved for the purposes of its practical application. But as the greatest effect of the physical libration in shifting the apparent position of a lunar spot, as seen from the earth, is probably not more than two, or at most three, seconds of arc, and as this effect is, moreover, masked by the effects produced by several sources of uncertainty, the practical determination of the different terms of the physical libration is beset with great difficulties. By a series of fifty observations made with the Königsberg heliometer in 1845, Wichmann made an attempt to determine several of the terms. Hartwig has now made another attempt, and has been successful, in consequence of some improvements in the construction of his instrument, in deducing from his forty-two observations results of considerably less uncertainty than Wichmann's.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Beiträge zur Grammatik des Vorklassischen Chinesisch. Von Dr. Max Uhle. (Leipzig.) In a dissertation on "The Particle 'wēi' in the Shū-King and the Shih-King," which is meant apparently to form the first of a series of contributions to the grammar of ante-classical Chinese, a young German scholar, Dr. Max Uhle, has made a laudable attempt to begin a scientific treatment of the difficult, but very important, subject of the Chinese particles. From these he has selected for special consideration the particle "wēi" as "determining the very character of the language" of the earliest period of Chinese literature. He limits his investigations to two books of the ante-classical age—to the Shū-King, a collection of historical documents ranging from B.C. 2400 to B.C. 600; and to the Shih-King, the oldest collection of poetry, extending from about B.C. 1750 to B.C. 600. In endeavouring to discover the common meaning which underlies and explains the various significations of the particle, the writer begins by considering the views held by the greatest authorities on the subject. He finds that the great Chinese "grammarian," Wang Zan Chi, and Prof. Legge substantially agree in assuming the fundamental signification of the particle to be "only" (nur). His criticism of this view appears to be founded on a misapprehension of Prof. Legge's use of the word "only," which, as giving the fundamental idea of "wēi," has not the exclusive sense of "nothing but," but is equivalent to "just," "simply," in rough definitions. For instance, in the passage quoted from the Shū-King (II. i. 16), "Food! only the seasons," the meaning is "nourishment just depends on the observation of the seasons." This is Prof. Legge's meaning when he defines the signification of "wēi" as "half-adverbial, half-conjunctive." The transition from this to the copulative sense is easy enough, though it would not be so from the exclusive meaning of "wēi." Hence the final conclusion at which Dr. Uhle arrives—viz., that the original import of "wēi" is confirmatory and emphatic—is substantially identical with Prof. Legge's view. Dr. Uhle attributes the commonly accepted view to the fact that the sole signification of "wēi" preserved in later Chinese is "only," and to the invariable practice of the Chinese commentators of explaining previous phases of the language by the standard of their own age. The latter statement, however, is hardly accurate, for, according to his own showing, it is not true of Wang Zan Chi at all events. On the whole, the results arrived at seem to be sound, and the treatise ought to prove useful to the student of Chinese, if for no other reason than the exhaustive collection of passages, from the Shū-King and the Shih-King, illustrating the various uses of the particle. If the author pursues his researches in the same scientific spirit he will, no doubt, make valuable additions to the knowledge of the subject which he has chosen for his special study.

The Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, vol. xlix., part i. (1880), contains a description of the great Siva Temple at Gangai Kondapuram, in the Trichinopoly district, by Lieut.-Col. B. R. Branfill. This is the largest and best-preserved of all the great South Indian temples, its "vimāna," or shrine-tower, being 100 feet square at the base and 165 feet high (the largest described by Mr. Fergusson in his History of Architecture being eighty and eighty-two feet square at the base). The author does not give any account of the history of this remarkably well-preserved stone building, but it is presumably of great age, as it bears evident marks of being imitated in stone on the pattern of smaller wooden buildings. The same author gives some further notes on various other antiquarian remains in the same province, more especially of some of those rude megalithic monuments the existence of which in India is just now attracting so much attention. Mr. C. J. Rodgers has a paper on the coins of the Maharājas of Kangra, a hill fort at the foot of the hills near the sources of the Bias. The coins are of the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries; and, incidentally, Mr. Rodgers bewails the manner in which the ancient coinage is fast disappearing in the melting-pot without any systematic effort being made for its preservation. Mr. Carlisle, of the Archaeological Survey, follows with a paper on "Coins of the Mitra Dynasty," which he places in the first and second century before the Christian era; and Mr. Stülpnagel with a paper on some twelfth-century coins of the Muhammadan rulers in the North-west. The society has also issued, as an extra number to part i. of 1878, a "Vocabulary of the Language of Eastern Turkistan," which is, in fact, a very full dictionary, and forms a sequel to the "Sketch of the Turki Language" already published by Mr. Shaw, whose geographical discoveries in those regions have earned for him the gold medal of the Geographical Society.

Die Legende von Kisāgotamī, von Jakob H. Thiessen (Breslau: Köbner), is a discussion of the beautiful story of Kisā Gotamī and of the many allied tales in India and in Greece. Mr. Thiessen, who is a pupil of Prof. Pischel's at Kiel, takes occasion to publish for the first time the Pali text of the story from the Ceylon Commentary on the Dhammapada. After a prolonged analysis of all the stories, the author concludes, in opposition to Weber and Rohde, that the story was in its origin Buddhist, and not Greek. It should be ranked, indeed, with the numerous instances of Buddhist Jātakas, or Birth Stories, which have found their way from India into the later classical and mediæval literature. The general principle will command the reader's assent; but, in supposing that there must be some historical connexion between each of the many stories cited, the author seems to attach too little weight to the possibility of the same or similar ideas having occurred to various peoples independently.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, Feb. 3.)

HENRY REEVE, ESQ., C.B., in the Chair.—Mr. W. C. Borlase, M.P., read a paper upon the barrows on the South-west extremities of Cornwall. The erections of these barrows had, for some reason, a very strong preference for a western aspect. Formerly every point was surmounted by a chambered cairn, and these in some cases were originally several feet in height, though now considerably reduced. On digging a trench through an ancient heap of mining refuse on the cliff, the circular foundation of a sepulchral cairn was discovered, which must have been at least twenty feet high. The articles found were principally urns, and bronze celts and palstaves. A sepulchral urn found at the Scraggan where are two contiguous circles about eighteen feet in diameter, is the largest hitherto discovered in Cornwall.

FINE ART.

Florence. Par Charles Yriarte. (Paris: Rothschild; London: Hachette; Bumpus; Charles Davis, 47 Pall Mall; Dulau & Co.)

AFTER the striking success of M. Yriarte's Venise it was only to be expected that he would be called upon to describe the other famous Italian city—equally celebrated for its monuments, holding a higher position for its schools of sculpture and painting, more illustrious in its literature, and with a history more awakening and spirit-stirring. On all these subjects M. Yriarte's thorough acquaintance with Italy and his extensive researches in her political history and artistic development enable him to write with the skill and felicity of a master. It is hardly necessary to say that in the limit of a single volume it would be impossible to treat such diversified material, or even any one branch, in any degree exhaustively; neither would M. Yriarte's readers, in this instance, desire such treatment. The work is, and was intended to be, a popular account of the art, literature, and history of Florence. What this would signify, in too many cases, we all know, alas! but too well; therefore it enhances our satisfaction to find that it is possible to be popular and scholarly, to be brief without being banal, and, above all, to describe and discuss works of art in a manner which is neither hackneyed nor ridiculous.

M. Yriarte arranges his subjects under the following heads:—The history of Florence, with the lives of the Medici; the Renaissance, with biographical notices of the illustrious Florentine poets and writers; a chapter on Etruscan art, and another on the principal monuments of the city; concluding with a general view of Florentine sculpture and sculptors from the time of the Pisani, and the same of painting and painters from the earliest period. Of these divisions perhaps the most interesting are the chapters on the Renaissance and on sculpture; in the former the various influences which produced that splendid intellectual and artistic development are clearly and succinctly set forth. It is a rapid sketch, but drawn in firm and vigorous lines; and will therefore serve to give definite notions to those whose knowledge of the subject may be somewhat hazy and indistinct. The treatment of the latter is fuller and more elaborate; indeed, one sees that M. Yriarte has exercised some restraint in confining his observations on an evidently favourite theme within the prescribed limits. The appreciation of such artists as Jacopo della Quercia, Desiderio da Settignano, the Rossellini, Benedetto da Maiano, and Mino da Fiesole is warm and genial, and judicious selections of their most admirable works are selected for illustration. But M. Yriarte's deepest enthusiasm is with justice displayed in his estimate of Donatello, the profoundest genius in the whole range of art. We cannot do better than quote an eloquent passage by M. Yriarte.

"Il m'est souvent arrivé de le caractériser au cours de cet ouvrage, mais j'insiste sur Donatello, parce que c'est un homme unique et merveilleux. Il est noble, il est grand, il est puissant, il est fort. Dramatique comme personne, plus que le terrible Michel-ange, il a des cris de douleur qui vous déchirent et de grands gestes épiques qui vous remuent profondément. Il s'arrête juste à temps comme le génie; un peu plus, et la vérité deviendrait de l'exagération. L'œuvre est énorme et très variée: c'est un nom qui remplit Florence, et si on voulait caractériser le génie de la ville, en prenant seulement quelques personnalités, il faudrait écrire ce nom entre celui de Dante et de Machiavel. Il était lettré, cultivé; il voyait au delà du cercle étroit dans lequel se meuvent les superbes tailleurs de pierre de son temps; aimé de Cosmo et de Laurent, il n'a quedes amis et pas de rivaux parmi les artistes du siècle. Ce qu'il y a de plus vibrant dans Donatello, c'est l'âme et le cœur; on le sent ému et il vous émeut à son tour. Il trouve la beauté en cherchant à rendre les sentiments intérieurs qui animent ces personnages; c'est une beauté morale, psychologique, qui ne peut être comprise que de ceux qui ont le don de l'émotion et la sensibilité artistique. C'est lui qui est le grand réaliste du XV^e siècle, mais le feu intérieur brûle ces corps grêles de la Madeleine et du St.-Jean ascétique qui crie dans le désert."

It can scarcely be questioned that the expression of opinion such as this, in a work primarily intended to lie on drawing-room tables, and from a writer having a thorough knowledge of his public, is a tolerably sure indication of an advance in public taste. Turning over the pages of M. Yriarte's volume, and seeing the engravings of the works of Donatello and his contemporaries, one naturally asks why casts of all these marvellous conceptions are not to be found in some museum in London. Last year Dr. Bode made arrangements to have many of the principal monuments moulded for Berlin, and generously offered any of our schools or museums permission to obtain casts of them. Surely such an opportunity will not be neglected.

As was the case with the Venise, the present work is profusely illustrated. It would have been, as a matter of course, impossible to omit certain of the well-known and oft-repeated masterpieces; a large number, however, of the illustrations have never been previously engraved, and many are valuable from being facsimiles of old and rare engravings. Indeed, from Donatello's Mazocco, which stands for the frontispiece, to the last cul-de-lampe, the selection is admirable. Amid such riches it seems ungracious to particularise; yet we can scarcely pass over such gems of wood-engraving as the plaque by Luca della Robbia on the dedicatory page, the door in the Palazzo Vecchio by Benedetto da Maiano, the pulpit of the cathedral at Prato, and Donatello's Deposition at South Kensington Museum; the effect in each case is perfect, and is obtained by what may fairly be called legitimate execution. The same cannot be said of the engravings of Raphael's Angioli and Maddalena Doni from the Pitti Palace; here an attempt is made to render the flesh modelling by cross hatching, with a dot in the centre of the interstices; the result is scratchy and feeble to the last degree. We have only to examine the portrait of a young girl by Francesco Granacci, from the Uffizi, in this case rendered by a continuous line following the form, to see how utterly mistaken is the attempt to imitate in one process of art what may have been successfully achieved in another. Examples of this nature are rare in the volume. There is, however, another instance of the attempted fusion of two artistic processes which is certainly carried to excess, and which unhappily is becoming only too prevalent in our books of illustrations: this is engraving directly from photographs. For reproducing sculpture, details of architecture, and such-like material, the plan succeeds to perfection; drawing and texture are given with an accuracy the hand of the draughtsman can never attain to; but in the case of landscapes, views of cities, buildings, or street scenes the result cannot help being unfortunate. The dead, mechanical accuracy is no compensation for the vivacity, spirit, and thought which the accomplished artist will infuse into his work. Consequently, such engravings fall flat; their tameness and unsuggestiveness call up naught but depressing sensations in the spectator. Thus, in the volume before us, engravings like that of the Loggia del Bigallo, for instance, do not serve to realise the impression of M. Yriarte's descriptions to the same extent as would drawings by some of our best illustrators.

Those of M. Yriarte's readers who may have heard of the subject of his forthcoming book will have especially noticed the references in the Florence to Leo Battista Alberti and Agostino di Duccio, whose united efforts have produced such splendid results in the Tempio at Rimini. Dealing with a picturesque historical personage like Sigismund Malatesta, in a period of intense dramatic interest, which found its artistic expression in the master-work of Agostino and Leo Battista, so full of strange grace and loveliness—it may be expected that M. Yriarte will give the public another study of the same research and literary excellence as the Patricien de Venise. HENRY WALLIS.

THE RECENTLY DISCOVERED
STATUETTE OF ATHENÈ PARTHENOS.
THROUGH the kind attention of M. Soutzo, the Demarch of Athens, I have received four photographs of the newly discovered copy of the chryselephantine statue of Athenè Parthenos, of which the original was the work of Pheidias, and stood in the Parthenon.

The copy is 1.05 mètre, or rather more than thirty-nine inches, high, inclusive of the base. It is executed in white marble, which has been painted. The goddess is represented standing with the left knee slightly bent. In her right hand is a Victory; her left rests on her shield set on edge. Between the shield and Athenè is a serpent coiled. On her head is a helmet, of which the lofty horsehair crest is supported by a Sphinx. On either side of the Sphinx is a Gryphon. On her breast is the aegis, with the Gorgon's head in the centre. Long tresses fall on each side of her neck, and reach half-way down the aegis, and on her temples are short clustering curls. Her dress is a talaric chiton, over which falls what appears to be a second tunic, reaching to the hips in front, and falling in long pteryges down the right side. On both arms is a bracelet in the form of a snake; on her feet are sandals with thick soles. The Victory stands on the palm of the right hand of Athenè; her head, now wanting, probably looked outwards towards the spectator; but her body is turned away, so as to present a three-quarter view to anyone looking at the front of the statue. Like Athenè, the Victory wears a talaric chiton, over which is a second garment reaching to the hips. A scarf, passing from behind, across her waist, hangs over her left arm. Her action denotes hurried movement. The right hand of Athenè rests on a column. The outside of the shield has no indication of the original reliefs, except the Gorgon's head in the centre.

On comparing this figure with the evidence both literary and artistic as to the chryselephantine statue, which was previously known, and which is brought together in Michaelis, Parthenon, pp. 33, 34, 266-84, pl. xv., it will be seen that the new statuette corroborates the soundest views which have been hitherto advanced as to the restoration of the chryselephantine statue. It shows that Michaelis was right in taking the rude statuette, and the Athenian torso (Michaelis, pl. xv., 1, 2) discovered by Charles Lenormant, as his guides for the general composition of the drapery, and that Pausanias was equally right in his statement that the helmet was surmounted by a Sphinx between two Gryphons. On the other hand, on the shield of the new statuette we do not find the Amazonomachia which we know to have been sculptured on the shield of the original, and which is rudely sculptured on the shield of Lenormant's statuette, and more artistically rendered on the Strangford shield (Michaelis, xv., 1b, 34).

Whether the Victory in the copy corresponds in motive and general composition with its prototype in the work of Pheidias, and whether the right hand of Athenè was supported in the original by a column or sustained itself by the strength of a metal bar within the ivory, are questions on which we may for the present suspend our judgment. The original Victory was four cubits high, which Michaelis considers equal to 1.85 mètre. Even if the entire figure was in gold, cast very thin, this would be a considerable weight to be sustained for all time on the palm of the hand of the Athenè, with only a horizontal support. In the number of the Bulletin de Correspondance Hellénique for January of this year is a careful and detailed description of the new statuette by M. Hauvette-Besnault, from which we learn that there are traces of yellow colour on the hair, of red and blue colour in the eyes; the crest is marked by incised lines, painted in red.

The discovery of this statuette is a very great gain to archaeology in bringing home to us certain salient features of the original design in so marked and emphatic a manner. While recording these the copyist has utterly failed to render the higher qualities of the original—the subtle charm of expression in the face, the grace and majesty in the general pose. This is no more than might be expected from the servile hand of a copyist in the Roman period, who, probably, executed this work as a commission for some private person. On the site where this statuette was found, to the north of the Varvakeion, were foundations thought to be those of a Roman house; and this lends colour to the suggestion of a Greek writer in the last number of the Ἀθηναιον that the statuette originally decorated the sacrarium or private chapel of a Roman house. I should be inclined to assign it to the Antonine period, and it was not improbably executed when Hadrian embellished Athens. C. T. NEWTON.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

A SERIES of etchings of Mr. Carlyle has, for some time, been in process of execution by Mr. Howard Helmick. They are faithful reproductions of authentic and unpublished portraits and sketches in the possession of the philosopher's family; and, covering a period of some fifty years, they show him in the more intimate aspects of his home-life—at ease in his garden and at work in his study. These etchings, which are six in number, will be immediately issued by the Etchers' Society, Arundell Street, Haymarket.

MR. WOODVILLE, the well-known painter of battle-pieces, is engaged on a work dealing with a dramatic incident in the recent history of Candahar. The work, which is a commission from Mr. Ingram (late M.P. for Boston), will be sent to the Royal Academy exhibition in May next.

THE Old Masters exhibition at the Royal Academy will, till its close on Saturday, March 12, be lighted at dusk, and will remain open till seven o'clock every evening.

A COURSE of lectures to ladies on "Ancient Art and Archaeology," by Miss J. E. Harrison, has just been begun at the British Museum.

WE understand that M. Léon Richeton is about to issue an etched portrait of Dr. Moffat uniform with his portraits of Thomas Carlyle and Dean Stanley. Mr. Elliot Stock will be the publisher.

WE are informed that an exhibition of Select Works of Decorative Art will be held during the ensuing season at the new galleries, 103A New Bond Street.

A SCHOOL of decorative art is to be created at Limoges. Strange to say, this is the first institution of the kind that has been founded in France.

A CREDIT of 250,000 frs. has always been allotted every year in the French Budget of Fine Arts to cover the expenses of the Salon. Now that the State has given up all control over the Salon and left it to the artists themselves to manage, this sum is, of course, no longer needed. But the Government has generously resolved not to withdraw this sum altogether from the Salon, but to employ it in the purchase of pictures and other works, for which the means have hitherto been very limited. This further power of purchase by the State ought to be a great encouragement to French artists.

L'Art gives us two fine etchings this week from pictures in the possession of Mr. John Wilson. The journal seems to be at present chiefly devoted to the reproduction of pictures in this celebrated collection, but no history of it is given, nor any intimation that it is likely to be sold.

A NEW Review has just been started in Poland called The Museum. It is to include art among its subjects.

A MONUMENT is to be erected in Paris in honour of Admiral Coligny. M. Crauk will be the sculptor. The commission for the statue of Edgar Quinet at Bourges has been entrusted to M. Aimé Millet.

A MARBLE medallion is to be placed on the front of No. 48 Rue St.-Jacques, Paris, which stands on the site of the house inhabited in the thirteenth century by Jehan de Meung, joint-author of the Roman de la Rose.

M. DE LIESVILLE has presented to the city of Paris his collection of almost 80,000 documents (printed and MS.), books, engravings, medals, pottery, &c., relating to the history of the first Revolution and that of 1848.

THE death is announced of M. Léopold Double, formerly aide-de-camp to Marshal Soult, and the possessor of a very fine collection of works of art.

THE Livre d'Or, a collection of the original autographs and drawings which were reproduced in Paris-Murcie, has been sold at the Hôtel des Ventes for 12,300 frs.

MR. A. H. HAIG, whose large etchings of The Quiet Hour and The Vesper Bell have been sufficient to found a distinct reputation for the picturesque treatment of architecture combined with a tender sense of the beauty of that old-world quiet which still lingers in old towns, contributes a very beautiful etching of "An Old German Mill" to the February number of the Art Journal. In the same number Mr. A. W. Hunt concludes his interesting lecture on "Turner in Yorkshire," and Mr. A. Nesbitt gives some valuable hints to collectors of ivories. Another paper worthy of special mention is one by Mr. Lionel G. Robinson on "The State and Art," in which he advocates the reproduction by the State of the finest examples of ancient art, specially sculpture and medals, for distribution to local art-centres throughout the country. He rightly points out the national importance, even commercially, of its industries being inspired by noble models. Mr. G. T. Robinson's continuation of his history of the chimney-piece, Mr. Arthur Griffiths' paper on Granada, and Mrs. Macquoid's chatty account of Old Battersea Bridge and its neighbourhood fill up an excellent number of this revived periodical.

THE STAGE.

THE NEW SATIRE.

MR. BURNAND's new comedy will draw the town to the Prince of Wales's by reason of the author's merry wit and of the amber-coloured gowns and limp poses of aesthetic actresses. But apart from these things, and apart from the tranquil veracity of Mr. Coghlan's performance as an American colonel, and the vigour and "go" of Miss Roselle's as a vivacious widow, there is not much in the piece that we were not accustomed to see in The Serious Family, and—we shall presently point out why—The Serious Family had a force which not all the skill of the writer of The Colonel can bestow on the new comedy. The Mari à la Campagne is clearly, and confessedly, the foundation of both the English pieces, but the best things in The Colonel are Mr. Burnand's own. Only we cannot consider these best things to have much essential connexion with the new satire on the aesthetic sect. Very many of them are the brilliant interpolations of an habitual wit.

In The Serious Family, a worthy young fellow who has married the daughter of an Evangelical pietist finds his home made unendurable through the strictness of discipline that is maintained, and the avoidance of pleasure which is insisted upon. The ruling spirit of the house is a religious adventurer, whose influence upon the young wife and her sour mother is only too deplorable. In The Colonel, the young man who is the counterpart of the hero of The Serious Family has married into a family strongly imbued with the doctrines of the sage-green and girdle school. Their chairs are uncomfortable; their gowns are loose where they might naturally be tight, and tight where they might more conveniently be loose; and an over-anxious attention to such pictorial inventions as "Lady Mine" and such poetical efforts as "Sir Tristram" has made them not only intense but profoundly melancholy. The ruling spirit of the house is a gentleman who seeks remunerative employment as promoter of an art-restaurant, and he is attended by a nephew—who was originally "Bob," but has been transformed into "Basil"—a blond poetaster, who is prepared to exclaim, "Consummate!" whatever may be the remark that may happen to have been made. All this is very funny; we have already found it very funny in Punch, and we have nothing whatever with which to reproach it, save that it is a little superficial, a little tending to mere caricature—the blow, which is a fair hit in the best of comic newspapers, seeming somewhat wanting in finesse and discrimination when it is delivered through the medium of comedy. We had been looking for a more sustained satire—not so much a brilliant skirmish, as an organised attack along the whole of the line.

As to the transfer of the satire from the professedly religious to the professedly aesthetic school, there are two things to be said. The change is an advantage, and yet not at all an unmixed one. Since the appearance of Tartuffe, and the appearance of Chadbond, it is far too late in the day for anyone to successfully persuade the public—as one or two of my brethren have been trying to do—that there is no proper or uncontested place in literature for satire on religious pretence. Such a place there will, of course, always be, and such satire may be healthy and a boon. But, at the same time, satire of this sort has its practical inconveniences, and in the way in which it was directed in The Serious Family its practical inconveniences have probably grown, instead of diminishing, with Time. Time has brought to the theatre the sympathy of many classes wholly estranged from the boards when The Serious Family was written. The theatre has now to beware, not only of how it offends the hypocritical, but of how it offends those who are not to be charged with hypocrisy. Accordingly, as a practical matter, it is no doubt quite well that in the case of The Serious Family the direction of the satire should be shifted, and that the shafts aimed at the Clapham sect should be aimed at the aesthetic sect, which, instead of resenting the attack, will feel a reasonable pride in having become notorious enough to deserve it.

Only—and here we come to the second thing to say—there is a way in which the play must inevitably suffer by the changed aim of the satire. Its force of motive must be lessened. Anyone who is fairly constituted can feel aggrieved or indignant when honest humanity is pushed into the background by the prominence of religious pretence. The hypocrisy of the religious adventurer is to nearly all the world nauseating; the man himself commits a capital offence, and is not guilty of a venial fault. Of course we pity the poor honest fellow who is practically kept out of house and home by the dodges of the pious adventurer; of course we pray for the adventurer's speedy exposure. But it is impossible to feel very indignant with an honest fellow's wife because she is subdued to admiration of a particular school in art. It is impossible to feel that the adventurer himself has committed any deadly sin, or is deserving of condign punishment, because he is the author of "Lady Mine" or of "Sir Tristram"—because the women of his choice are limp and melancholy—because he dines, somewhat sily, at an excellent restaurant, when he is professing that he "seldom eats," and that a heavy-headed flower is "all he wants." The play loses in force, but it gains in lightness.

Again—as the thing is done at the Prince of Wales's Theatre—it is evident that a part of the satire is rather ill directed. On questions of taste, as Mr. Burnand must be well aware, the aesthetic people are allowed to have very much the best of it. The spirits of the cheerful widow must have been amazingly high by nature to allow her to retain any appreciable share of them in the intolerably vulgar apartment where she proposes to put up her birthday nosegays tied with blue ribbons. Miss Myra Holme becomes uninteresting when she exchanges her amber silk, touched with lapis lazuli, or her "good red"—aesthetic people must be suffered to speak of colours as possessing moral virtues—for a red that is by no means "good" and a robe of tawdry gaiety. Perhaps Mr. Burnand—whose tributes to the real master of "decoration" are hearty and pointed—would himself have us remember that the reaction from aestheticism may become of unnecessary violence, and that it is to this that we owe the hideous chamber of the cheerful widow and the hideous dress of the young wife when she rebels against the art professor. But whether this be so or not, the comedy, as Mr. Burnand has rewritten it, is full of witty things, and the best of them are uttered with perfect art and quietude by Mr. Coghlan, the best of the actors.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. ROBERT BUCHANAN's play, A Nine Days' Queen, is to be immediately produced at the Connaught Theatre, where Miss Harriet Jay, the authoress of The Queen of Connaught, will play the part of the heroine.

The Danites is now performed nightly at the Imperial Theatre by a company that closely follows the original company which appeared at Sadler's Wells.

The Good-Natured Man has been brought out at the Gaiety Theatre in succession to Wycherley's comedy, which was noticed at length in these columns. Though The Good-Natured Man is probably more familiar to readers than is The Country Girl, it is to playgoers even less familiar than that play. The want of strong and sustained interest, and the absence of scenes in which the action is continuous and stirring, have, it is conjectured, told against its chances at the theatre, Goldsmith's other and more popular comedy, She Stoops to Conquer, being conspicuous in the possession of the very theatrical qualities in which The Good-Natured Man is deficient. But, as we have mentioned already, The Good-Natured Man—as a private performance given in town last season sufficiently proved—is perfectly capable, when it is gracefully and equally acted, of interesting students of the play, and those who are more concerned that a comedy shall contain wit than that it shall contain action. It is true, however, that it is to some extent deficient in characterisation; Miss Richland is characterless, the avowed hero is somewhat feeble, and the veritable hero of the play is Croaker. At the Gaiety Theatre, Miss Litton plays the part of Miss Richland, wearing agreeably her early eighteenth-century costumes, and giving herself as many old-fashioned airs as are compatible with some simplicity. But it is not within Miss Litton's power—or within any actress's power—to make a great deal of the part of Miss Richland, from a stage point of view. Mr. Lionel Brough, who was one of the strongest props of Miss Litton's comedy company at the Imperial Theatre, is the exponent of Croaker. He makes the part—what, indeed, it can hardly help being made—telling and humorous; but we are surprised to see it stated by a generally well-informed contemporary that he is the only actor on the English stage capable of giving due effect to the character. It is, as a matter of fact, easy, and not difficult, to make something good of Croaker, and there are nearly a dozen actors now on the stage perfectly qualified to represent him.

MR. AND MRS. BANCROFT have revived Masks and Faces at the Gaiety. It is four or five years ago that they revived it at the Prince of Wales's, when we had the pleasure of seeing Mrs. Bancroft as Peg Woffington for the first time, and Miss Ellen Terry as Mabel Vane, and Mr. Bancroft as Triplet. These were, indeed, remarkable performances. Two of them were of unexceptionable excellence. The Mabel Vane of Miss Ellen Terry showed that refined and constantly graceful artist in a part only too much within her means, but a part at all events which she performed and looked with rare perfection. The Peg Woffington of Mrs. Bancroft, though it differed widely from the ideal of the character set up for us and established by other actresses, was entirely true to the ideal of Mrs. Bancroft, and displayed the best use of all the means at her command. The exceeding womanliness of the reigning favourite—her compassion, her sympathy—this was the side of the character which she brought forward with a strength it had hardly previously known; and, if the traditional dignity of the part was forgotten, its comedy never was. Mr. Bancroft's Triplet was a serious, thoughtful, and, withal, humorous performance—albeit not yet quite satisfactory; the actor being occasionally rather stiff, and occasionally fettered by the requirements of a part out of the line to which he was accustomed. Of these three performances Mrs. Bancroft's remains pretty much what it was. Miss Ellen Terry's gives place to that of Miss Marion Terry, her sister, who brings her best intentions to the rendering of the part. Mr. Bancroft's Triplet has gained in many details; but, for our own part, we have always found it pleasing—always, even when it was more imperfect—recognising how much it was founded upon nature. Mr. Arthur Cecil is sufficiently senile as Colley Cibber. The remaining parts—or, at all events, several of them—are played by no means so well as they were at the Prince of Wales's. Mr. Coghlan was in the old cast, and Miss Brennan was admirably acidulated as Kitty Clive. The scenery is, probably, on a more elaborate scale at the Haymarket than it was at the Prince of Wales's. Mr. Vane's lodgings in Queen Square are, perhaps, a trifle too gorgeous; but, nevertheless, it is by no means felt in this piece—as it has been in some others—that the luxury of the appointments overwhelms the interpretation, and that the accessories are more real than the art.

THE issue of the cheap facsimiles of the Shakspeare quartos by Mr. Griggs and Mr. Furnivall has already led to one unexpected good result, and that is, that a member of the New Shakspeare Society, Dr. W. Pole, and some amateur friends have resolved on giving, what Shakspeare students and critics have long desired to see, a performance of Shakspeare's first sketch of his Hamlet as represented by the first quarto of 1603, preserving its order of scenes, following its stage directions and omissions, and correcting only the manifest blunders of its text. Opportunity will thus be given to test the opinion of those many critics who have held the first sketch to be a better acting drama than the complete play. Dr. Pole's is a "happy thought."

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

WE are pleased to learn that arrangements have been made for the performance of the whole of the eight orchestral symphonies of Schubert at the Crystal Palace. The first, in D, still in MS., was written in 1813, when the composer was in his seventeenth year. He was then at a public school called the Konvikt, and this work is said to have been written for the birthday or baptismal day of Lang, then Director of the Konvikt. We shall notice each symphony as it appears, and shall now only mention that the seventh, in E, is omitted because it is incomplete. Every bar is drawn in through the entire work, yet only the introduction and a portion of the allegro are fully scored. There is not one bar, from beginning to end, that does not contain some scoring; and it is said that Mendelssohn had at one time the intention of filling it up. The first symphony, performed last Saturday, contains the ordinary four movements and an introduction, and is written for the usual orchestra of that period. It cannot be denied that there are reminiscences of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven; but what is more natural than that a boy of seventeen should be influenced by two of his illustrious predecessors and by his great contemporary? The slow movement (andante in G) appears to us the most interesting and original, and Schubert already shows in it his predilection for the wood wind. Mr. Eugène d'Albert made his first appearance at the Crystal Palace, and gave an excellent rendering of Schumann's concerto in A minor. There are two points about his playing specially worthy of mention: first, his fine technique, and, secondly, his clear phrasing. The "cadence" inserted by the composer in the first movement was played with great finish and entrain. He afterwards performed two solos—a nocturne by Chopin and a rhapsodie by Liszt.

Mr. Charles Hallé has announced a series of orchestral concerts with his Manchester Orchestra at St. James's Hall. The first took place last Saturday evening. The programme contained no novelties, although Goldmark's Rustic Wedding had only been performed once before in London—at the Crystal Palace on March 2, 1878. It is rather a suite than a symphony. Even the first movement is not in "sonata form." It is programme-music, and each movement has a title, none of which, however, were given in Mr. Hallé's programme. The work contains much clever and characteristic writing; the orchestration is very pleasing, but the composition is long and seems too much spun out. Weber's overture to Oberon was played with great spirit, and the andantino from Spohr's Power of Sound with much delicacy. The second part of the concert commenced with Beethoven's symphony in C minor. The performance of this work was not altogether satisfactory; the slow movement especially was lacking in refinement. The Manchester Orchestra is very good, but decidedly the "strings" form the better part of it. Mr. Hallé once more proved himself an efficient and enthusiastic conductor. The performance consisted entirely of orchestral pieces, and we cannot but think that one or two songs would have afforded an agreeable contrast, and given a few moments' rest to the orchestra. At the third concert, on February 26, Berlioz' Childhood of Christ is to be given for the first time in London.

Herr Ignaz Brüll was the pianist at the Popular Concert last Monday. He gave as solo Chopin's barcarolle in F sharp major (op. 60). He performs with much finish and refinement, although his playing lacks, to a certain extent, charm. The concert concluded with a trio in E flat of his own composition—played by himself, M^{me}. Norman-Néruda, and Signor Piatti. The work contains some good and clever writing, and it is effectively written for the various instruments. M^{lle}. Friedländer was the vocalist, and contributed songs by Chopin, Schubert, and two very graceful ones by Herr Brüll, accompanied by the composer. M^{me}. Norman-Néruda played with great success Leclair's sarabande et tambourin. We must protest once more against the system of encores. There were no less than four on Monday evening. The programme of these concerts should be fixed by Mr. Arthur Chappell, and not by the public.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

THEATRES.

CONNAUGHT THEATRE.

Sole Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

To-night, at 8, OFFENBACH'S Comic Opera, in three acts,
LA FILLE DU TAMBOUR MAJOR.
On MONDAY NEXT, ROBERT BUCHANAN'S romantic play,
THE NINE DAYS' QUEEN.

Recently played at a Gaiety matinee with signal success, enthusiastically received by a crowded and fashionable audience.
Miss HARRIETT JAY, the distinguished Novelist, will resume her original character of LADY JANE GRAY.
New scenery by Calcott. Appointments and furniture for the Royal apartments by J. S. Lyon & Son.

COURT THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILSON BARRETT.

To-night, at 8, an adaptation of the Comedy in five acts,
ADRIENNE LECOUREUR.
Messrs. Forbes-Robertson, Beveridge, Lin Rayne, Darley, Doone, &c., and G. W. Anson; Mesdames Modjeska, Emery, Varré, J. Clifford, Garner, &c., and Mrs. Bernard Heere.
Box-office open 11 to 3. Doors open 7.15. Carriages 10.45. No fees.
Acting Manager, Mr. H. HERMAN.

DRURY LANE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

MOTHER GOOSE,
By E. L. Blanchard. The success of the season.
Misses Kate Santley, Ada Blanche, Addie Blanche, D'Auban, Hewitt, De Vere, Howard, Farquhar, Hogarth, Ridgeway, Braham, and Payne; the children of the School of Dancing, under Miss Kathi Leuner; Messrs. Arthur Roberts, John D'Auban, James Fawn, Kingborne, Ross, Wyatt, Ridley, Abraham, and Girard; Mesdames Palladini, Percival, Fisher, Evans, Rowella, and Coote.

FOLLY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. L. TOOLE.

To-night, at 7.30, HESTER'S MYSTERY.
At 8.15, a new and original Comedy, in three acts, by HENRY J. BYRON, called
THE UPPER CRUST.
Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Rilling, E. W. Garden, O. Shelton, and E. D. Ward; Misses Lilian Cavalier, Roland Phillips, and Emily Thorne.
At 10.15, ICI ON PARLE FRANCAIS.
SPRINGGINS—Mr. J. L. TOOLE.
Box-office open from 10 till 5. Prices 1s. to 43s. 6d. No free list. No fees for booking. Doors open at 7.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Under the direction of Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.

Every evening, a new and original Opera Comique, in three acts, entitled LA BELLE NORMANDE.
Composed by MM. VASSEUR et GUYE, the libretto by Messrs. A. MALTRY and R. MANSELL. Scenery by Mr. RYAN.
Supported by a powerful company.
Preceded, at 7.30, by a new Comedietta, by H. WILLIAMSON, entitled
THE GENIUS.
Box-office open daily from 11 till 5.

NEW SADLER'S WELLS.

(200 yards from the Angel.)

To-night, MACBETH.
For two weeks only.
MACBETH—Mr. CHARLES WARNER (his first appearance in this character).
MACDUFF—Mr. HERMANN VEFIN.
LADY MACBETH—Miss BATEMAN.
The new scenery by Mr. W. B. Spong. Locke's music will be given by accomplished vocalists.
Preceded at 7 by a Farce.
Prices from 6d. to 7s. 6d. Doors open at 8.30. No fees.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. R. DOVLY CARTE.

At 8.45, THE PIRATES OF PENZANCE.
A new and original Melodramatic Opera, by Messrs. W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SALVIAN.
Preceded, at 8, by
IN THE BULKS.
By Messrs. FRANK DESPREZ and ALFRED COLLIER.
Messrs. G. Grossman, Richard Temple, Rutland Harrington, F. Thornton, Purward Lely, Geo. Temple; Mesdames Emilie Petrelli, Jessie Bond, R. Brandram, Gwynne, Barlow, and Alice Harnett. Conductor, Mr. F. Cellier.

PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. EDGAR BRUCE.

At 8.30 a new Comedy, in three acts, called
THE COLONEL,
By F. C. BURNAND.
Preceded, at 7.45, by a one-act Comedy, by SYDNEY GRUNDY,
IN HONOUR BOUND.
Messrs. Coghlan, James Fernandez, W. Herbert, Eric Bayley, Rowland Luckstone, and Edgar Bruce; Mesdames Amy Rosalie, Myra Holme, C. Rahame, Leigh Murray, &c.
New Scenery by Mr. Bruce Smith.
Doors open 7.30. Box-office open daily from 11 to 5.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. WALTER COOCH.

Mr. EDWIN BOOTH.
LAST NIGHT OF Shakspeare's Tragedy,
OTHELLO.
Mr. EDWIN BOOTH as IAGO.
Mr. HENRY FORRESTER has been specially engaged to support Mr. Booth.
Specially selected Company. Preceded, at 7.15, by the laughable Farce,
THAT BLESSED BABY.
Doors open at 6.45. Box-office open daily.
NOTICE.—On MONDAY, FEBRUARY 14, KING LEAR.
KING LEAR—Mr. EDWIN BOOTH.

ROYALTY THEATRE.

Managers, Miss KATR LAWLER.

On MONDAY NEXT, FEBRUARY 14, at 7.30,
PEGGY.
Story of Real Life, dramatised by J. MACRAY.
Characters by Mesdames Kate Lawlor, Harriet Coveney, Amy Crawford, Edith Francis, Florence Lavender, Clair St. Clare, and Sylvia Gray; Messrs. Edward Righton, Frank Cooper, H. Keelcey, C. Martel, and Seymour Dallas.
New and realistic scenery specially designed and executed by Bruce Smith.

Now ready, Third Edition, 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

With an additional Part ("Congratias").

MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S PRINCIPLES OF PSYCHOLOGY. Fourth Thousand.

ALSO RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

Fourth Edition, with an Appendix, 8vo, cloth, 16s.

FIRST PRINCIPLES. By HERBERT SPENCER. Fifth Thousand, with an Appendix dealing with Critics (which may be had separately, price 6d.).

8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

LIBRARY EDITION (being the Ninth), with a Postscript.

THE STUDY OF SOCIOLOGY. By HERBERT SPENCER.

MR. SPENCER'S DESCRIPTIVE SOCIOLOGY. No. VII.

HEBREWS and PHOENICIANS. Classified and Arranged by HERBERT SPENCER. Compiled and Abstracted by Dr. R. SCHREFFIG. Folia, boards, price 21s.

8vo, cloth, 7s.

CEREMONIAL INSTITUTIONS. Being Part IV. of the PRINCIPLES of SOCIOLOGY (the First Portion of Vol. II.). By HERBERT SPENCER.

8vo, cloth, 8s.

THE DATA of ETHICS. Being the First Portion of the PRINCIPLES of ETHICS. By HERBERT SPENCER.

Also Fifth Thousand of the Cheap Edition, 2s. 6d.

MR. SPENCER'S WORK on EDUCATION: Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 29, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.
The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.
1st March, 1880. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHARING CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THREADNEEDLE STREET

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHANCERY CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vero-street.

Life Assurances of all descriptions.

Specially low rates for young lives, and for non-participating Policies.

Prompt settlement of Claims.

A new and greatly simplified form of Proposal, also the Society's newly revised Prospectus, will be forwarded on application.

J. O. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

TARAXACUM and PODOPHYLLIN.—A

gulf combination for Derangement of the Liver, particularly when arising from slight congestion. By gently stimulating the action of the liver, and slightly moving the bowels, the heavy, drowsy feeling, with sensations of fulness, headache, pain beneath the shoulders, and other indications of Dyspepsia are removed. Taraxacum and Podophyllin is much safer than calomel or blue pill, and quite as effective for removing bile.—Prepared by J. PEPER, 237, Tottenham-court-road, London, whose name must be on the label.—Bottles 2s 9d. and 1s. 6d. each. Sold by all Chemists.

STEPHENS DRAWING INK.

For Architectural Drawing and Artists' use.

Does not require stirring while in use.

Dries quickly, flows evenly from the pen, and becomes an insoluble colour when dry. Drawings executed with it can be washed without fear of injury. The most delicate Drawing Pens used with this Ink are not impaired by corrosion. On the contrary, instruments left with the Ink to dry on them are preserved as with a lacquer.

Sold in Bottles 6d. and 2s. each.

Can be procured through any Stationer.

H. C. STEPHENS, 191, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS

THROUGHOUT on MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM. The original, best, and most liberal. Cash prices.

Illustrated Priced Catalogue, with full particulars of terms, post-free.
F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

F. MOEDER begs to announce that the whole of the above premises have recently been rebuilt, specially adapted for the Furniture Trade, and now form one of the most commodious warehouses in the metropolis.

Bed-room Suites, from £6 6s. to 50 guineas.
Drawing-room Suites, from £9 9s. to 45 guineas.
Dining-room Suites, from £7 7s. to 40 guineas.
And all other goods in great variety.

F. MOEDER, 248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road; and 19, 20, and 21, Morwell-street, W.C. Established 1862.

PEPPER'S QUININE and IRON TONIC

Purifies and Enriches the Blood.
Strengthens the Nerves and Muscular System.
Promotes Appetite and improves Digestion.
Animates the Spirits and Mental Faculties.
Thoroughly recruits the general bodily health, and induces a proper healthy condition of the Nervous and Physical Forces.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The Medical Profession for over Forty Years have approved of this pure solution as the BEST REMEDY for

A acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion,

And as the safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER.

Large Bottles, 1s. 6d. Restores the Colour to Gray Hair in a few days. The best, safest, and cheapest. Quite equal to expensive ones. Sold by Chemists and Hairdressers.

BRAND & CO.'S OWN SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS EXHIBITION, 1878.

FRY'S

Guaranteed Pure Cocoa only. A perfectly pure and delicious beverage, prepared exclusively from choice Cocoa Nibs, with the superfluous oil extracted.

COCOA

"If properly prepared, there is no nicer or more wholesome preparation of Cocoa."

Food, Water, and Air.—Dr. HASSALL.

"It is strictly pure, and well manufactured in every way."

W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.

"Pure Cocoa, from which a portion of its oily ingredients has been extracted."

CHAS. A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Analyst for Dublin.

EXTRACT

Try also FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.

A DELICIOUS PREPARATION.

J. S. FRY & SONS, BRISTOL AND LONDON.

WILLS'

"THREE CASTLES."

"THREE CASTLES" TOBACCO.

"There's no sweeter Tobacco comes from Virginia, and no better Brand than the 'THREE CASTLES.'—Vide 'The Virginians.' Only in Packets and Cigarettes, protected by the Name and Trade Mark.

W. D. & H. O. WILLS.

GEORGE BELL & SONS' NEW BOOKS.

Crown 4to, cloth, bevelled edges, with gilt top, price 31s. 6d.

BOOKBINDINGS, Ancient, Mediaeval, and Modern.

By JOSEPH CUNDALL. Illustrated with Twenty-eight Engravings, from examples formerly in the possession of Maioli, Grolier, Henri Deux, Diane de Poitiers, Président de Thou, and other noted Collectors; and from the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris; National Museum, Nuremberg; Imperial Library, Vienna; and the British and South Kensington Museums.

A FEW COPIES on hand-made paper, half-bound, £2 2s.

"No more delightful book on a technical subject has ever been published in England."

"The first English book which can be placed by the side of the beautiful French treatises on the subject."—Antiquary.

Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

ENGLISH SONNETS by LIVING WRITERS. Selected and Arranged, with a Note on the History of the Sonnet, by S. WADDINGTON.

"The selection is a singularly attractive one, and its value is enhanced by the interesting 'Note,' as the author modestly calls it."—Saturday Review.

"Few people, we imagine, will read Mr. Waddington's selection without being pleased, or his Note without being informed."—St. James's Gazette.

"A very charming selection of sonnets."—Daily News.

"This anthology deserves special praise for its good taste, its catholicity, and its quiet thoroughness."—Notes and Queries.

Fcap. 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

GREEK WIT: a Collection of Smart Sayings and Anecdotes. Translated from Greek Prose Writers. By F. A. PALEY, M.A.

"A capital assortment of epigrams and anecdotes, translated from Greek prose writers. Some are old friends, but most must be new to the generality of readers, and the book is highly amusing."—Morning Post.

Fcap. 8vo, price 5s.

THE NINE DAYS' QUEEN: a Dramatic Poem. By Mrs. FREDERICK PRIDEAUX, Author of "Claudia."

HORACE'S ODES. Englished and Imitated by Various Hands. Selected and Arranged by C. W. F. COOPER. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d.

"This is an extremely good idea well carried out."—Notes and Queries.

"A very interesting compilation."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The idea of the book is a happy one, and happily executed."—Spectator.

"This book deserves a place in every scholar's study."—Saturday Review.

Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

VERSES. By E. M. Harris, Author of "Estelle," "Four Messengers," &c.

PASCAL'S PROVINCIAL LETTERS. Edited from the Original Text, with Introduction and English Notes, by J. DE SOYRES, M.A. Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s.

[Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL, & CO.]

"Mr. de Soyres has done well in providing an edition of the book so accurate as regards the text, so careful in all its details, and so completely equipped with the necessary explanations for the English reader. The introduction and notes are in English, and they contain everything that the ordinary reader will require."—Daily News.

"Mr. de Soyres has given a careful French text. . . . Each letter has its complement of notes, which in most cases are helpful and suggestive. An 'Index of Persons' gives a brief encyclopaedic account of the combatants in the dispute."—St. James's Gazette.

"The notes are short and to the point."—Academy.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

MONTANISM and the PRIMITIVE CHURCH: a Study in the Ecclesiastical History of the Second Century. Price 6s.

"A fresh addition to the excellent series of essays which have been produced at Cambridge of late years in competition for prizes. . . . It is interesting, not only in itself, but also as a specimen of the very different spirit in which historical enquiries are now pursued from that which was usual in the last century."—Contemporary Review.

Crown 8vo, price 6s.

INDIVIDUALISM: its Growth and Tendencies, with some Suggestions as to the Remedy for its Evils. Sermons preached before the University of Cambridge in November, 1880. By the Right Rev. A. N. LITTLEJOHN, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of Long Island.

[Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL, & CO.]

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE MIRACLES of our LORD and SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST. Explained to Country Children. By the Rev. S. C. MALAN, D.D., Vicar of Broad-Windsor.

NEW VOLUME OF BELL'S READING-BOOKS.

POETRY for BOYS. Selected and Arranged by DAVID MUNRO. Post 8vo, 1s.

"A tasteful little selection, . . . and we have only to add that, while it includes the usual stock pieces which have taken their permanent place in our literature, it contains also several fresh extracts which we do not remember to have seen before."

Educational Times.

UNIVERSAL STATISTICS.

THE CONDITION of NATIONS, Social and Political.

With complete Comparative Tables of Universal Statistics. By G. FR. KOLB. Translated, Edited, and Collated to 1880 by Mrs. BREWER. With Original Notes by E. W. STREETER, F.R.G.S., Author of "Precious Stones," &c. Royal 8vo, 985 pp., £2 2s.

"No more thorough, comprehensive, or serviceable book of the kind has ever been issued from the press. It might be described, from one point of view, as a panorama of the internal condition of all the peoples of the civilised world, and, from another, as a compendious and discreet deconvolution of the most important Blue-books of all the countries and all the languages which boast a literature of any kind."—Standard.

HISTORY of POLITICAL ECONOMY in EUROPE.

By JEROME-ADOLPHE BLANQUI. Translated from the Fourth French Edition by E. J. LEONARD. With a Preface by D. A. WELLS. Medium 8vo, 12s.

"Blanqui's History is an unusually good book."—Statist.

Demy 8vo, 12s.

TRADE, POPULATION, and FOOD: a Series of Papers on Economic Statistics. By STEPHEN BOURNE, F.S.S., of the Statistical Department of Her Majesty's Customs.

"To anyone who wishes to obtain an insight into the economic questions that have been most prominent during the late depression of trade Mr. Bourne's book will be invaluable."—Statist.

"A series of very interesting statistical papers."—Economist.

"To the political economist and to the statistician this work will be found of the highest value."—Civilian.

In Bohn's Library Binding, or fancy cloth.

LAPPENBERG'S HISTORY of ENGLAND under the ANGLO-SAXON KINGS. Translated by the late B. THORPE, F.S.A. New Edition.

Revised by E. C. OTTE. 2 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

New Edition [the 32nd] with two Fresh and Useful Tables, demy 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

KING'S TABLES of INTEREST.

Medium 8vo, 21s.

MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS, in CAPTIVITY: a Narrative of Events from January, 1569, to December, 1584, whilst George Earl of Shrewsbury was the Guardian of the Scottish Queen. By JOHN DANIEL LEADER, F.S.A.

"Mr. Leader has done his work thoroughly well, and has spared no pains in searching out and bringing forward every scrap of information that can elucidate his subject."—Saturday Review.

"No previous writer has brought out in such fullness of detail the daily life, the troubles, anxieties, and surrounding circumstances of Mary, in her various places of captivity and under her successive custodians."—Daily News.

"Mr. Leader deserves all the credit of filling up what is almost a gap in history. Every care has been taken to make the narrative complete; and it has, besides its historical interest, no little value as a picture of the social and economical condition of England at the time."—Pall Mall Gazette.

SYLVESTRA: Studies of Manners in England from 1770 to 1800. By ANNIE RAINE ELLIS, Author of "Marie," "Marianne," &c.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"Of all the books that we have read it reminds us most of Southey's 'Doctor.' Much of it is as delightfully discursive, and full, not of the same kind of learning, but of matter not less quaint, remote from modern ways of thought, and entertaining. . . . It would be a pity that anyone should think that 'Sylvestra' because it has the form of a novel is anything less than a book of the first merit."—Pall Mall Gazette.

New Issue, extra cloth, with Twenty-one Etchings by Maclise, price 5s.

THE RELIQUES of FATHER PROUT. By the Rev. FATHER MAHONY. Copyright Edition, with the Author's last Corrections and Additions.

An unauthorised edition of these Reliques (under the anomalous title of "Works of Father Prout"), compiled from the unrevised contributions to magazines, having appeared, the Publishers of the authentic edition think it necessary to caution the Public, and to state that they are the sole proprietors of the last edition, which was carefully revised by the author in 1859, and contains various important additions and notes, besides the Twenty-one Illustrations designed and etched by Maclise, amongst which is the celebrated sketch of the Literary Celebrities of the Day, contributors to Fraser's Magazine.

New Edition, with a Supplement of over 4,000 New Words and Meanings.

WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY. 1,628 Pages, 3,000 Woodcuts. Price 21s.

"Certainly the best practical Dictionary extant."—Quarterly Review, October, 1873.

Prospectuses, with specimen page, sent post-free on application.

Full Catalogues sent on application post-free to all parts of the world.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES, containing Standard Works of European Literature, in the English Language, on

HISTORY,	THEOLOGY,	NATURAL HISTORY,
BIOGRAPHY,	ANTIQUITIES,	POETRY,
TOPOGRAPHY,	SCIENCE,	ART,
ARCHAEOLOGY,	PHILOSOPHY,	FICTION.

With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference, comprising, in all, Translations from the

FRENCH,	PORTUGUESE,	ANGLO-SAXON,
GERMAN,	SWEDISH,	LATIN,
ITALIAN,	DANISH,	and
SPANISH,	ICELANDIC,	GREEK.

Price 3s. 6d. or 5s. per Volume (with exceptions).

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, 4, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 459.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1881.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
LIFE AND LITERARY RELICS OF DR. APPLETON, by tho Rev. MARK PATTISON	127
KEATING'S HISTORY OF IRELAND, by DAVID FITZGERALD	128
BLAIR'S PROSELYTES OF ISRAEL, by S. LANE-POOLE	128
CUNDALL'S BOOK-BINDINGS, by T. H. WARD	130
AZCÁBARI'S HISTORY OF THE LAW OF PROPERTY, by tho Rev. W. WEBSTER	130
NEW NOVELS, by the Rev. E. PURCELL	131
CURRENT LITERATURE	132
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TO JENNY," FROM THE FRENCH OF VICTOR HUGO, by Miss E. H. HICKEY	133
NOTES AND NEWS	133
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	135
OBITUARY	135
WILL OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, OF ST. SEPULCHRE'S, LONDON, A.D. 1413, by F. J. FURNIVALL	136
THE CODEX ZACENTRIUS, by the Rev. NICOLAS POCOCK	136
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Chinese Translations of Sanskrit Texts, by Prof. Max Müller; Ben Jonson's Copy of "Priscian," by the Rev. C. J. Robinson; Carlyle and Goethe, by C. H. Mohr	137-8
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	138
DR. KOSCHWITZ'S VOYAGE DE CHABLEMAGNE, by the Late HENRY NICOL	139
OBITUARY	140
CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE	140
NOTES OF TRAVEL	140
SCIENCE NOTES	141
PHIOLOGY NOTES	141
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	141
MR. WHISTLER'S PASTELS, by FREDK. WEDMORE	142
MESSRS. AGNEW'S EXHIBITION, by COSMO MONTEHOUSE	142
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	142
MR. BOOTH IN LEAR	143
STAGE NOTES	144
RECENT CONCERTS, &c., by J. S. SHEDLOCK	144

PEPPING FOREST.—In the centre of the land lately thrown open to the public, a well-established SCHOOL offers a comfortable HOME for sound TRAINING. Good Playground and Cricket-field. Cows kept. Pupils pass the College of Preceptors, Cambridge Local, and London Matriculation.—G. F. H. STRES, D.A., Forest House, Woodford.

BOYS PREPARED for the ENTRANCE and SCHOLARSHIP EXAMINATIONS at RUGBY and the other Public Schools.—For Terms, &c., apply to R. F. E. BUSH, Esq., Hillmorton-road, Rugby.

ABINGDON SCHOOL, Berks.—The new buildings give further accommodation. BOYS are prepared to modern subjects for the University, where the School has valuable Scholarships. TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS are now open to Boys entering in January. A Scholar's total expenses average £35 per annum.—Apply to Rev. E. SUMMERS, Head Master.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS. — WARBERRY HOUSE, Bishopdown Park.—PREPARATION for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES, under the Rev. T. R. J. STEBBING, M.A., sometime Fellow and Tutor of Worcester College, Oxford, First and Second Class Classics, First Class in Law and Modern History. Fees from 150 to 250 Guineas.

STUDIO, with Ante-Rooms, &c., in Pem-bridge-place, Bayswater.—Specially built for the purpose. Light and well lighted. £50 per annum.—Apply to E. & F. SWAIN, 82, High-street, Notting-hill, W. (7.375.)

GREAT DISCOVERY OF GOLD and COPPER.—A few Select INVESTORS may JOIN a New COMPANY, Limited, AT PAUL, and realise a HIGH PREMIUM, combined with 45 per cent. Guaranteed Dividend.—Apply immediately to Mr. PAUL, 8, Warwick-place, Leeds, Yorkshire.

A GENTLEMAN of Literary pursuits, willing to undertake an Active Share in a Work already started, may invest £1,000 on favourable terms.—Full particulars from ROBISON & WALTON, Auctioneers, &c., Poultry Chambers, 11, Poultry, London, E.C.

SECRETARY. — A GENTLEMAN Desires an Appointment as SECRETARY, Travelling preferred, as it is wished to undertake Lecturing with ordinary duties; or as Lecturer only to a Society.—Address, E. X., care of Mr. Digby, 125, Aldersgate-street, London.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

REGINALD STUART POOLE, Esq., will THIS DAY (SATURDAY), FEBRUARY 19, at 3 o'clock, begin a COURSE of FOUR LECTURES on "ANCIENT EGYPT in its COMPARATIVE RELATIONS."

Subscription to this Course, Half-a-Guinea; to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

ROYAL SOCIETY of LITERATURE.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 23, at 8 P.M.
Mr. W. A. BARETT will read a PAPER entitled, "THE FATHERS of the ENGLISH CHURCH MUSIC."
W. S. W. VAUX, Sec. R.S.L.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

The EXHIBITION of WORKS by the OLD MASTERS, end by Deceased Masters of the British School, including a Collection of Drawings by John Flaxman, R.A., is NOW OPEN DAILY, from 9 till 7. One Shilling. Catalogues 6d. each, or bound in cloth, with pencil, One Shilling. Season Tickets, Five Shillings.

N.B.—The Exhibition is lighted at dusk.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY of ENGLAND.

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

The EXAMINATION of CANDIDATES for the SOCIETY'S PRIZES and CERTIFICATES, including the Life Membership of the Society, will take place in the week commencing TUESDAY, MAY 10TH, 1881.

Copies of the Form of Entry, which is required to be sent in by April 1, 1881, may be had on application to H. M. JENKINS, Secretary, 12, Hanover-square, London, W.

MILLAIS EXHIBITION. — A LOAN

COLLECTION of the WORKS of MR. J. E. MILLAIS, R.A., will OPEN on MONDAY NEXT, the 21st INST., at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, NEW BOND STREET. The Contributions include: Autumn Leaves—Boyhood of Raleigh—Carpenter's Shop—Cherry Ripe—Chill October—Ferdinand and Ariel—The Gambler's Wife—Lorenzo and Isabella—The Minuet—North-West Passage—Order of Release—Princes in the Tower—Yale of Rest—Yeoman of the Guard—and a new Picture, The Princess Elizabeth including an Account of her Last Interview with her Father, Charles I.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

NEW NOVEL, BY HENRY JAMES, JUN.

WASHINGTON SQUARE: the Pension Beaurepas: a Bundle of Letters. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"The very clever sketches . . . are, on the whole, even more marvellously clever. . . . There is no doubt that it is genius of the most marked order—genius for painting character."—Spectator.
"Mr. James has contrived, as he usually does, to throw a new charm over the old story. . . . Mr. James's style is as pleasant as ever."—Athenaeum.

NEW NOVEL.

LOUKIS LARAS; or, the Reminiscences of a Chiote

Merchant during the Greek War of Independence. From the Greek of D. HIKELAS. Translated, with Introduction on the Rise and Development of Modern Greek Literature, by J. GENNADIUS, late Chargé d'Affaires at the Greek Legation in London. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Eighteenth Annual Publication, Revised after Official Returns.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK: Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the Civilised World, for the Year 1881. By FREDERICK MARTIN. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"All the information that could possibly be desired by politicians, merchants, and public speakers and writers relative to the condition and government, the Church and education, the revenue and expenditure, the army and navy, the area and population, the commerce and industry, of every civilised country in the world is to be found readily accessible within the small limits of this admirable Year Book."—Standard.

SYNOPTICON: a Harmony of the Synoptic Gospels, exhibiting the matter common to the Three Evangelists by varieties of colour and type. By W. G. RUSHBROOKE, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Folio, 21s.

"Should be indispensable for the critical study of the Synoptic Gospels."

Dr. SANDAY, in the Academy.

THE ABBOTTS FARM; or, Practice with Science.

By HENRY TANNER, M.R.A.C., F.C.S., Author of "First Principles of Agriculture." Extra fcap., 3s. 6d.

"Professor Tanner's little book may be read with considerable profit."

Saturday Review.

CATHERINE and CRAFTURD TAIT, Wife and Son of ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, Archbishop of Canterbury: a Memoir. Edited, at the request of the Archbishop, by the Rev. W. BENHAM, B.D. With Two Portraits. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Immediately.]

THE MAKERS of FLORENCE: Dante, Giotto, Savonarola, and their City. By Mrs. OLFPHANT. With Illustrations by Professor Delamotte. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Immediately.]

THROUGH the RANKS to a COMMISSION.

Crown 8vo. [Immediately.]

As this book bears no writer's name, the publishers feel bound to state that they have seen documents and letters from well-known persons which are more than enough to guarantee the genuineness of the narrative.

ARISTOTLE.—The Metaphysics, Book I. Translated

into English Prose, with marginal Analysis, and Summary of each Chapter. By A CAMBRIDGE GRADUATE. Demy 8vo, 5s.

A SHORT MANUAL of the HISTORY of INDIA,

with an ACCOUNT of INDIA AS IT IS. The Soil, Climate, and Productions—the People: their Races, Religions, Public Works, and Industries—the Civil Services and System of Administration. By ROPER LETHBRIDGE, M.A., C.I.E., Press Commissioner with the Government of India, late Scholar of Exeter College, &c. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 5s.

MACMILLAN'S ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.—NEW VOLUME.

CAESAR.—Scenes from the Fifth and Sixth Books of the Gallic War. Edited, with Notes, &c., by C. COLBECK, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Assistant-Master at Harrow. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

FIRST LESSONS in GREEK: adapted to Goodwin's

Greek Grammar, and designed as an Introduction to the Analysis of Xenophon. By JOHN WILLIAMS WHITE, Ph.D., Assistant-Professor of Greek in Harvard University. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

"It is our own fault if, at the time we arrive at the end, our scholarship is not both sound and varied. . . . We should very much like to see this valuable book tried in one or two of our best schools."—Examiner.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO.

RICHARD COSWAY'S WORKS.

Messrs. P. & D. COLNAGHI & CO. propose to publish a small series of ETCHINGS by M. C. WALTHER, of the finest Miniatures by COSWAY. A specimen Plate, now completed, can be seen at 14, Pall Mall East.

ROBERT BLAKE'S ETCHING, "THE CANTERBURY PILGRIMS."—Messrs. P. & D. COLNAGHI & CO. having purchased this Plate, which is in fine condition, purpose printing a limited number of impressions on Japan paper.—13 and 14, Pall Mall East.

MR. WHISTLER'S VENICE PASTELS.

—A Series of Fifty PASTEL DRAWINGS by MR. WHISTLER are NOW ON VIEW at the FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, NEW BOND STREET. Admission on presentation of address card.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

531, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.
(Twenty doors west of Mudie's Library.)

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY are producers of Book Illustrations by the Autotype and Sawyer's Collotype Processes. Employed by the Trustees of the British Museum, Palaeographical, Numismatical, Royal Geographical, and other learned Societies.

Facsimiles of Medals and Coins, Ancient MSS., Paintings, Drawings, Sketches, Views and Portraits from Nature, &c.

The Woodbury Process is utilised for photographs of Art Manufactures, Portraits, &c., where mounting is not an objection.

AUTOTYPE represents permanent photography, with unique powers of artistic expression.

AUTOTYPE is celebrated for its noble collection of Copies of the OLD MASTERS, and for numerous fine examples of MODERN ART selected from the works of Reynolds, Turner, Poynter, Meissonier, Corot, De Neuville, Burne-Jones, Rossetti, Cave Thomas, &c., &c., &c.

Just published, in Cloth Portfolio, Six Outlines the Set.

TWELVE AUTOTYPE REPRODUCTIONS of PAINTINGS and DRAWINGS, by PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON, mostly of Scottish mountain scenery, and including copies of paintings in monochrome and of sepia and charcoal drawings. The twelve subjects are mounted on uniform boards, 28½ in. by 21 in. Each Autotype can be obtained separately, price 10s. 6d.

"COME UNTO THESE YELLOW SANDS," after the painting by W. FIELD, Esq., on India, two sizes, 42s. and 21s.

Pictures Cleaned, Restored, Framed.

To adorn the walls of Home with Artistic Masterpieces at little cost, visit the AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY, 531, Oxford-street, W.C.

The Works, Ealing Dene, Middlesex.

General Manager, W. S. BIRK. Director of the Works, J. R. SAWYER.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE, LOMBARD STREET

and CHANCERY CROSS, LONDON.—Established 1782.

Prompt and Liberal Loss Settlements.

Insurances effected in all parts of the world.

JOHN J. BROOMFIELD, Secretary.

SUN LIFE OFFICE, LONDON.

Established 1810.

CHIEF OFFICE, 63, THREADNEEDLE STREET

BRANCH OFFICES, 60, CHANCERY CROSS;

And Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street.

Life Assurances of all descriptions.

Specially low rates for young lives, and for non-participating Policies.

Prompt settlement of Claims.

A new and greatly simplified form of Proposal, also the Society's newly revised Prospectus, will be forwarded on application.

J. O. PRIESTLEY, Actuary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of charge, the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

1st March, 1880. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

STEPHENS DRAWING INK.

For Architectural Drawing and Artists' use.

Does not require stirring while in use.

Dries quickly, flows evenly from the pen, and becomes an insoluble colour when dry. Drawings executed with it can be washed without fear of injury. The most delicate Drawing Pens used with this Ink are not impaired by corrosion. On the contrary, instruments left with the ink to dry on them are preserved as with a lacquer.

Sold in Bottles 6d. and 2s. each.

Can be procured through any Stationer.

H. C. STEPHENS, 191, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s., post-free.

SUNSHINE IN PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

The Sun; Transit of Venus; Spectrum Analysis; the Moon; the Stars and Planets; Comets and Meteors; Atmospheric Electricity; Whirlwinds; Glaciers; the Telephone. By W. J. MILLAR, C.E., Secretary to the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders, in Scotland; Author of "Principles of Mechanics," &c.

"This work consists of chapters from several sciences—astronomy, electricity, heat, light, &c. They cover a good deal of ground, and include objects as wide apart as whirlwinds and spectrum analysis, glaciers and the telephone."—Liverpool Albion.

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

Fcap. 8vo, 128 pp., price 1s. 6d.

A MEDLEY of NOTABLES: What

they said and What others said of them. By G. F. S.

"This little book contains on one side of each page a quotation from some well-known author, and on the other side a brief notice of this author by other authors. If we turn to Shakespeare, for instance, we find quoted some of his descriptions of Falstaff's death, while there are given notices of Shakespeare by Keats, Ben Jonson, Browning, Darnley, and by some anonymous writer who likely enough is the editor. From him we learn that 'Shakespeare went before all men, and stands in the array of human intellect like the sun in the system, single and unapproached.'"—Saturday Review

Published at 21, Castle-street, Holborn.

NEW PUBLICATIONS OF THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

LECTURES on TEACHING, delivered in the University of Cambridge in the Lent Term, 1880. By J. G. FITCH, Her Majesty's Inspector of Schools. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NOTES on the TALE of NALA. For the use of Classical Students. By J. PEILE, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

M. T. CICERONIS pro CN. PLANCIO ORATIO. By H. A. Holden, LL.D., Head-Master of Ipswich School. Small 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

P. VERGILI MARONIS AENEIDOS LIBER V. Edited, with Notes, by A. SIDGWICK, M.A., Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. Small 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OFThe Cambridge Bible for Schools.

(General Editor: J. J. S. PEROWNE, D.D., Dean of Peterborough.)

THE BOOK of JEREMIAH. By the Rev. A. W. Streane, M.A., Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. With Map. Cloth, 4s. 6d.

The Cambridge Greek Testament

For Schools and Colleges.

With a Revised Text, based on the most recent critical authorities, and English Notes, prepared under the direction of the General Editor, the Very Rev. J. J. S. PEROWNE, D.D., Dean of Peterborough.

THE GOSPEL according to ST. MATTHEW. By the Rev. A. Carr, M.A. [Nearly ready.]

The Books will be published separately, as in the Cambridge Bible for Schools.

LONDON: CAMBRIDGE WAREHOUSE, 17, PATERNOSTER ROW.

LONDON LIBRARY.

12, ST JAMES'S SQUARE.—Founded in 1841.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

PRESIDENT—THOMAS CARLYLE, Esq.

This Library contains 90,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature in various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year, or £2 with Entrance-fee of £5; Life Membership, £40.

Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town, Members. Reading-room open from Ten to Half-past Six. Prospectus on application.

ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

SECOND-HAND COPIES of "ENDYMION."

Clean Second-hand Copies of Endymion, by the Earl of Beaconsfield—He that Will Not when He May, by Mrs.

Oliphant—Just as I Am, by Miss Braddon—The Duke's Children, by Anthony Trollope—Sir Gibbie, by George

Macdonald—White Wings, by William Black; and more than One Thousand other Popular Novels are now on Sale at Mudie's Select Library at the Lowest Current Prices.

See MUDIE'S CLEARANCE CATALOGUE, New Edition, now ready, postage free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (LIMITED), NEW OXFORD STREET.

City Office: 2, King-street, Cheapside.

Published Weekly, 16s. per Annum.

DAS MAGAZIN für die LITERATUR

des IN- und AUSLANDES. Orders received by the Sole Agents for this Country, Glasgow: WILSON & M'CORMICK.

LITHOGRAPHY.—GOW, BUTTER-

FIELD, & CO. (late Butterfield & Mason) are prepared to execute

First-class WORK in FACSIMILES of Oil Paintings and Water-Colours,

Book Illustrations, Show-Cards, and Trade Emblems.—Specimens may be seen at their Works, Bowling Green-lane Buildings, Farringdon-road, E.C.

TO PROPRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS

and PERIODICALS.—WYMAN & SONS, Printers of the Builder, the Printing Times, Truth, the Furniture Gazette, the Review, Brief the Week's News, and other high-class Publications, call attention to the facilities they possess for the COMPLETE, ECONOMIC, and PUNCTUAL

PRODUCTION of PERIODICAL LITERATURE, whether illustrated or

Plain. Estimates furnished to Proprietors of Newspapers, for either

Printing, or Printing and Publishing.—74 and 75, Great Queen-street,

London, W.C.

THE PRINTERS of Society, The Citizen,

Four other Newspapers, Twenty Monthly Periodicals, and other Publications possess unrivalled facilities both at London and Chiswick for the production of this class of work. Estimates furnished.—UNWIN

BROTHERS, The Gresham Press, 109A, Cannon-street, E.C.

BIBLE REVISION.THE ENGLISH HEXAPLA:

The Six Principal English Versions of the New Testament, in parallel columns, beneath the Greek Original Text. Wiclif, 1380.—Tyndale, 1534.—Cranmer, 1539.—Geneva, 1557.—Rheims, 1582.—Authorized, 1611. 1 very handsome vol., 4to, £2 2s., or Morocco, gilt edges.

"In form and substance it is an admirable present for any clergyman."

London: S. BAOSTER & SONS, 15, Paternoster-row.

And sold by all Booksellers.

Now ready, 30 pp., with cover, price 6d., the FEBRUARY Number of

THE PALATINE NOTE-BOOK: for the Intercommunication of Antiquaries, Bibliophiles, and other Investigators into the History and Literature of the Counties of Lancaster, Chester,

&c., containing—

HENRY NEWCOMBE'S "SINNERS' HOPE," with a Portrait—THE STORY of the THREE BLACK CROWS—The Rev. JOHN WATSON, M.A.,

F.S.A., AT HOME—Col. JOHN TOWNLEY and LOUIS XV.,—and HIS-

TORY of CROSS STREET CHAPEL, MANCHESTER.

MINOR NOTES, &c.—The Post-Office in 1617: "Posts"—Verses on the Death of Henry, Prince of Wales, 1612—The Scenes of George Eliot's

Earlier Stories—A Cheshire Sea-Serpent—Richard Mather's Works—The

Brereton Family—Lancashire and Cheshire Book-plates—The Three

Jovial Huntsmen—Oldham Palace—The Old Organ of Great Budworth

Church—A Gloucestershire "Box of Whistles"—The Roman Legion in Manchester—W. M. Craig, the Artist—The Christian Name Hamlet—

Rd. Radcliffe, M.P., for Manchester, temp. Commonwealth—Funeral

Custom at Leigh, Lancashire—King John, Earl of Mortaigne—Roman

Tiles found in Manchester, 1832-40—Hymns attributed to the Rev. John Clayton—Anonymous Works: P. W. A. "Exercises," 1609—Dr. John

Forster—An Old Diary—Dr. Enfield's "Speaker."

NOTICES, &c.—Eyre's Printing Press—The Liverpool Records—The Stone of Thor—Humphrey Chetham, &c.

Post-free, 6s. per year, from the Editor, Mr. J. E. BAILEY, F.S.A., Street-ford, Manchester.

Just published, price 10s. 6d.

INSECT VARIETY: its Propagation and Distribution. Treating of the Odours, Dances, Colours, and Music in Insects; and exhibiting the bearing of the Science of Entomology on Geology. By A. H. SWINSON, Memb. Ent. Soc. Lond.

"This work indicates extensive reading of the writings, in many languages, of authors, ancient and modern, who have investigated the attri-butances of insect life. Copious extracts and references are given, together with the researches of the author. As bringing a great number of observations into one view this work is very interesting and serviceable."

Entomologist's Monthly Magazine.

London: CASSELL, PETER, GALPIN, & Co., and all Booksellers.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for FEBRUARY

contains:—The King and "Marsial"—Mr. Peppys, the Musician, by F. Huetter—The Father of the Symphony—The Great Composers: Schubert—Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ"—Two New Overtures by Brahms—

Monday Popular Concerts—Conference on Organ Construction—Occasional

Notes—Foreign and Country News—Reviews—Correspondence, &c. Price

3d., post-free, 6d. Annual Subscription, 48s., including postage.

THE MUSICAL TIMES for FEBRUARY

contains:—"Aftersmith: Part-Song, by T. S. DRUMMOND. Price, separately, 12d.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, & Co., 1, Berners-street, W., and 80 and 81,

Queen-street, E.C.

GEORGE BELL & SONS NEW BOOKS.

Crown 4to, cloth, bevelled edges, with gilt top, price 31s. 6d.

BOOKBINDINGS, Ancient, Mediæval, and Modern. By JOSEPH CUNDALL. Illustrated with Twenty-eight Engravings, from examples formerly in the possession of Maioli, Grolier, Henri Deux, Diane de Poitiers, Président de Thon, and other noted Collectors; and from the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris; National Museum, Nuremberg; Imperial Library, Vienna; and the British and South Kensington Museums.

A FEW COPIES on hand-made paper, half-bound, £2 2s.

Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

ENGLISH SONNETS by LIVING

WRITERS. Selected and Arranged, with a Note on the History of the Sonnet, by S. WADDINGTON.

"The selection is a singularly attractive one, and its value is enhanced by the interesting 'Note,' as the author modestly calls it."—Saturday Review.
"Few people, we imagine, will read Mr. Waddington's selection without being pleased, or his Note without being informed."—St. James's Gazette.

"A very charming selection of sonnets."—Daily News.

Fcap. 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

GREEK WIT: a Collection of Smart Sayings and Anecdotes. Translated from Greek Prose Writers. By F. A. PALEY, M.A.

"A capital assortment of epigrams and anecdotes, translated from Greek prose writers. Some are old friends, but most must be new to the generality of readers, and the book is highly amusing."—Morning Post.

COVENTRY PATMORE'S POETICAL WORKS.

AMELIA, TAMERTON, CHURCH TOWER, &c., with Essay on English Metrical Law. Post 8vo, 6s.; Roxburgh, 7s.

THE ANGEL in the HOUSE. Fifth Edition. Post 8vo, 6s.; Roxburgh, 7s.

THE VICTORIES of LOVE. Fourth Edition. Post 8vo, 6s.; Roxburgh, 7s.

THE UNKNOWN BROS. I.—XLVI. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.; Roxburgh, 8s. 6d.

UNIFORM EDITION. Complete in 4 vols. Post 8vo, Roxburgh, 28s.

FLORILEGIUM AMANTIS: a Selection from Coventry Patmore's Poems. Edited by R. GARNETT. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.; Roxburgh, 6s.

Medium 8vo, 21s.

MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS, in CAP-

TIVITY: a Narrative of Events from January, 1569, to December, 1584, whilst George Earl of Shrewsbury was the Guardian of the Scottish Queen. By JOHN DANIEL LEADER, F.S.A.

"Mr. Leader has done his work thoroughly well, and has spared no pains in searching out and bringing forward every scrap of information that can elucidate his subject."—Saturday Review.

"No previous writer has brought out in such fullness of detail the daily life, the troubles, anxieties, and surrounding circumstances of Mary, in her various places of captivity and under her successive custodians."—Daily News.

Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE DOCTRINE of GERMS; or, the Integration of Certain Partial Differential Equations which occur in Mathematical Physics. By E. EARNSHAW, M.A., Author of "Etherspheres a vera causa of Natural Philosophy."

[Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL, & Co.]

Demy 8vo, price 15s.

ANCIENT and MODERN GEO-

METRY of CONICS, an Introduction to. Being a Geometrical Treatise on the Conic Sections, with a Collection of Problems and Historical Notes and Prolegomena. By CHARLES TAYLOR, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

[Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL, & Co.]

NEW ADDITION TO BOHN'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

2 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

LAPPENBERG'S HISTORY of ENGLAND under the ANGLO-SAXON KINGS. By the late B. THORPE, F.S.A. New Edition. Revised by E. C. ORTE. In 2 vols.

London: 4, York-street, Covent-garden.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

OIDA'S NEW WORK.

A VILLAGE COMMUNE. By Ouida.

2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Ouida's new novel is one which will be very widely read, and which will arouse the tenderest feelings and highest sympathies."—Nottingham Guardian.

THE AUTHORS OF "READY-MONEY MORTIBOY."

THE TEN YEARS' TENANT, and other

Stories. By WALTER BESANT and JAMES RICE, Authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"As charming as anything these authors have written, and will bear reading attentively more than once."—Manchester Examiner.

MRS. CHRISTIE MURRAY'S NEW NOVEL.

A LIFE'S ATONEMENT. By David

CHRISTIE MURRAY. Second Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"In 'A Life's Atonement' Mr. Murray shows that he can write well, and that he possesses considerable pathos, some humour, and no mean skill in narration."—Athenæum.

JAMES PAYN'S NEW NOVEL.—SECOND EDITION.

A CONFIDENTIAL AGENT. By James

PAYN. With Twelve Illustrations by Arthur Hopkins. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mr. Pavn's fertility of invention and freshness of style are wonderful. He is continually making somebody say a good thing, and somebody else tell a capital story. . . . We can recall very few of Mr. Pavn's books in which there are happier sketches of character in more agreeable variety."—Saturday Review.

MRS. LINTON'S NEW NOVEL.

THE REBEL of the FAMILY. By E.

LINTON. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Well and vigorously written."—British Quarterly Review.

MRS. HUNT'S NEW NOVEL.

THE LEADEN CASKET. By Mrs. Alfred

W. HUNT. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The Leaden Casket" contains a precious store of literary gold. It is a novel which everyone ought to read."—Morning Post.

MR. FRANCILLON'S NEW NOVEL.

QUEEN COPHETUA. By R. E. Francillon.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Full of close thought and keen analysis. The reader can scarcely turn to a single page without finding some memorable thing, and every line is marked by a rare conscientiousness and a rare individuality."—Graphic.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

THE EVOLUTIONIST at LARGE. By GRANT ALLEN.

Post 8vo, cloth limp (uniform with Olmley's "Year's Work in Garden and Greenhouse"), 2s. 6d.

OUR KITCHEN GARDEN: the Plants We Grow, and How We Cook Them. By TOM JENROLD.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

LARES and PENATES; or, the Background of Life. By Mrs. CANNY, Author of "Artist and Amateur," &c.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

OLD DRURY LANE: Fifty Years' Recollections of Author, Actor, and Manager. By EDWARD STIRLING.

Square 8vo, cloth gilt, profusely illustrated, 10s. 6d.

IN the ARDENNES. By Katharine S.

MACQUOID. With Fifty fine Illustrations by Thomas R. Macquoid.

Square 8vo, cloth gilt, profusely illustrated, 10s. 6d.

OUR OLD COUNTRY TOWNS. With over Fifty Illustrations by ALFRED RIMMER.

Complete in 4 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. each.

A HISTORY of OUR OWN TIMES. From the Accession of Queen Victoria to the General Election of 1880. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.

NEW VOLUME OF POEMS BY MR. SWINBURNE.

STUDIES in SONG. By Algernon Charles

SWINBURNE. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with 314 illustrations, price 7s. 6d.

A TRAMP ABROAD. By Mark Twain,

Author of "Tom Sawyer," "The Innocents Abroad," &c.

Complete in 5 vols., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. each.

BRET HARTE'S COLLECTED WORKS.

Arranged and Revised by the Author.

Vol. 1. COMPLETE POETICAL and DRAMATIC WORKS. With Portrait and Introduction.

Vol. 2. LUCK of ROARING CAMP, and other Sketches—BOHEMIAN TAVERN—SPANISH and AMERICAN LEGENDS.

Vol. 3. TALES of the ARGONAUTS—EASTERN SKETCHES.

Vol. 4. GABRIEL CONROY.

Vol. 5. CONDENSED NOVELS, STORIES, &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

A CENTURY of DISHONOUR: a Sketch of the United States Government's Dealings with some of the Indian Tribes.

IN PASTURES GREEN, and other Stories.

By CHARLES GIBSON. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

PIPISTRELLO. By Ouida. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s. [Just ready.]

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

W. SWAN SONNENSCHN & ALLEN, LONDON.

NEW EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS.

CAESAR.—KAMPEN'S FIFTEEN MAPS, illustrating Caesar's "Gallic War." Second Edition. Cloth, extra gilt, oblong 4to, 6s.

DRAWING COPIES. Series A, 10 Parts, Wrappers, oblong, each 3d.—Series B, 5 Parts, Wrappers, large oblong, each 4d.

INDUSTRIAL GEOGRAPHY PRIMERS.

Edited by G. PHILLIPS BEVAN, F.G.S., F.S.S. [In about 15 vols.] Cloth boards extra, each, 16mo, 1s. Vol. I. Great Britain and Ireland.—Vol. II. France.—Vol. III. United States of America.

"A happy and useful idea successfully carried out. . . . They are exceedingly interesting reading, and well calculated to be of service not only for teaching purposes, but to all, old and young."—Times.

LOGIC, PRIMER of: being Prolegomena to the Study of Euclid. By ALFRED MILNES, M.A. Cloth boards, 16mo, 1s.

LINEAR BLACKBOARD MAPS. Map 1,

England and Wales, 4 ft. 9 in. by 4 ft. 16s.—Map 2, Europe, 4 ft. 6 in. by 5 ft. 6 in. 21s.

* * * Others to follow.

These Maps are printed in broad white outline upon a specially prepared fabric, resembling the surface of a blackboard. The positions of the chief towns and their relative sizes are indicated by dots, and the countries by dotted lines. The teacher, or pupil at command of the teacher, can then fill in rivers, mountains, coal-fields, &c., which can afterwards be removed with a duster or sponge.

"No school should be without them."—Teacher.

NUMBER PICTURES. For the Nursery and Kindergarten. Fourteen Coloured Sheets of Familiar Objects, &c., for Teaching the Rudiments of Numeration. Folio. Mounted on one roller, 7s. 6d.; on boards, varnished, 16s.; on canvas, rollers and varnished, each separately, 16s.

These Pictures were awarded the Silver Medal, Paris Exhibition, 1878.

PLAUTUS, CAPTIVI. Edited by E. A.

SONNENSCHN, M.A. Oxon. Library Edition. With Bentley's Emendations, now first discovered in the British Museum, and Facsimile. Cloth extra, demy 8vo, 6s. School Edition, New Edition, limp cloth, demy 8vo, 3s. 6d.

PRANTL (Prof.).—ELEMENTARY TEXT-

BOOK of BOTANY for SCHOOLS. Edited by S. H. VINES, D.Sc., M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of Christ's College, Cambridge. With 275 Cuts. Cloth, demy 8vo, 6s.

"Will unquestionably take a high place at once. . . . It is with a safe conscience that we recommend it as the best book in the English language."—Nature.

BOTANICAL SCHEDULES for CLASS

PURPOSES. Schedule 1, Flower.—Schedule 2, Leaf and Stem. In Packets of Fifty each. Each Packet, royal 4to, 1s.

RELIEF ATLAS of all PARTS of the EARTH. 31 Maps in Relief, with Text facing each Map, by G. P. BEVAN, F.G.S., F.S.S. Each Map is framed in cardboard mounts, guarded, in a new style, and the whole half-bound in 1 vol., gilt, 4to, 21s.

RYLAND (F. M.A. Camb.).—THE STU-

DENT'S MANUAL of PSYCHOLOGY and ETHICS, designed specially for the London B.A. and B.Sc. Cloth, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A. SONNENSCHN and H. A. NESBITT,

M.A.—SCIENCE and ART of ARITHMETIC. Cloth. 3 Parts in 1 vol. Fourth Edition, 5s. 6d. Part I. Fourth Edition, 2s. 6d. Parts II.—III. Second Edition, 3s. 6d. Exercises separately, 1s. and 1s. 3d.

A B C of ARITHMETIC. New Edition. Boards. Teacher's Book, Parts I.—II., each, 1s. Pupil's Book (Exercises), Parts I.—II., each, 4d.

TABLES for PRACTISING SHORT

DIVISION, for the Use of Pupil Teachers and Monitors. All Tables on Carbon Slate. Fcap., 1s. As Pocket-Book, 2s. 6d.

PATENT ARITHMOMETER, for enabling Teachers to render Visible and Tangible all the Operations in Arithmetic, from Numeration to the Square and Cube Roots. Prospectuses Free.

WURTZ (A.).—ELEMENTS of MODERN

CHEMISTRY. With 132 Wood-cuts. Pp. 687, crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"This book is certainly very refreshing. . . . The author gives prominence to generalizations, and these he develops historically with great clearness and force of illustration, and he gives just sufficient detail concerning chemical manufactures for the ordinary student."—Nature.

NEW KINDERGARTEN VOLUME.

THE KINDERGARTEN: Essays on Principles and Practice: being Lectures read before the London Froebel Society. With Folding Front. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 8s. Papers by Misses Shirreff, Buckland, Hereward, Mrs. Hoggan, M.D., &c.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S NEW WORKS.

On Monday next will be published,
THE MEMOIRS of PRINCE
METERNICH, 1815—1829. Edited by his Son, PRINCE
RICHARD METERNICH. Translated by ROSINA NAPIER.
In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

Now ready,
THE POLITICAL DIARY of LORD
ELLENBOROUGH, 1828—1830. Edited by LORD
COLCHESTER. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS'.

STUDIES IN ENGLISH ART.

By FREDERICK WEDMORE.

THE SECOND SERIES,

Containing Romney, Constable, David Cox, George Cruikshank, Méryon, Burne-Jones, and Albert Moore.

In 1 vol., large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"We know few criticisms more just than that in which Mr. Wedmore selects the stronger and more permanent qualities of Romney's painting, and fixes to a shade the type of beauty which was his luxurious ideal. Mr. Wed-more's 'Studies' blend the results of careful and conscientious study and sound judgment with an exquisitely consummate cockiness of manner."—St. James's Gazette.

"Amongst many good passages relating to Mr. Burne-Jones's work, the following seem to us the most complete and truly critical. We have been led into fuller quotation than usual by the pleasure of following Mr. Wedmore's literary expression."—Portfolio.

"The discrimination is as subtle, the opinion as nicely balanced, as ever. . . . Some of Mr. Wedmore's most sympathetic criticism."—Academy.

"We are especially glad to find the paper on 'Méryon.'
Mr. Wedmore's style is always thoughtful; in dealing even with very subtle qualities he has a peculiar gift of making what he would have understood and appreciated clear and definite."—Daily News.

ACROSS PATAGONIA. By Lady
FLORENCE DIXIE. With Illustrations by Julius Beerbohm. Demy 8vo, 15s.

"To read it is to be exhilarated and refreshed."—World.

"The book is not to be described, it is to be read."—Vanity Fair.

THE INGOLDSBY LYRICS. By the Rev. R. H. BARRHAM, Author of "The Ingoldsby Legends." Edited by his Son, the Rev. E. DALTON
BARRHAM. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD."

Immediately, in 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A CHILD OF NATURE.

By ROBERT BUCHANAN,

Author of "The Shadow of the Sword," &c.

QUEENIE'S WHIM. By Rosa
NOUCHETTE CARRY, Author of "Wood and Marriell," "Nellie's Memories," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

HIRAM GREG. By J. Crowther
HIRST. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"This capital novel is absolutely true to nature throughout."—Standard.
"A novel evidently based upon fact, full of variety, and full also of strong human interest."—World.

THE MYSTERIES of HERON
DYKE. By the Author of "In the Dead of Night."
3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The mystery is capital; it is nervous, it is well conceived, it is absorbing, it is drawn with great skill, and worked out with telling touches. The interest never flags, and we can recommend the book as one of the best sensational novels of the season."—Vanity Fair.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON,
NEW BURLINGTON STREET,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

C. KEGAN PAUL & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Crown 8vo, with Seventy-five Illustrations, cloth, price 5s.

GENERAL PHYSIOLOGY of MUSCLES and NERVES.

By Professor J. ROSENTHAL.

* * Vol. XXXII. of the "International Scientific Series."

Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

THE NEW PLAYGROUND; Or, Wanderings in Algeria.

By ALEXANDER A. KNIX.

"This brilliant and delightful volume. . . . Mr. Knix's pen, so replete to find, has not lost its cunning—it has all its old freshness and vigour; and among the multitude of books of travel we know nothing to compare with 'The New Playground' in felicity and charm of style."—Daily News.

"A bright and sunny book about a bright and sunny land. . . . There is hardly a page in the whole volume altogether without interest of one sort or another."—St. James's Gazette.

Demy 8vo, with Two Maps, Six Full-page and Four smaller Illustrations, cloth, price 16s.

A POLAR RECONNAISSANCE:

Being the Voyage of the Isbjörn to Novaya
Zemlya in 1879.

By Captain ALBERT HASTINGS MARKHAM, R.N.,

Author of "The Great Frozen Sea," &c.

"The reader will find in Captain Markham's volume a good deal that is both enjoyable and instructive. The beautiful illustrations and the maps deserve a word of commendation."—Full Mark Gazette.

With Twenty-nine Full-page Illustrations and numerous Sketches.

DECORATION and FURNITURE of TOWN HOUSES.

A Series of Cantor Lectures delivered before the Society of Arts, 1880. Amplified and Enlarged.

By ROBERT W. EDIS, F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A., Architect.

Square 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS:

ETON, HARROW, WINCHESTER, RUGBY, WEST-MINSTER, MARLBOROUGH, and The CHARTERHOUSE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

RABBI JESHAU: an Eastern Story.

Fcap. 4to, cloth, price 15s.

THE ODYSSEY of HOMER.

Done into English Verse by AVIA.

"The result is a version of the Odyssey which, if not perfect, is original and brilliant."—Saturday Review.

Elzevir, 8vo, printed on hand-made paper, price 5s.

THE LOVE SONNETS of PROTEUS.

[With Frontispiece by the Author.]

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

SAPPHO: a Dream.

By the Author of "Palace and Prison," &c.

With Preface, crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

DOROTHY:

A Country Story in Elegiac Verse.

"Will long live in our memories as an idyll in genuine Doric, enforcing honestly, healthful, and primitive virtues, and teaching a lesson which runs a sad risk of being forgotten in these last years of the nineteenth century."—Academy.

LONDON: 1, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. WILLIAM BLACK'S NEW NOVEL,
SUNRISE,

Is ready (in 3 vols., 31s. 6d.).

THE STORY of a SOLDIER'S LIFE; or,
Peace, War, and Mutiny. By Lieut.-General JOHN
ALEXANDRE EWART, C.B., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen from 1859 to 1872. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Two Chro-molithographs, cloth extra, price 32s.

Contents.

PART I.—PEACE.

The Junior and Senior Departments of the Royal Military College at Sandhurst—Two Visits to the Island of Mauritius —Eight Years in Scotland, England, and Ireland, with the 35th Royal Sussex Regiment and 93rd Sutherland Highlanders.

PART II.—WAR.

The entire Campaign in Turkey and the Crimea, including the Battles of Alma, Balaklava, and Inkerman, the Expedition to Kertch, Service in the Trenches, and both Assaults upon Sebastopol.

PART III.—MUTINY.

The Suppression of the great Indian Mutiny, including the final Relief of Lucknow, and the Defeat of the Gwalior Contingent at Cawnpore.

NICE and her NEIGHBOURS. By the
Rev. Canon HOLZ, Author of "A Book about Roses,"
"A Little Tour in Ireland," &c. With many charming Illustrations of the Scenery in and around Nice. Square 8vo, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 16s.

THE STORY of a MOUNTAIN. By E.
RACLET, Author of the "Nouvelle Géographie Univer-selle," "The Earth," &c. Translated by BRIGIDA NESS.
Square 8vo, with many Illustrations, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

WEBER. By Sir Julius Benedict. Dedicated by permission to Her Majesty the Queen. New Volume of the BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT MUSICIANS. Edited by FRANCIS HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

SCHUBERT. By H. F. Frost. New Volume of the BIOGRAPHIES of the GREAT MUSICIANS.
Edited by FRANCIS HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.

Also now ready, small post 8vo, cloth extra, 3s.

WAGNER. By Francis Hueffer, Editor of the "Great Musicians" Series.

Also now ready, small post 8vo, cloth extra, 3s.

ROSSINI, and the Modern Italian School.
By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS.

THE LIFE and WORK of WILLIAM
AUGUSTUS MUHLENBERG. By ANNA AYRES. Demy
8vo, cloth extra, with Portraits, price 16s.

This Biography of the Great American Evangelist and Philanthropist will have an interest for many English readers.

A THIRD EDITION is ready of

A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL. 3 vols.

A FOURTH EDITION is ready of

MARY MARSTON.

By GEORGE MACDONALD. 3 vols.

Now ready, in 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

AN ENGLISH SQUIRE. A New Novel
by C. R. COLERIDGE, Author of "Lady Betty," "Han-bury Mills," &c.

Now ready, in 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

FLOWER o' the BROOM: a Novel. By the Author of "Rare Pale Margaret."

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, & RIVINGTON,
Crown-buildings, 188, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1881.

No. 459, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Dr. Appleton: his Life and Literary Relics. By J. H. Appleton, M.A., late Vicar of St. Mark's, Staplefield, and A. H. Sayce, Fellow of Queen's College, and Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford. (Trübner.)

THE duty which the ACADEMY has to perform towards this volume is one of filial piety, not of criticism. To hold the pen which is to give words to this act of homage or commemoration of our founder, and to speak as it were on behalf of all who are interested in the history and fortunes of this journal, is a task of such delicacy that the present writer could never have undertaken it but for one circumstance; that is, that the memoir of Dr. Appleton, as here written by the Rev. J. H. Appleton, traces for us the character and career of his brother with a tact, feeling, and discrimination which leaves nothing more to be said, nothing to be wished away. How difficult it is for a near relative to speak in print of a father or a brother is forced upon us almost as often as the attempt is made. Either reticence and concealment, or indiscreet partiality, seem the necessary alternative. In the present instance, the surviving brother has recorded all that need be told, in a memoir, short, but long enough, with manly openness and simplicity, and with a quiet sympathy which is present throughout, but never obtruded. And though the author is a clergyman, and though theological topics have an unavoidable place in the volume, there is no taint of unctuous pietism, no attempt to surround the deceased with the aureole of pseudo-sainthood, which has the effect of recommending a biography to a certain religious world, but never fails to ring false in unsophisticated ears.

As editor of a periodical, Dr. Appleton's circle of acquaintance was very large in comparison with the number of those with whom he was intimate enough to open his whole mind. That wider circle to whom he was only known as a solicitant, and sometimes they thought an importunate one, for contributions to the paper, may be surprised to be told that Appleton's ruling interest lay in the direction of speculative philosophy. Nor did he only search with curiosity what others had to say on the leading problems of thought, but he dreamt of an original scheme of thought which was to reconcile the absolute idealism of the Hegelian school with the inductive science of his own country. It was not defect of discriminative subtlety, so much as an excess of hopefulness in the temperament, which made him make light of intellectual differences. In his most active period he was ever looking forward to the day when he could resign his practical duties and turn unreservedly to his favourite study of metaphysic. As that day never came, the fragments of speculation now published are not to be taken as philosophy, but as portions of Appleton's biography. They illustrate his modes of thought, his personal attitude towards the problems of his day.

It was not, however, as a master of philosophy that Appleton was known to his contemporaries, but as founder and editor of the ACADEMY and the missionary of the movement in favour of what is called "research." In both these directions his activity flowed from a common source. Neither the launching of the ACADEMY nor the agitation for the endowment of research was the mere scheme of a general promoter; they were but different means towards a great public end; that, namely, of bringing the knowledge latent in the community to the top, and giving it more control of the conduct of the affairs of the community.

I have stated the idea which governed Appleton in the fullest form into which it had finally developed. No doubt when it first began to germinate in his mind it was little more than a blind sentiment. It seems to have been in early days, probably during his university course as a student, that the sense of the waste of energy in the practical life of England, owing to the disrepute of science, was awoke in him. Appleton was not an Oxford success. He tried for honours, but obtained only a respectable, not a high, place. In modern Oxford he could not have got a fellowship; but he had one, and he put it to the excellent use of going to Germany to study, first at Heidelberg, then at Berlin. His ostensible object in this foreign residence was to study metaphysics. He heard Zeller, and Bluntschli, and Michelet, and learned some philosophy, but probably no more than he could have acquired from books and meditation. But what he really brought back from Germany was the only thing of value which a German university has to offer—viz., the scientific spirit, a sense of the vastness of the field of knowledge, and the nobleness and the charm of a life devoted to knowing it. Once awakened to this perception, he became aware that a country or a university which is without this spirit is without the most powerful instrument of mental training. The return to his own university made him feel more keenly still by contrast the absence of any really educative power in her teaching. Appleton's first idea was to start a critical journal in which "review writing" as understood and practised in England should not be permitted, but in which experts should report upon new publications each in his own province. This was the origin of the ACADEMY. The time is not yet come for the history of this journal to be written, but so much of it as can be told may be read in a narrative contributed to this volume by Mr. James S. Cotton, late Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford.

In order to conduct the ACADEMY, Appleton had thrown up a lectureship which he held in his own college, St. John's, and settled in London. The editor of a weekly paper has his time pretty well occupied; but this was not enough for Appleton's energy. The public were slow to respond to the ambitious aims of the new journal, and complained of being instructed instead of amused. With the purpose of bringing the idea which animated him, and to which he devoted his life, more directly before the world, he stirred up a practical movement and founded an association, which he called the "Association for Academical Organisation." It was Appleton who invented the phrases, "mature study" and "endowment of research," of which the last has been the successful one, and has served to designate the aim of a small body of educational reformers. The notion ran rapidly through the scientific world and the universities. In a few weeks all the leading scientific and academical names were enrolled on the lists of the association. The power of the new idea was no less manifested by the opposition it called into being. Not only those who, being in possession of the endowment preferred to have it without "research," but all the "teaching" interest was disturbed by being called upon to learn before it taught. For the "space of two hours" there was a howling among the makers of silver shrines, which was music to Appleton's ears. The association, indeed, died a natural death, as any association must which has nothing to do except to propagate an idea. It can hardly be said that it failed of its object. Appleton had the satisfaction of seeing not only his idea, but his word "research," adapted into the first draft of the measure brought forward by the Conservative Ministry for the reform of the universities. It was with a natural pride that he read in the report of Lord Salisbury's speech in the House of Lords the famous declaration:—

"We [the Government of Lord Beaconsfield] are of opinion that the mere duty of communicating knowledge to others does not fulfil all the functions of a university, and that the best universities in former times have been those in which the instructors, in addition to imparting learning, were engaged in adding new stores to the already acquired accumulation of knowledge."

Dr. Appleton did not live to see the disappointment of the hopes thus excited by the appointment of an executive Commission hostile to learning and science, and acting in the interest of the schools and colleges, with their existing apparatus of prizes and rhetorical exercises. Though for the present, and in the universities, Appleton's missionary enterprise appears to have failed, a wider view of opinion will convince anyone that the idea he strove to propagate has taken root, and will be heard of again some day. But it has to fight against the banded organisation of all the schools and colleges throughout the country, who, having been more than fifty years in elaborating their present closely knit system of mechanical education, cannot be expected to admit that they have been all this time on a false tack. A long time is required in order that an idea so searching as that introduced by Appleton may make its way. No commission, even if so minded, could force it upon a reluctant university. Whenever it does make its way, it will lead to a revolution in the method of education similar to that by which the reformers of the end of the last century superseded the Jesuit schools.

In 1875 Appleton paid a visit to the United States, on business connected with the ACADEMY. His arrangements of this kind were satisfactorily completed, and he went vigorously into the copyright question. On his return in 1877 he gave evidence before the Copyright Commission, and contributed an article, which excited much attention at the time, to the Fortnightly Review, on American efforts after international copyright, an article which is reprinted in the present volume.

There was one drawback to the American tour, however—that it brought with it an amount of wear and tear to which his strength was scarcely equal. Rest was becoming a necessity; and he would not rest. His brother's country vicarage was always open to him, but it was hard to get him there, and harder still to hold him.

"We often found that he had brought a bag full of papers with him, and it generally ended in his returning to town on some pressing business before the term of his visit had expired. There was an intensity in everything he did, even when he was supposed to be taking a holiday. If he went to a concert, it was as a student of music. If he read a novel, he analysed and annotated it. I remember a tour I took with him in Germany; he was a charming companion, but to get in his society the repose that we both required was a difficult matter. To see everything, to go everywhere, with a disregard of distance or fatigue, this was his daily programme. His indomitable energy carried him through everything; but it was a source of danger, it began to wear him out."

In February 1877 weakness declared itself in one lung. He was sent off to the Mediterranean, and by the time he reached Mentone the apex of the left lung was found to be consolidated. Still he was pronounced "a good case," but warned that the cure would take two years. In November 1877 he went to Egypt, and spent the winter between Cairo, Helouan-les-Bains, and a dahabyah on the Nile. But the insidious disease would not be checked, and on his return to Cairo it was found that he had lost several pounds of flesh. Notwithstanding, on his return to this country in June 1878, he plunged into work with characteristic energy. Of course he soon broke down, and a condition of fever set in which was the beginning of the end. He returned to Egypt, and established himself at Luxor, where was an hotel which he liked, and an English physician in whom he had confidence. Here, on February 1, 1879, he died, and his remains were deposited in the little English burying-ground on the outskirts of the city on the road towards Karnac.

Appleton's life was thus a very brief one; and yet he had done in it a life's work. This work must be looked for in the practical energy which he threw into the propagation of the idea—the organisation of the confused pêle mêle of English life, the introduction of the order and rule of science into our haphazard rule-of-thumb procedure. We must not take what the editor has modestly entitled his "Literary Relics" as the substantive result of his thirty-eight years of life. Appleton's was not a literary life, and the papers contained in this volume are to be regarded but as a part of his biography. Their interest is mainly personal. The paper called "A Plea for Metaphysic" is the most interesting in this point of view. It is in form a criticism of Matthew Arnold, and is not easily read, because it follows in detail the statements of another writer. But it is in substance a production on the speculative side of the same idea which prompted Appleton's energy on the practical side—a plea for the recognition of the higher law as controlling individualism—the Englishman's desire to do "what he likes" in conduct, and to think "what he likes" in speculation. Appleton rebukes the literary man for his depreciation of philosophy, a cheap mode of recommending oneself to the favour of the British public, and reminds Mr. Arnold that the Philistines whom he is encouraging to sneer at metaphysics despise letters no less. The exposure in this essay of the fallacy of a common-sense philosophy made easy for everybody is not original, but is very neatly done. In Matthew Arnold's dictum, "The object of religion is conduct, and conduct is the simplest thing in the world," both members of the assumption are denied. The reader is reminded of the large part which disinterested curiosity about the origin and destiny of the world has in many, if not in all, religions; and that, as society increases in complexity, conduct becomes more and more difficult.

Two essays, "On Doubt" and "On Atheism," reprinted at the end of the volume, must be regarded with indulgence in consideration of the early date at which they were composed, which explains their crudity of thought and the appearance of an amount of reading hastily got together. A comparison of these youthful productions with "A Plea for Metaphysic" will show how Appleton had grown in the later years of his life. Notwithstanding the claims upon his active energies made by the conduct of this journal and his other engagements, and in spite of the languor of incipient lung disease, his intellect had wonderfully expanded, and at the age when most men give up thinking Appleton was still making anxious advances towards "that serenity which comes from having made order among ideas."

MARK PATTISON.

Keating's History of Ireland. Book I. Part I. Edited with Gaelic Text &c., by P. W. Joyce, LL.D., M.R.I.A. (Dublin: Gill & Son.)

IRISH literary activity seems almost always to coincide with some stir in the current of Irish political life; and the present reviving interest among Irishmen in a language which they have for the most part neglected is probably to be similarly explained. However this may be, we hope the movement for the preservation of the native language will last, and will have success. The book before us is one of several publications called forth by this movement, appearing under the auspices of one of the societies recently formed in Dublin with the laudable object of fostering the Irish tongue.

No better book could have been selected, looking both to the purity and idiomatic vigour of the Irish and to the intrinsic interest of the text. It is, indeed, hardly necessary to say that such a collection of old bardic traditions is not a history in the modern sense. Keating's narrative everywhere stands in need of a critical commentary. Thus, to take as a random example his explanation of Banba, one of the numerous poetical names for Ireland:—

"The Book of Dromsneachta says that Banbha was the name of the first maiden who took Erin before the flood, and that it is from her Erin is called Banbha. Thrice fifty women came there and three men. . . . After they had been forty years in the island, a plague fell on them, so that they all died in one week. Two hundred years after that Erin was desert, empty, without anyone alive in it, so that after that came the flood."

A commentator might remark that in such legends a plague is a common bardic expedient to make one mythical colony give place to another; and that Banbha (banbh, a young pig), like Muc-Inis, another old name for the isle, most probably means nothing but Pig Island.

"For it was the shape of a swins that appeared to the sons of Miled on every hill-top and every hill-fort in Eriu, when they were sailing round it, and desired to take land by force in it, after the laying of spells on it by the Túatha Dé Danann"—

So says the Tochmarc Émere.* This name and legend are, without doubt, related to Welsh traditions of the Twrch Trwyth, and to more modern Irish legends of the Black Pig.†

O'Mahony, in his edition of Keating (which, however, wants the Irish text), has given much interesting illustrative matter. In the present little work Dr. Joyce's attention was necessarily directed rather to providing a good text and adding such grammatical notes as would be useful to the learner. Of the way in which he has done this one can only speak in terms of praise. The text is a good one (except as regards one peculiarity mentioned farther on); it is printed, apparently very carefully, in the proper native character; the notes, if rudimentary, are plain and serviceable; and a very useful vocabulary is given at the end of the book. In the English portion the proper names are given with an accuracy too seldom met with in works of the kind. Two or three minor criticisms occur to us. The name of the island is not written Ériu, or even Éire, as in modern Irish books, but Erin, an oblique case. Instead of "Gaelic" we should write "Irish." And the endings in -o—which are characteristic of the MS. used—inbhiar for inbhear, &c.—may cause some slight embarrassment to the young reader.

DAVID FITZGERALD.

The Proselytes of Ishmael: being a Short Historical Survey of the Turanian Tribes in the Western Migrations; with Notes and Appendices. By Charles Ingham Black, B.A., Vicar of Burley-in-Wharfedale, near Leeds. (Evelyns.)

By Ishmael Mr. Black means Mohammadans, and by the proselytes thereof the "Turanian"

* Harl. 5280, fol. 21 a.

† Cf. also the Boar as a national symbol of the Gauls.

converts to Islam, the successive hordes who invaded and conquered the empire of the Khalifs only to accept the religion they represented. His book is a sketch of the various westerly migrations of the nomads from Central Asia who are included in the vague term Turanian, which, to do Mr. Black justice, he does not attempt to apply scientifically, but merely uses to indicate "those innumerable families which, disowned by the familiarly defined stocks of Shem and Japhet, and reputedly of Hamitic descent, occupy still the larger portion of the old world, and are sown broadcast through that which we still venture to call the new." Of course he begins long before Ishmael or the Ishmaelite religion; and the first of the seventeen migrations into which he classes the westerly movements of these Asiatic nomads is the pre-Aryan wave, the second the Scythian invasions, and the third the Refugee (Hun) migration, which brings us to the Christian era. Nevertheless, the title holds good, as the bulk of the volume is concerned with post-Islamic inroads.

The early migrations are drawn with a very slight touch, and, except for some ethnological peculiarities, do not call for notice. Mr. Black's theories of race are bold and sweeping, but it would not be profitable here to engage in a discussion of his suggestions anent the Turanian origin of the Hyksos and Phoenicians, and the identification of Cheops with a Tatar. The second part of the volume is more detailed. Its three chapters on the Huns and Avars are chiefly notable for an undisguised hatred of the Church and an unqualified admiration of all barbarians. Attila, "he descendant in the thirty-fifth degree of Ham, the son of Noah," is Mr. Black's hero. His comments on the famous interview between the King of the Huns and St. Leo, when the Apostles Paul and Peter came down from heaven to honour the saint's supposed devotion, are very sensible, but curiously unexpected from the Vicar of Burley-in-Wharfedale. He then relates the story of King Etzel and Chriemhild (as he prefers to write the name), and sums up Attila's character thus:—

"A greatly magnanimous man. Compared with the leading men of his own time, Christian or otherwise, compared with the terrible after-leaders of Turan—more virtuous in his virtues, less vicious in his vices; not more sanguinary than many so-called Christian soldiers; more merciful than Alva; more self-denying than Napoleon; moved by truer impulses than the faint-hearted emperors of his age—he has not won from history a generous, because an impartial, estimate. His humanity, indeed, to Rome is remembered, but only because Christians have recorded the virtues of Christians whose prayers he granted. His name glooms the history of centuries; 'linked'—and scarcely that—to one virtue and a thousand crimes"; (p. 64).

It is a strange choice of simile that would recommend a "greatly magnanimous" man because he was "more merciful than Alva," and this is the first time, we believe, the epithet "self-denying" has been applied to Napoleon; but we must give Mr. Black credit for a better sense than his words, or the present review would "gloom" the columns of the ACADEMY with a thousand grammatical and orthographical corrections.

Mr. Black states in his Preface that he has "attempted little or nothing in the way of original research." Without saying that a man has no business to write about so difficult and controverted a subject as the westerly migrations without original research, it must at least be laid down that no one ought to write a compilation of the kind aimed at by Mr. Black without enough research to make himself acquainted with the proper authorities. In these chapters on the Huns and Avars, and in the succeeding chapters on the Bulgarians, Comans, and Magyars, it is obvious that we have Gibbon "dessicated" (as Mr. Black would say) and very little more. It is hardly necessary to point out that ethnology has not stood still since Gibbon's time, and that of all subjects that of the barbarian invasions requires the fullest possible apparatus of modern research. So, too, when we come to part iii., on the Mongol migrations, we find that Gibbon is the principal or only authority in many places, while here and there an inconsistent spelling betrays the borrowing from another writer. Mr. Black, moreover, is so obviously ignorant of Oriental matters, despite his devotion to Turan, that we cannot be sure he has even copied correctly from his unknown and possibly incorrect authorities; while his abstracts of Gibbon only too blankly remind us of their source and their inverse transmutation by the Burley-in-Wharfedale philosopher's stone. Mr. Howorth's recent and invaluable labours are apparently unknown to Mr. Black; and the name of d'Ohsson does not appear. "Original research" may be excused, but sufficient bibliographical knowledge to ensure the most recent discoveries and the latest developments is essential; and to publish a book on a learned subject without such preparation is an insult to the reader.

The chapters on the Mongol invasions will serve to show the careless manner in which Mr. Black has thrown together his collection of abstracts. Tschingis, as the word Jingis or Chenghiz is laboriously written, died in 1227; yet in p. 86 a "campaign of Tschingis" is said to be "looming near" in 1238. The great Kaa's Khitan prime minister Yeliu-Chutsai is called (p. 87) "the patriotic mandarin Telutchousay," and Juji and Jagatai are called Toushi and Zagatai (87), though afterwards (131) "Tshudic families" are referred to. "Holagou" (88) or "Hulaku" (121) is stated to be "second in command" under Mangu and Khubilai, whereas he was local dynast or Ilkhan of Persia. Batu is styled "son of Tuli" (88), whereas he was son, not of Tului, but Juji. Sheyban (not "Shebanai") is described as invading Siberia when Batu was invading Hungary; instead of which, as a matter of fact he went with Batu to Europe, and so distinguished himself that the latter made him King of Hungary (a somewhat nominal royalty) and gave him the tribes afterwards known as Uzbeks as his appanage. The Duke of Silesia did not "encounter Batu (April 9, 1242) at Liegnitz" (89); the battle of Liegnitz was fought on April 9, 1241, and the Mongol leader was not Batu (who commanded another army), but Baidar, son of Jagatai. Timur's attacks upon Toktamish are described (96) without a word about the previous support afforded by Timur, whereby Toktamish secured the command, first of the White Horde, and then of all Kipchak. Schlegel's foolish suggestion that Mohammad forbade wine to his followers "as an attack upon the most blessed institution of the Gospel" is quoted (96) as reasonable, instead of being exposed as false. That Egypt recognised the authority of Timur (102) by prayer and coin is a statement that might be hard to prove. To be "devoted to chess" can hardly be called a "literary proclivity," even "to adopt a euphemism of our fair-speaking age" (104). Batu was succeeded by Sertak, but not by "Ulaghji" (121). Bereke was not the first Mongol converted to Islam (126); Tuka-Timur anticipated him. The river where Bereke was defeated is the Terek, not Torek (126). Mangu-Timur died in 1280, not 1283 (126). Tuda and Talabugha (122) ought to be Tuda-Mangu and Tulabugha. Berdibeg's title was not "King of the Just" (123), but "the just King" (Es-Sultanul-ʿadil). Toktamish was not "son of Urus" (124), but his bitter enemy; and Urus was not "founder of the White Horde," but great-great-great-great-grandson of Orda, the founder of it. The dissolution of the Golden Horde took place in 1502, not 1480 (125); the Khanate of Kazan (not Kusan) was absorbed by Russia in 1552, not 1468 (125). In addition to these and a thousand other inaccuracies, a far more important defect must be stated. No one unread in Asiatic history could possibly obtain a connected or comprehensive idea of the history of the Mongols from Mr. Black's chapters.

In the fourth part, which deals with the Turkish race, and occupies half the volume, the same inaccuracy is discovered. After a general introduction on the traditional origin of the Turks, "who emerged at the close of Christ's first millennium," and are still a power in "Christ's nineteenth century"—as though the Founder of Christianity were a Clinton or a Whitaker—Mr. Black comes to what he calls "The Fifteenth Migration. The Turki-Turks and the Dynasty of Gh'zni." Mr. Black invariably spells Ghazni in this manner, and it was only after much fruitless speculation that we discovered that the apostrophe was inserted by way of a little joke. Finding that "every vowel save one has been called to do service in the first syllable" of Ghazni, Ghezni, Ghizni, or Ghuznee, he concluded that "the way adopted in the text seems the best for spelling this name" (137). This is mere fooling. Oriental names are puzzling enough to ordinary readers without having practical jokes inserted in them; and the case is not improved when it is remembered that the apostrophe is the sign commonly adopted in transliteration to represent an Arabic guttural peculiarly difficult of pronunciation in Western throats. To proceed to details: on p. 143 the "disorderly viceroy Amru Leith" was 'Amr, son of El-Leith. P. 144, "Of this dynasty of Samanids, who were suzerains of the Sovereign of Khorassan, who again was the suzerain of the Khalif; of this dynasty, Soboktegin, or Sebecktagi, which is Mahmud, was lieutenant." It would be hard to find a finer specimen of Mr. Black's confused style. At the time he is referring to, the Samanis were themselves Sovereigns of Khorassan, and thus, without disputing the etymological but unusual use of the word suzerain, the first part of the sentence is a blunder. "Sebectagi, which is Mahmud," is a fine Scriptural mode of expression, but is not strictly applicable to the case of father and son; nor is it explained by the statement on the next page (145) that "On his father's death, Ismael, the second son, disputed with Mahmud [the dead father?] the right of succession." Even Mr. Black seems to have seen there was something amiss here, for he adds (147), "Then Sebectagi the elder—father and son seem to have borne this name—marched to Lahore." The simple fact is that Mahmud is not Sebectegin at all, but his son. To call "Carmath, the first great puritan preacher of Arabia," who "undertook to spiritualise the Koran," is to display a profound innocence of the history of Moham-madan dissent. Toghrulbeg's brother was Chaghar, not Jafar (169). The division of the Seljuk dynasties on p. 179 is unhistorical. "Motassem" was not the last of the line of 'Abbas (188 and 229), but El-Musta'sim, and even he was not the last, since the stock was continued in Egypt. The Turkomans could not retreat "before the advance of Tschingis" about 1234 (192), if the conqueror died in 1227. But it is useless to collect more instances of careless inaccuracy and want of proper study. Such minor points as whether the name of Aeschylus begins with an O, whether Raleigh lost his head because he introduced tobacco, whether the frequent repetition of the word "promptly" is conducive to good prose, or such forms as "bookly shape," "his godship's nose," "warriorhood of the races," "incited kinsfolk," "chrySTALLizing," "a capacious bason," "Encyclopaedia Britannica," and "unicity" are admissible—may be left to the judicious reader. The more serious aspect of such defects is that they are only the trivial signs of a general habit of mind destructive to the true narration of history.

S. LANE-POOLE.

On Book-bindings, Ancient and Modern.
Edited by Joseph Cundall. (George Bell & Sons.)

MR. CUNDALL reminds us that he wrote about book-bindings thirty-three years ago, when the subject was one in which only the few took an interest; and he returns to it now, when the art is being cultivated with passion, and when the craze for fine old bindings has become the most widespread, the most acute, and the most ruinous form of bibliomania. Unfortunately for him, the literature of the subject has already become large, so that a writer who deals with it at the present day has to face a good many "odious comparisons." Mr. Cundall must show, for example, if the existence of his book is to be justified, that it contains what is not to be found in the writings of Messrs. Zaehnsdorf, Marius Michel, Gustave Brunet, Charles Blanc, and many others; or at least that he deals with old topics in a new and attractive way. It may be said at once that Mr. Cundall's way is not attractive. The book is written in the very oddest style, and the arrangement of paragraphs and sentences is truly exasperating. What, for example, could be more comically incoherent than this passage, which comes from Mr. Cundall's account of Derome?—

"Tooled morocco was his favourite style, and upon choice books he stamped his beautiful design of a bird with outstretched wings, the only decoration he indulged in. He bound a large number of books belonging to the celebrated amateur Hangard d'Hincourt, whose library was sold in 1789. A letter written to him by Naigoon gives minute directions for the binding. Derome was a very rapid as well as skilful binder. A copy of La Fontaine's Fables bound by him was bought by M. Brust [sic] for 675 francs; it afterwards fetched 10,000 francs, and finally was sold for 13,000 francs (£520). It is a valuable book, in two small volumes."

The last sentence is delicious, but unluckily the frequent occurrence of such surprises does not tend to make a book readable. Mr. Cundall's book is rendered quite unreadable by his deplorable ignorance of the rudiments of composition.

Those who care to make their way through pages written in this thorny style will find in the volume a fair number of anecdotes about celebrated book-binders in the past and some information about the processes of the art; and there are twenty-eight facsimile illustrations. But in no respect can Mr. Cundall's work be called satisfactory. The historical part makes no pretence at scientific treatment. The illustrations are not nearly varied enough; and why, unless the book has other merits of a different kind, should one give 31s. 6d. for twenty-eight plates, if one can buy for the same money 116 equally good ones in La Reliure ancienne et moderne? In the practical department the volume does not contain a hundredth part of the information which anyone can procure for 3 frs. 50 c. in the excellent little volume (Le Relieur) in the Encyclopédie Roret—a volume which does not appear in Mr. Cundall's scanty list of authorities. Add to this that the writer is constantly being drawn into the most strangely blundering expressions, partly by his want of literary skill and partly by what seems like positive want of knowledge. What, for example, is meant by "a comic epic poem called 'The Lectern,' referred to by Boileau"? Is this a way to describe Le Lutrin? Again, Mr. Cundall, who speaks of Samuel Pepys' mention of book-binding in his Diary, has no suspicion that Pepys' own books, in Pepys' own book-cases, are still in existence at Magdalene College, Cambridge. How, too, can book-binding be said to have "been brought to perfection" by Aldus, Maioli, and Grolier, no one of whom ever bound a book in his life? This curious confusion in thought and statement is characteristic of Mr. Cundall.

T. H. WARD.

THE HISTORY OF THE LAW OF PROPERTY.

Ensayo sobre la Historia del Derecho de Propiedad y su Estado actual en Europa.
Por G. de Azcárate. Tomos I., II. (Madrid.)

"A CHANGE in the form of a government is only a political, a transformation of the civil laws of a State marks a social, revolution." It is the history of these transformations in Europe that Prof. de Azcárate traces in the volumes before us; and the result shows that a history of them may have as deep an interest for the thoughtful student as any narrative of political revolutions.

The plan of the work strikes us as remarkably good. The author, after an outline of the laws which regulated the rights of property and the modes of succession in early historical and in classical times, divides his subject into four epochs—the Barbarian, the Feudal, the Monarchical, and the Revolutionary. Each of these periods is introduced by chapters describing in detail the institutions peculiar to them, and their connexion with preceding times; then follows an account of the actual practice in each of the principal States of Europe, and the section is closed by a chapter containing the author's conclusions on the whole.

A Spanish writer has in some respects peculiar advantages for writing a history of this kind. He is able from the customs, institutions, and tenures of his own country to trace out the connexion and evolution of successive systems more clearly than can be done elsewhere. By reason of the many survivals from anterior epochs he has actual data before him which no other European author possesses in a like degree. For instance, feudalism never attained the full development in Spain which it reached in many other countries. More fully introduced into Catalonia and Arragon than elsewhere, it halted in various stages of its growth in the other provinces. It thus assumed what appear like peculiar forms; but a Spanish historian has little more to do than to arrange these in due succession to be able to read off the history of its development from the institutions of the preceding periods. It is thus, our author concludes, that, "while the form of feudalism is Teutonic, its materials were Roman, and it was Imperial law that gave precision to its vague and undefined relations." He marks, too, that entails (vinculaciones) arose not in the most flourishing period, but at the beginning of the decline of the feudal aristocracy, when its political importance was disappearing, and it was aiming only at a courtier and social rank. Our author quotes the protests of Spanish statesmen and bishops of the sixteenth century against the introduction of entails, as well as the laws passed to limit their application. They are explained theoretically as "a combination of the Roman 'fidei commissum' with the principle of Teutonic masculinity and of feudal primogeniture."

The development of the doctrines of the Revolutionary period are traced in two currents—one, philosophical, from Grotius to Rousseau; the other, historical, from Machiavelli to Montesquieu, issuing in a change from absolutism and privilege to liberty and equality. Though writing in a wholly liberal spirit, and approving most of the reforms of the Revolution, our author laments that its work has been almost entirely negative and destructive. He finds fault with its exaggerated individuality, its antipathy to all forms of association; and holds that it has not, as it might have done with profit, built upon and developed some of the sounder principles of earlier periods. He questions whether, in their neglect of the principle of collective rights, the Jurists themselves may not have sown the seeds of the violent and revolutionary socialism of our day. In the same sense he enquires whether the principle of possession of the soil by right of "prescription"—which, in the Middle Ages, so often converted the serf into the free proprietor—may not yet, in the future, "by a slow, and just, and pacific change, transform the husbandman and tenant into a proprietor," especially when the latter is habitually absent, and, by spending the rent wholly elsewhere, renders the wealth which should have been reproductive unprofitable and unproductive for the land. This right of prescription, which has worked in all ages, this "mysterious authority of time," may bestow a right in property to two factors still unrecognised—possession and labour. At the same time, he remarks, "the enormous extension of moveable property in certain countries greatly lessens the transcendental importance of the problems relating to real property, and itself will render them much more easy of solution." This consideration explains the difference in the importance of the land question in England and in Ireland.

The writer notes, as a curious exception, the different conditions of the application of the laws of property with regard to married persons and to all other relations. He shows that in all countries, and from very early times, a freedom of choice as to marriage settlements, the division or succession of property between married persons, has been left greatly to the individuals themselves; and that the amount of choice thus conceded is contrary to all legal logic.

We have perhaps said enough to show the value and the interest of the work which we are reviewing. The history is complete in the present volumes. It is carried down to the latest period—e.g., the so-called laws of "intellectual property," the rights of authors, artists, and patentees, are discussed. The Irish Land Bill of 1870 is noticed, and its working remarked on down to 1879. The third and concluding volume, which is far advanced in preparation, will treat of the actual present condition of the laws of property in Europe.

While perusing these volumes and those of Cárdenas on the history of territorial property in Spain, it has occurred to us how interesting and valuable it might be to trace in detail the results of the many different systems of custom of succession and of tenure of property which still prevail in different provinces of Spain; to show by examples their effect on the well-being of the country and on the prosperity of families; to explain how it is that by a difference of tenure the agricultural province of Pontevedra has supported the largest population in Spain, exceeding until the last decade even that of Barcelona, and even now only just below it; in what manner the many different local and private modes of succession have affected different families in the Basque Provinces; what is the effect on agriculture of the annual division of communal property by lot in other parts. Don Vicente de la Fuente in his Discurso Histórico (1861), and again in the Boletín de la Sociedad Geográfica (March 1880), has drawn attention to the fact that, while the lands of the "Comunidades de Aragón" under their imperfect but free administration have remained fertile to the present day, those of the Señors have become barren and "despoblados." It would be interesting to know how many of the other "desiertos," "dehesas," "despoblados" of Spain are due to similar causes. It is perhaps the greatest proof of the merit of the present work that it thus stimulates our desire for more. It is rarely that one finds a treatise of this kind too short.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

NEW NOVELS.

The Rebel of the Family. By E. Lynn Linton. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

'Twixt Friend and Foe. By M. A. Wackerbarth. In 2 vols. (Remington & Co.)

Hilary's Love Story. By Georgiana M Craik. "Blue Bell Series." (Marcus Ward & Co.)

Pious Frauds. By Albany de Fonblanque. In 3 vols. (R. Bentley & Son.)

In Pastures Green, and other Tales. By Charles Gibbon. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Story of an Honest Man. By Edmond About. Translated by Bertha Ness. In 3 vols. (Sampson Low & Co.)

WHAT Mrs. Linton means us to infer from her last novel we know no more than she does herself. Perdita, the "Rebel of the Family," is a truthful, energetic, passionate—not to say violent—girl, living at open war with a match-making lady-mother and genteel lady-sisters. Disobedience is as the breath of her nostrils, whether against her parent's wishes she engages herself as clerk in the Post Office, joins the Women's Rights Movement, or takes stolen walks with a neighbouring chemist. For the Movement vagaries she is snubbed and reformed by the authoress, who yet winks at the walkings-out and other like matters. In fact, the writer, beginning without any fixed moral basis, flounders into a network of dilemmas, and then leaves poor Perdita to put herself right with the reader how she can. On the whole, we gather that she is meant for a martyred femme incomprise, more especially from her instinct for forming undesirable acquaintances. Nothing can be more grandly ferocious than her rampant love of truth—she scorns the bridle upon her lips whenever, by uncalled-for revelations, she can expose the poverty and frailties of her family, or harry her mother by an effective scene—she cannot possibly tell a fib to save her sister from infamy and her mother from ruin; but somehow, after this supreme sacrifice to Truth, she can slip out on the sly to the chemist's to revel in a purer moral atmosphere than that of her despised home. This chemist, by-the-by, has a guilty wife somewhere in an asylum, but, of course, she dies off when required. That Perdita should never have learnt or even enquired about her existence, or have resolved the mystery (which, grotesque as it is, we prefer not to explain) of the dark, bullet-headed baby nursed by old Mrs. Crawford, is simply incredible. But, after all, Perdita is a good, well-meaning girl, and quite worth reading about. Her mother is a hackneyed character, but well finished; and the elder sister is still better.

Here Mrs. Linton has succeeded in the portrait of a placid, narrow-minded beauty, heroic in her daily sacrifice to Mammon, true as steel to a false ideal of social and home duties, almost pathetic in her devotion to her mother—the only sentiment she permits herself to indulge. The perfect sympathy and friendship of these two frivolous fellow-souls is an admirable touch. The younger sister is, like most of the other characters, a mere burlesque. Mr. Brocklebank, indeed, is simply a caricature of a caricature—Josiah Bounderby, without the common-sense. We cannot pretend to accept English baronets who, on being introduced by ladies to French gentlemen, begin by insolently rallying them upon Waterloo and then challenging them. But if the gentlemen are rude throughout the book, the ladies are abusive. One scene, in which the ineffable Mrs. Winstanley calls upon the exclusive Lady Kearney expressly to insult and be insulted, or, in other words, to have it out with the woman, is enough to appal any male reader. In a long and clever description of a Women's Suffrage meeting the authoress, we suppose, has taken off the peculiarities of the leaders of the sisterhood in no kindly spirit. Bell Blount, however, the masculine lady who inveigles Perdita into her friendship, is a character too odious, and the scenes in which she appears too repulsive, even for comment. The style of the book is as bright as usual, but terribly monotonous after a few pages, the padding being compounded of cynical sentiment, seasoned with myriad metaphors. It is, in short, a bad book by a practised writer.

'Twixt Friend and Foe is as feeble in execution as it is ambitious and flighty in conception. It is a serious defect in a book written from a tremendously high moral point of view when that point of view is not even moral at all. Here A., having saved B.'s life, dies in his arms, after exacting an oath of awful vengeance upon one X., who, as a boy, had caused A.'s expulsion from school. B. returns home from India to find the unknown X. engaged to his old sweetheart, X.'s sister being also affianced to B.'s brother. What is poor B. to do? Apparently he does nothing in particular except terrorise the repentant X. by brutal allusions and make everybody wretched by his insufferable impertinence. But through it all this poor Monte Cristo pour rire never once questions the binding nature of this ridiculously wicked oath, though circumstances over which he has no control conduct him to a martyr's death, and so the victim escapes. B., whose real name is Reginald, is usually called Rex, and habitually addresses his Stella as Star.

The new story of the "Blue Bell Series" is a prosy panegyric upon a college prig who, as family tutor, reclaims a houseful of unruly boys and makes pedantic love to their sister. This very conceited and supercilious young man, indelibly branded with the vice of perfection, is, of course, a Mr. Hardy—a name somehow consecrated in goody books to this noxious tribe. The girl Hilary is a good girl enough, and the boys tear their clothes and say their lessons quite after the ordinary, but scarcely interesting, manner of their kind.

Pious Frauds, though as a whole inferior, and in parts very bad, contains work of surprising originality and vigour. The first volume is extremely valuable in that it deals with some interesting types hitherto strangely neglected. Wholly exceptional characters like Becky Sharp, or the forced and sublimated creations of Dickens, or the smirking dolls selected by lesser novelists as victims for their evil baronets are none of them really representative of the young women of the lower middle-class, among whom might be found many types worthy of exhaustive analysis. Of these, two at least are here studied from life by Mr. de Fonblanque without affectation and with not a little of Balzac's dissecting skill. In May and Sibyl, the niece and ward of a disreputable Radical broker and usurer, he has, perhaps unconsciously, brought out some suggestive points. These girls have so much of the instincts of ladies—and surely that is a good deal—as results from a similar way of wasting their time, a common ignorance, and the use of the same circulating library. Their neglect, or rather defiance, of the convenances is the natural effect of social exclusion, of some spretæ injuria formæ on the part of women less attractive, if better connected, than themselves. If it falls short of the artistic glamour of Bohemianism, it at least has nothing of its narrow and barren professional arrogance; for, after all, nothing is essentially more conventional than the vie de Bohème itself. On the other hand, we have here the unmistakable laxity of principle, the almost congenital deceit and untruthfulness, which marks an insecure social footing, in contrast with pure generous impulses and vigorous independence of action, which can seldom be looked for in harmony with the eternal respectabilities. All this, and much more, is forcibly indicated in the flirtations of May and Sibyl with the young officer and his cousin, the supercilious man about town, who becomes as wax in the adroit hands of the provincial little maiden whom he seeks to dazzle and patronise. A few minor characters, brightly sketched, relieve the later part of the book, which is merely melodramatic, and turns upon the fulfilment of a family curse of the usual painfully baronial character.

In his volume of tales Mr. Gibbon again offers some good examples of the nineteenth-century pastoral, such as it is. While infinitely preferring the sober cheerfulness of the Contemplative Man's Recreation, or the simple, unclouded freshness of Theocritus, to this morbid subtilty, which views even the brightest landscapes through a veil of tears, one can hardly deny that it has added something in its way worth having to the range and depth of sentiment. After all it is Art, and of all arts the hardest to conceal, since it is exhibited in such dangerous contrast to the nature which it pretends to interpret. Yet it must be owned that Mr. Gibbon has on the whole succeeded; he is neither affected nor conventionally idyllic. In his Pastures Green he has really very little to tell; merely how a young farmer sulked because the parson's daughter put off their wedding for her father's sake, and how, when he married another girl, she stuck to her duty and got over her disappointment. There is nothing very heart-rending or poetical in all this, and yet, by a subtle treatment of scenery and studied simplicity of style, a deliciously mournful twilight effect is maintained throughout, with materials which seem destined only for a joyous sunny picture. The second tale is somewhat similar; the later ones, which seem arranged in order of merit, sink into commonplace magazine stories, though in "Dominie Barclay" we find a certain amount of tragic power.

M. About's romance scarcely required translation. No Englishman would have troubled to write, and few to read, the pangeyric of a crockery-ware manufacturer who worked up a capital business upon the principles of political economy—couleur de rose. It struck us at once that old Marivaux, after an hour's study of Mill and Bastiat, would have done the thing in just the same airy way and a great deal better. The hero, with his savings' banks, co-operative societies, and movements many and multiform, is a tiresome prig; but his father, the grave, strong peasant; his grandfather, the blind heroic volunteer of '92; and the innately wise grandmother, are forcible studies of those high positive virtues so common in France—so rare in our own land of negative morality. Nor do we think the prolonged attack upon the repressive convict system pursued in at least the old-fashioned French schools either exaggerated or unnecessary. The story—like all the rest—soon rushes into the quagmire of '70, where it sticks fast, and too slowly expires. This, however, gives M. About an opportunity of purging himself from all complicity with the Empire, and of setting himself right with the powers that be. "Politics were my aversion. The national sovereignty, violently confiscated by one man and stupidly given up by three-fourths of the electors, had become a word devoid of meaning." After Wissenbourg—if not before—matters "assumed a scandalous, infamous, odious, intolerable aspect." "German armies insolently trod the sacred soil." In all which, and much more, we think the gentleman doth protest too much, though after all we are poor judges. The translation is neat, though one adverb, "unchaferingly," partakes somewhat of sesquipedalian licence. E. PURCELL.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Among the Beers. By John Nixon. (Remington and Co.) Mr. Nixon went to the Cape at the end of 1877 for the benefit of his health. Two years previously a typhoid fever affected his lungs, and he tried Bournemouth and Davos Platz; the effect of the former place he does not mention, but, having benefited by the dry and rarified air of Davos, he was advised to try South Africa for another winter. He landed at Cape Town in November 1877, and made a tour of the Orange River Free State and the Transvaal, which lasted, as far as we can gather, till June 1878, for, though he is most particular in giving the days of the week, he ignores the months, and it is only incidentally—by his mention of the Queen's birthday—that we have any clue to the time of year of his return. He tells us that he writes for two classes of readers—first, for the general reader; and, secondly, for persons in search of a climate suitable for threatened and actual pulmonary disease. The general reader must be already well acquainted with waggon-life in South Africa, and another book was not needed for his instruction; but the second class for whom Mr. Nixon writes may learn much from his book; but we fear, with all the advantages of climate offered by the high lands of South Africa, there are few—very few—who can be honestly recommended to try them. The Cape itself is rather hurtful than beneficial, on account of the dust. To profit by the dry, rarified, and pure air it is necessary to go into the interior. Here two courses are open: either to reside for some time at one spot or to tour about in a waggon. In the former case, the monotony and absence of all resource and of every accustomed comfort must make a residence of any duration well-nigh intolerable to an invalid. The other course no one without a plentiful supply of money and a fair stock of health must attempt. There is much yet to be learnt as to the effect of the climates of South Africa on the lungs. The author mentions that consumption of a very acute type is frequent among the black convicts at Beaufort, a place recommended as a residence for invalids. This is, however, partly accounted for, but no explanation is offered for the fact that among the Mahowas, a Kaffir tribe in the Transvaal, organic disease is rare, with the exception of affections of the lungs, from which many suffer. Mr. Nixon certainly says that he himself was very much improved by his trip, but a gentleman with whom he travelled, and who had diseased lungs, died at Cape Town; and it is clear from the narrative that the discomforts of the journey hastened his end. The obvious conclusion from the author's experience is that the time has not yet come for the interior of South Africa becoming a sanatorium for patients suffering from chest complaints. That day is as yet far off, and the state of affairs in the Transvaal is not likely to hasten it. Mr. Nixon devotes a few pages to the subject of emigration, and it would seem that of all classes of persons the best prospect is offered to medical men; he knew one in an up-country village who was making £3,000 a year.

Old Ali; or, Travels Long Ago. By John Osmaston. (Hatchards.) The fashion at the present day of reproducing the works of ancient Oriental authors would lead one, on reading the title of this book, to believe that "Ali" was perhaps some little-known Mohammedan traveller whose journeys long ago were now for the first time given to the European reader. This peculiar title is explained in the Preface. The travels took place only about twenty years ago, and "Old Ali" was nothing more than the Persian servant who accompanied the author from Teheran to the Mediterranean. He turned out to be a most trusty and faithful attendant, and thus such prominence was given to his name. The taste of the title is doubtful; but then it is exclusively a matter of taste, and everyone has a right to his own feelings. In this case, as it manifests gratitude, it is at least creditable to the author. The journey described was a very long one. Starting from Hull in 1860, the author went first to Norway, and on to the North Cape—the extreme point of Europe in that direction. He came back by Bergen and Stockholm to St. Petersburg; then to Moscow and the Fair of Nijni Novgorod; from thence he went down the Volga to Astrachan, and sailed on the Caspian to Baku. From Baku he proceeded to Teheran by Resht; from Teheran his route was by Hamadan, the ancient Ecbatana; and then by Kermanshar to Bagdad. From this he visited Kerbella, Babylon, and Ctesiphon; and then went north to Mosul and Nineveh, and on to the Mediterranean by Aleppo and Antioch, sighting the sea at Alexandria, returning to England by Marseilles. This journey was all done between June 22 and the following January 24—a very short time to get over such a wide space; but this speed, although meritorious, does not add much to the character of the book. The author, instead of taking due time to observe and study the country as he went along, seems to have rushed through with the most frantic haste, as if some demon had been at his heels propelling him forward. Night and day, over mountain and plain, he went tearing over the bad roads. The long and minute accounts of this weary riding, one page recounting details so like another, are apt to make the reader also wearied; and he will be inclined to repeat the words of the author, when he comes to the end, and say "Thank God" it is over. "A thousand miles in a thousand half-hours" may suit Lillie Bridge or the Agricultural Hall, but there is no need to go to Persia or Mesopotamia to perform such a feat. The book is not without some descriptive accounts of the places the author passed through; but the details given are meagre, so that it will not be much of an authority. The sketches of character are good, and we gain a better idea of the people the author met with during his journey than of the places he visited. The Persian Khan with whom he travelled from Baku is a good portrait; and the borrowing of the gold imperial to tip the sailors with, would have been worthy of the author of Haji Baba. The Khan was taking the "Order of the Musjid" from the Sultan to the Shah; this must surely mean the Order of the Medjidi. Slips like this can be seen, showing that the traveller writes as he rides—in post-haste style. The "Cunic" inscription at Eather's tomb might be noted as another example; the calculation of the amount of caviare in a sturgeon, at p. 216, is evidently a slip of the pen; but, if one wished to be severe in criticising the work, it contains a fair supply of material for saying hard things. In spite of all this, and even of its religious-tract tone—which will no doubt seem a merit to many—it is well written, and contains many graphic details, particularly of individuals. If an opinion might be given on one point, the author should have given Ali the watch. Ali had given him a turquoise ring previously. Probably he did not explain its virtue, but all Orientals believe the turquoise to possess a talismanic power to save travellers from accidents, and most probably Ali had his master's safety in mind when he gave the ring—at least this is the view the author should have taken of the gift.

Culturbilder aus Griechenland, by Dr. T. Pervanoglu (Leipzig: Friedrich), contains a number of sketches of modern Greece and its inhabitants which are pleasantly, though superficially, written. The writer professes it to be his object to give a faithful account of the existing state of things in that country, and to remove prejudices which commonly exist concerning it. He rightly points out the strong love of equality among the Greeks, which makes them the most thoroughly democratic people in Europe, and which proceeds partly from the intense individuality which has always characterised the race, and partly from their having started at once from a condition of slavery into the position of a State. He also remarks with good reason that his countrymen are essentially merchants and seamen, and describes the immense development of the mercantile marine of Greece. So, too, the customs which he has selected for description—which are partly superstitious, partly remnants of classical antiquity, and partly observances of the most modern and Western character, such as the athletic sports, called the Olympic Games, which are held in the ancient stadium—while they produce a singularly bizarre effect, for that very reason, perhaps, are not wholly unlike the impression made on a stranger by modern Greek life. But the value of the book is marred by two great faults—a love of declamation and a tendency to exaggerate. The former of these is conspicuous in the chapter entitled, "The Country," which, after a few pages in which the geography is well described, is almost entirely devoted to rhetoric on the subject of the Greek War of Independence and kindred topics. Similarly the account of Greek politics ignores the conflict of parties and the place-hunting, which is the greatest curse of Greece, and is little more than a history of the development of the Constitution, and declamation about the rôle of Greece in the East. On the other hand, when the author deals with facts, as in his account of the growth of modern Athens, he is really interesting. A still worse fault is his love of exaggeration, which mars the value of his statements. Thus, while the uniformity of the present language, wherever spoken, is a remarkable phenomenon, it is not true that "a superior boatman or porter speaks the same language as the most delicate girl in the most elegant drawing-room at Athens." The Morea has been freer from robbers than other parts of Greece; but when it is said that systematic brigandage never existed there, we cannot forget that an ex-Minister of the Greek kingdom was carried off some years ago from his country-seat in Triphylia by such a band, who dragged him about from one to another of their retreats in the mountains for something like a month until he was ransomed. And to say that the Greeks form the majority of the population in Asia Minor is simply absurd. We also notice here with regret what is only too common among Greeks of the present day—a disposition to praise King Otho and Queen Amalia, who, by their bureaucratic system and employment of corruption, did irreparable injury to the people they governed. The point of greatest value in the volume is the distinction which the author draws in respect of character between the inhabitants of the four divisions of the present kingdom—viz., Northern Greece, the Peloponnese, and the eastern and western islands. The first of these he describes as more like the ancient Spartans—independent, narrow-minded, upright, brave, hardy, and excellent soldiers; the Moreotes as polite, crafty, optimistic, disposed for commerce and ready to let their children seek their fortunes abroad, fond of politics and legal pursuits; the islanders of the Aegean as peace-loving and hard-working, trustworthy and virtuous, the men being especially bold sailors, while the women furnish most of the female servants who are found among the Greeks in foreign parts; the Ionian Islanders as lively, clever in trade, and distinguished from the rest of their countrymen by their musical taste, which they probably obtained from the Italians. This estimate is of value, as coming from one who has lived and observed in various parts of Greece.

Genealogical Memoirs of the Families of Colt and Coutts. By the Rev. Charles Rogers, LL.D. (London: Printed for the Cottonian Society.) Dr. Rogers has gathered together some interesting facts concerning persons who have borne at various times the names of Colt and Coutts, and his book will, therefore, be of service to anyone who is engaged in genealogical researches which touch on any of those families, or those allied to them by marriage. He should have brought out, however, more clearly than he has done the fact that, so far as is known at present, several of the races he notices were not in any way connected with each other by blood. Links of pedigree can never be assumed; positive evidence is the only material with which a scientific genealogist can work. It is in a high degree improbable that Reginald le Colt of Shropshire, Richard Colt of Kent, William le Colt of Wiltshire, or Ralph Colt of Norfolk, persons who flourished in the thirteenth century, were in any way connected with folk called Colt or Coutts in Scotland in much more recent days. That part of the book which relates to modern people is by far the most trustworthy. It is interesting as giving family details of an humble race which by industry has raised itself to great wealth. Is there anything more trustworthy than vague tradition for the tale given on pp. 19, 20, one part of which is that "Father Peter, the Jesuit confessor of James II.," received on a certain occasion a bribe of £5,000? The priest Dr. Rogers alludes to was not a remarkably noble-minded person, but we doubt his having taken a bribe in the way stated.

Jenkinson's Practical Guide to the Isle of Wight. By Henry Irwin Jenkinson. Second Edition. (Stanford.) We are glad to find that this useful guide-book has reached a second edition. The botanical part of it is remarkably well done. We cannot say as much for the architectural; before a third edition is called for, cannot Mr. Jenkinson induce some friend who understands mediæval architecture to revise his pages?

TO JENNY.

FROM THE FRENCH OF VICTOR HUGO.

My darling! yesterday just a twelvemonth old!
Happy you babble as, under the manifold
Delicate leafage that lies on the dear Spring's breast,
The year's new birdlets, opening their strange,
wide eyes,
Cheep and twitter from out the warmth of the nest,
For the joy of the young plumes' growth and of life's surprise.
O rose-lipt Jenny of mine, in those big books
Whose pictures are worth your crowings and happy looks,
The books I must suffer your fingers to crumple or tear,
There is many a beautiful poem, but none so rare
As you, my poem, when, catching sight of me,
Your whole little body thrills and leaps with glee.
The greatest men for writing have written ne'er
A better thing than the thought a-dawn in your eye,
And the musing strange and vague of one who acaus
The earth and man with an angel's ignorance.
Ay, Jenny, God's not far off when you are nigh.
E. H. HICKEY.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE are glad to hear that Mr. H. Buxton Forman is about to publish through Messrs. Reeves and Turner a Shelley Bibliography, with a full account of the contents and specialities of every volume and tract included in his standard edition of Shelley's Poetical and Prose Works, and extensive lists of editions, biographies, studies, articles, and "Shelleyana" in general. As a supplement to her husband's work, Mrs. Forman has undertaken a Shelley Concordance, which will be a great gain to students of English as well as of Shelley.

MR. J. J. AUBERTIN, who published a short time since a new translation of The Lusiads, is about to issue a translation of seventy sonnets by Camoens. As in the case of his former work, he invites criticism of his faithfulness to the original by printing the Portuguese text opposite to his own version. Messrs. C. Kegan Paul and Co. are the publishers.

MR. G. L. GOMME and Mr. James Britten are engaged upon a Dictionary of English Folk-Lore, which will be published, according to present plans, in four parts.

WE understand that the following arrangements have been made for Messrs. Macmillan and Co.'s forthcoming series of volumes on The English Citizen, his Rights and Responsibilities, which we announced recently as in preparation: Mr. H. D. Traill has undertaken to write on Central Government, Mr. Spencer Walpole on

The Electorate and the Legislature, Mr. M. D. Chalmers on Local Government, Mr. C. P. Ilbert on Justice and Police, Mr. A. J. Wilson on National Income, Expenditure, and Debt, Prof. William Jack on The State and Education, Rev. T. W. Fowle on The Poor Law, Mr. T. H. Farrar on The State in Relation to Trade, Prof. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S., on The State in Relation to Labour, Mr. F. Pollock on The State and the Land, the Hon. A. D. Elliot, M.P., on The State and the Church, Mr. Spencer Walpole on Foreign Relations, Mr. J. S. Cotton on India, and Mr. E. J. Payne on Colonies and Dependencies, the last two subjects being dealt with in the same volume.

MESSRS. REMINGTONS have in the press for early publication a new novel by Capt. Mayne Reid entitled The Free Lances. The same firm will publish next week Grand Tours in Many Lands, by Dr. McCosh, author of Nuova Italia.

WE understand that the Bibliography of Thomas Carlyle is being prepared by Mr. R. H. Shepherd, and will be published, uniformly with his other Bibliographies, by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH and FARRAN are preparing, and will publish immediately, The Churchman's Altar Manual and Guide to Holy Communion, together with the Collects, Epistles, and Gospels, and a selection of appropriate Hymns.

ACCORDING to the last number of the Istoricheski Vestnik ("Historical Messenger"), there has been recently discovered in an old country-house in the government of Orlov a collection of letters from Voltaire to Count Razoumovski and Teplov, secretary to the Empress Catherine II. They have never been published, and let us hope will soon find an editor.

ON Wednesday last week Mr. Quaritch gave a dinner to some men well known in literary and antiquarian circles who wished to see his choicest MSS. before some of them—as it may be—leave England for America. His Lydgate "Sege of Troy" is certainly a magnificent MS., with most interesting and brilliant illuminations, but much too good to have been done by the poet himself. The great Talbot's Prayer-book or Book of Hours, with early French and English poems copied into it by at least three different scribes, is also a most precious relic, and ought not to leave the country even at £1,000. The Italian "Apocalyptic Visions" is the most beautiful of the set, but has not the historic associations of the MS. from which "the great Alcides of the field" read his daily prayers. We do not go farther with the list of fifteen MSS. exhibited, but need hardly say that no such collection was ever before in the hands of an English bookseller as his own property.

MESSRS. WILSON and M'CORMICK, of Glasgow, inform us that they have been appointed sole agents in Great Britain for the sale of Das Magazin für die Literatur des In- und Auslandes, the oldest of German literary Reviews, and the only one which specially, and with marked ability, treats of current English literature.

THE Rev. George Smith, LL.D., of Edinburgh, wishes us to state that the popular edition of his Life of Dr. Alexander Duff has been issued by the publishers without having been finally revised by himself, and in face of his remonstrances.

Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Thomas Carlyle, with personal reminiscences and selections from his private letters to numerous correspondents, by Mr. Richard Herne Shepherd, will be issued immediately by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co.

THE library of the late Lord Hampton, which was sold this week by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson and Hodge, stirred deeply the pulses and purses of the great book-buyers. The most precious article in the sale was a copy of the Old Testament volume of "The Mazarine Bible," which was bought by Mr. Quaritch for £760. The same gentleman secured other Biblical and liturgical treasures in the little volume of Tyndale's English Pentateuch (£40), of which only one perfect copy, now in the British Museum, is extant; Cranmer's "Great Bible" of 1539 (£32 10s.); the two "Common Prayers" of Edward VI. of 1549 and 1552 (£71 and £66); the Common Prayer of 1561 bound (with Sternhold's Psalms of 1567) for "William Allen Lord Mayor, 1571" (£20 10s.); the first edition of Knox's famous Liturgy printed at Geneva in 1556 (£41); Geoffroy Tory's Horae B. V. M., 1527, a rare volume, with beautiful wood-cut borders (£101); and the French translation of Edward VI.'s Common Prayer, printed at London in 1553 (£45). Among the other books of high value we may mention Coverdale's "Zürich Bible" of 1550 (£22 10s.); "The Bishops' Bible" of 1568 (£26 10s.); a Latin MS. Bible of the early part of the fourteenth century, of French execution, but misdescribed as English in the catalogue (£70 10s.); Horae B. V. M., printed by Kerver in 1522 (£109); Missale Sarisburiense, Parisii, 1516 (£49); and Wynkyn de Worde's edition of Glanville de Proprietatibus, imperfect (£25).

MR. FURNIVALL has for the last three weeks been searching, with Mr. J. Chaloner Smith's help, the old inventories at Somerset House, in the hope of finding Shakspeare's among them. But at present the only one that has turned up at all relating to the poet's family is the Inventory of Sir John Bernard, the surviving second husband of Shakspeare's granddaughter and last descendant, Elizabeth Hall, who first married Thomas Nash. And in this Inventory of Sir John's the only entries relating to property at Stratford-upon-Avon—no doubt Shakspeare's old dwelling-house, New Place, or his "four yard land and a halfe" that descended to his grand-daughter—are "a Rent at Stratford vpon Avon, iiiiij." and "old goods and Lumber at Stratford vpon Avon, at iiiij." Unluckily there are no particulars of "All the Bookes" in the "Studdy" xxix" xj, or of "all the Pictures" in the Parlour (v" x'), the best Chamber, and the Little Chamber, or we might have known what copies of the Quartos and Folios, and what pictures of her grandfather, Lady Bernard left to her husband when she died in February 1669-70. Sir John Bernard's goods and chattels were valued at £948 10s., but among them was a Bond of Wm. Thursby, Esq., for £615. New Place was not sold till after Sir John's death.

WE learn from the Nation that Messrs. Osgood and Co. will publish during the current year Illustrations of the Earth's Structure, by Prof. N. S. Shaler and Mr. W. M. Davis. The Quarterly and the Edinburgh are both to be published in America from the same plates as the English editions by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin and Co.

WE learn from the Revue Critique that the first volume of Señor Guerra y Orbe's great work on the Geography of the Iberian Peninsula in Ancient Times is in the press, and may be expected to appear next spring. It will comprise Galicia, the Asturias, and Cantabria. The result of M. Hartwig Derenbourg's official commission to study the Arabic MSS. in Spain is that he has reported upon no less than 1,835 MSS. in the libraries of the Escorial, Madrid, Alcalá, Toledo, Seville, and Granada. The Literary Society of Prague has published the Life of Vok de Rosemberg, which is described as highly important for the study of Bohemian history in the sixteenth century. M. Kolliarevsky, Professor of Slavonic Philology in the University of Kiev, is in the course of editing a complete edition of the works of Maximovitch (1804-73), one of the first authorities on the literature of Little Russia.

DR. HERMANN VARNHAGEN, of Greifswald, has just edited a fourteenth-century Italian version of the collection of old stories called "The Seven Sages" from the Additional MS. 27429 in the British Museum. He gives a full Introduction and notes, with extracts from the Old-High-German version, &c.

THE eighth annual meeting of the English Dialect Society was held on last Monday week at Manchester, the Mayor of the city presiding. The report of the honorary secretary, Mr. J. H. Nodal, showed that the financial position was sound, but an increase in the number of subscribers is extremely desirable; it would enable the society to push on faster with the work, to issue more rapidly the books which are waiting to be printed, and to give to each individual member a greater return for the year's subscription. There are now forty-two subscribing libraries, of which seven are Continental (Berlin, Copenhagen, Göttingen, Halle, Munich, Stockholm, and Strassburg), one in New Zealand, and eight in the United States. The number of members is 260, making, with the libraries, a total roll of 302 subscribers. The publications for 1881 will probably be selected from the following:—Leicestershire Words, Phrases, and Proverbs, collected by the late Arthur Benoni Evans, D.D., edited, with Additions and an Introduction, by Sebastian Evans, M.A., LL.D., Barrister-at-Law; Turner's Names of Herbes (1547), edited by James Britten, F.L.S.; Fitzherbert's Book of Husbandrie (1534), edited by the Rev. Prof. Skeat; Glossary of Words in Use in the Isle of Wight, by C. Roach Smith; Glossary of the Lancashire Dialect, part ii., by J. H. Nodal and George Milner; and Dictionary of English Plant Names, part iii. (completing the work), by J. Britten, F.L.S., and Robert Holland.

THE "Poets' Corner" of the Mitchell Public Library at Glasgow contains at present the works of 1,222 Scottish poets and verse-writers, of whom 1,022 are named and the rest anonymous. The honorary treasurer is desirous of making the collection more complete, and invites contributions of different editions and materials bearing generally upon the bibliography of the poets of Scotland.

THE annual Report of the President of Harvard College, as analysed in the Nation, conveys a good deal of interesting information concerning the position of higher education in America. We learn that the total number of colleges and universities now in existence is 360, of which nearly two hundred are not more than thirty years old, and only twenty are older than the century. This prodigious increase has, of course, been principally exhibited in the Western States, where it has been marked by a tendency towards gratuitous instruction. Out of the total number of colleges more than a third charge either no tuition fee or only a nominal one, not exceeding thirty dollars (£6) a-year. At Harvard itself the most important step recently taken is the foundation of a pension for retiring professors, towards which a single graduate has contributed 20,000 dollars (£4,000). It is also pointed out that the university examinations for women have been assimilated to those for men.

DR. JUSSERAND has a short sarcastic article in the Revue Critique on a M. Hallberg's History of English Literature, according to which we have no other works of King Alfred than his Proverbs and a few fragments, and no more of Layamon's Brut than a fragment. M. Hallberg is also of opinion that Langland's Vision of Piers Ploughman was imitated from the Roman de la Rose, and that Chaucer was born in 1323 and wrote the Testament of Love.

FROM an interesting account in the Scotsman of Carlyle's funeral, we learn that the house at Ecclefechan in which Carlyle was born is still standing, being inhabited by the village gravedigger. The actual room is described as measuring only four or five feet in width by eight or nine feet in length, with a bed-place formed in the old style of making a recess in the wall. The house into which his father afterwards moved, and where Carlyle was brought up, situated in a lane known as "Carlyle's Close," has become the village shambles. The building of the old Secession Kirk, to which his father belonged, also exists to this day; and the parish school, in which Carlyle received his earliest education, is now used as a casual poor-house and soup-kitchen.

THE Catalogo Ragionato, etc., mentioned in the ACADEMY for January 8 (p. 16) has just appeared. It quite satisfies the high expectations that had been formed of it. It is a very ably edited book, and a full key to the "master's" numerous articles scattered in various magazines and newspapers. Dr. Isaia Luzzatto, the eldest living son of the lamented professor (the promising young scholar, Filoseno, having died in his father's lifetime), may justly call this work a labour of love.

WE have also to report the appearance of another work; but this, although also posthumously edited, is more directly Prof. Luzzatto himself. The title of this book is Yesode Hattorah, and it treats in Hebrew on the principles of Judaism, but is by no means a catechism. Parts of it are to be found in Hebrew in Weiss's Beth Hamdrash, under the present title; and others in Italian, in the Educatore Israelita, under the title of "Giudaismo Illustrato, parte ii." It is, however, now published as a whole for the first time. The author speaks of this little book, which occupies in toto (Title, Dedication, Prefaces, &c.) not more than sixty-eight small octavo pages, as "the choice fruit of his labours" (see the dedication to his father-in-law, p. 7). The publisher, Mr. Isaac Graeber, of Przemyśl, in Austrian Poland, is an admirer of Jewish literature in general, and of the author in particular. When one casts a glance on the works of Prof. Luzzatto already published, and sums up with them those that still await publication, one is astonished both at the author's activity and solidity. With others the clerical work alone would have almost absorbed a life so short as was the author's. S. D. Luzzatto wrote much, and all of it was excellent.

THE names of Stubbes and Furnivall came together when the old Puritan's famous denunciation of the Abuses in Dress and Manners in England in 1583 was edited, with full Forewords and Notes, for the New Shakspeare Society by its founder in 1877-79. But here is an instance of their earlier joinder, which we owe to the kindness of the most illustrious owner of the Puritan name now: "in 1654, Nell, Bess and Nan Stubbs, being mother and two daughters, were hanged at Chester for bewitching Mrs. Furnivall, wife to Mr. Anthony Furnivall, daughter to Mr. John Furnivall, of Fallowes." (Earwaker's Cheshire, vol. ii., p. 362.)

WITH reference to a passage in the last paragraph of the Rev. Mark Pattison's review of Arrows of the Chase, in last week's ACADEMY, a correspondent sends us the following extract from the Preface to that collection, of Mr. Ruskin's letters:—

"It is first due to the compiler of the Bibliography of Mr. Ruskin's writings, Mr. Richard Herne Shepherd, to state in what measure this book has been prompted and assisted by his previous labours. Already acquainted with some few of the letters which Mr. Ruskin had addressed at various times to the different organs of the daily press, it was not until I came across the Bibliography that I was encouraged to complete and arrange a collection of these scattered portions of his thought."

OWING to the misreturn of a proof, the word "Iarza," in the Rev. H. G. Tomkins' letter on p. 120 of the last number of the ACADEMY, was throughout misprinted as "Iazza."

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

Macmillan's Magazine has an article by Mr. Saintsbury on Mr. Christie's Etienne Dolet, containing some suggestive remarks on a side of the Renaissance which has been too much overlooked by modern writers. Mr. Saintsbury calls attention to the service which the Renaissance rendered as "a schoolmaster to bring the languages of Europe to full literary perfection," and shows that French literature especially illustrates the stages of this influence. Mr. Almond writes on "Athletics and Education" with a view to the treatment of athletics as a branch of sanitary science applied to schools. Mr. Spencer Walpole gives a few reminiscences of the late Frank Buckland which are full of good stories about the fun, amiability, and eccentricities of that enthusiastic naturalist. We trust that these stories may be collected in a more permanent form; they are too good to be lost to posterity.

IN the Deutsche Rundschau Herr Präger, under the title of "The Discovery of Hypnotism," calls attention to the writings of the late Dr. Braid, which seem to have gained more notice in Germany than in England. As we see, however, that they are soon to be published in a collected edition, they will no doubt receive more consideration. Herr Scherer, in an article on "Lessing," complains that all existing biographies are unsatisfactory, and give no clear account of Lessing's character or work, because they do not sufficiently divide its several stages. He views Lessing as being chiefly a journalist up to the publication of Miss Sara Sampson, an aesthete till the time of producing Emilia Galotti, thence till his death a theologian, but in all his phases essentially a dramatist. Herr Jastrow writes on "The Latest Representations of the History of the World," and criticises the views of Buckle, Wober, and Oncken, and calls attention to the last work of Ranke as being necessary to complete his previous labours by sketching the beginning of that weltgeschichtliche Bewegung which his previous works regard as being in motion.

IN the February part of the Alpine Journal Mr. W. A. B. Coolidge begins a lively and promising series, with plenty of novelty, under the general title of "Explorations in the Cottian Alps." He gives a tempting picture, or rather set of pictures, of the Chambeyron district. The number contains a second instalment of Mr. Whymper's rough jottings during his expedition among the Great Andes of Ecuador this time last year. Among the most useful features of the studies in the Journal are the rectification of the errors of maps and guide-books and the hints about inns and lodgings. Mr. Frederick Gardiner's paper on his three new ascents without guides in Southern Dauphiné is printed, with a map of the "Pics" at the head of Val Godemar; and Mr. A. Cust continues his "Wanderings in Ticino"—Val Verzasca and Val Lavizzara. He does justice to the amazing and unparalleled green hues of the mountain-stream, "die intensiv smaragdgrüne, kristallhelle Verzasca;" as Tschudi calls it, "die Perle aller Bergströme der Schweiz." It is curious that a traveller should visit so many of the Ticino villages and take no note of the exciting political ferment at work in every corner of this canton. In Mr. Freshfield's "Notes on Old Tracks" he takes us to Monte Rosa (or rather to the south-western side of it), the valleys of Aosta, Challant, and Lys. The "New Expeditions" and "Reviews and Notices" are admirable, the latter containing very full recent French and Italian Alpine bibliography up to date.

EDITORS of magazines, like other persons connected with literature, may perhaps fairly claim the Apollonian privilege of not always drawing the arrow to the head. The February number of Le Livre is not quite up to the very high level of its two predecessors. A certain heaviness always seems to result from the filling up of the space of a Review entirely or mainly with instalments of serial matter. And this month the permanent portion of Le Livre is wholly occupied by such matter. It is true that the subjects—armorial bindings, the Casanova Memoirs, and the life and performances of that rather scrofulous bibliophile, Jamet le Jeune—are all interesting enough; but still the number wants lightening, while the foreign correspondence is chiefly devoted to the less important literatures. On the other hand, the reviews of French current literature seem to be increasing in bulk, and very likely M. Uzanne finds that this is a promising course. Hitherto most efforts to establish in France anything like our weekly Reviews of literature have failed. These monthly compte-rendus may be more fortunate. The illustration this month is a reproduction—by one of the innumerable processes of photogravure, apparently—of a frontispiece of Marillier's. It is not the happiest we have seen, but it is a fair specimen of the delicate, if frivolous, art which suited so well with the literature it illustrated, and which now makes that literature for the time a delight to Parisian book-hunters.

IN the Revista Contemporanea of January 30 Perez de Guzman begins a series of articles on "The Founders of Constitutional Rule in Spain." The subject of the present sketch is the Conde de Toreno, the author of the History of the Rising, War, and Revolution of Spain. His education, though conducted by Churchmen, was based on the "Contrat Social" and the "Emile" of Rousseau. Hence his adoption of advanced democratic opinions, from which he afterwards recoiled. An interesting episode of his life was his welcome to England in 1808 as the almost boyish deputy of his native province, the Asturias, to solicit English aid. Becerro de Bengoa continues his description of the coal-mines of Santullán, and Diaz Sanchez his "Guia de Simancas." Emilio de Santos tells the story of the design and construction of the Spanish Mudejar house in the last Paris exhibition. Miguel Gutierrez has a rather striking poem on "The Tears" of Boabdil, and "The Smiles and Hopes" of Isabella at the taking of Granada and the news of the discovery of America.

OBITUARY.

KARL BRUNNER, the archivist of Aarau, who died on January 26, was a characteristic Swiss scholar. He was born in 1831 at Hemberg in the Toggenburg, the twelfth of thirteen children, whose father secured them a good education. His passion for history and archaeology was traced by him to the fascinating instruction which he received at the cantonal school in Aarau from Prof. Rochholz. He chose the calling of a Swiss pastor, and completed his theological studies at the universities of Zürich and Tübingen. At the latter he became a zealous disciple of the then prevailing "Tübingen school," to which he remained faithful until his death. He never became a mere controversialist, however, and throughout his life maintained friendly intercourse with men of all parties. His first ministerial duty was at Kappel, where he served as "Vikar," or, as we should say, assistant-curate. In 1856 he was elected Pfarrer of Henau, and in 1858 of Bühler in Appenzell. His zeal for the schools, in which he effected great improvements, drew him away from his clerical work; and in 1864 he was called to the cantonal school of Appenzell at Trogen, as teacher of religion, history, and the German language and literature. The wonderful success of his work here as a trainer of school-teachers made him known in wider circles, and in 1867 he was invited to become Rector of the Gymnasium in Biel. His new position freed him from much drudgery, and enabled him to turn his attention more closely to his favourite study. Moved by the great work which his friends von Stürler and J. J. Amiet, the State-archivists of the cantons of Bern and Solothurn, had done for the archives of those two republics, he took to heart the miserable and disorderly condition of the exceedingly rich archives of the canton of Aargau. "Disorder in the archives," he said, "is a kind of internal sickness in a State. Unused archives are like mines without miners." He longed, as he put it, "to bring back life into those dead heaps of writing by uniting them, ordering them, and restoring them to their proper use." The Government of Aargau at last invited him to the task, and in 1873 he moved to Aarau and devoted himself with unwearied labour for the remainder of his life to this arduous undertaking. The canton is the seat of numerous ecclesiastical and monastic foundations, the archives of which had come into the possession of the State. Brunner's registers were no mere catalogues, but elucidatory descriptions of his text, which will make them for all time an indispensable help to the student. He found the archives of the foundations of Königsfelden, Zofingen, and Wettingen to be rich in Papal documents. His own original contributions to history were not numerous. The most important of them is his Life of Hans von Hallwil, the hero of Grandson and Murten, illustrated with original documents. He was a contributor to the Argovia, the Anzeiger für schweizerische Geschichte, and to the German Allgemeine deutsche Biographie. He also translated into German Rilliet's epoch-making work, Les Origines de la Confédération suisse, Histoire et Légende. This translation contains a valuable independent Supplement. It was the grief of his last days that he was deprived of the hope of attaining the great object of his life—the complete organisation of the archives of the illustrious "gau" of the Aar.

On the 3rd inst. the Hungarian poet Coloman Tóth (Tóth Kálmán) breathed his last. Indeed, since he was struck by apoplexy on October 13, 1879, he had been little better than a living corpse. He was born in 1831, at Baja, a town in the South of Hungary on the banks of the Danube, and at the age of sixteen published his first collection of verses. During the war of 1848-49 he served in the National army, in which he rose to the rank of lieutenant. He was by that time already known as a popular song-writer whose verses, set to music, were sung both in drawing-rooms and by the people. Love and patriotism were his favourite, almost exclusive, themes; and he was called the "poet of the Hungarian ladies." In 1851 he became sub-editor, and in 1856 editor, of a journal entitled Hölgyfutár ("Ladies' Messenger"), in which his lyrics continually appeared. In 1857 he became by chance a dramatic author. One evening he was playing at cards, when one of the party, an actor, rose and excused himself on the ground that he had to translate a play for production on the occasion of his benefit. "Don't go," said Tóth; "why, I will write you an original one." Although this first dramatic attempt was not particularly successful, subsequent dramas of his attained a permanent place in the répertoire of the Hungarian theatre. In 1860, when political discussion became freer and more lively in Hungary, Tóth started a political comic paper, Bolond Miska ("Crazy Mike"). This paper proved a great success, as was shown by its editor being frequently put in prison during the so-called provisorium. The governor, Count Pálffy, however, always protested that he loved him, upon which Deák observed, "Yes, as a bird—in a cage." He was, in fact, in prison when, in 1861, he was elected member of the Academy. The confirmation of his election was, however, refused by Count Pálffy, to whom Eötvös, the President of the Academy, sarcastically said, "Quite right. Do not confirm it; he is not popular enough." For three years Pálffy persisted in his refusal, and only withdrew it when the Academy threatened to ignore the want of confirmation by giving Tóth office while his election still remained unconfirmed. On the re-establishment of the Constitution he represented his native town in three successive Parliaments.

Of the three deaths of Russian men of letters which we have had to chronicle within a fortnight that of Theodor Michailovich Dostoyevsky, whose interment took place with much pomp on Sunday last, was perhaps the greatest loss to literature. He is doubtless best known in this country by his Memoirs from the House of the Dead, which has been translated into English. This work was based upon his own experience of Siberia, whither he was exiled under Nicholas for his connexion with the Petrashevsky Society, and whence he was allowed to return after the present Emperor's accession to the throne, weakened, however, in health and subject to epileptic fits. Crime and Punishment, Demons, The Idiot are among his other most famous works. He stood unrivalled in the analysis of feeling, but it was nearly always feeling of a morbid tinge which characterised his productions. This has full scope in his delineation of the murderer's remorse in Crime and Punishment, but reaches a still greater height in The Brothers Karamazov, which, during the last two years, has appeared in M. Katkov's magazine, Russkiy Vyestnik. The sombre hues with which he invests his stories and the spell with which he enthralled the reader remind one forcibly of Edgar Poe. In this respect his work forms a very striking contrast to that of Tourguenief and Pisemsky, where bright, fresh love has such a large place. In 1876 Dostoyevsky conceived the idea of rendering himself independent of publishers, and accordingly started a monthly magazine, Dnyebnik Pisatelya, "The Author's Diary," of which he was alike editor, publisher, and contributor. In this there appeared from his pen not only tales, but also articles on current topics of social and political interest. These last, however, were much inferior to his work as a novelist, and manifested his adherence to the narrowest school of Slavophiles, and his antipathy to the Liberal ideas of Western Europe. After remaining in abeyance for two years, the Author's Diary had begun to appear again a few months before the death of its editor.

THE death, on February 1, is announced of Theodor Bogdanovich Miller, whose metrical translations had ever since 1841 given him a recognised place in Russian literature. He was born in Moscow in 1818, and received his early education in the German Peter and Paul School. His circumstances forbade his entering the university. While studying pharmacy, he found means of attending the lectures of professors on other subjects, and in 1841 he passed the examination for teacher of the Russian and German languages. After twenty-eight years he retired from this profession, and devoted himself wholly to literature, for which he had always felt the strongest attraction. Among the most important of his numerous works may be mentioned his translations of Measure for Measure and Cymbeline, and of Schiller's Wilhelm Tell. During the last year or two M. Miller had been working with feverish energy, which, it is thought, seriously affected his health, already impaired by the hardships of his early life. He leaves two complete works in MS.

MR. JOHN THOMAS DICKS, publisher of the Complete Shilling Shakspeare, and proprietor of several London newspapers and periodicals, died at Montene on the 4th inst.

WE regret to notice also the death of Mr. John Sampson Courtney, of Penzance, who was the author of several valuable works, including a Guide to Penzance, and a valued contributor to the Journal of the Royal Cornwall Polytechnic Society. His eldest son is M.P. for Liskeard; another son is Mr. W. P. Courtney.

THE death of Cesare Cantù, announced in our last number, is contradicted.

WILL OF WILLIAM SHAKSPERE, OF ST. SEPULCHRE'S, LONDON, A.D. 1413.

(BROWN 1400-1418, COMMISSARY COURT OF LONDON, LEAF 255.)

For his namesake's sake, whose will was proved in 1616, this two hundred years' earlier Shakspeare's will from the Prerogative Office may have some slight interest for your readers.

R. J. FURNIVAL.

In Dei nomine, Anno domini M^oCCCC^{mo}xiiij^{mo}, Ego Willelmus Schakspere, compos mentis, condo testamentum meum in hunc modum. In primis, lego animam meam deo omnipotenti, beate Mario, omnibus sanctis; corpus quoque meum ad sepeliendum infra Hospitale sancti Iohannis Ierosolymitani in Anglia.† Item lego fratri Hugoni ad disponendum in predicto loco iij s. iij d. Item lego patri meo xx s. Item lego matri mee xx s. Item lego presbiteris conventualibus vj s. viij d. sancti Iohannis. Residuum vero omnium bonorum meorum, vbi cumque inuentorum, do & lego Executoribus meis, Willelmo Bidsale et Iohanni Boursour, supra debita et expensa, ad disponendum pro salute anime mee, meliori modo que poterint an sciuerint. Probatum est hoc testamentum coram nobis Thoma Burgh, in legibus &c., Commissario generali, tercio nonarum Augusti, Anno domini M^oCCCC^{mo}xiiij^{mo}. Et commissaria est Administratio omnium bonorum &c., Executoribus &c., et Admissa per eosdem in forma iuris.

THE CODEx ZACYNTHIUS.

THE Codex Zacynthius, which contains portions of St. Luke's Gospel, cannot possibly be of earlier date than the sixth century, nor can it be much later than the eighth. Without examining the original, it would perhaps be impossible from the character of the writing to decide which is the more probable date; and, unfortunately, the transcript published by Dr. Tregelles in 1861 does not help to settle the question. The Codex itself has been reprinted page for page and line for line with the original, so far as the text of the gospel is concerned, from types in the possession of the Trustees of the British Museum, which, of course, represent only approximately the shape of the letters of the MS., and in a size which, taking into consideration the whole surface occupied by the length and breadth of the letters, is about half that of the original. Not having seen the palimpsest itself, we are able to compare only the body of the work with the specimen of one page which was executed in facsimile; and the comparison is not such as to leave a favourable impression of the accuracy of the printed copy. Dr. Tregelles has represented the obverse of fol. 84 of the Codex, and there are as many as seven variations between this and what purports to be an exact representation of it. In four instances the colon of the facsimile at the end of a clause has been omitted in the copy. In three others there are the following omissions—that of the two dots over τ and ι , and a bar over Π . And we need hardly say that the presence or absence of the dots over the vowels τ and ι is of considerable importance in estimating the antiquity of handwriting. Now, the handwriting of the text would be pronounced to be of the sixth century if it had not been surrounded at the top and bottom and one side by a catena written in precisely the same hand in somewhat smaller character, four of the letters of which, ϵ , θ , σ , ς , are much smaller and narrower, and very unlike the writing of that century. There is, therefore, very little internal evidence to guide us in forming an estimate of the century to which it belongs. There are other peculiarities in the MS. which may be noticed, and which may help hereafter towards deciding the point. Meanwhile, it is noticeable that the character of the writing is very like that of the recently discovered Codex Rossanensis.

* Sepulcri (in margin). † St. John's, Clerkenwell,

Of these peculiarities, the principal, perhaps, is the absence of contractions, which points to the earlier date. There are, upon the whole, about twelve words which are habitually contracted, and some of these are occasionally written in full. In addition to the words which seem to have always been written in contracted form, such as $\theta\epsilon\delta\varsigma$, $\pi\upsilon\epsilon\rho\iota\sigma\mu\alpha$, and the like, with their inflexions, we meet with $\upsilon\delta\varsigma$, $\mu\eta\tau\eta\rho$, $\pi\alpha\tau\eta\rho$, $\sigma\upsilon\lambda\lambda\eta\mu\eta\eta$, and others, which are written sometimes at length, sometimes contracted. There is one contraction which appears to be used quite unnecessarily at the end of a line, and scarcely ever in any other place—namely, the omission of the final ν , with a bar over the preceding vowel. Thus, in a case where, as occasionally happens, a verse of the gospel is written twice, we have at the end of a line $\kappa\lambda\eta\theta\epsilon$, though there was abundance of room for the insertion of the final letter, and upon the verse being repeated, and the word occurring in the middle of a line, it is written $\kappa\lambda\eta\theta\acute{\epsilon}\nu$ in full. And this contraction is adopted in more than one instance at the end of a line, in the middle of a word—e.g., $\iota\delta\acute{\upsilon}\nu\epsilon\varsigma$, the first line ending with $\iota\delta\sigma$, the next beginning with $\tau\epsilon\varsigma$. In addition to these peculiarities, we may notice the prevailing forms of $\epsilon\lambda\pi\alpha\nu$, $\eta\lambda\theta\alpha\nu$, $\epsilon\upsilon\lambda\alpha\nu$, which this MS. has in common with the most ancient MSS. of the New Testament, though occasionally the form $\epsilon\lambda\pi\omega\nu$, &c., is used. Again, the paragogic ν is almost, though not quite, invariable (we think there are only three exceptions), and the insertion of the μ in such words as $\sigma\upsilon\lambda\lambda\eta\mu\eta\eta$ is, we believe, without exception. Also, the words $\delta\alpha\upsilon\iota\delta$ and $\mu\alpha\rho\iota\alpha$ appear in the form $\delta\alpha\upsilon\epsilon\iota\delta$ and $\mu\alpha\rho\iota\delta\mu$, except in one case, where the former is contracted into $\delta\alpha\delta$. Capernaum is written $\kappa\alpha\phi\alpha\rho\alpha\nu\acute{\alpha}\nu\mu$. The stops are inserted most capriciously, but these may perhaps be from a later hand; so, probably, nothing can be inferred from this. The itacisms are not nearly so numerous as those in the Sinaitic and Vatican MSS., but this is owing to the intelligence of the scribe, who certainly understood the language he was copying, and was, moreover, for the most part careful, as the mistakes in copying are but few. They amount to about twelve in all, consisting chiefly of the omission or the repetition of a single letter, so that the MS. may be said to represent with unusual correctness the text of the earlier MS. from which it was copied. Now, as this MS. is a text of St. Luke's Gospel, with a catena of commentary encircling it, the part which contains the gospel probably represents a somewhat earlier text than that of the period at which it was written. And, beyond all question, if this text was not itself written in the sixth century, it is of as great value and contains as good readings as the Sinaitic and Vatican MSS. of the fourth century.

We take it for granted that the Sinaitic MS. is the most valuable of all texts, at least for the gospels, and that the Vatican comes next to it. This Codex seems to resemble the former most in its readings, but it has a few very curious readings in which it is unique, or nearly so. The most remarkable of these is at the beginning of the 31st verse of the 7th chapter, where, instead of the words $\epsilon\lambda\pi\epsilon\ \delta\epsilon\ \delta\ \kappa\upsilon\rho\iota\sigma$, the following are substituted:— $\sigma\upsilon\kappa\epsilon\rho\iota\ \epsilon\kappa\epsilon\iota\sigma\iota\ \epsilon\lambda\epsilon\gamma\epsilon\tau\omicron\ \alpha\lambda\lambda\alpha\ \tau\omicron\iota\varsigma\ \mu\alpha\theta\eta\tau\alpha\iota\varsigma$. The words $\epsilon\lambda\pi\epsilon\ \delta\epsilon\ \delta\ \kappa\upsilon\rho\iota\sigma$ must be pronounced to be spurious, and were apparently introduced to avoid the abruptness of the continuation of our Lord's words after the break of verses 29 and 30. The words here substituted are an equally awkward insertion, and serve only to confirm the judgment of both Tischendorf and Tregelles, who omit the connecting link altogether, following in this the Sinaitic and the Vatican as well as the Alexandrian and St. Jerome's version.

In the 9th and 10th verses of the 8th chapter we have this MS. alone reading $\tau\iota\varsigma\ \alpha\upsilon\tau\eta\ \eta\ \pi\alpha\rho\alpha\beta\omicron\lambda\eta$ for $\tau\iota\varsigma\ \epsilon\iota\eta\ \eta\ \pi\alpha\rho\alpha\beta\omicron\lambda\eta\ \alpha\upsilon\tau\eta$; and $\iota\delta\omega\sigma\iota\nu$ for $\beta\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\psi\omega\sigma\iota\nu$; and, in the 15th verse, $\tau\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\sigma\phi\omicron\rho\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota\nu$ for $\kappa\alpha\rho\phi\omicron\rho\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota\nu$. But all these instances merely indicate the natural mistake of a scribe copying a document which he understands, and with which he is more or less familiar. The same account is to be given of the reading $\epsilon\upsilon\theta\acute{\epsilon}\omega\varsigma\ \iota\delta\theta\eta$ for $\acute{\omega}\varsigma\ \iota\delta\theta\eta\ \pi\alpha\rho\alpha\rchi\eta\mu\alpha$ in ver. 47 of the same chapter, and of $\iota\pi\omicron\tau\omega\nu$ for $\acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\omega\nu\ \delta\epsilon$ in the 8th verse of the next chapter; while in the reading $\iota\delta\alpha\sigma\tau\omicron$ for $\iota\alpha\tau\omicron$ in the 11th verse, in which this MS. stands almost alone of early MSS., we have, perhaps, the true reading as written by the evangelist.

And now to revert to the earlier portion of the Codex. We have in chap. i., ver. 20, this MS. alone reading $\pi\lambda\eta\sigma\theta\eta\sigma\iota\nu\tau\alpha\iota$ for $\pi\lambda\eta\rho\omega\theta\eta\sigma\iota\nu\tau\alpha\iota$; and in ver. 66, $\tau\alpha\iota\varsigma\ \kappa\alpha\rho\delta\iota\alpha\iota\varsigma$ for $\tau\eta\ \kappa\alpha\rho\delta\iota\alpha$. There is also the omission of $\tau\omicron$ before $\sigma\eta\mu\epsilon\iota\omicron\nu$ in ver. 12, and of $\delta\eta$ after $\delta\iota\acute{\epsilon}\delta\omega\mu\epsilon\nu$ in ver. 15; but of these it is impossible to say whether they are due to the scribe or to the MS. from which he copied. Again, in the following verse it is difficult to say whether $\pi\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\upsilon\sigma\alpha\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma$ for $\sigma\pi\epsilon\upsilon\sigma\alpha\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma$ is an error of a similar kind, or whether it is entitled to be chronicled as a various reading.

Another reading, in chap. vii., ver. 4, of $\eta\rho\omega\tau\omega\nu$ for $\pi\alpha\rho\epsilon\kappa\acute{\alpha}\lambda\omicron\nu$ serves only to show the occasional carelessness of a writer using a word of similar import to that used in the MS. from which he was copying. In the 6th verse the transposition of $\mu\omicron\nu$ is a mere oversight, making no difference in the sense.

The reading $\epsilon\gamma\eta\gamma\epsilon\rho\theta\eta$, compounded of the ordinary $\epsilon\gamma\eta\gamma\epsilon\rho\tau\alpha$ and $\eta\gamma\epsilon\rho\theta\eta$ of the Sinaitic and Vatican, as adopted by Lachmann and Tregelles, in ver. 16, is of the same kind.

The omission of $\pi\rho\omicron$ $\pi\rho\omicron\sigma\omega\pi\omicron\nu\ \sigma\omicron\nu$, in ver. 27, is an omission of the class homoeoteleuton; while that in ver. 22, of $\chi\omega\lambda\omicron\iota\ \pi\epsilon\rho\iota\pi\alpha\tau\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota$, is of the same kind.

As we proceed, omitting only very slight variations from the Textus Receptus, we come, in the 9th verse, to $\delta\iota\delta\omicron\sigma\kappa\alpha\lambda\epsilon\ \epsilon\upsilon\delta\omega\mu\epsilon\nu$ for $\epsilon\upsilon\sigma\tau\alpha\tau\alpha\ \epsilon\iota\delta\omicron\mu\epsilon\nu$, in which, again, the change is due to the writer's dwelling on the meaning more than on the sound of the word.

Nothing that we have yet said indicates any particular value in the Codex Zacynthius. It would seem that the scribe understood the language he was writing, but this would afford no guarantee for the accuracy of his transcript. It is necessary, therefore, to notice the number and the kind of mistakes of writing which appear in the MS. And we are enabled easily to decide that the mistakes, such as they are, are his own, for he was too well acquainted with the language to allow of the supposition that the mistakes were in the copy from which he transcribed. They are comparatively few, and are such as a tolerably careful copyist might fall into. We notice a repetition of the conjunction $\kappa\alpha\iota$, the omission of a letter two or three times—as $\sigma\upsilon\gamma\gamma\epsilon\eta$ for $\sigma\upsilon\gamma\gamma\epsilon\eta\varsigma$, $\epsilon\chi\rho\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$ for $\epsilon\chi\theta\rho\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$, $\epsilon\sigma\pi\lambda\alpha\chi\iota\sigma\theta\eta$ for $\epsilon\sigma\pi\lambda\alpha\chi\iota\sigma\theta\eta$ —and the substitution of one vowel for another, such as could not be designated an itacism, in one place as $\eta\delta\acute{\upsilon}\nu\omicron\tau\omicron$ for $\eta\delta\acute{\upsilon}\nu\alpha\tau\omicron$. Besides these, the only errors we have noticed are the omission of two letters in two or three cases, and three letters in another, of the class of homoeoteleuton, $\beta\alpha\sigma\tau\alpha\sigma\alpha$ for $\beta\alpha\sigma\tau\alpha\sigma\alpha\varsigma$ and $\rho\omicron\varsigma$ omitted after $\pi\rho\omicron\varsigma$, and the omission of $\tau\eta\varsigma\ \nu\kappa\tau\omicron\varsigma$ after $\phi\upsilon\lambda\alpha\kappa\alpha\varsigma$ from the same cause. Occasionally, also, there is an omission of a word, a pronoun, or article that is not necessary to the sense, or a transposition of words which makes scarcely any difference.

Thus far the MS. may be said to be more correct than the Sinaitic and Vatican MSS., which have many more itacisms and many more mistakes than the Codex Zacynthius.

It may indeed be said, and with some truth, that the value of this MS. is almost superseded by the publication of the Vatican, and still more by the discovery of the Sinaitic MS., for its readings, after all, agree very much with those of these two MSS., which are, at the least, two centuries older. But if the importance of this Codex is once acknowledged and established, it may help to decide on the comparative value of these two earlier MSS.

Now, if we count all the important variations from the Textus Receptus, omitting itacisms and other small changes which will not affect the case one way or the other, it will be found that they amount to about three hundred. This may seem a formidable number of variations in a really valuable and early MS. of about a third part of one gospel. It will not, however, seem wonderful to anyone who will take the trouble to count the various readings which appear at the foot of Dr. Scrivener's edition of the Greek Testament, where it will be found that, in the three editions by Lachmann, Tregelles, and Tischendorf, the variation from Stephens' text amount to five or six thousand. The variations are, in fact, of very small importance, but they serve to show that the Codex Zacynthius is descended neither from the Sinaitic nor the Vatican. It is, therefore, an independent witness frequently agreeing with them when they agree together, and sometimes siding with one sometimes with the other, but with a decided preference for the Sinaitic over the other. Moreover, it almost always agrees with the three earliest MSS. when they all agree. We think this Codex proves, if proof were wanted, that the Sinaitic is the most valuable, and the Alexandrian MS. the least valuable, of the three.

NICHOLAS POCCOCK.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHINESE TRANSLATIONS OF SANSKRIT TEXTS.

Oxford: Feb. 10, 1881.

In my review of the Kāśikā Vṛtti, published in the ACADEMY of September 25 and October 2, 1880, I gave a short extract from the 39th chapter of I-tsing's Nan-hai-ki-kwei-kou'en, containing the titles of several grammatical works which I-tsing knew and studied during his stay in India 673-95 A.D. Most of these titles are much disfigured in their Chinese transliterations, and, with regard to several of them, I was unable to give their Sanskrit equivalents. I have since received some communications on this subject from Mr. S. Beal and from Mr. Kasawara which enable me to restore, at all events, one more name with tolerable certainty. On the second of the so-called Khilas, which Mr. Kasawara had rendered by Man-ka, I cannot say that I feel satisfied even now. By the side of Ashtadhātu, explained as declension and conjugation, and Unādi, the well-known title of the irregular nominal suffixes, Manka could hardly be anything, one would think, but a treatise on the regular nominal suffixes, the so-called Kṛit. However, Mr. Beal called my attention to a note of Stanislas Julien's in his Index to Hiouen-thsang, where (vol. iii., p. 514) Men-tse-kia is explained by Mandaka. Hiouen-thsang mentions Mon-tse-kia (vol. i., p. 166) as one of two classes of words, the other class being Unādi. But, though Stanislas Julien tells us that Prof. Spiegel approved of this interpretation, I cannot find any place where Prof. Spiegel has treated of mandaka and traced it back as a technical term to some corresponding saṅgā of Sanskrit grammarians. Mr. Kasawara's translation was:—"Manka treats of the formation of words by means of combining (a root and suffix, or suffixes). One of many names for tree, for instance, is vriksha in Sanskrit (that is to say, the work vriksha is made up of vriksh and a). Thus a name for a thing is formed by mixing the parts together, according to the rules of the book, which consists of more than twenty sentences (or feet of sloka). Unādi is nearly the same as the above, with a few differences, such as what is full in the one is mentioned in brief in the other, and vice versa."

Mr. Kasawara now informs me that Manka may be meant for manda, possibly for mandaka, but I do not see that even this would help us much. Mand means to adorn, manda is used for cream on milk, also for gruel, but all this, even if we admit the meaning of mixing, would not yield us a technical name for the formation of words by means of joining a suffix with a root. At all events, I have never met with mand, or any of its derivatives, in that technical sense. I thought at one time that Manda might be meant for Māndūka, because the Māndūkeyas were famous by their grammatical works (see History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 146), and one of these might possibly have been used by I-tsing when studying the Kṛidanta chapter. But I do not think this likely, even if, as I am told, the Chinese transliteration should admit of it.

But, while we must leave this point unsettled, we are able to identify another title—namely, Guni or Kuni, given as the name of Pataṅgali's Mahābhāṣya. Mr. Beal informed me that this might be read Kūni; and Kūni, a general name for commentary as in Gitakalpa-kūni, a Prākṛit commentary on the Gitakalpasūtra of the Gaiṇas, &c., is more especially the name of Pataṅgali's commentary, Pataṅgali himself being called Kūnikṛit.

There is every reason to hope that a more accurate study of the Buddhist Chinese literature will be of great help in determining the age of a number of Sanskrit works the dates of which are at present floating about between several centuries. And there is another advantage likely to accrue from that study which has not yet been pointed out, and to which I should like to call the attention both of Chinese and Sanskrit scholars.

When we have literal translations of Sanskrit texts, these translations help us, not only to fix the date of the Sanskrit originals, but also to determine the ancient readings of the Sanskrit texts. Of course there are translations and translations, and we know now that the translation of a Life of Buddha ascribed to Kāsyapa Mātanga and Ku-falan (76 A.D.) does not prove, as Stanislas Julien thought, that this was a translation of our Lalita-vistara (see Selected Essays, vol. ii., p. 191). But when we have to deal with literal translations, some of them so literal or mot-à-mot as to defy all rules of Chinese syntax, then we are able to find out what the Sanskrit text must have been which the Chinese translators tried to render into their language, and we may thus succeed in occasionally correcting the text as handed down to us in Sanskrit MSS.

But here a very curious phenomenon presents itself. There are mistakes in the Sanskrit text of our MSS. which it is easy to correct, particularly when they occur in metrical passages. For instance, in the Lalita-vistara (ed. Calc. p. 543, l. 8) we read:

Kakehur anityam adhravam tatha srotagrānam gihvāpi,
Kāya-mana-duḥkhā anātma [api riktasavabhāvasūnyāh.

Here the metre shows clearly that we must omit gihvāpi in the first, and Kāya-mana in the second, line. They are additions, and very natural additions, to the original text. But when we take Divākara's translation, the Fang-kwang-ta-kwang-yan-king, which was made about A.D. 685, we find both gihvāpi, "also the tongue," and Kāya-mana, "body and mind," reproduced, and we find exactly the same in the far later Tibetan version.

In the same chapter (p. 527), after Upaka had asked Bhagavat how he could bear witness of himself, and claim for himself the names of Arhan and Gina, Buddha answers:

Ginā hi mādrisā gñeyā ye prāptā āśravakshayam
Gītā me pāpaka dharmās tenopagino hy aham.

Here the last pāda is clearly wrong in metre and matter. There is no such word as upagina, and the Pāli version of the same verse (Mahāvagga, vol. i., p. 8) shows that the Sanskrit text must have been tenopaka gino hy aham, the sense being: "Those who like me have reached the destruction of all frailties are to be known as Ginas; all evil dispositions have been conquered by me, therefore, O Upaka, I am a Gina, a conqueror."

Here, again, there is no trace of the vocative Upaka, O Upaka! in Divākara's translation; and, whatever the Chinese translator may have had before him, it could hardly have been tenopaka gino hy aham.

This shows how little assistance we can hope for from existing Sanskrit MSS. towards a restoration of corrupt passages in the Lalita-vistara. There are few Sanskrit MSS. as old as the Tibetan translation; none as old as Divākara's Chinese version. Yet, what seem to be palpable blunders must have existed when these translations were made. What hope, then, is there of our finding a medela for these wounds from existing Sanskrit MSS., unless they come from totally different localities, and had branched off from the general stream before the seventh century of our era? F. MAX MÜLLER.

BEN JONSON'S COPY OF PRISCIAN.

West Hackney Rectory, N.: Feb. 12, 1881.

I happened the other day to take from the shelves of the library at Merchant Taylors' School a copy of Priscian, and upon the first page found a MS. note which may interest your readers:—

"Sum
Ben : Ionsonij ex dono
Amicissimi juxta ac
Eruditiissimi viri
D. Wimblerii. S.T."

On the margin, in another hand, is the date "1605."

I think there can be little doubt that the writing is that of the dramatist. The book itself is one of much beauty, and the initial letters are illuminated with care and skill. The first page begins with the words, "Juliano Consuli ac

Patricio Priscianus salutem;" and in the latter part of the volume (but many pages from the end) I found the following passage, which may be of some use in determining its date:—

"Volumen prisciani de octo partibus orationis: de constructione; de duodecim carminibus; de accētib; de numeris & pōderibus & mēsu ris FINIT.

"Anno Domini, MCCCLXX."

There is neither title-page nor colophon, and I am not sufficiently conversant with the subject to give an opinion as to whether the book belongs to the fifteenth or sixteenth century.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

CARLYLE AND GOETHE.

Caius College, Cambridge: Feb. 15, 1881.

In his obituary article on Carlyle in your last number, Prof. Dowden points out how Carlyle sought to enlarge the Puritan ideal of goodness in the light of certain words of Goethe—"im Ganzen, Guten, Wahren, resolut zu leben." He does not, however, tell us that the words, as given by Carlyle, are not quite correctly quoted. I think the fact is not without interest, as being significant of the attitude of perhaps more or less unconscious reservation which Carlyle, it is difficult not to believe, held towards his master. We are to strive, according to Goethe (Generalbeichte),

"Uns vom Halben zu entwöhnen,
Und im Ganzen, Guten, Schönen,
Resolut zu leben."

If Wahren is put in the place of Schönen, the rhyme is lost; not to say, to some extent, the complexion of the passage.

C. H. MONRO.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, Feb. 21, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Art among the Ancient Greeks," by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Development of Styles," by Mr. G. E. Street.
8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Implements of the Stone Age as a Primitive Demarcation between Man and Other Animals," by Dr. J. F. Thompson; "Scientific Facts and the Caves of South Devon," by Mr. J. E. Howard.
TUESDAY, Feb. 22, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Blood," by Prof. Schäfer.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Languages of South Africa," by Mr. Robert Cust.
8 p.m. Anthropological Institute: "Remarks on Arrow Poisons prepared by Some Tribes of North-American Indians," by Dr. W. J. Hoffman; "The Gauchos of San Jorge, Central Uruguay," by Dr. D. Christison.
8 p.m. Royal Colonial Institute: "The Union of the Various Portions of British South Africa," by Sir Bartle E. Frere.
8 p.m. Institution of Civil Engineers: "The Weight and Limiting Dimensions of Girder Bridges," by Mr. Max am Ende.
WEDNESDAY, Feb. 23, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "River Conservancy," by Mr. C. N. Cresswell.
8 p.m. Royal Society of Literature: "The Fathers of the English Church Music," by Mr. W. A. Barrett.
8 p.m. Geological: "The Permian, Triassic, and Liassic Rocks of the Carlisle Basin," by Mr. T. V. Holmes; "On Adroconia Grantii, a New Lyasakina Hexactinellid from the Silurian Formation of Canada," by Prof. W. J. Sollas.
THURSDAY, Feb. 24, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Drawing-room Music," by Prof. Pauer.
7 p.m. London Institution: "One Aspect of Colour," by Capt. W. de W. Abney.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Thirteenth-Century Architecture—Italy," by Mr. G. E. Street.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Deep Sea Investigation, and the Apparatus used in it," by Mr. Buchanan.
8 p.m. Society for the Fine Arts: "Book Decoration," by Mr. J. W. Bradley.
8 p.m. Society of Telegraph Engineers: "On the Application of Dynamo-Electrical Machines to Railway Rolling Stock," by Lieut. P. Cardew; "The Interference with the Processes of the Manufacture of Wool and Hair from the Development of Electricity during Spinning," by Mr. E. B. Bright.
FRIDAY, Feb. 25, 8 p.m. Quekett.
9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Excitability in Plants and Animals," by Prof. J. S. Burdon-Sanderson.
SATURDAY, Feb. 26, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Ancient Egypt," by Mr. R. S. Poole.
3 p.m. Physical: "An Integrating Machine," by Mr. C. V. Boys; "The Telegraphic Transmission of Pictures of Natural Objects," by Mr. Shelford Bidwell.

SCIENCE.

Karls des Grossen Reise nach Jerusalem und Constantinopel. Hrsg. von Eduard Koschwitz. (Heilbronn: Henninger; London: Trübner.)

THIS volume (the second of a series—Altfranzösische Bibliothek—issued under the superintendence of Prof. W. Förster) completes, at least for the present, the valuable studies* on the Old-French poem of the Voyage de Charlemagne which Dr. Koschwitz began five years ago, and without the first two of which the present cannot be properly appreciated. Though the poem exists in but one MS. (Brit. Mus. Reg., 16 E. viii.)—an extremely careless copy, by a late thirteenth-century English scribe, in which many old forms are luckily preserved—there are several more or less free translations and altered later versions, of which the most important are the Old-Norse and the Welsh, to testify to its popularity. Its matter is not very agreeable to modern readers, being mainly the generally rough and coarse boasts attributed to Charlemagne and his twelve peers when enjoying the hospitality of an Eastern king, so that the poem offers the strongest contrast to the heroic Chanson de Roland; both matter and language, however, derive great interest and importance (besides the charm of difficulty inherent in the late and scanty material) from the fact that the work, which is of only 870 lines, must have been composed before the end of the eleventh century, and from the probability (as shown by Prof. G. Paris) that it was written in Paris, and is consequently the earliest extant monument of the dialect which is now literary French. The present edition is accompanied by an Introduction (revising and supplementing the editor's earlier treatises) on the versions and language of the poem and the mistakes of the MS., as well as by a full Glossary and some notes of Prof. Förster's; the MS. readings and a concordance to the Welsh and Old-Norse versions are given under the text.

Dr. Koschwitz has attempted in his critical text to restore both the words and the language of the original; and, if there is still, as he himself says, much to be done (and, we may add, something to be altered), the very serious difficulties of the task furnish ample explanation and excuse. Without going so far as to say, with Prof. Förster, that the other versions are practically of no value for reconstructing the Old-French text, it must be admitted that they rarely help; and, as the only existing MS. is so very corrupt as to be frequently unintelligible, conjectural emendation is often the sole resource. Almost all the real assistance is that afforded by the investigation of language, metre, and assonances, so to some of the editor's views on these points our criticisms will be chiefly directed; but we must first mention that Dr. Koschwitz, who formerly thought that the extant Old-French text and the Old-Welsh version were more closely related to one another than to the Scandinavian, now classes the two last apart from the first.

To begin at the foundation: the restored text is based on a collation by Prof. Wülcker of Michel's edition with the MS., and on a fresh facsimile copy of the MS. by Dr. Koch. On comparing their readings (which do not always agree) with our own collation of Michel's text, we find about fifty discrepancies; in the numerous cases in which their readings differ from Michel's, and our own do not, they are doubtless right, and in not a few we have marked our reading as doubtful; but several do not come under either class. Most unfortunately the MS. (a small thick octavo) has been missing at the British Museum since June last, so that recollection is for the present impracticable; we can only hope that it will be found again in course of time, otherwise French scholars will have to deplore the loss of the unique copy of a unique poem, without the consolation of possessing a photographic reproduction to take its place. Some of the differences are unimportant enough, but the two following call for notice (the initials designate the copyist or collator): v. 479 brulant M. W. K., bruiant (?) N.—the editor restores brulant, though this idea seems out of place, whereas the other suits well; and v. 567 luigne M. W., ling' K., hug' N.—if the last is correct (and the word—Hugue—fits in well), the restoration leigne, a material apparently superfluous for performing the boast, falls to the ground. Respecting the assonances, we think amist(i)ez (v. 166) ought to make the line begin the following ie stanza, instead of ending an e stanza; the word assonates twice in ie, so that the existence here of its by-form in e is decidedly improbable. The words prei, despeit, (præco, dēspēctum, v. 226-27) in an ordinary ei assonance (Latin z, ē) are very suspicious; not only do liz (lit), gist occur in three i stanzas, but it is very doubtful whether in any dialect that had ei, instead of i, for earlier iei, this ei represented the same sound as the other one.

As to several linguistic features of the restored text, about which we disagree with the editor, he will excuse us if, since the publication of his Ueberlieferung und Sprache in 1876, he has, like all of us, silently changed some of the views we criticise. Several of these depend largely on insufficient knowledge of pure phonetics, the physiological formation of sounds; this is especially apparent in the treatment of palatal l and n, of u, w, and v, and of nasal vowels, where, like many of his countrymen, he seems to think that all these sounds are really identical with those by which a German, learning by ear, would naturally imitate them. Thus Dr. Koschwitz spells batalie (battualia) in the same way as palie (pallium), thinking that the now old-fashioned French palatal l (Italian gli) is a compound sound, ordinary l followed by consonantal y (German j); whereas it is a simple sound formed by placing the middle (not the point) of the tongue against the roof of the palate, and allowing, as with dental l, the breath to escape on each side. The difference comes out very clearly in Early Old French; those words the original vowel of whose last syllable was not a take no final e if their accented syllable ends in palatal l, because the consonant was simple (ail from allium, surcil from supercilium); whereas those which have common l followed by consonantal y take e, because of the difficult consonant-combination (palie, uelie from olcum). Those having a in the final syllable must be judged in the same way; thus fille (filiam), however spelt in Early Old-French documents, always had simple palatal l, but milie (milia) had ordinary l followed by y. The distinction is carefully observed in the orthography of the Oxford Roland (ill, li), and is very prominent in the later language, words of the first class having palatal l (ail, sourcil, bataille, fille), while those of the second have ordinary l with (what Dr. Koschwitz says never occurs) the i attracted into the preceding syllable, and always final e (paille, huile, mille). As to u, w, and v, it is obvious that the gutturo-labial consonant w (whose difference from the gutturo-labial vowel u, as the unaccented element of a diphthong, is generally unimportant) must have preceded the denti-labial v in those words where it arises from Latin hw (qv), a guttural followed by a gutturo-labial; thus eue (or eue, aqua), siure (or siure, sequere) must be older than eue, siure. That the latter word had not v in Early Old French is shown by its future being spelt siurai or siurai, not siuerai, in Anglo-French MSS., by English having sue, not sive, and by its not rhyming on the numerous and common Old-French words in -ivre. Eue can never have had v in ordinary French (the v of évier is late, and due to the hiatus); the form came out of aigue, and went into caue (Picard iaue, as biaus from beaus), the a developing after the è and before the w (u), just as it did after è and before l changing into u (béaus from bels, bellōs). We do not understand how Prof. Förster can maintain (in his notes) that the vowel in eue (as he prints it) was the same as in feve from faba; he has overlooked that a before a guttural becomes ai, not e, that the word never assonates on e = Latin a, and that the subsequent development of the two words is altogether different. English, which always has é (close) for French e from Latin a, when the French accent has not been shifted in English, and è (open) for French e from older ai, confirms this, the Early Modern-English spelling eawer for ewer (ewiere, aquariam) showing clearly that Middle English, and consequently Old French, had è, not é, in this word. The exceptionally early change of ai to è in eue is probably due to the difficulty of pronouncing èiue (èiue), the general change of ai to èi having taken place soon after the g of aigue was vocalised; those dialects that keep the g keep the diphthong as long as in other words. In connexion with this, it is not unimportant to remark that (contrary to Dr. Koschwitz's opinion) ai and ei before nasals did not become simple e (they never were a), whether nasalised or not, either in Norman or Parisian, till centuries after the period in question; they always appear in this situation as the diphthong ei (ai) in Middle English, and even in sixteenth-century French, as abundantly shown by the grammarians, their sound was the diphthong èi.

We had marked for comment several details of the Glossary, but have space to notice but one, which concerns English. Old-French aduber cannot be from "Anglo-Saxon" dubban, as this word was imported (with the ceremony) from French into English after the Conquest (first instance, A.D. 1086).

* Ueber die Chanson du Voyage de Charlemagne (in Romanische Studien, vol. ii., part i.); Ueberlieferung und Sprache der Chanson du Voyage de Charlemagne; Sechs Bearbeitungen des altfranzösischen Gedichts von Karls des Grossen Reise (see ACADEMY, vol. xv., p. 222, col. 1).

In conclusion, we would only say that our remarks on this valuable and suggestive little work are by no means intended to depreciate it, but to show what a number of difficult and interesting questions it raises, and to aid in solving one or two of them. All Old-French scholars will hope that, in now leaving his task in the hands of Prof. G. Paris, Dr. Koschwitz is far from finally abandoning a subject which he has done so much to elucidate.

HENRY NICOL.

OBITUARY.

DR. JOHN JEREMIAH BIGSBY, F.R.S., a well-known writer on palaeozoic fossils, has passed away at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. The greater part of his life was spent in Canada and in the United States, and his writings on American geology date back to 1820, when he contributed a paper to Silliman's Journal. Dr. Bigsby's best-known works are his Thesaurus Siluricus, which appeared in 1868, and his Thesaurus Devonico-Carboniferus, published ten years later. The "Bigsby Medal," which he presented to the Geological Society of London a few years ago, was awarded at the anniversary meeting on Friday, the 18th inst., to the French geologist, M. Charles Barrois.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

Kant's Critique of Practical Reason and other Works on the Theory of Ethics, translated by T. K. Abbott, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Dublin (Longmans), is a new and enlarged edition of a previous translation by the same hand. The other works contained in the volume are the Foundation of the Metaphysic of Ethic and the first part of Religion within the Limits of Mere Reason. Everyone can see the great convenience of having thus brought together the treatises which expound the main principles and bearings of the Kantian moral system. The translation is a piece of good work, which gives in readable English a fair rendering of the original ideas. In one point, indeed, it is better than the original. For in his translation Mr. Abbott has corrected the many clerical errors which here, as elsewhere, trouble the reader of Kant's works in the German editions. When we farther state that the book has a second pagination referring to Rosenkranz's text, and that it is introduced by a memoir in which Kant's physical investigations are specially noticed and some criticisms offered on his ethical theory, we have given an outline of the contents of a very useful book, and one far above the customary quality of translators' work.

THE appearance of a sixth edition of Prof. Veitch's translation of the principal works of Descartes on general philosophy bears pleasing evidence of the interest taken in the great Frenchman, and affords the best proof of the value of the translator's work. This new edition differs from its predecessors chiefly in the greater extension given to the introductory essay and the new topics there discussed. After a brief reference to the antecedents of Cartesianism, we have an exposition and a defence of its fundamental principle, followed by some examination of Malebranche and Spinoza. In this examination, where Prof. Veitch seems largely, though without any distinct statement, to track the steps of his colleague, Prof. Caird, in the article "Cartesianism" of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, Malebranche and Spinoza are submitted to the process of a reductio ad absurdum. "Spinoza," it is said, "developed Descartes by amending the formula cogito ergo sum into cogito ergo non sum." Spinoza, indeed, is treated not in himself, but as a type of a class of thinkers opposed to a "psychological school" of which Prof. Veitch constitutes himself the champion. The system of these thinkers is described as subversive of personality, freedom, and morality—"their methods and language" are said to "have neither coherency nor intelligibility;" "their demonstrations are the grossest form of petitory assumption," and "they take refuge in mere assumptive verbalism." Their coryphaeus in later days has been Hegel. On Hegel's logic Prof. Veitch discourses at some length in a tone which may be inferred when we quote his description (obiter dictum) of the Philosophy of Nature and of Spirit as "mere manipulations of a harlequin logic." There is undoubtedly a great deal to be said against Hegelianism in general and in its details; but probably language like this is not the best evidence of the critical temper, and even the alleged arrogance of the Hegelians can scarcely excuse it. Some of them, too, may protest against the magisterial decision that "Strauss and Feuerbach are the true consequent Hegelians." It is not quite safe to judge philosophies by their fruits, real or pretended; nor is it the highest method of criticism, though perhaps it proves some rhetorical ingenuity, to confute a theory or proposition by showing that, in the sense in which the critic understands it, it leads to contradiction and absurdity.

MR. RICHARD LOWNDES, the author of René Descartes: his Life and Meditations—a New Translation of the "Meditationes," with Introduction, Memoir, and Commentary (F. Norgate), must have been misinformed when he learned that the Scotch translation of Descartes was a scarce book. His somewhat literal translation of the Meditations is flanked on one hand by a lengthy Introduction, mostly borrowed from Kuno Fischer's History of Modern Philosophy, and by an epilogue on the other. The Introduction contains a full and interesting biography of Descartes; and the concluding commentary traces out, under the various heads of logic, psychology, theology, and nature-philosophy, the main conclusions suggested or established by the Cartesian method of enquiry. Mr. Lowndes has read Descartes under the influence of Kant and of German philosophy; and, by his emphasis on the bearings of Cartesianism in that direction, he may probably have brought English readers to notice points they would otherwise neglect. There is much various and interesting material for thought in his book.

The Metaphysics of the School. By Thomas Harper, S.J. (Macmillan.) This book, the author informs us, is the first volume of a work on metaphysics which proposes to present itself to the world under the form of four portly volumes! Its object is to induce the public to concern itself with scholastic teaching. With this end in view, we have offered to us in the first volume an Introduction, consisting of eighty pages of type not too large, in which the author attempts to collect the charges ordinarily brought against scholasticism, and, while professing to refute them, to prejudice the reader in its favour; and, in addition to this Introduction, five hundred and seventy pages of exposition of the philosophy of St. Thomas Aquinas. The subjects discussed in the present volume are the definition of Metaphysics, Being, the transcendental attributes of Being. We congratulate the author on his courage. It is an enterprise of some magnitude to attempt to interest the public, or even that narrower public "our English students and men of letters," in metaphysics at all; but to go forth cheerfully to try and interest them in scholastic metaphysics, and above all in four portly volumes of scholastic metaphysics—this affords one of those spectacles in which the gods are said to rejoice. We must excuse ourselves, while this work is incomplete, from saying anything of the general plan on which it is constructed. Nor shall we dwell long on the Preface, in which the author attempts to dispose of the objections to scholasticism which for some centuries past have prevailed against it. Securus judicat orbis terrarum. Father Harper would have the verdict against scholasticism reconsidered. In order to this, he collects many of these objections—such, e.g., as that the scholastics adopted a barbarous terminology, that their style was not classical, that their diction was dry and poor. And again, in point of matter, that they converse in questions of matters incomprehensible, that they were wont to dispute, with extremest stretching of the brain, about questions . . . commendable neither by reason of their utility nor of their certitude; that scholasticism carried on its countless philosophical skirmishes with the help of worthless mental abstractions, and the like. These charges Father Harper treats sometimes directly, sometimes after manipulation, and sometimes by mere blank denial. About the main charge against the schoolmen—viz., the habit they show of being more anxious to draw conclusions from premisses than to acquire valuable premisses, and of being, therefore, willing to take many matters on general authority where the general voice is valueless—not regarding it as a charge, but as a merit, he naturally says very little. Little as he says, however, he cannot keep wholly out of sight the old antagonism between the principle of authority and its adversary, the principle of private judgment. Father Harper does not shrink from the expression of a conviction "that the metaphysics of the school does incline the mind towards a belief in the Catholic creed." That may well be; but does he not herein discern an objection to scholasticism in the judgment of the general world more adequate to account for the death which has overtaken it than any or all of those which he has deigned to discuss? It is the modern spirit which has proved fatal to scholasticism, not technical objections merely, such as those which Father Harper has enumerated in his Introduction.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

CAPT. F. M. HUNTER, Assistant Political Resident at Aden, has just published at Bombay (Byculla: Education Society's Press) A Grammar of the Somali Language. He has also added a short historical notice and some exercises for beginners, together with vocabularies.

MR. FRED. JEPPE, of Pretoria, has this year resumed the publication (Maritzburg: Davis and Sons) of the Transvaal Book Almanac and Directory. The volume includes an historical sketch of the Transvaal, and other matter which at the present moment will be found to possess much interest.

AFTER a silence of several months, Capt. Gallieni has at length been able to communicate with the French authorities on the West Coast of Africa. The last that was heard of his expedition was the attack made upon it in the Bambarra country in May, and a good deal of anxiety has since been felt at the continued absence of news. Capt. Gallieni's letter is dated October 25, but only reached Medina, on the Upper Senegal, at the end of December. He was then in safety at Nango, a village a few miles from Segou-Sikoro, where he had been for some time carrying on negotiations with the Sultan, Ahmadu, who appears at last to have been induced to permit the French to trade up the Niger to his town. Capt. Gallieni does not speak very positively respecting the return of the expedition, but hopes to be allowed to leave Ahmadu's territory in about two months' time.

ON March 6 of last year we recorded the formation of the first European settlement on the western shore of Lake Tanganyika by the agents of the London Missionary Society. The place chosen was in Uguha, near the native village of Mtowa and to the north of the Lukuga Creek, which had so long been a bone of contention to geographers. Until quite lately nothing had been heard of the missionaries, except from the mention made by Mr. Thomson of his visit to Mtowa on his way to Ujiji, but some of the fruits of their observations have now come to hand in an interesting report on Uguha and its people. In this Mr. Hutley gives us some information regarding the Waguha and their probable origin, their mode of government, houses, recreations, manners and customs, social intercourse, practices in regard to marriage, death, and burial, &c. Though polygamy is said to be almost universal, especially among the chiefs, it would seem that the ordinary Waguha usually content themselves with bigamy. Their modes of salutation are peculiar, and regulated by strict etiquette; but the oddest customs seem to be those which regulate the feeding of a chief. He has his water fetched in a special jar by one of his wives, each taking her turn, and silence is maintained until the solemn operation of water-carrying and cooking has been performed and the great man has had his meal in solitary grandeur in the wife's house. When he has finished, he graciously calls to his wife, who has been standing mute outside, to clear away his dinner-mat!

THERE appears to be some probability of an expedition being sent to search for the remains of the long-lost Leichhardt expedition in the interior of Australia. A handsome reward has been offered; and, if it has no other result, it will bring about a thorough exploration of a wide and unknown tract of country.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Relics of the Primitive Inhabitants of Pennsylvania.—At the base of a cliff of Potsdam sandstone on the River Susquehanna, near the iron-making village of Chickis, there is a vaulted recess, or rock-shelter, which had long been tenanted by the old stone-implement workers of the country. Mr. S. Haldeman, having resided in the neighbourhood for forty years, explored the retreat, and has contributed a description of the objects which he thus obtained to the Transactions of the American Philosophical Society. The exploration yielded a large number of stone arrow-heads, knives, scrapers, borers, and hammer-stones, with about three hundred fragments of pottery. The more notable specimens are figured in a series of fourteen quarto plates accompanying the paper.

THE Council of the Royal Astronomical Society have awarded their gold medal to Prof. Axel Moeller, of Lund, for his careful investigations of the motion of Faye's periodical comet; and, at the annual meeting on the 11th inst., the President, Mr. Hind, explained the reasons of the Council's decision. The comet, which was first discovered in November 1843, has since returned five times to perihelion; and Prof. Moeller has proved, by the accuracy of his predictions, how successfully he has traced the path of the comet by his very careful calculations.

DURING the next week the three planets Venus, Jupiter, and Saturn will be seen in the evening sky near one another under exceptionally favourable circumstances. The nearest distance at which Venus passes Jupiter on February 19 will be nearly three degrees, and the nearest distance at which she passes Saturn on February 27 nearly five degrees, so that the conjunctions between the planets will be by no means close. But the circumstance that these conjunctions occur while Venus is near her greatest elongation from the sun, and that even at the end of twilight the planets have still considerable altitudes above the horizon, renders their present aspect very remarkable. Indeed, it is not known at present how many centuries have elapsed since the three planets were seen together so conspicuously. On the evening of March 3 the moon will join the three planets, and the four bodies will form a constellation the like of which even the youngest child will get no chance of seeing again.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

PROF. EMIL HÜBNER has published a second edition of his Grundriss zu Vorlesungen über die Lateinische Grammatik. This useful little book, which corresponds in character to the similar manuals published by the author on the history of Roman literature and the history of classical philology, should be in the hands of all scholars who wish for a clear view of the whole field of Latin grammar and the most important works written upon the subject.

IN the last number of the Journal of Philology (vol. ix., No. 18) A. W. Verrall supplements his essay on the supposed word ποτή by a second on the date of Korax and Tisias, intended to support his view of their relation to Pindar. D. B. Monro, in a paper on "Traces of Different Dialects in the Language of Homer," criticises the statements of Prof. Sayce on the Homeric question. I. Bywater discusses a fragment of Heraclitus preserved by Albertus Magnus. The publication of the late W. G. Clark's notes on Aristophanes is continued. R. Ellis ("On the Anthologia Latina") gives an account of a Reims MS. (743 or 739) of the fourteenth century, containing, among other things, a Latin poem, now published in the Latin anthology (Meyer, 262; Riese, 897). Ellis gives the variants of the Reims MS., which are considerable in number, in this piece and in some others, and prints from it some hitherto unpublished poems. He also discusses the date of a poem on Quinterius (1582 in Meyer), which, though rejected by Riese, he inclines to think may, after all, be ancient. Ellis and F. P. Simpson have also notes on Propertius. Notes on Catullus, Horace, and Lucilius are contributed by H. A. J. Munro. J. P. Postgate discusses the genuineness of Tibullus iv. 13. H. F. Pelham contributes an essay on the Roman curiae, and T. H. Dyer writes on the treaty between Rome and Carthage in the First Consulate.

THE Revue de Philologie (vol. iv., livr. 4) contains an interesting account by Léon Fontaine of two Montpellier MSS. (ninth and eleventh centuries), containing the moral distiches of Cato, the first of which (C) appears to contain some important variants. M. Fontaine argues from internal evidence that this MS. was derived from the same original as those lettered E, Y, and S by Hauthal. Notes on points of grammar are contributed by O. Riemann, on Apian (ii. 82) by Ch. G., and on Varro (L. L. 7, 3) by Havet. The "Revue des Revues" gives an account of the philological papers published in 1879 in Great Britain, Greece, Italy, the Low Countries, Russia, Sweden and Norway, and Switzerland.

IN the Archaeologisch-epigraphische Mittheilungen aus Oesterreich (vol. iv., part ii.) E. Peterson gives the first instalment of an elaborate essay on the various representatives of the three-formed Hekaté. Torma publishes some new Latin inscriptions from Dacia, with notes on others previously printed in the third volume of the Corpus Inscriptionum. Böhm gives an account of antiquities found along the Danube from Pancsova to Orsova, and Hoemes of similar discoveries made in Bosnia and the Herzegovina, and Domaszewski of an antiquarian tour in Carinthia.

THE Zeitschrift für die Oesterreichischen Gymnasien (1880, part ii.) contains notes on Martial by Flach, and contributions by Bönsch on the Latin glosses. In the following number Morawski has notes on the declamations attributed to Quintilian, Ludwich on the Greek anthology, and Schenkl on Ausonius.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—(Thursday, Feb. 10.)

HENRY REEVE, ESQ., C.B., in the Chair.—Miss Stokes contributed a paper, which was read by the Director, on two fragments of gold-coloured bronze in the Petrie Museum, Dublin. The objects are thin disks, covered with a delicate pattern worked in spiral lines; to one of the disks a conical spike is attached, and the other evidently once had a similar appendage. It has been suggested that these were the horns of a helmet, but the thinness of the metal rendered it improbable that they were warlike decorations. The theory which Miss Stokes put forward was that they were portions of a radiated crown of seven spikes rising from a chaplet of disks, and she exhibited a restoration of the whole crown, and many drawings of similar examples—among others, a figure from the first painted chamber in the catacomb of Praetextatus in the Appian Way; a figure of a "Hera" from the marriage of Peleus and Thetis, from the Vatican Library; the Apollo found by Dr. Schliemann in Ilium Novum; and many coins of Roman emperors and others. The radiated crown was assumed by emperors when arrogating divinity; and for that reason probably, and not as a physical torture, a crown of thorns was placed on the brow of our Lord by the Roman soldiers. The spiral pattern which ornaments the disks is found in Ireland as late as the third century A.D. both on stone monuments and on bone knife-handles.—Mr. Franks said that he was not quite able to accept Miss Stokes' theory, but had no better to propose. The objects were not stamped, as Miss Stokes thought, but cast. The spiral patterns were pre-Christian, and similar to pre-Roman ornament found in England. After Christianity was introduced into Ireland, the spirals were supplanted by the interlaced pattern.

FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.—(Friday, Feb. 11.)

W. R. S. RALSTON, ESQ., V.-P., in the Chair.—The Honorary Secretary read a paper by the Rev. W. S. Lach-Szyrma on "Slavonic Folk-Lore," which chiefly dealt with the parallel between Cornish-British and Slavonic folk-lore.—Mr. Alfred Nutt read a paper on "The Aryan Expulsion and Return Formula in Celtic Folk-Tales and Helden-sage." J. G. von Hahn gave the title of "expulsion and return formula" to a widely spread story, the best examples of which are presented in the mythical adventures of Romulus, Theseus, and Cyrus. He found traces of the formula among every Aryan people but the Celts. Mr. Alfred Nutt showed that the Celtic races had preserved the formula with greater fullness of incident than any other Aryan race. He proved its existences among the Gael in connexion with the two great heroic cycles—that of Cúchulaind and that of Finn and Oisín—and showed that it was still current in the Highlands as a folk-tale. He found fewer traces of the formula among the Kymry. He pointed out, in conclusion, the advantage likely to accrue to comparative mythology from a fuller study of the Celtic mythic tales.

FINE ART.

MR. WHISTLER'S PASTELS.

MR. WHISTLER'S exhibition of a couple of score of pastels, which are now on view at the rooms of the Fine Art Society, shows him, perhaps, to greater advantage than has any previous exhibition of his engaging and expressive, if sometimes wayward, art. Of the etchings displayed several weeks ago, some were, as was said at the time in this very journal, distinctly disappointing; others were most agreeable reminiscences of a Venetian mingling of glory and squalor. The pastels, if unequal, are unequal within much narrower limits. Here and there they may be inexpressive; here and there the gold has not been hit; but the arrow has not fallen absurdly wide of it. There are, it is true, two or three nocturnes scarcely better than the oil sketches—the agreeable if insufficient beginnings—familiar under the name of “nocturnes” to the visitor to the Grosvenor Gallery. But feeble and immature performances are quite the exceptions; generally the pastels achieve most thoroughly the success that is proper to them. Here and there the artist, selecting this uncommon medium, has grappled with difficulties which another medium would not have presented; now and again he has courted difficulties in order that his skill might overcome them. Such tours de force are interesting, even when they are not legitimate. But, still more frequently, the effect beautifully obtained has been an effect which could hardly have been obtained in any other medium, and Mr. Whistler has obtained it with extraordinary command of a brilliant sketcher's skill. The knowledge of what to select, of what to reject, and then of what to express with especial summariness of treatment has seldom been shown so completely. In his best work here Mr. Whistler has been quite unerring; there is unity in it from beginning to end; the conception was clearly formed, and it has been executed deftly and with uniformity of excellence.

Nor would it be doing quite justice to these fascinating pastels to speak of them as the record of rapid impressions. Venetian nature and Venetian art have really been looked at very closely, as well as with an artist's eye, before so many of their essential characteristics came to be recorded in this swift but penetrating way. It ought not to be necessary to say that the most laborious record of the most deliberate impression would not have achieved this particular success on which Mr. Whistler is now to be congratulated; that, in truth, two qualities, or two sets of qualities, have been of necessity found together—the power to see most sensitively and to record most summarily. Such a combination affords, on its rare appearance, one of the keenest pleasures to be met with by the visitor to picture galleries—a subject has been understood and appreciated to the bottom, and then it has been rendered by such an exercise of skill as is in itself a highly interesting feat.

The artist's intelligence of his subject, and his extreme agility in conveying to us the impression it made on him, being the points for which the present show of pastels is remarkable, we need hardly go so far into detail as to pretend select all the good examples of his skill. The best examples unite a quite Japanese mastery of the art of rightly disposing the masses of shade and of hue with a sense of full rich colour certainly not derived from the art of Japan, and almost new to us in Mr. Whistler's work. That Mr. Whistler could be a refined colourist, we did know before; but hardly that, while keeping his refinement, he could be also so forcible a one. Nobler colour than that evident in The Red Doorway has never been attained by such unambitious means and such speedy labour. And, abundant and glowing as the colour is, it is likewise most subtle. The Riva, Sunset, Red and Gold, is one of the most successful examples of a power to reject everything that is superfluous, to select everything that is entirely necessary. Not even in the slightest of the etchings of Rembrandt or the hastiest sketches of David Cox was art more abstract and summary—the scanty lines or the swift blots more significant. A few touches of the pastel in various colours, and somehow the sky is aglow and the water dancing. The thing has been wrought as it were by pure magic. It would, under any circumstances, be agreeable to record the appearance of such brilliant and such learned little designs as these. Perhaps it is especially agreeable to those on whom, some two years ago, there lay the necessity of plainly distinguishing between the excellent work Mr. Whistler had aforesaid performed and the affected labours on which he then seemed bent. They have the pleasure of seeing the fulfilment of the hopes then expressed that so adroit and flexible an artist would not remain too obstinately faithful to eccentric error. A reputation first won by original merit, then for a time imperilled by original absurdity, has been now established and confirmed by the beautiful and pregnant designs which charm some of us by the learning, and all of us by the vivacity, of their art.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

MESSRS. AGNEW'S EXHIBITION.

It is not likely that Messrs. Agnew's beautiful new galleries in Old Bond Street will soon again contain such a fine collection of English water-colours as is at present on view there. The Turners alone are well worth a visit. Of this master's early style there is a nice little brown drawing of A Waterfall; of his Yorkshire series there are Hardraw Fall, Aysgarth Force, and High Force, Fall of Tees. The Aysgarth has faded and lost in tone; the others have faded also, but with such unanimity that it is doubtful if they were ever more beautiful than they are now, with their softly glowing ambers and greeny blues; the Hardraw is especially lovely. Nor are examples of his later style wanting. There is a large drawing of Hastings Beach, interesting from its having been presented by Turner to his physician, Sir Antony Carlyle, instead of a fee; the Arundel Castle and Town of the “England and Wales” series; a beautiful but unfinished water-colour of Rotterdam; and two wonderful drawings in body colour on tinted paper like those of the “Rivers of France,” which it will be worth while to compare with Mr. Whistler's pastels a few doors off. For those who prefer the homelier art of David Cox, there are some charming little works very representative and choice. Nor are the seniors of these two great artists unrepresented. Of J. Varley and G. Barrett there are good examples; indeed, we have seldom seen a better specimen of the latter's quieter colouring than the Classical Landscape on the second screen. Of other deceased English water-colourists Copley Fielding is the best represented. The Landscape and Cows (80) is unusually fine in colour and poetical in feeling—praise which may be repeated in respect of the Lake Scene (32). The Arundel (a very different Arundel from that of Turner) and some other smaller examples are all delightful specimens of his refined and gentle brush. By Prout there are but two, but one of these, Albert Dürer's Well at Nuremberg, is a masterpiece in its way. The examples of Turner's clever imitator, Pyne, are good and interesting as links between Turner and the “sweetly pretty” chromo-lithographic school which is now disappearing before the force of a reaction towards realism often neither sweet nor pretty.

These epithets, or others equally desirable, can, however, be applied to nearly all the very tastefully selected drawings here. Those who admire the graceful art of Birket Foster will find a very choice little collection of his drawings on the second screen, one side of which is almost entirely occupied by them. On the other there are some wonderful drawings of birds by H. S. Marks, decorative in character, but full of humour—the humour of birds, not of men—beautiful in colour and perfect in manipulation. Here also is a sweet little landscape by Mrs. Allingham, one of the late W. Hunt's miracles of minute imitation, and a vigorous drawing by the late C. R. Leslie of a scene from Henry IV. The vigour and humour seem, however, to be somewhat overdone, and the result more like a pantomime than Shakspeare.

Perhaps the most interesting of the figure drawings here is the Don Juan of Ford Madox-Brown, rich and iridescent in colour as a sea-shell, admirably apt in choice of type for the figures, and fine in grouping and expression. It is a true illustration of the purer side of Byron's imagination—the dream without the after-thought, the poetry without the cynicism. It is only a true poet-artist that could thus refine the much-alloyed gold of Byron's Don Juan—a work which is really a satire on all poetry. Interesting also, mostly for the rarity of his water-colour work, is Millais' very brilliant little replica of his Black Brunswicker (205). Above it hangs a Head of a Child, by F. Walker.

Though almost entirely confined to English work, the exhibition contains some water-colours by foreign artists, the most important of which is Edouard Detaille's very accomplished drawing of the Scots Guards returning from Exercise in Hyde Park. There are also some pretty tinted drawings of children by Edouard Frère, a fine study by Fortuny, and others which we must leave the reader to discover for himself together with many fine landscapes by living Englishmen which we have omitted. Mr. Keeley-Halswelle, whose well-known skill as a figure-painter and colourist is worthily shown in A Member of the Conclave (94), seems to be striking out a very original and strong line for himself as a landscape painter.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE hear that H.R.H. the Marchioness of Lorne has completed a water-colour sketch of Mr. William Lee, the hero of the novel, A Sailor's Sweetheart, lashed, as he represents himself, in the top of the water-logged brig in the South Pacific.

THE exhibition of mezzotints which will soon open at the Burlington Fine Arts Club will, we understand, include examples by nearly all the great masters of that method of engraving, from the date of its invention, early in the seventeenth century, to a period of only about forty years ago, when David Lucas executed the more famous of his wonderful reproductions of Constable.

MESSRS. GEORGE WATERSTON AND SONS have now in the press a reproduction of the collection of water-colour drawings of ancient Scottish weapons, ornaments, &c., made by the late James Drummond, R.S.A. At Mr. Drummond's death the collection was acquired by the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland for their library; and the present volume will have an Introduction, with a series of notices of the several plates, by Mr. Joseph Anderson, custodian of the National Museum of that society. The work will consist of upwards of fifty plates, illustrating, with details, more than 240 objects. It will be issued in folio size, and it is hoped that it may be ready for subscribers within about six months.

THE Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies will hold a meeting at 22 Albemarle Street, on Thursday, February 24, at five p.m., when papers will be read on the Olympian Register, by Prof. Mahaffy; on the Pentathlon, by E. Myers; on an Inscription from Halicarnassus, by Rev. E. L. Hicks; on the Site of Dodona, by the Bishop of Lincoln; and on the Erechtheum, by James Fergusson.

MR. PFUNDERS wishes us to state that a paper on "Japanese Art, Literature, and the Legends, Poems, &c., depicted on Ancient and Modern Art Work" will be read and discussed, and a large number of illustrations exhibited and explained, at No. 1, Cleveland Row, St. James's, at an early date. Admission only by invitation.

THE annual exhibition of the Royal Scottish Academy opens to the public to-day. The total number of pictures, &c., submitted was nearly three thousand, out of which room has been found for about 1,100. As usual, the exhibition includes some works of eminent English artists which have already been seen at Burlington House. Mr. W. F. Vallance, before an Associate, has been admitted to the rank of full Academician.

MR. BROCK is engaged upon a bust of Sir Charles Hastings, the founder of the British Medical Association, which will be placed in some suitable building in the city of Worcester.

AN official report of the progress made in the German excavations at Olympia since October last appears in the Reichs-Anzeiger, February 8. The work done has been chiefly in the nature of completing the previous excavations, and has accordingly been more of a gain to architecture than to sculpture. The floor of the Temple of Zeus has been examined, and the dimensions of the base of the great statue traced out; so also were found the place for the altar under the open roof, details of the roof tiles, and evidence that the paintings by Panaenos, usually supposed to have been executed on three sides of the throne itself, had in reality been painted on three finely faced screens built on three sides of the impluvium, the fourth side being occupied by the statue. The treasury of the Sikyonians continues to perplex the authorities. The inscription, they say, is not older than the beginning of the fifth century B.C. The building itself is wholly of the Doric order. But Pausanias says it was built in B.C. 644, and had two brazen chambers, the one in the Doric, the other in the Ionic order. There is no sign of brazen chambers. Much has been discovered on various sites at Olympia to illustrate the early stages of Greek architecture, more particularly the stage of transition from buildings of wood protected and decorated by terracotta to buildings of stone and marble.

THE Pioneer (Allahabad) says that, from a recent report on the condition of the great Buddhist tope of Sar Nath, near Benares, it appears that the stupa is in too far advanced a stage of decay to permit of restoration at any reasonable cost. It has accordingly been decided to abandon the ruin to its inevitable fate, but at the same time to postpone the evil day as far as possible by removing all vegetation from its surface, and by repairing the outer casing in parts. All available details connected with the structure are to be minutely examined and carefully recorded by photography.

MUNKACSY is at present at work on a huge picture representing Christ before Pilate. This is a somewhat unusual subject for the distinguished Hungarian artist to paint; but it is said that he shows in it deep religious feeling. The subject, as might be expected, is not treated in the conventional manner, but is fraught with Munkacsy's powerful individuality. This picture is intended to be exhibited at the next Salon.

A NEW painter has lately been brought to light from out the vast number of the unknown. Dr. W. Bode, one of the conservators of the Berlin Gallery, was examining recently some pictures that had been stowed away in a lumber-room of the building, when he lighted upon one which struck him as remarkable both in style and execution. It was the portrait of Jean Cuspinianus, councillor to Maximilian I., with his wife and two children. Dr. Bode had this work cleaned, and found an inscription at the back stating the painter was named Bernard Strigel, that he was a native of Memmingen, and that he had painted with his left hand the portraits of Maximilian and his family. The portrait referred to is considered by Dr. Bode to be without doubt the fine picture now in the Belvedere at Vienna, of which the painter has hitherto been described as unknown.

AN exhibition of Félix Régamey's water-colour sketches, cartoons, and drawings has recently been held in the offices of the Vie Moderne newspaper in the Rue Taibout, Paris. The artist's work is varied: there are large cartoons, bold and effective; there are mere sketches that seem to consist of a few daring strokes of the pencil, and that yet are specially graphic; there are glimpses of theatrical life in Japan; there are accurately rendered heads of the men, women, and children. M. Régamey chanced to notice during his visits to those far-off countries with which his pencil does its utmost to familiarise us. The exhibition is à propos, for Japonisme, as Charles Blanc terms it, is at its height in France as in England.

THE Portfolio is rich in good things this month. In the first place it gives us a delightfully suggestive etching by K. Macbeth, full of pensive sentiment and grace. It is entitled The Ferry, and the artist is stated to be engaged on painting this subject for his Academy picture. The etching is but a slight sketch, but it conveys, as other of Mr. Macbeth's etchings have done, the whole poetry of the scene. Mr. Leo Grindon's account of Liverpool reads, it must be owned, somewhat like a guide-book description, especially when compared with Miss Julia Cartwright's pleasant history of the Certosa at Florence, which she begins with a sketch of the life of its founder, Niccolò Acciaiuoli, a very remarkable man of the fourteenth century. Prof. Church also discourses with great knowledge on "Some Italian Embroideries" or lace-work, of which illustrations are given; and a magnificent reproduction by Amand Durand of Marc Antonio's renowned engraving after Raphael of the Virgin and Child on the Clouds completes the wealth of the number.

THE Gazette des Beaux-Arts somewhat overwhelms us with its ten articles this month. Of these the most important, perhaps, at the present juncture is the first of a series by M. Marius Vachon entitled "Etudes administratives." The first deals, of course, with the Salon question—one more interesting to French than to English readers. M. Alfred Darcil gives an account of the Trésor de la Cathédrale de Reims; M. Paul Lefort continues his history of Velasquez; M. Gruyer gives some interesting particulars respecting Thomas Inghirami, the friend of Leo. X. and several other Popes, a man distinguished for his gifts of oratory and learning, of whom Raphael painted a portrait now in the Pitti Palace at Florence. This portrait, as reproduced in the Gazette, does not certainly give the idea of a man of great intellect.

A MUSEUM has just been opened at the Observatory in Paris. It is more especially intended for the display of astronomical instruments, some of which are of historical interest; but, besides these, a collection of pictures, drawings, medals, and photographs all relating to astronomy, as well as a series of portraits and busts of great astronomers, are offered to view. Some of the portraits are said to have a real art value, being painted by the best French masters.

A SERIES of articles on the "Art and the Artistic Industries of Switzerland" is now appearing in L'Art. They are written by M. Rust, and are illustrated by a number of admirable wood-cuts from pictures by Swiss artists.

SOME anxiety is felt in the Paris world of art respecting the fine collection that M. Léopold Double has left behind him, the value of which is estimated at four million francs. (£160,000). M. Double was the owner of Falconnet's famous clock, representing the Three Graces; and of the superb Fontenoy vases, manufactured at Sèvres in commemoration of the battle after which they were named. Connoisseurs declare that M. Lucien Double, the son of the old man just dead, will not sanction a sale.

THE recent bad weather in Paris has had some effect on the national galleries of the capital. The rooms devoted to the exhibition of the works of Delacroix, Delaroche, and Ingres have been much injured by the accumulation and subsequent melting of the snow; Delacroix' admirable picture representing Dante and Virgil is especially stained and damaged. Similar disasters having occurred last year, the Fine Arts authorities should have been on their guard at the beginning of the present winter.

THE STAGE.

MR. BOOTH IN LEAR.

IN the least familiar of all the parts that he has played in London, Mr. Booth has obtained what is perhaps his highest success; and to the interest felt in listening to the gorgeous and pregoant diction of a tragedy too long neglected on the stage there is added the interest of one great performance, powerfully conceived, and executed with sustained excellence. Somewhat slowly has Mr. Booth been winning upon the London public. His Hamlet, though opinions differed about it, won, on the whole, hardly more than the modest triumphs of a succès d'estime. Lacking both in that charm of wistful meditation and of electrical passion which Mr. Irving, at his happiest, can bestow upon it, Hamlet in Mr. Booth's hand failed to actually fascinate, and was most thoroughly, though most politely, condemned when it was said to be "scholarly." In Richelieu, again, Mr. Booth came unavoidably to be measured with Mr. Irving. There is more of artifice than of art in the part and in the play, and Mr. Booth was hardly found to possess Mr. Irving's faculty of enlivening dead stage matter with touches half-humorous and wholly realistic. Bertuccio, in The Fool's Revenge, enabled some to compare him with Mr. Phelps, but it was with Mr. Phelps in a part which the creator of Sadler's Wells had made his own. The resources of his art were once more—and perhaps more fully than before—seen to be at Mr. Booth's command; but neither play nor part was quite of a kind to aid Mr. Booth to secure in England his proper reputation. Othello helped Mr. Booth's reputation in so far as it showed him intellectually the master of one more great character; but a seeming absence of passion told against the entire success of the performance. In Iago, everything must come from the head—nothing can even seem to come from the heart; and Mr. Booth, having studied Iago, not only with diligence, but with that unflinching judgment which—commonplace gift as it would seem to be—is really one of the most remarkable characteristics of a fine actor, was enabled to give complete form to a highly intellectual conception. The public interest had gradually been growing, and the next effort was eagerly waited for.

An audience must be difficult to satisfy if it is not satisfied with Lear as Mr. Booth plays it. A character, around the interpretation of which there are perhaps less stage traditions than accompany any other capital performance in the Shaksperian repertory, has been sometimes used chiefly as affording occasion for exceptional display of the simulation of this or that quality or sentiment. On the stage, Lear has been too little looked at as a whole. Here there may be an effort to impress by mere violence of imprecation; there, by the exhibition of the horrors of mania. But Mr. Booth is far too sincere an artist to be content with successfully snatching at an occasion for particular effects, and his presentation of Lear is really what it is of course quite obvious that it is intended to be—a profound study of mental condition incident upon old age, and the long habit of authority still half retained when it should be wholly set aside. There is a remark made, albeit playfully, by the Earl of Kent, when he is asked how old he is—that he is “not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for anything.” It is pointed, of course, at the affections of Lear, which are at once exaggerated and exacting—the affections of the very old. These Mr. Booth contrives to display, and, better than to display, to suggest. And just as forcibly he indicates the life-long love of authority—the strength of self-will retained when strength of mind is long gone—the general irritability which finds vent in prompt rage over trifling occasions, the rapid change of mood, the sensitiveness of a nature too much bared to all the blows that fall.

It is not by a few subtle and thoughtful touches—it is by a long succession of them—that Lear is thus depicted for us by Mr. Booth. From the first, Lear is seen to be without the sense of the due relations of things, and insanity has been defined as consisting in just this absence of a sense of proportion. As Mr. Booth shows us, it may be his accumulated griefs that lead Lear's insanity to become active—to break into visible mania; but it has been passively existing from the beginning. Of all the subtle touches that show first what Lear has gone through, and then what he has become, it is impossible to take account in a brief notice. Indeed, something of the sense of packed and crowded matter which one has in reading or in any way following the text of this tragedy, in which Shakspeare expressed what had become most mature in his thought and his experience, one cannot help also having as one witnesses this most pregnant performance of the American actor. But to indicate here only one or two of the touches will imply the existence of many, and may set the playgoer to a closeness of observation without which Mr. Booth's best art—which is rarely displayed in the passages seemingly most effective—will appear of little utility. Only a very keen insight into the ways of the insane could have led Mr. Booth to his admirable exhibition of the absence of self-consciousness displayed by Lear in the storm. The thought is entirely a kindly one for the Fool's exposure; Lear is unconscious of his own, and wraps his cloak round the Fool, who has no “greater malady” to render him dull to “the lesser”—dull to “this contentious storm.” Another touch of admirably sympathetic invention is that in the second act, when the Fool is talking glibly and Lear generally listening, but, as Mr. Booth makes clear, in truth deeply pre-occupied—seeing very soon, and sooner than the text indicates, the mistake he has committed in Cordelia's banishment. A rare command of refined facial expression is needed to suggest a track of thought so remote from the present matter. Mr. Booth has such command, and it is constantly and fruitfully exercised. Altogether, his performance of Lear is an illumination of the Shaksperian text.

If criticism be an intellectual light thrown on the subject, Mr. Booth is a Shaksperian critic—a practical critic of the art of Shakspeare.

STAGE NOTES.

THE performance of Macbeth, now given again at Sadler's Wells, is one with which London audiences are fairly familiar, except as regards the acting of the “title character” by Mr. Charles Warner. Mrs. Crowe's vigorous and thoughtful performance of Lady Macbeth has been seen many times. On the whole, we believe it has gained by the additional experience of the actress. Mr. Vezin plays Macduff, and there could not easily be found a better performance of the part than that which he gives. The Macbeth of Mr. Warner, if it may not be reckoned quite equal to his Othello, is a highly creditable study—his Othello we considered almost the best that had been seen on the contemporary stage. A revival of Hamlet, with Mr. Vezin in the great part, is promised as almost immediately forthcoming.

At the Royalty Theatre the burlesque is now preceded by a little drama of “real life” by Mr. Wallis Mackay, in which the author has been more fortunate in his choice of dialogue than in his choice of story. The “real life” is not always of the most savoury, and now and again its truth is of the kind that is stranger than fiction. The writer is capable of better work. He has put many good things into the mouth of a certain lawyer, characteristically played by Mr. Righton, one of the best of our character-actors. Miss Kate Lawler represents the heroine with more of vigour than of ease. Generally, we are inclined to think that the piece suffers somewhat by the method of its interpretation.

ACCOUNTS from Paris inform us of the success of a new comic opera by Lecoq, called Janot, the words of which are by Meilhac and Halévy. It is said that the libretto is as amusing as if it were by Scribe. Probably it is really much more amusing than anything that Scribe ever wrote. The scene is laid in the time of Charles the Tenth. The costumes, which are arranged with scrupulous care, afford occasion for quite a novel display. Mdlle. Jeanne Granier plays the hero in a series of masculine dresses; and though there are those who find with respect to her that she is a good deal less refined—not to say more vulgar—than when she made her first bow to the public of Paris, there is, it seems, in the present opera little occasion for anything that is not graceful. Mdlle. Desclauzas, who is really a very witty actress—a stout but piquante matron, essentially Parisian—assists in the performance.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS, ETC.

